S Y.

0 2007 0486555 5
California State Library

Accession No. 12532 Jun 1917

Call No. fc 051 C 15

No. 2 b 1812-Y Nov 17 1864 5

The California.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME V., No. 1. OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET. | SAN FRANCISCO, MAY 26, 1866. | TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE. 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

PROSE.

Inigoiogs.—By "Inigo."
Stage-Coach Conversations — By "Bret."
My Friend, the Cosmopolitan.—By "Philip."
Roses: Continued.—By "Iris."
Olmstead's Report in Regard to a Public Pleasure Ground.
"Mark Twain" on his Travc's.
Not Hung Enough.
The Field of Fair Oaks.
Uncle Ingot.
A Taste for Glass Houses.
Les Bonrras Paille Son.
Popular Fallacies.
The Thieves of Bengal.
Life in Havana.
The Story of a Machine.

AMUSEMENTS:

Theatrical Events, and Announcements.

POETRY:

The Eagle: A Fragment.—By Chas. Warren Stoddard.
Embroidery.—By * * *

[For the Californian.]

THE EAGLE.

A FRAGMENT.—(AFTER TENNYSON.)

He spurns the peak; he courts the gale;
He fronts the storm with breast of mail:
His thousand years are ripe and hale.

His iron pinions cannot tire;
His steel-knit talons do aspire
To pluck the Sun's red heart of fire.

CHARLES WARREN STODDARD.

(For the Californian.)

STAGE-COACH CONVERSATIONS.

BY "BRET."

SCENE—a stage coach en route to a California watering-place. Driver, expressman, passengers, etc. A gloomy silence has prevailed for ten minutes, during which time a palpable dust pours into the windows. Passengers perspire.

Agricultural Passenger, (looking at view, and addressing nobody in particular,) "Them's fine oats."

His next neighbor, (finding the other passengers glancing toward him, and feeling painfully conscious that his position makes him in some way responsible for reprehensible conduct of A. P., but knowing nothing about grain, feebly.) "Yes."

A gloomy silence, broken by Agricultural Passenger, (who has been encouraged to rashness by this attention,) "Too much baird (beard) on that barley, though."

His Next Neighbor, (wishes he had said nothing, but finding the other passengers looking at him for an answer, puts on a critical expression.) "I should say so--rather!"

Elderly Rustic Female, (with round basket containing a suspicious napkin, vivaciously, to His Next Neighbor,) "Ranchin' out this way?"

His Next Neighbor, (who is really a dry goods clerk, but feels that he has somehow lost caste with the other passengers by being identified with Agricultural Man, sharply,) "No, Ma'am!"

[Interval of five minutes. Passengers stare hard out of the windows, and affect to be intensely interested in nothing. Dust silently, pours in and powders them. Perspiration.]

Elderly Female, (who has been revolving His Next Neighbor's answer, and is dimly conscious of having made some mistake, soothingly.) "Dagnerrotypin'?"

[Passenger in linen duster and passenger in straw hat both smile, bat, detecting each other, repudiate the sympathy, and frown out of their respective windows. Stage crosscs a bridge.]

Father of Family, (confidentially to two grown up daughters,) "Did you notice the peculiarly hollow sound of the horses' hoofs on that bridge?"

Agricultural Passenger, (seeing a chance to put in his oar,) "Rotten timbers--cave in some day?"

Father of Family, (sternly oblivious of A. P.,) "It reminded me of a line in the classics."

Daughters, (together,) "Yes?"

Father of Family (begins amid a general silence,) "Quadupedante putrem—no--petrum--no—bless my soul—(finds he's forgotten it, but makes a wild dash to a conclusion)--"quatit ungula campum."

[Passengers endeavor to look as if they understood it. Gent in corner smiles, and pulls his hat over his eyes. Gent in white choker audibly repeats the quotation correctly. Father of Family resolves never to quote again in mixed company. Agricultural Passenger sets him down as a foreigner.]

Pretty Girl, (to her young man,) "What's that he's saying?"

Young Man, (not wishing to commit himself,) "Something from Homer."

Sharp Young Lady, (confidant of Pretty Girl, and a little vexed at somebody's want of attention.) "But Homer was a Greek poet, and I've seen that line in the Latin grammar."

[The other passengers try to look as if they had seen it in the Latin grammar too, and glance superciliously at Father of Family. F. of F. wishes he hadn't said anything. Stage reaches top of hill and comes in view of ocean.]

Bride, (to Bridegroom in back seat, on wedding trip,) "How lovely the ocean looks!"

Bridegroom, (who wishes to show that he can quote also, murmurs in an undertone as if to himself,) "Break—Break—[stage commences to go down hill, and careers frightfully]—Break."

Elderly Rustic Female, (who doesn't recognize Tennyson, but is "timersome,") "You don't think there's any danger of breakin' down, do you?"

Bridegroom:

"On thy dark grey crags, O sea."

[Stage clatters so frightfully that Bridegroom is obliged to raise his voice:]

"And I would that my soul could utter
The thoughts that arise in me."

Bridegroom, (to himself, finding that the stage has suddenly come to level ground, and that he has delivered the concluding lines in a stentorian voice which has attracted every eye to him.) "D—u it."

Outside passenger, (confidentially, to expressman,) "Drunk!"

Dead silence. Several passengers, (to each other,) "How far is it yet?" [General depression.]

Agricultural passenger, (deliberately to His Next Neighbor, settling himself in a comfortable position,) "In the fall of '49—"

His Next Neighbor, (to expressman, nervously,) "How far did you say?"

Driver, (suddenly,) "Mugginsville! Change horses."

TABLEAUX.

[For the Californian.]

HYBRID ROSES.

[WE observe that "Iris" is not without honor abroad, many of our Eastern exchanges copying his articles with words of encouragement and commendation. We trust that at home he may succeed in awakening a like interest, and thereby add to the loveliness of Californian homes. The following paper was unavoidably deferred last week; it is a continuation of remarks upon a subject introduced in a former contribution:]

WE have previously referred to the absurd distinction which is drawn by cultivators of the Rose between hybrid and cross-bred varieties. This accords with the desire manifested by so many to multiply unnecessarily our floricultural names and classes. Let the botanist be as minute as he wishes in his distinctions; the florist, on the other hand, whose object has a more practical character than that of his botanical neighbor, should strive not to involve, but to simplify the subject with which he deals. But how often is this overlooked. Many a tyro, beginning his culture of the rose, has been frightened and mystified by the increasing divisions of the rose catalogues.

The Bourbon Rose is generally considered to be a hybrid variety. It was, in the form in which it was first obtained, the result of accidental impregnation. It was discovered in the Isle of Bourbon in 1817, and hence its appellation. The history of its origin is generally given as follows: It is the custom of the inhabitants of this island to form enclosures by means of rose-bushes, which grow there in great luxuriance. Two varieties are generally mingled, the "Chinese" and "Rose of Four Seasons." M. Perichon, a gentleman who resided at Benoist in the island, when planting a hedge of roses, discovered amongst his plants one whose foliage and habit were distinct from the two species which we have named, and which were the only species cultivated at the time in the island. This in due season bloomed, and was the originator of the Bourbon family. Plants were sent in 1822 to M. Jacques, at Neuilly, and to this cultivator are we indebted for the first new varieties of this attractive group. Amongst its gems are the "Queen of Bourbons," flesh-colored; the favorite White; "Souvenir de Malmaison;" the rich crimson, "Paul Joseph," and the peculiarly-tinted "Angelina."

The "Noisette."—It is generally supposed that the original Noisette was a hybrid, whose parents were the Musk Rose and some tea-scented or Chinese variety. It was obtained by a florist in Charleston, S. C., and sent by him to his brother, M. Noisette, in Paris. At the time of its first appearance, in 1817, it attracted much attention. It has since then been much improved, but still the old Blush Noisette remains a favorite. It may not possess, in its blooms, the size and colors of some which are descended from it, but it excels all of them in its hardiness, and consequently in the ease with which it may be cultivated. We can have no finer blooms in the garden than those produced by varieties of this class, such as "Lamarque," white; "Solfaterre," pale sulphur; "Cloth of Gold," yellow; "Isabella Gray," yellow, (raised by a Mr. Gray, an American florist, from seeds of the "Cloth of Gold;") also, "Ophirie," distinct from every other rose in its coppery tints, etc.

The Hybrid Chinese family contains many of our loveliest varieties. The members of this family owe their origin to the Gallicas, Provence, and other hardy roses, impregnated with the Pollen of the Chinese. We consider "Chenedole" to be the gem of this group. No object can be finer than a large plant of this variety, covered with its fiery-scarlet blossoms. So intense is the color that it strikes the eye, even at considerable distance, and produces the dazzling effect of flame. This variety was raised in France, and named in honor of the deputy of a province. "Brennus," "Blairii," and "General Jacquiminot," are also well known and much admired varieties; while, lastly, to the same group belongs "Madame Plantier," certainly the best white pellar rose which we have.

The Hybrid Bourbons closely resemble the Hybrid Chinese, and among them may be found some of our most beautiful roses.

"Coup d'Hebe."—None surpass this lovely variety in shape and color. It is of a beautiful, shaded blush, and the form and arrangement of its petals are all that can be desired. Another superb member of this family is "Paul Ricaut." This, too, is magnificent in its form, size, and in the rich crimson of its hue. "Charles Duval" is also a fine variety.

The "Hybrid Perpetuals."—It is difficult to individualize many of a class, all of whose members are so valuable and so attractive. Of the crimson roses of this class, we have the peerless "Geant de Batailles" and its descendants; "Lord Raglan" and "Cardinal Patrizzi;" the fiery "General Jacquiminot," so exquisite in its dazzling brightness; and "Gloire de Sautenay," more novel but worthy of one of the highest places on the list, besides others of more chastened hues, such as "Jules Margottin," "Louise Odier," "Reine de Fleurs," "Comtesse de Chabrillian," "Anna de Diesbach," and a host of others.

If rose amateurs will only use a little discretion in selecting and cultivating good varieties, they will add greatly to the taste for fine flowers. Never cultivate a poor kind on any account.

FLORAL CALENDAR—CONTINUED.

May 13th. St. John the Silent, Comfrey (Symphitum Officinale.)
May 14th. St. Pontius, Pæonia, (Pœnia Corallina.)
May 15th. St. Dympna, Welsh Poppy, (Papaver Cambricum.)
May 16th. St. John Nepomucen, Star of Bethlehem, (Ornithoglum Umbellatum.)
May 17th. St. Paschal Babylon, Red Poppy, (Papaver Argemone.)
May 18th. St. Eric, Mouse-Ear, (Hieracum Pilosella.)
May 19th. St. Denistan, Monk's-hood, (Aconitum Napellus.)

IRIS.

NOT HUNG ENOUGH.

WE do not, as a nation, hang so many culprits as in bygone years. We may by and by cease to inflict this awful punishment at all. But so long as the law, and religion, and justice, and public sentiment are considered to warrant the continuance of this ancient mode of retribution, so long ought there to be no mockery, no mistake, no trickery about it. If a man survives after hanging, without a proof of his innocence accompanying his recovery, it would be infinitely better to society (of his wretched self we say nothing) that he had not been hanged at all; seeing that the sense of a just punishment would be swallowed up in a kind of pity for the novelty of his position.

Now such things have occurred, sufficiently often to merit attention. Men have recovered their lives—or rather retained life under nearly desperate circumstances—in spite of what seemed to be a due infliction of the punishment of death by suspension. Something of this possibility of escape was owing to the mode in which the punishment was usually inflicted; and to many it may probably be unknown that a change has been made in recent times in the construction and arrangement of the apparatus for carrying out the last great penalty of the law.

For something like six hundred years, at any rate, such escapes have from time to time been recorded. In 1264, there was a woman named Inetta de Balsham condemned to death for collusion with robbers; she was hanged, and remained on the gibbet (if the records of the time are to be trusted) no less than three days: and yet she survived to receive pardon from Henry III. In 1313, Mathew of Enderby was hanged for some crime of which he had been convicted; he was cut down, and revived just before the body was about to be interred. In 1363, Walter Wynkeburn was hanged at Leicester; when cut down, he was carried in a cart to the cemetery of the Holy Sepulchre in that city; he gradually regained sensibility while the cart was rumbling along, and escaped with life. Similar cases occurred in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. The seventeenth century was exceptionally full of such instances. Dr. Plot mentions the strange lot of a Swiss, on the authority of Dr. Obadiah Walker, Master of University College; this man is said to have been hung no less than thirteen times without losing his life; his windpipe having been converted by disease into a substance almost as hard as a bone.

No instance has been so much discussed and written about as that of Anne Green, which took place during the time of the Commonwealth. Judges and physicians alike referred to it, as affording illustrations for or against legal and medical testimony. This poor girl was executed at Marston in Oxfordshire, on December 14, 1650, for infanticide, a charge which could only be proved against her by much straining of the law; this severity, and a knowledge of the wrong she had suffered in other ways, made her an object of much public sympathy. The hanging was accompanied by certain coarse and shocking pullings and strikings of the body and limbs, which in those days were supposed to insure more effectually the death of the victim, and to lessen the period of suffering. After hanging the usual time, she was cut down, actually trampled on while prostrate, and left with the rope unslackened round her neck. She was put into a coffin, and consigned to the doctors for dissection. To the surprise of all, when the coffin was opened, the bosom was seen gently to heave; upon which, brutal blows and pressure were brought into requisition. The incident was too remarkable, however, to remain concealed; and men of superior position took up the matter. Sir William Petty, Dr. Wallis, and Dr. Clarke, who at that time filled the three offices of Professor of Anatomy, President of Magdalen College, and Vice-Chancellor of Oxford University, being present at the intended dissection, perceived that the heaving of the bosom was followed by a slight rattling in her throat. "Hereupon," said Dr. Plot, "desisting from their former purpose, they presently used means for her recovery by opening a vein, laying her in a warm bed, and using divers remedies respecting her senselessness, head, throat, and chest; insomuch that within fourteen hours she began to speak, and the next day talked and prayed heartily. During the time of this her recovering, the officers concerned in her execution would needs have had her away again to have it completed on her; but by the mediation of the worthy doctors and some other friends with the then governor of the city, Colonel Kelsey, there was a guard set upon her to hinder all further disturbance till he had sued out her pardon from the powers then in being; thousands of people in the meantime coming to see her, and magnifying the just providence of God in thus asserting her innocence of murder."

It is not stated by Dr. Plot whether the medical men satisfied themselves concerning the cause, anatomical or physiological, of her preservation; but they sought to ascertain whether there were any peculiar mental phenomena connected with her recovery. They found that the half hour of hanging had left no special impression on her memory. "She came to herself as if she had awakened out of a sleep—not recovering the use of her speech by slow degrees, but in a manner altogether [all at once,] beginning to speak wh she left off on the gallows." Among all the printed narratives of this remarkable case, there is none that offers a clear explanation; and we are left to our surmises on the subject. There was a strong religious bias in the public mind at that period, and this feeling led to a belief in the direct interposition of Heaven in Anne Green's favor. The undergraduates of Oxford University viewed the matter in another light; they sought to exercise their wit and poetry on it, and there have been preserved twenty or thirty epigrams written by them, and signed with their names—one of which was "Mr. Christopher Wren." Anne Green, having received a pardon after this strange resuscitation, retired with her friends to Steeple Barton, where she married, had a family, and died in 1659.

Somewhat about the same period, one Gordon, a highwayman, was condemned for execution. He found means, when his sentence was no longer doubtful, to obtain the aid of a young surgeon, who, shortly before the execution, fixed a small tube through an opening cut in the wind-pipe. The artifice failed in its intended effect in this case; the culprit, being a very heavy man, drew down with too great a weight; he breathed for a few minutes when removed after hanging, but did not recover. In 1658, a female servant was hanged for some crime at Oxford; she was kept hanging a longer time than usual, probably on account of the wonderful resuscitation of Anne Green a few years before. She was cut down, and the body allowed to fall to the ground with much violence; yet she lived; but the severity of the law insisted upon her undergoing a second and more fatal hanging. There has, it appears, been a difference of opinion among legal authorities concerning this double infliction of the sentence. Some contend that if a man is hanged, that is enough; if the executioners do their work clumsily, he ought not to bear the consequences, but rather should be given "the benefit of the doubt." On the other hand, it is contended that the sentence means execution, and that execution means hanging by the neck until the culprit be dead; so that if the hanging fails once, it must be tried again.

In 1697, one Richard Johnson was hanged at Shrewsbury for murder. For a purpose which he planned while in prison, he obtained a promise that his dead body should be laid in a coffin without being stripped. His purpose was detected a little too soon; for life being observed in him after he had hung half an hour, a man was sent up the ladder to examine into the probable cause of this prolonged vitality. It was found that Johnson had twisted cords around and under his body, connected with two rings or hooks near his neck; a double shirt and a perwig with flowing curls concealed these contrivances. The poor wretch was stripped of his ingenious apparatus, and hanged a second time more effectually. In 1705, a burglar, named John Smith, was hanged at Tyburn; a reprieve came after he had been hanging about fifteen minutes; he was immediately cut down, removed to a neighboring house, bled by a surgeon, and restored to life. The case of Margaret Dickson was one that excited great interest at Edinburgh in 1724. She was hanged for infanticide; the body was cut down, placed in a coffin, and removed in a cart to Musselburgh by her friends, with a view to interment in the parish churchyard. The jolting of the cart, and the admission of air through some injury which the coffin sustained, appear to have combined in resuscitating the woman; for she showed evident signs of life before the cart had proceeded one-third of the distance. She was removed, revived, prayed with by a minister, and received back into the circle of her friends. She lived creditably many years afterwards, had a large family, and sold salt about the streets of Edinburgh—where she was known, on account of her strange escape, as "Half-hanged Maggie."

William Duell was one of those who have revived when almost under the dissecting knife. This man was hanged for murder, on a gibbet put up at Acton, in 1740. After hanging for twenty minutes, the body was cut down, and taken to Surgeon's Hall for dissection. The attendants stripped and washed the body, and the surgeons prepared for their labor. Just as they were about to begin, however, they perceived faint signs of life in him; he groaned feebly, and his breathing became gradually more and more perceptible. They bled him, and in the evening he was able to sit up again. He was conveyed back to prison; but there was too much public excitement to justify the authorities in hanging him again. In two days he recovered his health. Fever and delirium had rendered his memory a blank, and he had lost all recollection of the hanging. It was supposed by the surgeons that a full flow of blood at the time had enabled his system to resist the tightening of the veins, and to have thus restored him to life—not to liberty, however, for he was afterwards transported.

In 1751, Ewen Macdonald was hanged for murder. After the body was cut down, it was taken to Surgeon's Hall, and was placed ready for dissection. The operating surgeon, having to leave the room for a short time, was surprised on his return to see the man sitting up. Possessing more professional zeal than humanity, the surgeon took a mallet, and killed Macdonald outright, in order not to be disappointed of an opportunity for dissection. The atrocious case gave rise to much indignant comment at the time. In 1767, a tailor, named Patrick Redmond, was hanged at Cork for highway robbery. After hanging less than the usual time, the body was cut down, and conveyed hastily to the house of an actor named Glover, who found means by friction and fumigation to revive him. Redmond had the incredible audacity to go to the theatre on the same evening, and, to the horror of the audience, publicly thanked Glover for having saved his life."

The present century has not been without its instances. About thirty years ago, a servant girl was convicted of administering poison to the household of a farmer, in a fit of passion at some petty injury. A legal doubt having led to a postponement of the execution, the steady demeanor of the girl led to her being employed as a servant by the jailor at Durham. One morning, the governor received, much to his regret, and to the regret of many of the citizens, an order for the immediate execution of the girl. She was hanged, but the rope broke; and the wretched girl remained crying at the foot of the gallows, while a man hastened off on horseback to fetch a new rope. This distressing scene was perhaps scarcely a case in point, so far as concerns resuscitation after hanging; but it is one of the instances of deferred executions, which are so bad because they give rise to hopes destined to disappointment. In another instance (mentioned, like the foregoing, in Notes and Queries,) a boy of only thirteen or fourteen was capitally convicted, but respited indefinitely on account of his youth. He remained in jail at Worcester, was found to be a docile lad, and became a general favorite both with the jailor and the prisoners; everybody believing that his full pardon would soon come. One day, he was playing at ball in the yard, full of life and glee, when suddenly, to the utter dismay of the jailor and the inmates of the prison, an order arrived, after many weeks of delay, for the execution of the poor lad; and the execution accordingly took place. An instance more in point is that of a man who was executed at Tyburn, and whose apparently dead body was purchased by a surgeon for dissection, and brought to his house. A servant, wishing to see the body, stole into the room, and found the man sitting upright on the dissecting-table. The surgeon, a humane man, shipped him off quietly to America, where he amassed a fortune, which in gratitude he bequeathed to his benefactor. Sir Jonah Barrington, in his Personal Sketches, mentions the case of one Lanigan, who was hanged for the murder of one Captain O'Flaherty. Lanigan survived, by some means which are not explained; and Sir Jonah saw him at the house of Mr. Lauder in the Temple. He was smuggled over to Abbeville, where he died many years afterwards in the monastery of La Trappe.

Some of these momentous escapes have plainly depended on the imperfections of the gibbet as compared with the drop. These imperfections led to the abandonment of the one kind of dread apparatus for the other. Several statements have been made in the public journals from time to time, concerning "the last gibbet;" but many of these are destitute of meaning, unless we take into the account the exact particulars of the case. In 1856, the Examiner said: "A few days ago (April,) the last gibbet erected in England was demolished by the workmen employed in making the extensive docks for the North-Eastern Railway Company at the Jarrow Slake, on the Tyne." This statement was shortly afterwards disputed; for, later in the same year, a gibbet was still left standing on Ditchling Common in Sussex. It was known among the surrounding villagers as "Jacob's Post," being named after a culprit concerning whom a copy of verses was long current in the neighborhood, recording among other things that

> At Horsham Gallows he was hanged there,
> The thirty-first of August that same year;
> And where he did the crime, they took the pains
> To bring him back, and hang him up in chains.

It has been stated that the last gibbet erected in England was at Saffron Lane, near Leicester, in 1832; it was soon afterwards removed, by order of the Secretary of State for Home Affairs. Whatever may be the exact dates, however, when the last gibbet was erected and the last demolished, it is certain that the drop has been almost, if not quite, substituted for it in England. In the old gibbet, the wretched culprit was turned off from a ladder, at a height which, it was supposed, would elevate him sufficiently above the ground or platform; whereas the drop consists of a trap-door, which, being suddenly opened by the withdrawal of bolts underneath, causes the whole weight of the culprit's body to be in an instant at the mercy of the noose. Some of the instances of escape are doubtless attributable to the careless way in which the prisoner was turned off the scaffold, or rather ladder, on which he ascended to the gibbet; some to the insertion of a tube which might prevent the constriction of the throat; some to the opening of an orifice in the windpipe by an expert surgeon; some to a natural hardening of the windpipe, which occasionally happens; and some to a steel collar, connected with an elaborate system of braces and bandages. These varieties offer elucidations of most of the cases of resuscitation that have been recorded.

Did Sir Walter Scott rely on his imagination alone, or was he depending on a real narrative, when he wrote the striking scene of Bonthron's execution in the Fair Maid of Perth? It will be remembered, by the readers of that novel, that Bonthron received a hint from Dwining. the physician, that an attempt would be made to preserve him from any fatal result of the hanging, and that the hangman would be a party to the manœuvre. The execution took place, apparently in the usual way, and the hangman remained near the suspended body about half an hour, after which he contrived by a ruse to get rid of the assembled multitude. Early next morning, when the populace returned to enjoy the spectacle of chaining the dead body to a permanent gallows, they were surprised and enraged to see that the body had been removed. At midnight, it afterwards appeared, three men had quietly approached the spot, cut down the body, reanimated the almost stifled wretch, and smuggled him away. One of them was Dwining, the physician, and he explained to the other two in what manner Bonthron had been specially prepared to undergo this execution scatheless. He pointed out that death by hanging results from a compression of the veins, which drives the blood to the brain instead of the heart, and also that the lungs, owing to the ligature of the cord around the thorax, no longer receiving the needful supply of air, another cause of suffocation arises. The problem would be, therefore, how to effect the hanging, so that neither the veins nor the windpipe should be too much compressed. Dwining solved this problem thus, as described by himself: "I get me certain bandages, made of the same substance with your horse girths, having especial care that they are of a kind which will not shrink by being strained, since that would spoil my experiment. One loop of this substance is drawn under each foot, and returns up either side of the leg to a cincture with which it is united; these cinctures are connected by divers straps down the breast and back, in order to divide the weight, and there are sundry other conveniences for easing the patient; but the chief is this. The straps or ligatures are attached to a broad steel collar, curving outwards, and having a hook or two, for the better security of the halter, which the friendly executioner passes around that part of the machine, instead of applying it to the bare throat of the patient. Thus, when thrown off from the ladder, the sufferer will find himself suspended, not by the neck, if it please you, but by the steel circle that supports the loops in which his feet are placed, and on which his weight really rests, diminished a little by similar supports under each arm. Thus, neither veins nor windpipe being compressed, the man will breathe as free, and his blood, saving from fright and novelty of situation, will flow as temperately, as your valiencies', when you stand up in your stirrups to view a field of battle."

Sir Walter's description thus involves one among many of the considerations relative to this peculiar kind of resuscitation.

A TASTE FOR GLASS HOUSES.

THE leaders of French society—the stars, literary and artistic, they who set the fashions, or own millions—have a decided taste for dwelling in glass houses. I have more than once sent you some samples of the intrusive quality of the Paris chroniqueur. They were samples, it would seem, however, of an art that was in its infancy. They were mere glimpses at the interior of people's houses. We had just a peep at the great man in his slippers, or the notorious lady in her robe de chambre; the veil was just lifted, and then quickly dropped. It occurred naturally to English readers, that even these peeps into the privacy of notable people must be offered to the unwholesome appetite of the public at the cost of great annoyance to the people who were exposed. But the French journalism of the present day proves that such an impression is a false one; people have a taste for glass houses. They expect to have their salon and dining-rooms, the dinner they give to their friends, their getting-up and their going to bed, duly set forth in a newspaper. A year or two ago, it was only at intervals that the private life of a known man or woman was served up for public amusement; but now M. de Villemessant appears to have given orders to his staff of writers to set a glass front in the house of every notability in the French capital. A few days since he led one of his writers to the house of Baron James de Rothschild, and having persuaded the Baron to admit his chroniqueur into his kitchen, left his scribe with a note-book to follow the Baron's cordon bleu and his butler through the departments of the baronial kitchen and wine-cellar. The chroniqueur, with his note-book, seems to have amused the kitchen-maids and scullions as he took notes amid the game, the pastry, and the wines; but he did his duty for his master, and came forth with a note even on the Baron's partiality for truffles and pheasants. He was about to pass through the gates into the street, when he was requested to step into the Baron's bureau for a moment; the Baron had reflected, and begged the chroniqueur, whom he had thoughtlessly admitted into his kitchen, not to make copy out of his sauces, his larder, and his cellar. The writer says that he bowed profoundly, but made the Baron no answer; and he printed his notes, justifying himself by saying, that, had he asked the Baron on the eve of the issue of the Austrian Loan, not to put it on the market, the Baron would not have submitted to the request of a "plumitif." Then why should not the "plumitif" make copy out of the Baron's kitchen? The Baron is timid and too modest.

M. Jules Valles serves up M. Paul Féval as a public dish, and provokes no rebuke from this gentleman; his table covered with papers, his children playing on the grass in the garden, his bath-room and his billiard-room, are the writer's property. We are told that he is threatened with an "innumerable paternity;" for he has already six children, the eldest of whom is not more than seven years of age.

From Paul Feval M. Valles turns to Emile de Girardin's last weekly reception; this gives him an excellent opportunity of painting the late editor of La Presse at home, surrounded by journalists. An editor in the lap of luxury is a refreshing picture:

"There was a great deal of lively conversation—not broken up into little private discussions, but general. One subject only was discussed, but what that subject was I have no right to mention. I have never seen the editor of the Presse surrounded by more sympathy or listened to with more attention. Never, also, did his conversation take a more familiarly eloquent, decided tone. There were present MM. de Fonvielle and Bekmann, of the Temps; M. Hector Pessard, of the Epoque; MM. Cohen and Escudier, of the France; M. Ducuing, of the Opinon Nationale; M. Ganesco represented l'Europe and the Nain Jaune; M. Emile Ollivier was expected, but his Achates only was forthcoming.

"There was but one deputy, M. Eugene Pelletan, who still talked of Proudhon; the puritan maltreated speech as he had already done his pen. Besides the above-named, there were MM. Lebey, Turgan, Yriarte, and many others that I do not know, or that I forget. The whole body of the Presse was there; the contributors, eager and animated, surrounding their chief, who was full of fire and verve.

"Very few assembled till ten o'clock, so I profited by my earlier arrival to wander about the library, where the lamps above the books lit up the pictures, marbles, and bronzes. Antiquities are not abundant; some of the bronzes are of ancient date, but the greater part appear by their signature to belong to the present day. At the foot of a charming statuette was the following inscription: 'Raporté d'Athenes par le Prince Napoleon, 1854.' Close at hand is the portrait of the Prince en robe de chambre, by Gavarni. There is a characteristic sketch, by Delacroix, of Dante and Virgil, and one by Chaseriau, of a woman entering the bath—a perfect episode of the Tepidarium. A painting by Gigioux, if I remember rightly, represents M. de Girardin as a Roman—décolleté; he looks like a thin Vitellius. Another canvas portrays him in a black coat; elegant and clever. I saw the name of the Princess Mathilde very clearly written in the corner of a water-color painting hanging in the small room which is between the large salon and the library.

"This library differs from most others; it is long and narrow, like a passage, and, as it were, skirts the house; the books are on the shelves, the highest of which is only up to one's breast, so that there is no need to climb steps, or put one's arm out of joint in order to get a particular volume: all are within reach; and in this plan I recognize the simple and practical mind of the master of the house. Another sign is a drawing of a plan for the opening of the Rue de Rivoli, according to the design of M. de Girardin, and bearing date 1832—thirty-four years ago! The proposed plan has not been quite carried out. According to that, the pavement was to be raised, and to be reached by steps and a railing. Amongst the marbles, two superb busts of Madame Emile de Girardin, a statue and a statuette, signed 'Pradier,' are conspicuous.

"The souvenir of Rachel is everywhere; a chair has her name engraved on it. In one place is a reduction of the celebrated portrait by Gerome, also vigorously painted by the same hand. In another is a fine drawing of the great actress; farther on a large painting, in the corner of which I read, 'A mon véritable ami, M. Emile de Girardin.' Then there are the two following letters:

"'PARIS, January, 1858.

"'I embrace you this new year. I little thought, my dear friend, in 1858, to be able still to send you my sincere affection. RACHEL.'

"This was written in January. The next runs thus:

"'PARIS, April 21, 1858.

"'MONSIEUR—According to a letter dictated by Mdlle. Rachel on the day of her death, she leaves you, as a souvenir, a gold pen ornamented with forget-me-nots.'

"Poor great artiste!

"The foregoing notes were not taken yesterday. I was was unable to do more than glance round at what I had before taken two hours to examine. It was on the occasion of my first visit to M. de Girardin. I had been begged to wait, and I had been forgotten! But I am not at all angry at the forgetfulness; if I am ever anything, it is to M. Girardin I owe it."

It is evident that M. de Girardin is not displeased that his debtor should pay him in this coin.

But I have reserved my best illustration of the comfort it is, hereabouts, to live in glass houses till the last. In this instance no less an authority than M. Albéric Second is the writer. He introduces Alexandre Dumas in his kitchen with great ingenuity. It seems that the culinary knowledge and skill of the author of Monte Christo had been called in question. Unhandsome detractors had said that M. Dumas could not serve up a dinner that should be worthy the knife and fork of a gourmet. M. Second had been reported as among the great Alexander's detractors; whereupon he writes: "I had often heard that Alexandre Dumas père was as good a cook as author; but in spite of the affirmation of persons who brought forward the proposition, a vague scepticism with regard to it floated in my mind. Criticise the romancist, the chronicler, the dramatic author, and Alexandre Dumas will allow you to say what you please, without taking the trouble to answer it; but attempt to criticise the cook, and you will run the risk of being pierced through by his spit. How the author of Monte Christo knew that I had not a blind faith in his culinary talents I am at a loss to imagine; but he evidently wished to prove to me how far I was unjust in the matter of his ragouts and his sauces. 'I expect you to dine with me on Tuesday next at seven,' ran the note I received from him, 'and I warn you that I shall have a hand in all the dishes. You shall judge from experience.' Needless to say, I accepted; but, instead of arriving at seven, I made my appearance at 107 Boulevard Malesherbes as the clock struck six, and I had my reasons for this. If M. Dumas has told me the truth, said I to myself, I shall take him by surprise in his kitchen; if, on the other hand, I find him in his room, his study, or his salon, I shall know what to think of it. I entered one of the sumptuous houses on the Boulevard Malesherbes, mounted a fine staircase, and rang at the door of an appartement on the third story. 'M. Alexandre Dumas?' I inquired?' 'Yes, Monsieur,' replied a little groom. 'Can I see him?' again I inquired. 'No, Monsieur, he is busy,' was the answer. 'Ah! he is in his study, no doubt,' observed I. 'No, Monsieur,' replied the groom, 'he is in the kitchen.' Guided by a most savory and appetizing odor, I made my way into the antechamber, crossed a passage, and penetrated into the temple; here I found Dumas, without coat, collar, or cravat, his shirt sleeves tucked up to his elbows, agitating a large spoon in a dazzingly bright stewpan, while giving his orders at the same time to his cook and kitchen-maid, who executed them with the greatest promptitude and intelligence. 'So it is you!' cried Dumas, on seeing me. 'I suppose you know you are an hour too soon? You are not come to excuse yourself for to-night, I hope.' When one is in the wrong, the best thing is to acknowledge it. I therefore frankly told him, without any beating about the bush, my motive for being beforehand in our rendezvous. Dumas, who is good-nature itself, pardoned me on condition of my going and awaiting his appearance in the salon, where the other guests presently dropped in one by one. Our host quickly joined us, and at seven o'clock the groom threw open the door and announced, 'Monsieur is served.' O, dear great man! whatever has been said—whatever you may have said yourself touching your culinary science—you cannot have said enough; and I call the guests of Tuesday to witness. What a success! what a triumph!—a diner bourgeois, such as princes do not taste every day! We set out with a cabbage soup, at which Dumas had labored for two days; then followed fried smelts. To these succeeded a jugged hare, followed by a ragout of mutton a la Hongroise. Then came roast pheasants, écrevisses a la Bordelaise, and a salad of maches, celery and beet-root. I pass over in silence the vegetables, intrements and rocher de glace prepared by hireling hands. It may be interesting to observe that the hares and pheasants had been killed a few days before by our host himself, at a hunting party at M. Joubert's. It was difficult, as will be at once seen, to select simpler dishes, but impossible to eat anything better. I watched Alexandre Dumas when the solemn moment of mixing the salad arrived, as I am myself not without pretensions to a certain strength in this department, so essential to every well-organized repast. In presence of the chefs d'œuvre, which I saw seasoned before me, and which I tasted with a sensuality full of emotion and respect, it only remained to me to acknowledge my inferiority. I now confess it publicly. If, according to my advice, Alexandre Dumas would open a restaurant near the Champs de Mars during the Exposition of 1867—a restaurant, be it understood, in which he would be the cook—I will undertake to say that he would realize a million of francs in six months! Our host does not smoke, and in addition detests the odor of tobacco; so that there were no cigars. In spite of this privation—a greater one than he thinks—it was necessary to turn us out at one o'clock in the morning. Dumas gossiped on, and we were all but too happy to listen."

Dumas' reputation as a cook is now established, and people do not wonder about it here as they would in London. A few days since a friend of mine, a physician, suddenly invited two relatives, one of them a physician also, home to dinner. The lady of the house was horrified; not a scrap of dinner was prepared. "Never mind," said the doctor, "we'll cook the dinner;" and he and his non-professional friend repaired to the kitchen, sent for a pheasant, and in due time produced an exquisite dinner, including a risotto that was pronounced superb.

[For the Californian.]

EMBROIDERY.

IN the rich rosy light of the window,
She sits, so bewitchingly fair,
Her face glancing out from the shadow
Of the queer, old-fashioned arm chair.

Glancing out, with her face like a lily,
From the cushion of crimson and gold,
With that glistening robe of white satin
Floating over her, fold upon fold;

With her foot in the daintiest slipper—
Ah, the gipsy! she knows how it charms!—
And the soft, slender, tapering fingers,
And the snowy-white, gem-circled arms;

With the pearls looping back the dark tresses—
Those warm, wavy curls of brown hair!
And the cheek, with its faint tinge of opal,
And the shoulders, so dazzlingly fair:

There she sits at her ease, in her beauty,
With the face and the air of a queen!
Not a rose-bud she daintily fashions,
Half-sheathed in the delicate green

Of its leaves, nor those great golden lilies—
No blossom or bud one can name—
So fair as the face bending over
The glowing embroidery frame.

As she lifted her dark, hazel eyes then,
Did that quick glance of hers understand
How wofully little the wiser
I grew from the book in my hand,

That the rose of her cheek kept unfolding
Its delicate crimson, the while,
And the wise little mouth dimpled over
With such an arch, coquettish smile?

Oh, her needles are Cupid's own arrows,
And this garland a spell which she weaves
Round my soul, while she ruthlessly stitches
My quivering heart in those leaves!

* * *

[For the Californian.]

MY FRIEND, THE COSMOPOLITAN.

A TALE OF WAR, FRIENDSHIP, AND AGONY.

AFTER THE FRENCH.—BY "PHILIP."

CHAPTER I.

"I AGAIN bid you farewell," he said, looking skyward.

"Why?" I asked.

"The fates master me and lead me away."

"Cannot the fates be appeased? For your companionship's sake I will offer bribes," I said.

"You cannot avail by your noble endeavors. I feel," said he, "the strength of powers I cannot see or comprehend. I see a hand you cannot see, that beckons me away."

"This," I replied, "is a new and a fresh disappointment to me. You come. I welcome you. You stay but a moment, and extend your hand for a farewell grasp."

"My present is like my past; my future, I believe, will be like my present. 'Twas ever thus!"

"Alas! alas!" I cried, "from childhood's hour. Again do you pursue your way upon the sea?"

"Again the blue rolling wave is to be my path. I leave you, about whom my affections so fondly cling. My step-sister, who dwells far away, I left years ago, and she awaits my return. I never write to her. But you, who now grasp my hand, I will never forget nor cease writing letters to. Peace be with you. Remember the ides of March. I believe I will then return," he continued, "bringing with me sheaves. Take these my last verses; read them when I am far away. Adios."

So passed out of my sight Clarence, the friend of my youth, changed from him of former years, with whom I had quietly pursued the road to knowledge. Then he was demurely content, and did not question the facts of geography nor seek to verify them by personal experience. He read the history of Herodotus, but never asked to go to the seats of ancient empires or republics to assure himself of the possibility of the historic ages. He has lain upon his back on the mead in summer evenings and found the places of the stars and quoted the learning of the Professor of Physics, from the morning's lecture, but an inland home had made him fond of the stability of the earth, whose daily revolutions did not turn his stomach, and never longed to ascertain by sight the position or beauty of the Southern Cross, because his geographical knowledge and the advertisements in the Evening Journal assured him he would be obliged to venture upon the sea to pursue his taste for the astronomies.

CHAPTER II.

THE years that have passed since we were together, have brought Clarence out of the reach of his adolescence, and the Fates, using him like a teetotum, have twirled him so that he has been bruised and developed on all sides of his nature. Recently they twirled him into my arms again. I looked at him in amazement, as he appeared and disappeared on the arena of my life.

A good many months ago—perhaps all the months would be better called a few years—he came into the routine of my experience, suddenly, unheralded, and as unexpectedly as the gentleman who lives in the moon.

"This is my Ricardo, whom I love."

"This is my Clarence, whom I love."

"Whence do you come," after an interval of salutation, I enquired.

"Ah! The world has not been kind to me. The fiends are abroad. The enemies of my country have arisen. I have seen the strife, have mingled with it, have fought upon the seas, have wearied of the restless turmoil of war, and have come to these skies, not to rest, no, not to rest, but destined to wander, wander, until the reign of peace shall come."

"Stay, stay with me," I answered. "Rest here. You will not hear the sound of the battle—the enemy is not here. The telegraphic despatches in the evening papers will be a balm to your unquiet nerves. Rest with me, perturbed spirit."

"I do not think my spirit is turbid, but I must away. I shall go mad if I go not."

"I do not understand you," I answered. "You are not the Clarence of early days. If you are indeed he, take this Elixir of Life, mixed in the same proportions which I know you loved once."

The old calmness came back to his face, and there was not left there a memory of his recent unrest. For two short hours I gained again the fellowship of Clarence, my early friend, and we returned to the old, old days and the old familiar faces.

A night's repose obliterated the calmness that sat so well upon him, the evidence of which I found under my door the next day:

"DEAREST RICARDO—These are lines of farewell. This night I sleep again upon the seas. I will return anon.

CLARENCE."

Whither had flown this restless soul? At daybreak the sloop-of war Sinagaw slipped her cables and steamed out towards the Golden Gate. The fever was still in the blood of Clarence, and he was not at rest until he was again in motion on the waves. There was more than a ripple upon the water, but not a rough sea. The little steam vessel ploughed her way vigorously through the water, meeting each wave that seemed to throw up a protest against her advance, with a sibilant swush-sh-sh-h, swush-sh-sh, swush sh-sh sh sh. My logic could not convince his activity to repose, but the dancing water and the recurring swush-sh sh lulled him to calmness.

CHAPTER III.

A FEW months passed away, and I met on the highway my friend seeking my sanctum. "I have just arrived from the North. I have been playing with the white bear and the walrus. They have been my constant companions. I have climbed the iceberg, and dared the rigors of the Pole. The Arctic or Antarctic seas have no horror for me. I have caressed the lair Esquimaux, and drank the oleaginous toddy of the northern bibler. Does war carniverous still gnaw at my country's heart?"

"It doth," I responded, briefly; "the Norman and the Southron still contend."

With his left hand pressed against his brow—that bore the insignia of an inheritance from patriotic blood—he stayed his steps, raised his eyes towards the sky, and whispered: "My step sister I cannot see—the home of my childhood is as if it wasn't—and I must wander still."

I said: "At least, you will rest one night upon the land. You will potate with me of the Elixir—Rumpunch—as of yore. I demand it of you by the memories which are yours."

Even while I was talking, he glided from me.

CHAPTER IV.

MY FRIEND was vibratory as a pendulum, but returning unto me with the irregularity of a cloudy day. He appeared to be attached in some mysterious and official manner with the Central Government, yet why, in time of trouble, he should consider his duty accomplished in seeking its fulfillment at those posts furthest from tumult, I never quite understood. The seasons or the months did not control his coming or departure. I encountered him in the windy days of June, and he exclaimed that since he left me the other day—perhaps four months before—he had experienced an interview with the typhoons of the Western Seas, but that they were gentle zephyrs, compared with a San Francisco summer day.

The quieter days of autumn brought him soon afterwards into my presence.

"Just eleven days ago, I dined with my excellent friend, the Governor of Chihuahua. I liked not his frijoles, but would not object to a life-lease of his immense opulence. Like all true, intelligent Mexicans, he believes the consummation of liberty and justice is to be found in Mexico as a Republic. Between us, Ricardo, that district of country will be the prey of incursions and ravages until it shall come under the protection of the ægis of our own great nation."

A rather lofty flight for Clarence. He was a patriot, but had achieved no great repute as a statesman. He knew the senoritas of Lima, for I have heard his conversation, "as musical as is Apollo's lute," melodious with their praises, and have seen his pockets wealthy with the images of those who had been honored by his admiration. He had deigned to be smiled upon by the exuberant beauties of that southern clime for several weeks. He forgot for the nonce the existence of his dear country, and knew not if it had a heart on which the fiends of war might gnaw. But his knowledge of the gentlemanly warriors of the country that adjoins his own was very limited—bounded not by his experience, but by his diligence in perusing the newspapers of the districts he occasionally visited.

CHAPTER V.

CLARENCE was tossed between the continents like a shuttlecock. He rested on neither of them, but lived in the nowhere whose boundaries are the continents. I call him the Cosmopolitan, because he knew by experience as much of one part of the globe as of another.

"Good morrow to thee, thou spiritless worm," he exclaimed to me one day when I thought the sunshine of fortune had given a new glow to my face. "How dost thou live on the land in contact with the monotonous character of a single race of people. You know not the earth. I glide from land to land and regard not the difference of the families of men. I have sported but yesterday with the kangaroo of New Holland; I have laughed at the hyena of Asiatic Turkey, and the hyena has laughed at me. The sweet-breathed children of the Celestial Empire I have met in their native pagodas, and have barely missed shaking hands with the King of the Cannibal Islands."

"As in my youth, I love you still; but tax not my credulity, lest in a moment of unfriendly suspicion I ask you to step behind me, calling you Satan."

He did not distrust me.

"If the enemies of my country but ceased to gnaw at her throbbing heart, I would rest."

"They have ceased," I replied.

"What! Has peace come again, and my country not come to pieces, but—saved?"

"Saved!" I answered.

"The Angel of Truth speaks to me, Ricardo?"

"I now represent that mythical person."

"One other question. Has the Executive of the country been true to humanity? Has he shown mercy? Has that mercy been tempered with justice? In the exercise of divine clemency, has he not proclaimed pardon to the lost, the erring, the benighted and ignorant enemies of our country?"

"He has fulfilled more than the demands of justice. Persons so sunk in the depths of ignorance as not to have attained high rank or not to be worth the paltry sum of twenty thousand dollars in greenbacks, have been pardoned."

"Can they roam at their own sweet will?"

"Anywhere, anywhere under the sun."

"My heart rejoices at this evidence of returned reason, justice and humanity. I advocate clemency. I embrace you in my inestimable joy."

You have seen the flaming sun decline from his meridian glow; you have heard the roaring ocean subside to a whispering murmur, as if to lull his kingdom to sleep. So came the glow of unnatural excitement from the face of my Clarence. So gently attuned his wild accents to the sweeter tones of his nature. Then, first since I met him on these distant shores, did he seem to wear the becoming habiliments of gentle peace. I found a more sympathetic humanity; the old lustre came back again to the recovered jewel.

CHAPTER VI.

IT was quite remarkable to me to witness such sublime love of country. This noble fellow had thrown up home, companions, a step-sister of whom he spake so affectionately, and whom I had reason to believe he dearly loved—everything that seemed to render life happy—and had fled to these uttermost parts of the earth, to the life on the sea, in order to escape the constant rumors of war and the oft-told tales of battle and misery. His soul was sick. And then, after his restless wanderings, I could scarcely comprehend the sublime magnanimity that would forgive his country's enemies, and forget the wrongs they had done. I said to myself: "My soul, take on these larger virtues. See how worthily they adorn the person of thy friend."

He had so subdued himself, that he could almost jest when speaking of some incidents which were narrated of the wily rebels. Upon his library table in the lodgings he had taken, I saw one day a little brass button. He tossed it in his hands, even lovingly as a toy that pleased him, and then rolled it towards me with a look that inquired if I had seen a rebel ornament. And on it I read the C. S. A., that made it a curiosity to be kept for one's children. To my unawakened sagacity there was no significance in this single possession. But he had other relics of the war that had so rent his heart. In his open portfolio I perceived something that appeared like rather coarsely engraved paper. "Some of the money," he said, carelessly, "which pays for raiment and cigars in Dixie."

But why should he carry it so carefully laid away—the scrip which all the rational world knew was worthless? He was loath to part with any to me, who would take a specimen as a curiosity. As we passed out of his apartment that day, after a lengthy indulgence in cigars and a learned discussion about nothing of any importance whatever, the door of his wardrobe swung open, and I caught a glimpse at a suit of gray hanging against the wall, with brass buttons, one of which was missing. To my friendly eyes, there was at that moment nothing of special meaning in a suit of gray. Black or blue would have been as meaningless, and, to my own taste, much more sensible garment for the season.

Beneath his open window I passed homeward from an entertainment elsewhere one moonlight evening, and I heard his well-modulated voice bearing out on to the evening air the words of an unfamiliar song—now raised, as if in the excited strain of a battle-song—now subdued to the sweeter tones of the peace that follows after victory. I caught only these words:

So rest we when the battle's done,
So rest the South when victory's won;
The Northern vandals one by one
Shall bite the dust they tread.

This was my friend's voice. I was not mistaken. After vainly listening to catch other words of the song, I passed on.

The fearful truth burst upon me like the morning sunlight. He had deceived me. He had played with my friendship. I had been an enemy to my country, by being a friend and companion of this cosmopolitan. Strange, my eyes had been closed. Why had I forgotten the land of his birth—the home of his boyhood, in the southern clime—in the proximity of the rice swamps, where he had breathed the miasma of rebellion from his childhood? I had seen in him only the friend of my cloister life. But, might I not be mistaken? Let the shadows of night pass away and the morning come, and I will meet him and challenge his patriotism.

The dreadful reflection that I had been deceived oppressed me. My blood was heated. I reached my chamber. My head seemed as if it would be bursted. Yes, yes. He had played me. But why such profuse professions of patriotism, if he— The thought was tearing my heart. I ceased to think. I sought repose in my French double-bed, and slept a troubled, dreamy sleep.

CHAPTER VII.

Early the next morning I discovered upon my table letters from the East. One of them was from another dear friend, who detailed to me, among other incidents of the death, fame, misfortunes, and glory of old companions, what in fewer words I narrate here. "Had I heard of our old and loving friend, Clarence, who, living in the lands of vilest rebeldom, had imbibed from the first the poisonous principles now attempting to be carried out? He had been made a Lieutenant in the Rebel service; had fought; been wounded; taken prisoner by the loyal troops; had been fed by the Sanitary Commission, that great minister of soups, jellies, and new blankets, had recovered and finally had escaped, and was now, it was thought, in Canada or somewhere else." I could not read farther. My heart ached again. "I will go and seek him," I said to myself—but did not.

Fate trips us in our eagerest moments.

I received at that moment a note in the autograph of Clarence:

"Dearest Ricardo—I have just received a telegram announcing the dangerous illness of my step sister. I flee to her by the overland route this morning. Write me. I would I could talk once more to you of the glorious achievements of war. I have wept for my country, but now rejoice. When you sing again the songs of loyalty, O! think of me.

Clarence."

This was a moment for reflection. He had gone and I should not have to seek him. But to remember that I had been deceived!—as I before remarked.

My thoughts flew backward to that hour in his room. That button. I saw the truth. It had become loosened and had fallen from the left breast of his coat of gray. That coat of gray and those trousers of the same color were his, of course, but they were more: they were the uniform of Clarence, the Rebel Lieutenant.

That coarse paper in his portfolio. It was the little change he had about him when he was taken prisoner.

My thoughts flew further backward.

Why did he wander on the sea? He feared the vigilance of his country's government would pursue, capture, and execute an escaped prisoner and a traitor.

Why did he commend and dwell upon the humanity and justice meted out by the Executive of his country when peace came? Alas! He had not risen to higher rank than that of Lieutenant, and was not worth the paltry sum of twenty thousand dollars, greenbacks.

He was free—a pardoned though unworthy rebel. I placed my hand upon my brow. I looked upward.

I said, "My soul! his virtues were not large. Assume something large to thyself. Pardon him in the name of this country, for he knoweth not everything that he doth."

My soul was at peace.

Struggling with my tears, I forgave the Cosmopolitan.

LIFE IN HAVANA.

The custom-house was an apartment as big as a barn—all the rooms in Havana are enormous. The floor was intolerably dirty; but the roof was a magnificent open timber one, the timber being solid beams of delightfully fragrant cedar. So you had the Augean Stables underneath, and Solomon's Palace in all his glory above—not an uncommon contrast in Cuba. The custom-house officers gave us very little trouble. I addressed the first gentleman with a cockade I met as señor—I should perhaps have called him caballero—begged a cigar light from him, and slipped a dollar into his hand. He opened one of my trunks, let a little tobacco-smoke into the orifice to fumigate it, and then dismissed me with a very low bow. Then I was handed to a little grated wicket, where another official, who was smoking so desperately that he sat, as it were, in the midst of a fleecy cloud, like one of Sir James Thornhill's allegories in the painted hall at Greenwich, asked me my name and country, and delivered to me a printed license to reside in Cuba for the space of three calendar months, which was very kind on his part, seeing that I only intended to remain in the island until the West India mail packet came in from St. Thomas. This license cost a good deal of money, four or five dollars, I think; and I noticed that when the official had filled up the form, he was a very long time handing it from a small pepper-castor, and looked very hard at me. I know, from long experience, what being intently regarded by an official of the Latin race means, and so "executed" myself without delay. We parted the best of friends, and I was peseta the poorer.

I was now free to proceed to an hotel; but this was much more easily said than done. In the first place, there were no public conveyances about, save the volantes, which are vehicles far too ethereal to carry heavy luggage; in the next, to find any tolerably comfortable hotel in Havana is a labor which, had it been imposed on Hercules, might have caused that strong man to be a little less conceited about his triumph over the Erymanthian boar and the eleven other difficulties. The wealthy and splendid city of Havana is worse off for hotels than any other in the civilized world. The Antilles, perhaps, cannot be held as belonging entirety to civilization; but, as the "Queen" of the Antilles, I think Havana might maintain at least one decent inn. There is an hotel in the Plaza Isabella Segunda, close to the Tacon Theatre, kept by one Legrand, a Frenchman; but I had heard dismal reports of its cleanliness, and it was situated, besides, beyond the walls, whereas I wanted to be near the Plaza de Armas and the sea. There is a very excellent boarding-house, clean, comfortable, and well appointed, kept by Mrs. Almi, an American lady; but her accommodation is limited, and her establishment is nearly always as "complete" as a Parisian omnibus on a wet day. I have been told, also, that there is a slight drawback to the comfort you enjoy at Mrs. Almi's, in the fact of the house being the chosen resort of consumptive invalids from the United States, who have fled from the asperity of the northern winter to the warmer sky of Cuba. But they are often in the penultimate stage of the disease when they land; they don't get better; and it is apt to spoil your dinner—so I was told—when inquiring for your next neighbor of the day before, who talked so charmingly of the last opera, and so hopefully of the coming bull-fight, you are informed that he has been dead for some hours, and will be buried this sundown in the Potters' field. You grow accustomed to this at last; for it may be said, without exaggeration, life in these regions of vomito and fever resembles life on board a man-o'-war in war-time. You are very merry with Jack and Tom overnight; and on the morrow Jack is "knocked over," and Tom "loses the number of his mess," and you say, "Poor Jack!" "Poor Tom!" Their clothes are sold by auction before the mast, and you forget all about the event.

With the exception of Legrand's and Mrs. Almi's, the inns of Havana are all very like what I should imagine the fondas and posadas of old Spain, away from Madrid, to be. I had heard such dreadful stories about them, that, blinking the pulmonary drawback, I determined to try Mrs. Almi's. By this time, with the assistance of several winning and grinning negroes, who danced with delight at the gift of a very small silver coin—I never saw any copper money at Havana—my luggage had been piled on a machine closely resembling one of those miniature drays in England, on which a very small barrel of beer is drawn by a very big horse, conducted by a very big man. The beast of draught was in this case a bullock, with an enormous yoke, not over his shoulders, but right across his head. The poor animal certainly earned his bread by the sweat of his brow; and, to judge from his lean flanks and protruding bones, I should infer that the jerked beef he might furnish, subsequent to his demise, would be dear at threepence a pound. The conductor, who sat the horse side-saddle fashion, was a prodigious old negro whose wool had turned white, and whose wicked old head—he was such a nasty-looking old man—was surmounted by a ragged straw hat. He was singing, of course, occasionally varying that recreation by skinning and gobbling the pulp of some oranges, of which he had a pocketful, and, on the whole, took things very easily. I presume he was a slave. I was bound to walk behind this sable drayman, for, although I might have taken a volante, was it not my duty to follow my luggage? And, but for an uncomfortable fancy that if I stepped on the dray and sat beside my trunk I should look like a traitor being drawn to execution at Tyburn on a sledge, I would have patronized that mode of locomotion.

POPULAR FALLACIES.

That warm air must be impure, and that, consequently, it is hurtful to sleep in a comparatively warm room. A warm room is as easily ventilated as a cool one. The warm air of a close vehicle is less injurious, be it ever so foul from over-crowding, than to ride and sit still and feel uncomfortably cold for an hour. The worst that can happen from a crowded conveyance is a fainting spell; while sitting, even less than an hour, in a still, chilly atmosphere, has induced attacks of pneumonia, that is, inflammation of the lungs, which often proves fatal in three or four days. It is always positively injurious to sleep in a close room where water freezes, because such a degree of cold causes the negatively poisonous carbonic acid gas of a sleeping-room to settle near the floor, where it is breathed and re-breathed by the sleeper, and is capable of producing typhoid fever in a few hours. Hence, there is no advantage, and always danger, especially to weakly persons, in an atmosphere colder than the freezing point. That it is necessary to the proper and efficient ventilation of a room, even in warm weather, that a window or door should be left open. This is always hazardous to the sick and convalescent. Quite as safe a plan of ventilation, and as efficient, is to keep a lamp or small fire burning in the fireplace. This creates a draft, and carries bad airs and gasses up the chimney.

That out-door exercises before breakfast are healthful. It is never so. And, from the very nature of things, it is hurtful, especially to persons of poor health, although the very vigorous may practice it with impunity. In winter, the body is easily chilled through and through, unless the stomach has been fortified with a good warm breakfast; and in warm weather, miasmatic and malarious gases and emanations speedily act upon the empty and weak stomach in a way to vitiate the circulation and induce fever and ague, diarrhœa and dysentery; entire families, who have arranged to eat breakfast before leaving the house, and to take supper before sundown, have had a complete exemption from fever and ague, while the community around them were suffering from it, from having neglected these precautions.

That whatever lessens a cough is "good" for it, and, if persevered in, will cure it. On the contrary, all coughs are soonest cured by promoting and increasing them; because nature endeavors by the cough to help to bring up the phlegm and yellow matter which is in the lungs, and the lungs cannot heal while that matter is there. And, as it cannot be got rid of without coughing, the more coughing there is the sooner it is got rid of—the sooner are the lungs cleaned out for the fuller and freer reception of pure air, which is their natural food. The only remedies which can do any good in coughs are such as loosen the phlegm, and thus less cough is required to bring it up. Those remedies are warmth, out-door exercise, and anything which slightly nauseates.

Unlocking the Rocks.—The great cost of silver and gold arises not so much from their scarcity in the earth, as the difficulty of extracting them from their stony combinations. Dr. J. C. Ayer, the well known chemist of Massachusetts, has cut this gordian knot. After having merited and received the gratitude of half mankind, by his remedies that cure their diseases, he is now winning the other half, by opening for them an easy road to the exhaustless treasures of the hills. He has discovered and published a chemical process, which renders, at little cost, the hardest rocks and ores friable like chalk, so that the precious metals are loosed from their confinement, and easily gathered. Mines too poor to pay may be worked at a profit now, and the yield of rich mines is largely increased, while the cost of extracting the metals from the ore is diminished. Either is a great achievement, to enrich mankind, or cure their diseases. But we are informed our celebrated countryman adheres to the latter, as his speciality and chief ambition.—Buffalo Sentinel.

Middletons' National Oil Portraits consist of portraits o Washington, Martha Washington, Lincoln, Clay, Jackson, Webster, Douglas, Grant, and Sherman, imprinted on canvas by the newly invented process of Mr. E. C. Middleton, of Cincinnati, in such a manner as to be faithful counterparts of oil paintings. As works of art, they are peculiarly appropriate, as well as patriotic, for parlor ornaments; and, as portraits, their accuracy and fidelity are attested by Edward Everett, Senator Richardson, Speaker Colfax, Mrs. Lincoln, Mrs. Daniel Webster, Mrs. Stephen A. Douglas, Mrs. General Grant, Mrs. General Sherman, and scores of others. These portraits are on exhibition at the salesroom of John Middleton & Son of this city. Mr. D. Warren Smith has been appointed special agent for the soliciting of subscriptions

Not to be Destroyed.—Davidson's Circassian Bloom is the most inimitable perfume of the day, and is the most delicate and harmless dressing for the complexion and skin. The air and winds do not dry and roughen the skin, when Davidson's Circassian Bloom is used as a dressing. Sold by all druggists.

UNCLE INGOT.

"IF ever you or yours get five pounds out of me, madam, before I die, I promise you, you shall have five thousand; and I am a man of my word." So spoke Mr. Ingot Beardmore, drysalter and common-councilman of the city of London, to Dorothea Elizabeth, his widowed sister-in-law, who had applied to him for pecuniary succor about three months after the death of his younger brother Isaac, her husband. There were harshness and stubborn determination enough in his reply, but there was no niggard cruelty. Mrs. Isaac wanted money, it is true, but only in the sense in which we all want it. She was only poor in comparison with the great wealth of this relative by marriage. Her income was large enough for any ordinary—Mr. Ingot said "legitimate"—purpose, but not sufficient for sending her boy to Eton, and finishing him off at the universities, as it was the maternal wish to do. Mr. Ingot hated such genteel intentions; Christ's Hospital had been a fashionable enough school for him, and he had "finished off" as a clerk at forty pounds a year in that very respectable house of which he was now the senior partner. With the results of that education, as exemplified in himself, he was perfectly satisfied, and if his nephews only turned out half as well, their mother, he thought, might think herself uncommonly lucky. Her family had given themselves airs upon the occasion of her marrying Isaac—"allying herself with commerce," some of them called it—and Ingot had never forgiven them. He gloried in his own profession, although government had never seen fit to ennoble any member of it, and perhaps all the more upon that account; for he was one of those radicals who are not "snobs" at heart, but rather aristocrats. He honestly believed that noblemen and gentlemen were the lower orders, and those who toiled and strove, the upper crust of the human pie. When he was told that the former classes often toiled and strove in their own way as much as the others, he made a gesture of contempt, and "blew" like an exasperated whale. It was a vulgar sort of retort, of course, but so eminently expressive, that his opponent rarely pursued the subject.

He rather liked his sister-in-law, in spite of her good birth; and would have, doubtless, largely assisted her had she consented to bring up her children according to his views; but since she preferred to take her own way, he withdrew himself more and more from her society, until they saw nothing at all of one another. He had no intention of leaving his money away from his brother's children; he had much too strong a sense of duty for that; and as for marriage, that was an idea that never entered into his hard old head. He had not made a fool of himself by falling in love in middle age, as Isaac had done (in youth, he had not time for such follies,) and it was not likely that at sixty-five he should commit any such imprudence. So his nephews and nieces felt confident of being provided for in the future. In the present, however, as time went on, and the education of both girls and boys grew more expensive, Mrs. Isaac's income became greatly straitened. Her own family very much applauded the expensive way in which she was bringing up her children, and especially her independence of spirit with relation to her tradesman brother-in-law, but they never assisted her with a penny. The young gentleman at Cambridge was therefore kept upon very short allowance; and the young ladies, whose beauty was something remarkable, affected white muslin, and wore no meretricious jewelry. Their pin-money was very limited, poor things, and they made their own clothes at home by the help of a sewing-machine. If Uncle Ingot could have seen them thus diligently employed, his heart would perhaps have softened towards them, but, as I have said, they now never got that chance. Julia, the elder, had been but six years old when he had last called at their highly-rented but diminutive habitation in Mayfair, and now she was eighteen, and had never seen him since. Although she had of course grown out of the old man's recollection, she remembered his figure-head, as she wickedly called his rigid features, uncommonly well; and, indeed, nobody who had ever seen it was likely to forget it. His countenance was not so much human as ligneous; and his profile Nephew Jack had actually seen upon a certain nobbly tree in the lime walk of Clare Hall at Cambridge—much more like than any silhouette ever cut out of black paper. They had laughed at the old gentleman in early days, and snapped their fingers at his churlishness, but it had become no laughing matter now.

That remark of Uncle Ingot's, "If ever you or yours get five pounds out of me, madam, before I die, I promise you, you shall have five thousand; and I am a man of my word," had become a very serious sentence, condemning all the family to, if not Poverty, at least very urgent Want. What it meant of course was, that he was resolutely determined to give them nothing. In vain the young ladies worked for Uncle Ingot slippers and book-markers for his birthday, and sent to him their best wishes at Christmas in Rimmel's highly scented envelopes; in vain Jack sent him a pound of the most excellent snuff that Bacon's emporium could furnish, at the beginning of every term. He always wrote back a civil letter of thanks in a clear and clerkly letter, but there was never any enclosure.

When Mrs. Isaac asked him to dinner, he declined in a caustic manner—avowing that he did not feel himself comfortable at the aristocratic tables of the West End—and sent her a pine-apple for the dessert, of his own growing. He had really no ill-feeling towards his relatives, although he kept himself so estranged from them; but I think this sort of conduct tickled the old gentleman's grim sense of humor. If he could have found some legitimate excuse for "making up" with his sister-in-law, within the first year or two of their falling out, perhaps he would have been glad to do so; but time had now so widened the breach, that it was not to be easily repaired. What he had satirically written when he declined her invitation had grown to be true; he rarely went into society, and almost never into the company of ladies, the elder portion of whom he considered frivolous and vexatious, and the younger positively dangerous. He had a few old-bachelor friends, however, with whom he kept up a cordial intercourse, and spent with them various festivals of the year as regularly as they came round.

On the 31st of December, for instance, he never omitted to go down to Reading, and "see the old year out and the new year in," in the company of Tom Whaffles, with whom he had worn the yellow stockings in those school-days that had passed away more than half a century ago. Tom and Isaac had been even greater cronies as boys than Tom and Ingot, but the latter did not like Tom the less upon that account: secretly, I think he esteemed him the more highly as a link between himself and that luckless family whose very existence he yet chose to ignore. Mr. Whaffles had intimate relations with them still; they came down to stay with him whenever his sister paid him a visit, and could act as their hostess: but this never happened in the last week of the year. Tom was never to speak to them of his old friend—that was not only tacitly understood, but had even been laid down in writing, as the basis of their intimacy.

On the 31st of December last, Mr. Ingot Beardmore found himself, as usual, at the Paddington Station, looking for an empty compartment, for his own company had got to be very pleasing to him. Having attained his object, and rolled himself up in the corner of the carriage in several greatcoats, with his feet upon a hot tin, and his hands clothed in thick mittens, and looking altogether like a polar bear who liked to make himself comfortable: when everything was arranged, I say, to the old gentleman's complete satisfaction, who should invade his privacy, just as the train was about to start, and the whistle had sounded, but one of the most bewitching young ladies you ever set eyes on!

"Madam, this carriage is engaged," growled he, pointing to the umbrella, carpet-bag, and books, which he had distributed upon all the seats, in order to give it that appearance.

"Only engaged to you, I think, sir," replied the charmer, flippantly. "Happy carriage! I wish I was. Isn't that pretty?"

Mr. Beardmore had never had anything half so shocking said to him in all his life, and if the train had not been already set in motion, he would have called upon the guard for help, and left the carriage forthwith. As it was, he could only look at this shameless young person with an expression of the severest reprobation. At the same time his heart sank within him at the reflection, that the train was not to stop till he reached his destination—Reading. What indignities might he not have to suffer before he could obtain protection! She was a modest-looking young lady, too, very simply dressed, and her voice was particularly sweet and prepossessing, notwithstanding the very dreadful remarks in which she had indulged. Perhaps she was out of her mind—and at this idea Mr. Ingot Beardmore broke out, notwithstanding the low temperature, into a very profuse perspiration.

"Now, what will you give me for a kiss, you—you old polar bear?" asked the fair stranger playfully, as the train flew by Ealing.

"Nothing, madam, nothing; I am astonished at you," answered Mr. Beardmore, looking anxiously round the carriage in the desperate hope of finding one of those newly-patented inventions for affording communication with the guard.

"Well, then, I'll take one, and leave it to your honor," continued the young lady with a peal of silver laughter; and with that she lightly rose, and before the old gentleman could free himself from his wraps, or ward her off with his muffetees, she had imprinted a kiss upon his horny cheek. Mr. Beardmore's breath was so utterly taken away by this assault, that he remained speechless, but his countenance was probably more full of expression than it had ever been in his life. "O no, I am not mad," laughed she in reply to it, "although I have taken a fancy to such a wonderful old creature. Now come, if I kiss you again, what will you give me?"

"I shall give you in charge to the police, madam, the instant that I arrive at Reading."

"Give me in charge! What for, you curious piece of antiquity?"

"For an assault, madam; yes, for an assault. Don't you know that you have no right to kiss people without their consent in this manner?"

She laughed so violently that the tears came into her eyes. "Do you suppose, you poor old doting creature, that anybody will ever believe such a story as that? Do you ever use such a thing as a looking-glass, you poor dear? Are you aware how very unprepossessing your appearance is, even when you don't frown, as you are doing now, in a manner that is enough to frighten one? You have, of course, a perfect right to your own opinion, but if you suppose the police will agree with you, you will find yourself much mistaken. The idea of anybody wanting to kiss you will reasonably enough appear to them preposterous."

"What is it you require of me, you wicked creature?" cried the old bachelor, in an agony of shame and rage.

"I want payment for my kiss. To a gentleman at your time of life, who scarcely could expect to be so favored, surely it is worth—what shall I say?—five pounds. What! not so much? Well, then, here's another for your other cheek." Like a flash of lightning, she suited the action to her words. "There, then, five pounds for the two, and I won't take a shilling less. You will have to give it to the poor's box at the police station, if not to me. For I intend, in case you are obstinate, to complain of your disgraceful conduct to the guard, at the first opportunity. I shall give you into custody, sir, as sure as you are alive. You will be put upon your oath, you know, and all you will dare to say will be that I kissed you, and not you me. What 'roars of laughter' there will be in court, and how funny it will all look in the papers!" Here the young lady began to laugh again, as though she had already read it there. Mr. Beardmore's grim sense of humor was, as usual, accompanied by a keen dislike of appearing ridiculous. True, he hated to be imposed upon; still, of the two evils, was it not better to pay five pounds than to be made the laughing-stock of his bachelor friends, who are not the sort of people to commiserate one in a misfortune of this kind?

In short, Mr. Ingot Beardmore paid the money. Mr. Thomas Whaffles found his guest that evening anything but talkative. There was a select party of the male sex invited to meet him, by whom the rich old drysalter was accustomed to be regarded as an oracle; but upon this occasion he had nothing to say; the consciousness of having been "done" oppressed him. His lips were tightly sealed; his cheeks were still glowing from the audacious insult that had been put upon them; his fingers clutched the pocket-book in which there was a five-pound note less than there ought to be. But when his host and himself were left alone that night, "seeing the old year out, and the new year in," his heart began to thaw under the genial influences of friendship and gin punch, and he told his late adventure to Tom Whaffles, not without some enjoyment of his own mischance.

"I could really almost forgive the jade," said he, "for having taken me in so cleverly. I daresay, however, she makes quite a profession of it; and that half a score of old gentlemen have been coerced before now into ransoming their good name as I did. And yet she was as modest and lady-like looking a girl as ever you saw."

"Was she anything like this?" inquired Mr. Whaffles, producing a photograph.

"Why, that's the very girl!" exclaimed the guest. "Ha! ha! Tom; so you, too, have been one of her victims, have you? Well, now, this is most extraordinary."

"Not at all, my dear fellow. I know her very well; and her sister, and her mother, and her brother too. I can introduce you to her if you like. There's not the least harm in her; bless you, she only kissed you for a bit of fun."

"A bit of fun!" cried Mr. Beardmore. "Why, she got a five-pound note out of me!"

"But she does not mean to keep it, I am very sure. Would you like to see her again? Come, 'Yes' or 'No?'"

"If she will give me back my money, 'Yes.'"

"Very well," returned the host; "mind, you asked for her yourself;" and he rang the bell pretty sharply twice.

"Here she is: it's your niece, Miss Julia. Her mother and sister are now staying under this very roof."

"Yes, uncle," said the young lady demurely. "Here is your five-pound note: please to give me that five thousand which you promised mamma if ever she or hers got five pounds out of you; for you are a man of your word, I know. But what would be better still would be, to let me kiss you once more, in the character of your dutiful niece; and let us all love you as we want to do. It was an audacious stratagem, I admit, but I think you will forgive me—come."

"There go the church-bells!" cried Tom Whaffles. "It is the new year, and a fitting time to forget old enmities. Give your uncle a kiss, child."

Uncle Ingot made no resistance this time, but avowed himself fairly conquered; and between ourselves, although he made no "favorites" among his newly-reconciled relatives, but treated them with equal kindness, I think he always liked Niece Julia best, who had been the cause of healing a quarrel which no one perhaps had regretted more at heart than Uncle Ingot himself.

THE highest inhabited place on the globe is the post-house of Ancomarco, in Peru, nearly 16,000 feet above the sea.

THE FIELD OF FAIR OAKS.

[George Alfred Townsend, in The Campaigns of a Non-Combatant, gives the following vivid description of the field of Fair Oaks after the battle. The incidents mainly relate to that portion occupied by Meagher's Irish Brigade:]

A YOUNG staff officer took me over the field. We visited first the cottage and barns across the road, and found the house occupied by some thirty wounded Federals They lay in their blankets upon the floors—pale, helpless, hollow-eyed, making low moans at every breath. Two or three were feverishly sleeping, and, as the flies revelled upon their gashes, they stirred uneasily and moved their hands to and fro. By the flatness of the covering at the extremities, I could see that several had only stumps of legs. They had lost the sweet enjoyment of walking afield, and were but fragments of men, to limp forever through a painful life. Such wrecks of power I never beheld. Broad, brawny, buoyant, a few hours ago, the loss of blood, and the nervous shock, attendant upon amputation, had well nigh drained them to the last drop. Their faces were as white as the tidy ceiling; they were whining like babies; and only their rolling eyes distinguished them from mutilated corpses. Some seemed quite broken in spirit, and one, who could speak, observing my pitiful glances toward his severed thigh, drew up his mouth and chin, and wept as if with the loss of comeliness all his ambitions were frustrated. A few attendants were brushing off the insects with boughs of cedar, laving the sores, or administering cooling draughts. The second story of the dwelling was likewise occupied by wounded, but in a corner clustered the terrified farmer and his family, vainly attempting to turn their eyes from the horrible spectacle. The farmer's wife had a baby at her breast, and its little blue eyes were straying over the room, half wonderingly, half delightedly. I thought, with a shudder, of babyhood thus surrounded, and how, in the long future, its first recollections of existence should be of booming guns and dying soldiers! The cow-shed contained seven corpses, scarcely yet cold, lying upon their backs, in a row, and fast losing all resemblance to man. The farthest removed, seemed to be a diminutive boy, and I thought if he had a mother, that she might some time like to speak with me. When I took their names, I thought what terrible agencies I was fulfilling. Beyond my record, falsely spelled, perhaps, they would have no history. And people call such deaths glorious!

Upon a pile of lumber and some heaps of fence rails, close by, sat some dozens of wounded men, mainly Federals, with bandaged arms and faces, and torn clothing. There was one, shot in the foot, who howled at every effort to remove his boot; the blood leaked from a rent in the side, and at last, the leather was cut, piecemeal from the flesh. These ate voraciously, though in pain and fear; for a little soup and meat were being doled out to them.

The most horrible of all these scenes—which I have described perhaps too circumstantially—was presented in the stable or barn, on the premises, where a bare, dingy floor—the planks of which tilted and shook, as one made his way over them—was strewn with suffering people. Just at the entrance sat a boy, totally blind, both eyes having been torn out by a minnie-ball, and the entire bridge of the nose shot away. He crouched against the gable, in darkness and agony, tremulously fingering his knees. Near at hand, sat another, who had been shot through the middle of the forehead, but singular to relate, he still lived, though lunatic, and evidently beyond hope. Death had drawn blue and yellow circles beneath his eyes, and he muttered incomprehensibly, wagging his head. Two men, perfectly naked, lay in the middle of the place, wounded in bowels and loins; and at a niche in the weather-boarding, where some pale light peeped in, four mutilated wretches were gaming with cards. I was now led a little way down the railroad, to see the Confederates. The rain began to fall at this time, and the poor fellows shut their eyes to avoid the pelting of the drops. There was no shelter for them within a mile, and the mud absolutely reached half way up their bodies. Nearly one third had suffered amputation above the knee. There were about thirty at this spot, and I was told that they were being taken to Meadow Station on hand cars. As soon as the locomotive could pass the Chickahominy, they would be removed to White House, and comfortably quartered in the Sanitary and hospital boats. Some of them were fine, athletic, and youthful, and I was directed to one who had been married only three days before.

"Doctor," said one, feebly, "I feel very cold: do you think that this is death? It seems to be creeping to my heart. I have no feeling in my feet, and my thighs are numb."

A Federal soldier came along with a bucket of soup, and proceeded to fill the canteens and plates. He appeared to be a relative of Mark Tapley, and possessed much of that estimable person's jollity—

"Come, pardner," he said, "drink yer sup! now, old boy, this'll warm ye; sock it down and you'll see yer sweetheart soon. You dead, Allybammy? Go way, now. You'll live a hundred years, you will. That's wot you'll do. Won't he, lad? What? Not any? Get out! You'll be slap on your legs next week and hev another shot at me the week a'ter that. You know you will! Oh, you Rebil! You, with the butternut trousers! Say! Wake up and take some o' this. Hello! lad, pardner. Wake up!"

He stirred him gently with his foot; he bent down to touch his face. A grimness came over his merriment. The man was stiff and dumb.

Col. Baker, commanding the 88th New York, was a tall, martial Irishman, who opened his heart and bottle at the same welcome, and took me into the woods, where some of the slain still remained. He had slept not longer than an hour, continuously, for seventy hours, and during the past night had been called up by eight alarms. His men lay in the dark thickets, without fires or blankets, as they had crossed the Chickahominy in light marching order.

'Many a lad," said he, "will escape the bullet for a lingering consumption."

We had proceeded but a very little way, when we came to a trodden place beneath the pines, where a scalp lay in the leaves, and the imprint of a body was plainly visible. The bayonet scabbard lay at one side, the canteen at the other. We saw no corpses, however, as fatigue parties had been burying the slain, and the whole wood was dotted with heaps of clay, where the dead slept below in the oozy trenches. Quantities of cartridge were scattered here and there, dropped by the retreating Confederates. Some of the cartridge-pouches that I examined were completely filled, showing that their possessors had not fired a single round; others had but one cartridge missing. There were fragments of clothing, hair, blankets, murderous bowie and dirk knives, spurs, flasks, caps, and plumes, dropped all the way through the thicket, and the trees on every hand were riddled with balls. I came upon a squirrel, unwittingly shot during the fight. Not those alone who make the war must feel the war! At one of the mounds the burying party had just completed their work, and the men were throwing the last clods upon the remains. They had dug pits of not more than two feet depth, and dragged the bodies heedlessly to the edges, whence they were toppled down and scantily covered. Much of the interring had been done by night, and the flare of lanterns upon the discolored faces and dead eyes must have been hideously effective. The grave-diggers, however, were practical personages, and had probably little care for dramatic effects. They leaned upon their spades, when the rites were finished, and a large, dry person, who appeared to be privileged upon all occasions, said, grinningly:

"Colonel, your honor, them boys 'ill niver stand forninst the Irish brigade again. If they'd ha' known it was us, sur, begorrah! they'd ha' brought coffins wid 'em."

"No, niver!" "They got their ticket for soup!" "We kivered them, fait', will inough!" shouted the other gravediggers.

"Do ye belave, Colonel," said the dry person again, "that thim ribals 'll lave us a chance to catch them. Be me sowl! I'm jist wishin' to war-rum me hands wid rifle practice."

The others echoed loudly that they were anxious to be ordered up, and some said that "Little Mac 'll give 'em his big whack now." The presence of death seemed to have added no fear of death to these people. Having tasted blood, they now thirsted for it, and I asked myself, forebodingly, if a return to civil life would find them less ferocious.

An exchange gives the following gossip concerning Victor Hugo: "He rises, winter and summer, with the sun. He lights his fire and makes his coffee; then he writes, reads, or composes until eleven, and during that time no one troubles him in his meditations. At eleven, whatever the temperature may be, he goes out on the terrace of the house, which is on the same level as his room, and makes long ablutions with cold water. Then comes the breakfast hour, devoted to family chat and the reading of newspapers and letters. This meal generally lasts for an hour and a half. Then the poet takes long walks across the island. He works while walking, and often stops before the points he specially admires. He is not much given to eating. His table is simply set, and he is always satisfied with the dishes set before him. Although he has a good appetite, he is moderate, and no one can say that he has seen him commit the least excess. Victor Hugo goes to bed early, generally before ten o'clock. Pens, ink, and paper are placed on a table nigh him. Often in his broken sleep he jots down the thoughts that cross his mind. Sometimes he writes in the dark and makes hieroglyphics that in the morning he alone can decipher."

Mr. Collier's latest illustration of old English literature is a reprint of the famous pamphlet on "The Life and Death of Gamaliel Ratney, a famous Thief of England, executed at Bedford, the 26th of March last past, 1605." It is a very curious piece, and is important for its reference to Shakspeare coming to London as a poor lad, and afterwards owning a lordship in the country.

The trials of life are the tests which ascertain how much gold there is in us.

THE THIEVES OF BENGAL.

IN the cool of the evening, your budgerow being safely moored by means of ropes fastened to stout stakes driven into the bank, and you being seated on the roof of the boat dreamily gazing on the expanse of river before you, broken as it is, here and there, by the long, low sand-banks which the waters have thrown up in their impetuous flow—you happen, in a listless sort of a way, to observe an earthen pitcher floating bottom upwards, and slowly approaching your boat. You forget, a moment after, that you have seen it; floating ghurrahs (as these pitchers are called) in a river into which hundreds are thrown in company with the bodies of their dead owners, are a by no means uncommon sight. Soon after, however, as the darkness begins to come on, you make the disagreeable discovery that your boat is filling with water. It sinks and makes a cosey bed for itself in the soft mud, before you can do anything to save it. You wade to shore, and make the best of your way to the nearest thannah (police station) for assistance. The thannah is miles away inland; and by the time you get back, you find that the people of a neighboring village have helped themselves to your property, and escaped. It does not occur to you to connect the sinking of the budgerow with the harmless gurrah that came floating down the stream in its purposeless course, and bumped accidentally against the side of your boat; and yet the two things stand very much in the relation of cause and effect. That ghurrah is not an empty one, nor was it accident that brought it in contact with the boat. In it was a human head, to which was attached a living body; and this body, which you did not see because it was under water, directed the course of the ghurrah. The villain, who thus got to the side of your boat unsuspected, bored a hole or two into it before the ghurrah floated off again. He was in league with a band of dacoits who watched and waited for the denouement from a distance, and then came down like vultures upon their prey.

I am not aware that the dacoits of the Soonderbuns have practiced the ghurrah stratagem, but they have done things quite as clever. I have known them, for example, to take away not only the blanket under which one had been sleeping, but the very sheet on which he had been lying asleep, and that without waking him. A gentleman was once travelling through the Soonderbuns in "a native boat," that is to say, a boat surmounted by a mat-constructed cabin. It was December, and as the cold north wind came oozing in through the matting, he drew his blanket over him on getting into bed. He awoke earlier than usual the next morning, feeling very cold, and wondering at the large amount of morning light that pervaded his cabin. To his dismay, he found not only that he was blanketless, but that a hole two feet square had been cut in the matting. While pondering these things, he made the further discovery that the sheet on which he had laid was no longer on the bed. The inference was clear that he had had a nocturnal visitor. He had heard stories of the sheet-lifting before; but not till now, that he had himself been successfully practiced upon, did he believe that the feat could be accomplished. The scoundrel who covets the sheet under you, approaches your bedside armed with a feather, with which he gently tickles your ear. Accustomed as you are to the buzz of mosquitoes, which, by the way, have a notable penchant for singing in one's ears, you only fidget a little in your sleep, and, turning on your side, press the ear that had been operated on, on the pillow. Immediately one half of the sheet thus released is rolled up lengthwise close under your back. The feather is again cautiously applied to the exposed ear; you turn once more, and the other half of the sheet is released. One more tickle adroitly administered disengages the sheet altogether, and the rascal no doubt inwardly chuckles as he leaves you to your slumber.

But it is only the men who do business on their own account, and who go out alone, that care to observe caution in their proceedings. Every villager in these watery districts owns a canoe or dinghy for going to market in, so that he needs no further stock in-trade when he takes to the thieving line. His dinghy, generally about seven feet long, is propelled by a single pole, feathered at both ends. Standing upright in his boat, and grasping the pole in the middle with both hands, he manages, by an easy action of the wrists, to dip the ends alternately into the water on either side, and so to shoot along with wonderful rapidity. Being alone, he is timid, and will try to escape the moment he is likely to be discovered. But professional dacoits go about in large parties, and, till recently, were very bold. Their canoes are from thirty to forty feet long, and are propelled with marvellous swiftness, by a double line of paddles, which are preferred to regular oars because they do not rest on the side of the boat, and may be worked noiselessly. The paddle is worked with both hands. Held out over the side, and dipped perpendicularly into the water, with the blade at right angles to the boat, it pushes back the water very effectively, and a canoe rowed by twenty-five or thirty men, each with a paddle, secures it a speed which makes capture hopeless.

It is rumored that Honor May, the musical novel, recently published by Ticknor & Fields, was written by Miss Bartol, daughter of Rev. Dr. C. A. Bartol, the well-known Unitarian clergyman of Boston.

NOTICE.

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

letters relating to the Business, Editorial or other Departments of the paper should be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN, No. 532 Merchant street, San Francisco.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, MAY 26, 1866.

FULL volumes of The Californian, from the commencement, can be obtained at the office, 532 Merchant street. Price, in muslin, $4 per volume; two volumes (one year) bound together, $6. Unbound, per volume, $2 50.

OLMSTEAD'S REPORT

IN REGARD TO A PLAN OF PUBLIC PLEASURE GROUNDS.

PROFESSOR OLMSTEAD'S report on the subject of a public park, submitted some weeks since to the Board of Supervisors, does not seem to stir the slightest interest with the community at large. The Bulletin published the document in full, and thus introduced the plan and its details to the public; yet it seems as if no interest is felt in the matter. If the plan in question is impracticable, then let us ask for others; it is our duty to take preliminary steps now, for, in a few years more, the task will not only be more difficult, but an hundred times more expensive. The report itself discusses the whole question in the fullest manner, and is conclusive in its logic of the necessity of a park, and the importance of a selection of the ground without unnecessary delay. We assume it is conceded that, not only is a park indispensable in a sanitary point of view, but that it is a measure most important in its relation to the stability and prosperity of our city. We know no other plan that so closely touches the future of San Francisco--the Pacific railroad alone excepted. Why, then, there should be so much general and individual apathy on the subject is beyond our comprehension.

At present land is cheap, and a tax for the purchase of enough for a large and extensive park—its area to be determined by the future requirements of the city—would be accepted, we think, with pleasure. The laying out, the embellishment, etc., could be provided for by a small annual appropriation--thus making the expense a cheerful burden. For present use—as a place for pic-nics, parades, drives, and of general resort—a large expenditure would not be required, the purchase excepted. We believe that the plan of finding a park in the municipal domain is absurd and chimerical. If people anticipate that enough land will be saved for parks from the property outside of Alcalde grants, claimed as the fee of this corporation, then they will be wofully disappointed. We will be surprised if the city ever gains sufficient of the Pueblo grant to construct a ring for the Cosmopolitan Circus. Certain papers may attempt to demonstrate such a plan feasible; but, if any thinking and experienced head can be found to agree with such papers, and can show where the land is to be seen, and how, when seen, a title to it in the city can be had short of purchase, then we will gladly confess ourselves mistaken. Most of the lands included in Olmstead's plan lie within the Van Ness ordinance, under which the city's claim, if she ever had any, has long since been extinguished by a solemn act of quit-claim, approved and ratified by Legislative and Congressional action, and judicial decision. Therefore, the proposition to take outside lands for park purposes is made in ignorance of the legal status of such lands, and is as frivolous as it is impossible of attainment. Spoliation by this corporation is out of the question—we can have parks by purchase or gift, but in no other way.

We are disposed to think the Olmstead plan imperfect and made up without sufficient study and knowledge of the topography of our county. It is true Mr. Olmstead did personally visit and inspect those portions embraced in his report, but he didn't do it with special reference to the probability of a park being determined on in his generation, and that its project and execution would be confined to him. His plan, as submitted to the Board of Supervisors, is drawn from memory, and from maps and photographs sent him since he left. Looking to the essentials he names: that there should be shelter from the west wind; that no ground shall be selected which is already of great value; that it should extend in the direction in which the city is likely to advance; and that "it will be much more economical to adopt a plan which comprehends everything that is likely to be wanted at the outset;" looking, then, to these things, we think his plan falls short of the conditions he names. The broad avenue in his plan sweeps over a valuable part of the city, and includes lots which can not be purchased at rates varying from $3 000 to $10.000 per acre. Any commission of appraisement must look to the market value of the lands in question; must compute the damages owners "may sustain by being deprived thereof;" it cannot arbitrarily dispossess and compel the acceptance of an half or a quarter of what the property may be worth; it must make "such compensation therefor as may be deemed reasonable;" and the rule of value must be from evidence—not the arbitrary judgment or prejudice of such a commission. Under this view of the case, the purchase of the realty selected by Mr. Olmstead will reach an amount that will frighten tax payers. Besides, those portions he prefers are not the most picturesque and sheltered: on the contrary, they are physically inappropriate, and not susceptible of easy adaptation as features of a park that is constructed on the plan of beauty, convenience, and pleasure. Looking to the fact that our city is "worthy to be, and destined to be, one of the largest, if not the largest city in the world," and that, in the selection of a park, railroad facilities render distance a matter of no consideration, it seems to us that making Lake Merced the initial point and then running to the bay, so as to include portions of the San Miguel, Bernal, and La Visitacion Ranches, all the conditions of Mr. Olmstead would be met. There we have a country with a rich soil, diversified by hill and valley; sheltered from the sea winds more than any other portions of the county are; a beautiful lake prepared to hand, both termini of the park at the water, in the one case a splendid sea-beach ride and view; holding little sheltered valleys; and the bed of a creek—or arroyo—running "from southwest to northeast" entirely protected from the wind, and the character of the soil of which can be seen from the gardens which green its slopes. The San José railroad bridge spans one such ravine which, with its bluff granite sides and depth of bottom, far exceeds in picturesque and natural beauty, anything in Central Park. Besides, these lands can be purchased at a price less than one tenth of those selected by Olmstead.

These remarks are intended to excite discussion and suggestions, as well as to keep before the public the importance of some early action in the matter of a park.

INIGOINGS.

STEAMER "SACRAMENTO," Panama Harbor,
April 30, 1866—4 o'clock A. M.

HERE we are in Panama harbor—four o'clock in the morning, and catamarans and such things lying all around us.

The Sacramento, you see, is a heavy vessel, and the surrounding ones are lighters!

Ha! ha! how is that for a joke?—not a breath of air stirring, and the thermometer standing at 210 degrees in the shade.

Oh, such a sleepy-looking crowd. At one, or thereabouts, the gong rang, and all hands were called to breakfast. Not hungry, but never disposed to shirk a duty, I turned out and took a seat at table. In the abstraction and sleepiness consequent upon this most unusual business hour, I stuck my fork in my ear, and nearly chopped my neighbor's fingers off in attempting to carve a contiguous steak—but such is life. Many a better man, probably, has suffered at the stake.

If that's a bad joke, put it down to the weather and the hour—the latter an unusually early one for a bird so little desirous to catch worms, that since the invention of Trichina he has wholly abstained from Pork.

Verily, in the matter of this premature and ill-considered breakfasting, the enemy is Hours—Early Hours. Why could they not have suffered one to sleep a little while longer? For it is reported now that we cannot get ashore before this afternoon. The opening couplet of Locksley Hall came into my mind when that infernal gong rang:

Comrades, leave me here a little, while as yet 'tis early morn;
Leave me here, and when you want me, sound upon your bugle horn.

Who had not rather be wakened by a bugle horn, a horn of whiskey, Kate Horn, the horn of a wild bull, or in fact any other horn in creation, than by the crash of a gong? The sound is agreeable enough when one is hungry, and is called to dinner thereby; but to be awakened—Lord!—fire off a small howitzer in my ear; explode a package of nitro-glycerine in my trouser's pocket, or do anything else calculated to jar upon one's nerves, in preference.

For when the first rattle and crash comes, the impression is that the train of thought which one pursues even in dreams has run off the track, and that there is a wreck of worlds and disaster of ideas.

On every side of me people are grumbling: "Why did they call us so early?"

Bah! It is the very vice of nature to be discontented. I do believe that some people—persons would be more correct, perhaps—would grumble were they going to be hanged.

Various employments are indulged in by these involuntary flaneurs pour passer le temps. The most sensible method that I know of, is the one adopted by a fellow out on the guard, immediately opposite to where I am writing. He has his arms around a girl's waist, and seems to be telling her that old, old story, which Adam told to Eve in the Garden of Eden--and which all women since are fools enough to believe.

But I—behold me: Alone, unguarded--for I am sitting, not on the guard but in the main saloon, where it is hot enough to roast a turkey, let alone a Turk—and having what can I do?

No one to love and none to caress,

Do? First love of my heart, ignis fatuus--though never did you fat your proprietors much—of my soul, Delilah of my affections, and Dead Sea apple of my hopes: what better can I do than sit down and write you a letter, chronicling what has happened during the voyage; holding converse with you from this corner of the continent, precisely as I was wont to when seated in that literally literary—inasmuch as always littered—sanctum, which I always entered with distaste and left with regret.

What impressions de voyage has one to relate when travelling over a route so often journeyed that the cleaving keels of vessels have left an actually traceable path in the waters?

Impressions, indeed! They may all be summed up in one word: Hot! Oh, ye voyagers hitherward! bring no weighty clothes with you. Discard all old notions about flannel suits, and come clad in gauze—light as a grasshopper's wing and airy as a young girl's first dreams of love. And, above all, bring no extra baggage with you. For the inexorable Fuller stands at the head of the scales, and the immutable Dick Bevil, pencil in hand, sits at the foot; and, between the two, the Lord help you. That they are honest, my lord, I will not deny; but that they know how to chalk things down, who shall dispute? Had I a ranch, a grass ranch, how I would like to employ the two gentlemen above named—the one to weigh my hay, the other to charge and collect for it.

My baggage weighed heavy—half a ton. I was at a loss to account for the weight, till I recollected I had a live-act play, translated and adapted from the German of Lessing by myself and my calm-eyed, smooth-tempered friend, Dr. Hermann Muller.

And the heat of that baggage-room. "Think of your latter end," was the parting injunction of a pious friend--and I did think of it, as I went bumping down stairs, landing in a lower deck dormitory, to the heat of which the left wing of Tophet is cool in comparison. Toiling, sweating, and occasionally swearing, by way of assuaging the general friction, were a crowd of promiscuous passengers and porters--it was a struggle to be first, and the first was generally last. Never before did I comprehend what it was to Suffer and be strong,

for, indeed, I suffered; and that those in the neighborhood were strong, a breeze, not from Araby the Blest, abundantly testified.

But why dwell on the subject, when I left the object as soon as possible? And there sat Bevel and Fuller, chalking down the weight--in baggage-rooms, people perforce learn to labor and to wait—cool as cucumbers, and never missing an ounce.

They were talking of fast freight among themselves, in mysterious whispers. I know a few young ladies in the ship who might, I think, have been ticketed through at their respective avoirdupois weights as "fast freight," with perfect propriety.

But, what about our voyage? On Friday morning, between eleven and twelve, Frank Winchester, a cabin passenger, aged about twenty-five years, died. At sunset, his body was committed "to the deep"--an euphemism for the sharks—with all the impressiveness which an ill-read burial service could give.

At the critical moment the engines were stopped—splash! went the corpse from the hurricane deck above, over the taffrail, and all was over. Singularly enough, hardly had the body sank from sight, when a strange, solitary bird suddenly appeared, hovering over the spot, and following the ship until its pinions were shadowed by the rapidly falling night. The sailors swore it was the spirit of the man whose body had been given to the whelming waters.

Saturday morning, another man died—a steerage passenger, named Kellim. Such an emaciated being I never before saw. Strolling forward the other day, I saw him sitting up in his cot, while his fellows around were eating. And I thought of the old Egyptian custom of introducing a skeleton at the feast, gaunt and grim, to remind the guests of the grave deserts to follow, when the regular courses of life were done.

It is due that I say that everything possible was done by officers and passengers to contribute to the comfort of these poor fellows, whose names are transferred from our passenger list to the longer list of those bound for a port whence no return tickets are issued.

Both these men died of consumption. It is curious to me why men in the last stages of an incurable disease, should embark upon a long sea-voyage, which at the best can but hasten demise. The same amount of money, it would seem to the practical mind, might be much better spent in procuring comforts on shore--where a headstone might at least be had.

They laugh at me for objecting to a sea burial, and expressing a preference for a last resting-place under the yews of the village churchyard, the green grasses growing over me, and the flowers, which a few loving hands might plant, blossoming out from my dust. Be it so. I hold to the preference still. Let those who like go drifting about the trackless ocean, in wild unrest, until the Archangel shall his trumpet sound—their last moments unsoothed by the kind ministrations of affection. As for me, let me die, when die I must, something after the manner of "Camille," in the fifth act—to the sound of slow music, my head pillowed on a loving breast. And I think I'd haunt the ship whose captain refused to pack me in ice or preserve me in whiskey till a port was reached.

Sunday we had service. As on the previous occasion, it was read by a D. D., "spelled" by an M. D.—and if honors were easy, the latter at least had the advantage of the odd trick. For my good friend the doctor, this time, improved on his former reading. He then only asked that we were to be forgiven for the sins we had done, and the sins we had not done—now he supplicated that we be forgiven for the sins we intended to do. Can you imagine a more sweeping prayer?

Perhaps you'd like to have me write more? And perhaps you think I couldn't write more if I wanted to? Oh, foreman! and oh, faithful, but talkative "Bob!" can not each and all of you testify that I, weighed in the balance, was never yet found wanting? Have I not written against both time and space—to the utter annihilation of both? And have I ever fallen a line short, however much I may have overrun? Tell me, ye winged winds and things!

Just at present, having reached the twelfth slip, with a dull pencil and no knife to sharpen it with; with two ladies on either side, urging me to make haste and "finish," to go shopping with them—

> How happy I could be with ether,
> Were t'other æsthetic away—with the clanging of a pump in one ear, and the deafening squall of a baby in the other, I close this communication, written under difficulties, trusting to the good offices of the proof-reader to avert any "typographical error" or grammatical lapse by which the Dramatic Chronicle can crucify me.

INIGO.

AMUSEMENTS.

THE character of "Lear," the greatest of Shakspeare's creations, has been the test part and the study of the most gifted actors for generations; and we doubt if any have mastered it to their satisfaction. It stands, as it were, an imperishable gauntlet thrown out by the greatest creative mind of the stage, challenging all future intellects to its adequate conception and impersonation. That Mr. Forrest, in the character, on Monday and Tuesday evenings, filled the Opera House with an audience that tested its capacity, is not surprising; and that he should partially fail in satisfying the too sanguine expectations of those who saw him in "Richelieu" and "Virginius," is scarcely less so. We do not propose at this interval of time to go into an extended criticism of Mr. Forrest's impersonation of the character. It is sufficient to say that it possessed all the merits of his impersonation of "Richelieu"—great power and vigor of action in the rhetorical and impassioned parts—but was marked by the usual inefficiency in depicting the mental strife, the phrenzied pathos and majesty, the great grief and agony, of the grand old king, which no delineator has ever truly represented. That this is so, does not detract from the fame of Mr. Forrest, for his impersonation of the character is as masterly a piece of acting as the stage of the present day can present.

The gentle "Elia," one of the most competent of English critics, says: "The 'Lear' of Shakspeare cannot be acted;" and adds that the stage machinery with which the storm is mimicked "is not more inadequate to represent the real power of the elements, than any actor can be to represent the greatness of 'Lear.'"

The "supports" were excellent. Mr. McCullough's "Edgar" was the best performance he has yet given us. His rendering of "Mad Tom" was exceedingly good. Miss Lillie's "Cordelia" was very effective. Mr. Thorne, as "Edmund;" Mr. Leman, as "Kent;" Mr. Coad, as "Oswald;" and Mrs. Sophie Edwin and Mrs. Jackson, as the two unnatural daughters, gave able characterizations of their parts.

"The "Othello" of Mr. Forrest, on Wednesday evening, was received by an audience of no less magnitude than that which attended his performance of "Lear." The springs of action in "Othello"—love, jealousy, and revenge—are more fathomable qualities than the weird fancies of the diseased mind of "Lear," and are more capable of embodiment. The honest, confident Moor, infuriated with jealousy, torn with doubts, struggling in his noble nature against his convictions—loving, yet filled with the fire of vengeful passions—found a most truthful representative in Mr. Forrest. The character becomes most passionately demonstrative as the plot develops, and admits of a wide latitude for the display of passionate power. It is one of the characters peculiarly fitted to the genius of Mr. Forrest, and was portrayed with that masterly effect for which he is famed.

The "Iago" of Mr. McCullough was not so happy a personation as his "Edgar." It is not every actor that can look and act the "villain Iago." Miss Lillie, as "Desdemona," lacked somewhat in the tragic requirements of the part. Mrs. Jackson's "Emilia" was excellent, and won most merited recognition from the audience. Thorne's rendering of "Michael Cassio" placed another point to his credit. Frank's "Roderigo" was also very good. The play was repeated last evening, and was witnessed by a full theatre with no less interest than on its first production.

The "Damon" of Mr. Forrest, on Thursday night, drew an actually overflowing audience, and the sale of tickets had to be stopped in consequence. Mr. Forrest was fully master of the character, and invested many of the scenes with great impressiveness. He was ably supported by the "Pythias" of Mr. McCullough and the "Hermion" of Mrs. Sophie Edwin. This afternoon and evening, The Dead Heart is announced as the attraction. Wouldn't a live one draw better?

The programme of the coming week's performances is: on Monday, Virginius; Tuesday, Richelieu; Wednesday, Damon and Pythias; Thursday, Lear; and on Friday, Macbeth. Seats can be secured five days in advance.

"MARK TWAIN" ON HIS TRAVELS.

MOUNTED on my noble steed Hawaii (pronounced Hahwy-ye—stress on second syllable,) a beast that cost thirteen dollars and is able to go his mile in three—with a bit of margin to it—I departed last Saturday week for—for any place that might turn up.

SATURDAY IN HONOLULU.

Passing through the market place, we saw that feature of Honolulu under its most favorable auspices—that is, in the full glory of Saturday afternoon, which is a festive day with the natives. The native girls by twos and threes and parties of a dozen, and sometimes in whole platoons and companies, went cantering up and down the neighboring streets astride of fleet but homely horses, and with their gaudy riding habits streaming like banners behind them. Such a troop of free and easy riders, in their natural home, which is the saddle, makes a gay and graceful and exhilarating spectacle. The riding habit I speak of is simply a long, broad scarf, like a tavern table-cloth brilliantly colored, wrapped around the loins once, then apparently passed up between the limbs and each end thrown backward over the same, and floating and flapping behind on both sides beyond the horse's tail like a couple of fancy flags; and then, with a girl that throws her chest forward and sits up like a Major General and goes sweeping by like the wind: "Gay?" says Brown, with a fine irony; "oh, you can't mean it!"

The girls put on all the finery they can scare up on Saturday afternoon: fine black silk robes; flowing red ones that nearly put your eyes out; others as white as snow; still others that discount the rainbow; and they wear their hair in nets, and trim their jaunty hats with fresh flowers, and encircle their dusky throats with home-made necklaces of the brilliant vermillion-tinted blossom of the ohia; and they fill the markets and the adjacent streets with their bright presence, and smell like thunder with their villainous cocoanut oil.

Occasionally you see a heathen from the sunny isles away down in the South Seas, with his face and neck tatooed till he looks like the customary unfortunate from Reese River who has been blown up in a mine. Some are tattooed a dead blue color down to the upper lip—masked, as it were—leaving the natural light yellow skin of Micronesia unstained from thence down; some with broad marks drawn down from hair to neck, on both sides of the face, and a strip of the original yellow skin, two inches wide, down the center—a gridiron with a spoke broken out; and some with the entire face discolored with the popular mortification tint, relieved only by one or two thin, wavy threads of natural yellow running across the face from ear to ear, and eyes twinkling out of this darkness, from under shadowing hat-brims, like stars in the dark of the moon.

* * * * * * * *

THE GOVERNMENT PRISON.

Cantering across the bridge and down the firm, level, and gleaming white coral turnpike that leads toward the south, or the east, or the west, or the north (the points of the compass being all the same to me, inasmuch as, for good reasons, I have not had an opportunity thus far of discovering whereabouts the sun rises in this country—I know where it sets, but I don't know how it gets there nor which direction it comes from,) we presently arrived at a massive coral edifice which I took for a fortress at first, but found out directly that it was the Government Prison. A soldier at the great gate admitted us without further authority than my countenance, and I suppose he thought he was paying me a handsome compliment when he did so; and so did I until I reflected that the place was a penitentiary. However, as far as appearances went, it might have been the king's palace, so neat, and clean, and white, and so full of the fragrance of flowers was the establishment, and I was satisfied.

We passed through a commodious office, whose walls were ornamented with linked strands of polished handcuffs and fetters, through a hall, and among the cells above and below. The cells for the men were eight or ten feet high, and roomy enough to accommodate the two prisoners and their hammocks usually put in each, and have space left for several more. The floors were scrubbed clean, and were guiltless of spot or stain of any kind, and the painfully white walls were unmarred by a single mark or blemish. Through ample gratings, one could see the blue sky and get his hair blown off by the cool breeze. They call this a prison—the pleasantest quarters in Honolulu.

There are four wards, and one hundred and thirty-two prisoners can be housed in rare and roomy comfort within them.

There were a number of native women in the female department. Poor devils, they hung their heads under the prying eyes of our party, as if they were really ashamed of being there.

In the condemned cell, and squatting on the floor, all swathed in blankets, as if it were cold weather, was a brown-faced, gray-bearded, old scalliwag, who, in a frolicsome mood, had massacred three women and a batch of children—his own property, I believe—and reflects upon that exploit with genuine satisfaction to this hour, and will go to the gallows as tranquilly indifferent as a white man would go to dinner.

OUT AT THE BACK DOOR.

The prison-yard—that sad inclosure which, in the prisons of my native America, is a cheerless barren, and yieldeth no vegetation save the gallows-tree, with its sorrowful human fruit—is a very garden! The beds, bordered by rows of inverted bottles (the usual style here) were filled with all manner of dainty flowers and shrubs; Chinese mulberry and orange trees stood here and there, well stocked with fruit; a beautiful little pine tree—rare, and imported from the far South Seas—occupied the centre, with sprays of gracefully arching green spears springing outward like parasol tops, at marked and regular intervals, up its slender stem, and diminishing in diameter with mathematical strictness of graduation, till the sprouting plume at the top stood over a perfect pyramid. Vines clambered everywhere and hid from view and clothed with beauty everything that might otherwise have been suggestive of chains and captivity. There was nothing here to remind one of the prison save a brace of dovecotes, containing several pretty birds brought hither from "strange, strange lands beyond the sea." These, sometimes, may pine for liberty and their old free life among the clouds or in the shade of the orange groves, or abroad on the breezy ocean—but if they do, it is likely they take it out in pining, as a general thing.

CAPTAIN TAIT, SCRIPTURAL STUDENT.

Against one wall of the prison house stands an airy little building which does duty as a hospital. A harmless old lunatic, named Captain Tait, has his quarters here. He has a wife and children in the town, but he prefers the prison hospital, and has demanded and enjoyed its hospitality (slip of the pen—no joke intended) for years. He visits his family at long intervals—being free to go and come as he pleases—but he always drifts back to the prison again after a few days. His is a religious mania, and he professes to read sixty chapters of the Bible every day, and write them down in a book. He was about down to chapter thirty five when I was introduced to him, I should judge, as it was nearly two in the afternoon.

I said, "What are you reading about, Captain?"

"The precious of the precious—the book of books—the Sacred Scriptures, sir."

"Do you read a good deal in it?"

"Sixty chapters a day (with a perceptible show of vanity, but a weary look in the eye withal)—sixty chapters a day, and write them all down in a plain, legible hand."

"It is a good deal. At that rate, you must ultimately get through, and run short of material."

"Ah, but the Lord looks out for his own. I am in His hands—He does with me as He wills. I often read some of the same chapters over again, for the Lord tells me what to read, and it is not for me to choose. Providence always shows me the place."

"No hanging fire?—I mean, can you always depend on—on this information coming to time every day, so to speak?"

"Always—always, sir. I take the sacred volume in my hand, in this manner, every morning, in a devout and prayerful spirit, and immediately, and without any volition on my part, my fingers insert themselves between the leaves—so directed from above (with a sanctified glance aloft)—and I know that the Lord desires me to open at that place and begin. I never have to select the chapter myself—the Lord always does it for me."

I heard Brown mutter, "The old man appears to have a good thing, any way—and his poi don't cost him anything, either; Providence looks out for his regular sixty, the prison looks out for his hash, and his family looks out for itself. I've never seen any sounder maniac than him, and I've been around considerable."—"Mark Twain," in the Sacramento Union.

WITH the present number, the CALIFORNIAN commences its fifth volume and third year.

UNITED STATES STAMP DUTIES.

As Amended March 3, 1865.

CAREFULLY REVISED AND CORRECTED FOR THE CALIFORNIAN.

PENALTIES.

Penalty for making, signing, or issuing any instrument, document, or paper of any kind whatsoever, without the same being duly stamped, for denoting the duty hereby imposed thereon, $50; and the instrument shall be deemed invalid and of no effect; or for counterfeiting stamps or dies, $1,000, and imprisonment to hard labor not exceeding five years. For making, signing, issuing, accepting, or paying any bill of exchange, draft, order, or note without stamp, $200. For selling proprietary cosmetics, matches, photographs, etc., without proper stamps, $10. For removing stamps on these articles, $50.

STAMP DUTIES.

Agreement Contract or Appraisement, not otherwise specified, each sheet or piece of paper	$0 05
Assignment of Mortgage, Lease, or Policy of Insurance, same as original instrument. Assignment of Patent Right	05
Bank Checks, Drafts or orders, exceeding $10, at sight or on demand	02
Bills of Exchange, (inland,) or draft otherwise than at sight or on demand, or promissory note except bank notes for circulation,) or any memorandum, check or receipt, or any evidence of an amount of money payable on demand or at a designated time, for a sum not exceeding $100	05
Every additional $100, or fractional part	05
Bill of Exchange, (foreign,) or letter of credit, drawn in, but payable out of the U. S., if drawn singly, the same rates as inland bills of exchange, or promissory notes. If drawn in sets of three or more, for each bill of the set, where the sum shall not exceed $100 or its equivalent in any foreign currency in which such bill may be expressed, according to the standard value fixed by U. S.	02
Every additional $100, or fractional part	02
Bill of Lading, or receipt for any merchandise or effects, to be exported to a foreign port or place	10
Bill of Sale, conveying any ship or vessel, or any part thereof, where the consideration does not exceed $500	50
For every additional $500, or fractional part thereof	50
Bill of Sale of personal property other than ships or vessels	05
Bond, indemnifying any person for the payment of money, where the amount recoverable is $1,000 or less	50
For every additional $1,000, or fractional part thereof	50
Bond for the due performance of the duties of any office	1 00
Bond of any other description, except such as may be required in legal proceedings, or used in connection with mortgage deeds, and not otherwise charged in this schedule	25
Charter-Party, ship, vessel or steamer, not over 150 tons, $1; 150 to 300 tons, $3; 300 to 600 tons, $5; over 600 tons	10 00
Certificate of Profits, or any memorandum showing an interest in property, or accumulations of any incorporated company, for a sum not less than $10 nor exceeding $50	10
Exceeding $50 and not $1,000	25
For every additional $1,000 or fract'l part	25
Certificate of Damage, and all other certificates or documents issued by Port Wardens or Marine Surveyors, or other persons acting as such	25
Certificate of Deposit, not exceeding the sum of $100, 2 cents; exceeding $100	05
Certificate of stock in any incorporated comp'y,	25
Certificates, other than specified	05
Contract, broker's note or memorandum of sale of goods, stocks, bonds, exchange notes of hand, real estate, or other description of property, issued by any person acting as a broker, for each note or memorandum of sale	10
Deed or Conveyance of Real Estate, value not over $500, 50c.; every additional $500, or fractional part thereof	50
Entry of Goods at any custom-house, value not over $100, 25c.; over $100 and not over $500, 50c.; over $500	1 00
For the withdrawal of goods from bonded warehouse	50
Ganger's Returns, quarterly, for quantity not over 500 galls. gross, 10c.; over 500 galls. gr.	25
Insurance (Marine, Inland and Fire) policy or renewal, premium not over $10, 10c.; $10 to $50, 25c.; over $50, 50c.; Life policy, under $1,000, 25c.; $1,000 to $5,000, 50c; over $5,000	1 00
Lease of lands or tenements, rent not over $300 per annum, 50c.; each add'l $200 or fraction.	50
Manifest, cargo to foreign port, registered tonnage not over 300 tons, $1; over 300 and not over 600, $3; over 600 tons	5 00
Measurer's Returns, for quantity not over 1,000 bushels, 10c.; over 1,000 bushels	25
Mortgage, Trust deed, or personal bond for payment of money, $100 to $500, 50c.; each additional $500	50
Each assignment of mortgage, lease or policy of insurance, or renewal of the same, is subject to same duties as the original.
Medicines or Preparations, Perfumery and Cosmetics—Every package, box, bottle, etc., retailing for 25c. or less	01
Each additional 25c. or fractional part thereof, up to $1, 1c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof, over $1	02
Playing Cards—Each pack, price not over 18c., 2c.; from 18 to 25c., 4c.; 25 to 50c., 10c.; 50c. to $1, 15c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof	05
Photographs, Ambrotypes, Daguerreotypes or Sun Pictures, upon each, retailing for 25c. or less, 2c.; over 25 and not over 50c., 5c.; over 50c. and not over $1, 3c.; each additional $1 or fractional part thereof	05
Passage Ticket to foreign port, cost not over $35, 50c.; over $35 and not over $50, $1; every additional $50 or fractional part thereof	1 00
Power of Attorney to sell or transfer stock, scrip, bonds, or collect dividends or int. thereon	25
To vote for officers of incorporated comp'y or society not religious, charitable or literary, or public cemeteries	10
To receive or collect rents	25
To sell, convey, rent or lease real estate	1 00
For any other purpose	50
Probate of Will, or letters of administration, estate not over $2,000, $1; each additional $1,000 or fractional part thereof	50
Protest of note, bill, acceptance, check or draft,	25
Promissory Note—See Bill of Exchange, inland.
Receipt for payment of money or debt over $20, not being for satisfaction of mortgage, judgment or decree of Court, and receipt for the delivery of property	02
Warehouse, for property stored, not over $500 in value, 10c.; $500 to $1,000, 20c.; every additional $1,000	10
For any goods held in storage, and not otherwise provided for	25
Weigher's Returns, up to 5,000 lbs., 10c.; over 5,000 lbs	25
Writs, or original process, for commencing suit in Court of record, and in Court not of record, when amount claimed is $100 or over, except before Justices of the Peace, or in court of no greater jurisdiction as to damages, or in suit commenced by the United States or any State	50
Upon every confession of judgment, or cognovit, for $100 or over, except where tax for a writ has been paid	50
Writs or process on appeal from Justice's courts and other courts of inferior jurisdiction to courts of record	50
Warrant of distress—rent claimed under $100, 25c.; over $100	50

GREAT ATTRACTION!

ARE ALL THE GO!

Lamott, - - - Hatter,

IS NOW THE MAN! HE IS READY WITH HIS

BROADWAY STYLES FOR THE

Spring of 1866.

JUST SEE THE DIFFERENCE between his styles and the others in this city. There is style about his Hats that does not appear in others.

FACTS ARE STUBBORN THINGS!

LAMOTT, 227 Russ Block, is bound to be the LEADER of Fashions.

LAMOTT'S SPRING STYLES

show taste. It is a good thing that you have a man among you who is willing to take a stand outside of others, to introduce a style that is new, and not follow in the wake of others that are about one year behind the times.

GO TO HIS STORE FOR A HAT,

No. 220 Montgomery street,

and get something that is new. mar22-3m

HEUSTON,

HASTINGS

& CO.

The Fashionable Clothiers

OF

SAN FRANCISCO,

Have established a TRUNK DEPOT in the basement of their Store equal to any in New York, and prices 20 per cent. lower than any other House in the city.

mar17-3m

BALD-HEADED GENTLEMEN,

Who frequent the Parquet of Theatres, exciting by their grotesque appearance the merriment of Ladies in the Dress Circle, would profit by using Little & Co.'s Chinese

Vegetable Hair Restorative.

The proprietors of this astonishing remedy for Baldness, confident of its infallibility, agree to refund the purchase money in every instance where its use for three months, according to directions, is unattended with success. Price per jar, $2.50.

Manufactured by Little & Co.; sold by

CHAS. E. HINCKLEY & CO.,

Chemists and Druggists,

Southeast corner of Clay and Kearny streets,

ap21-1m San Francisco.

BRITISH PERIODICALS.

The London Quarterly Review (Conservative.)
The Edinburgh Review (Whig.)
The Westminster Review (Radical.)
The North British Review (Free Church.)
Blackwood's Edinburgh Magazine (Tory.)

The interest of these Periodicals to American readers is rather increased than diminished by the articles they contain on our late Civil War, and though sometimes tinged with prejudice, they may still, considering their great ability, and the different stand-points from which they are written, be read and studied with advantage by the people of this country, of every creed and party.

TERMS FOR 1866.

For any one of the Reviews, per annum	$4
For any two of the Reviews, per annum	7
For any three of the Reviews, per annum	10
For all four of the Reviews, per annum	12
For Blackwood's Magazine, per annum	4
For Blackwood and one Review, per annum	7
Blackwood and any two of the Reviews, per an.	10
Blackwood and three of the Reviews, per annum.	13
Blackwood and the four Reviews, per annum	15

CLUBS.

A discount of twenty per cent. will be allowed to clubs of four or more persons. Thus, four copies of Blackwood, or of one Review, will be sent to one address for $12 80. Four copies of the four Reviews and Blackwood, for $18, and so on.

POSTAGE.

When sent by mail, the Postage to any part of the Union will be but Twenty-four Cents a year for Blackwood, and but Eight Cents a year for each of the Reviews

REDUCED PRICES FOR PREVIOUS YEARS.

Subscribers may obtain the Reprints immediately preceding 1866, as follows, viz:

Blackwood from September, 1861, to December, 1865, inclusive, at the rate of $2 50 a year.

The North British from January, 1865, to December, 1865, inclusive; the Edinburgh and the Westminster from April, 1864, to December, 1865, inclusive, and the London Quarterly for the year 1865, at the rate of $1 50 a year for each or any Review.

A few copies yet remain of all the Four Reviews for 1863 at $1 a set, or $1 50 for any one.

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., Publishers,
38 Walker street, New York.

COMMERCIAL EDUCATION.

Pacific Business College,

751 MARKET STREET,

(BETWEEN THIRD AND FOURTH,)

SAN FRANCISCO.

An Institution designed to prepare Young and Middle aged men for an active and successful BUSINESS LIFE. This is the largest, most complete, and thorough Institution of the kind on the coast, and

THE ONLY

Commercial College which is conducted on Actual Business Principles. Its great system of Business Training is endorsed by the Most Eminent Financiers and Business Men of the Nation.

REGULAR BANKS AND BUSINESS OFFICES have been introduced, by which we are enabled to fit our Students in the best possible manner, and shortest possible time, for active Business Life.

Those in pursuit of a

PRACTICAL BUSINESS EDUCATION

should examine the merits of this College. Send for the COLLEGE REVIEW, giving full particulars of the College, besides containing other important and interesting matter. Sent free to all desiring it.

Further particulars can be had by calling at the College, or addressing M. K. LAUDENSLAGER, President fe17 3m Business College, San Francisco.

PACIFIC OCEAN HOUSE,

SANTA CRUZ, CAL.

THIS NEW AND COMMODIOUS HOTEL, built and furnished in accordance with the most modern and improved plans, and with a view to the comfort and convenience of its patrons, is now open for the reception of guests.

To those who have visited Santa Cruz, it is unnecessary to speak of its beauties and its natural advantages over all other places of Summer Resort.

To those who have not, the Proprietor can only say COME AND JUDGE FOR YOURSELVES—giving all who may come the assurance that his earnest endeavors shall be to make the Hotel, in all its appointments, equal to the surroundings of this delightful Sea side Resort.

GEO. T. BROMLEY,

Santa Cruz, April 4, 1866. Proprietor.

MR. AND MRS. COGILL

AND SONS,

Teachers of Dancing,

CONGRESS HALL,

On Bush-st., adjoining Russ House.

SCHOOL—MONDAYS AND WEDNESDAYS. Ladies at 2 P. M. Gentlemen and Ladies at 7 1-2 P. M. Soirees every Friday Evening. Hall to rent. my5 3m

PISCO!

G. & F. MARTELL'S COGNAC;
JAMES HENNESSY'S Cognac;
STEAMBOAT GIN;
OLD TOM GIN;
IRISH WHISKY,
from Bond direct.

For sale by V. SQARZA, a28 Liedesdorff street, San Francisco.

OCCIDENTAL

HOMESTEAD

Association,

OFFICE, - - - 305 MONTGOMERY STREET.

Capital Stock, $33,660.

102 SHARES $330 EACH.

This Association was formed to enable its members to obtain desirable homestead lots in this city at a cheap and easy rate, paying for the same by regular monthly instalments.

For this purpose they have purchased Blocks 499, 500, and 501, in the Western Addition to this city, bounded by Devisadero, Pine, Broderick and Clay streets.

Subscribers will pay an initiation fee of $5 on each share taken, to form a fund for defraying current expenses, and $11 per month for thirty months, commencing in April, 1866.

The property is within three blocks of the

TURK STREET RAILROAD,

IS NEARLY ALL ON THE GRADE,

and is most desirably located for Homestead purposes.

It is directly east from the lands of the California Association.

The property has been purchased on very reasonable terms, and offers a rare opportunity for investment.

A number of fine houses are in process of erection, and streets are being graded near this property, which will greatly increase its value.

When twelve monthly payments have been made, the property will be divided among the members in the usual manner, and each shareholder will receive a contract for a deed to the lot or lots to which he may be entitled, and have the privilege of taking immediate possession of the same.

The lots average 27 feet in front by 120 feet in depth. The whole amount due upon any lot may be paid at any time, and discount at the rate of one and one-half per cent. per month will be deducted therefrom.

Persons wishing to visit the lands of this Association will take the Turk street cars to Devisadero street, and thence go northerly along Devisadero to Pine street.

Twenty thousand dollars of the capital stock is taken, and the books are open for subscription to the balance at the office of the Secretary, where the Official Map of the Association can be seen, and full particulars obtained.

The Title to this Property is Perfect.

J. S. LITY, Secretary,

Office, 305 Montgomery street, corner of Pine,

my19-3m Rooms 2 and 6.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S

Through Line to New York.

CARRYING THE U. S. MAIL!

Leave Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.

On the 16th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.

On the 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.

When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 19th connects with French Transatlantic company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamer for Southampton, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America.

Departure of 30th connects with English steamer for Tumaco, the port of the new mines.

STEAMERS FOR MAY:

The following steamships will be despatched from San Francisco on the date given:

MAY 30th, - - - - - SACRAMENTO,

Captain J. M. Cavarly.

(Connecting with ARIZONA, Captain Maury.)

An experienced Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

Cabin Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Messrs. Wells, Fargo & Co.

The steamer will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock.

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL

Confectioners,

111 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter.

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge. fe24 3m

CHARLES F. RIEHN,

OF

Riehn, Hemme & Co.,

ASSAYERS,

GIVES LESSONS IN ASSAYING—ALSO IN MINERalogy and Chemistry, as far as required to become a Practical Assayer.

Montgomery street, corner of Sacramento, under Donohoe, Kelly & Co.'s Bank, San Francisco. mar5 3m

THE CALIFORNIAN'S
SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

BATHS.

Dr. Bourne's, (Medical,) 10 Post, near Montgomery

APOTHECARY.

George H. Clapp, corner Sixth and Howard.

BUSINESS AND PROPERTY AGENCY.

S. P. Whitman, 313 Montgomery st.

BOWLING ALLEYS.

Wholers & Sturke, Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.)

BOOKS.

A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.

Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street.
I. M. Wentworth & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine st.

CLOTHS, CASSIMERES, AND TRIMMINGS.

E. Weill & Sons, removed to 616 Sacramento street.

COLLECTOR.

B. Pulvorman, 526 Montgomery—Office hours, 1 to 3 P.M.

CLOTHING.

H M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.

Dell, Cranna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.

COPPER CRUSHER AND SAMPLER.

S W. Howland, 24 California street, (at Thomas' Mill.)

DRESS TRIMMINGS, WORSTEDS, ETC.

Mrs. Norcross, 5 Montgomery street (Masonic Temple.)

DENTISTS.

Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Dr. A. N. Clark (late Knowles & Clark) removed to 410 Kearny.
Whitcomb & Dyer, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.

Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.

Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.

DRUGGISTS.

R. H. McDonald & Co., (Wholesale) Sansome, cor. Pine
Shepardson & Gates, (successors to R. Hall & Co.,) cor. Sansomo and Commercial.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.

Cal. Collegiate Institute, Miss M. Lammond, 68 Silver.
Miel Institute, Miss Florence James, 55 South Park.
Pacific Business College, 751 Market street, above Third.

FURNITURE.

Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
J. Peirce, 415, 417 and 419 California street.

GROCERS.

N. Boschen, corner Fifth and Minna.
Slosson & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
P. J. Flynn, corner Howard and Eighth streets.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market
W. M. Noble & Co., cor Howard and Twelfth streets.

HATTER.

Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street,

HOTELS.

Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.

INSURANCE.

Bigelow & Bro., N.W. cor. Montgomery and Sacramento.
Mutual Life Ins. Co., H. S. Homans, Agent, 609 Clay.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Ag'ts, 206 Front, cor Cal.
National Ins. Co., N E cor. Montgomery and California.
Occidental Ins. Co., S. W. cor. Montgom'y and California.
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.

Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

MAPS.

Pacific Map Depot, A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.

MERCHANT TAILORS.

J. H. Hammond removed to 328 Montgomery.

MILLINERS.

Mrs. Wheeler, Popper's building, Third, near Mission.

PAPER HANGINGS, WINDOW SHADES, ETC

H. Ward, 132 Third street.

PIANO SCHOOL.

Mr. Gustavo A. Scott, at Miel Institute, 55 South Park.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.

M. Gray, 613 Clay street.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.

Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

REAL ESTATE.

Fifteen-dollar lots for sale by H. S. Brown, S.E. corner of Battery and Commercial streets.

RESTAURANTS.

Bivalve, Nolting & Spreen, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Eureka, C. H. Brickwedell & Co., Clay, near Montgom'y
Market, by Felix and Gustave Besson, 520 Merchant.
Philadelphia, Jacob Weiss, 308 Montgomery street.
Helvetia, Johnjnry & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Sanlmann's, 506 Montgomery street.

SALOONS.

Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N E. cor Third and Howard
Ghio's 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
Hunter & Myers, 332 Montgomery street.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street.
San Barst, Carolin & McArlle, cor. Second and Market.
Coates & Henderson, 37 Sutter street.

SCALES.

Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scales 334 Montgomery street.

SEWING MACHINES.

Grover & Baker, J. W. J. Pearson, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento

TOYS, ETC.

Feldbush & Co., 207 Montgomery street.
A. Kohler, 620 Washington street.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.

Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery

SPRING AND SUMMER STYLE

SILK HAT,

1866,

INTRODUCED - - - - - - MARCH 3

BY

McGANN & CO.,

FASHIONABLE HATTERS,

No. 654 Washington street,

Two doors below Kearny.

SPRING AND SUMMER STYLES.—Silk, Felt, Beaver, and other HATS for sale at the lowest prices.

CAPS of every description, suitable for all ages, made to order.

McGANN & CO., being experienced and skilled in all the branches of the manufacture of Hats, feel confident of giving entire satisfaction to their patrons. Every description of Hats and Caps made to order.

Remember, McGANN & CO., Practical Hatters, 654 Washington street, two doors below the Plaza.

☞ New Goods by every steamer. mar10

THE NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE INSURANCE CO

OF LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

ESTABLISHED, 1809.

Capital, - - - - - -	$10,000,000
Accumulated Funds, March 6, 1865, - -	11,522,500
Annual Income, - - - -	2,827,290
Deposit in California under State law, -	$75,000

GENERAL AGENCY FOR THE PACIFIC STATES AND TERRITORIES,

No. 422 California street, - - - San Francisco

Insurances effected at the lowest rates on buildings of both Brick and Wood, throughout the State, whether occupied as Stores, Dwellings, or Warehouses, together with their contents.

Also, VESSELS in port, with or without their Cargoes.

Also, QUARTZ MILLS and MACHINERY.

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN immediately on adjustment.

WM. H. TILLINGHAST, Agent.

ap19

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS

CREATE A HEALTHY APPETITE!

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa and Constipation

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Invigorate the System and enliven the mind.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Overcome the effects of Drunkenness and Late Hours.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure all Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Are Palatable to the Taste.

They are the

BEST BITTERS IN THE MARKET,

And when once used will always be called for again.

They are made in the most careful manner

From Pure Old Wheat Whisky, Medicated from

Roots and Herbs

Especially adapted for the cure of all Stomachic Diseases and Liver Complaints.

Try Them and You will be Satisfied.

For sale everywhere by Druggists and Liquor Dealers or by

N. B. JACOBS & CO.,
423 Front street,
fe11-6m San Francisco

CALIFORNIA Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS. CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA....CAPT. W. BROMLEY.
" JULIA.....CAPT E. CONCKLIN.

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.

Steamships AJAX, PACIFIC, ORIZABA, CALIFORNIA, ACTIVE, and SENATOR, leave as advertised, for Honolulu, Portland, Oregon, New Westminster, British Columbia, Victoria, (V. I.,) Santa Barbara, San Pedro, and San Diego.

Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.

mar23 B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

OCCIDENTAL INSURANCE COMPANY,

S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

CHRISTOPHER CHRISTIANSEN, President.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary. mh25-tf

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME!

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,

New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17

Have received a Large Stock of

GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING

—AND—

FURNISHING GOODS,

Which they are selling

AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.
ja1 624 Clay street, San Francisco.

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late GREAT INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York. my25

GEO. P. KIMBALL & CO., Carriage Manufacturers;

CORNER MARKET AND FOURTH STREETS,

San Francisco.

GEORGE P. KIMBALL.....W. H. KNIGHT.

We have always on hand a large assortment of Coaches, Carriages, Buggies, Thoroughbrace Wagons, Express, Grocery, Soda and Butcher Wagons and Lumber Gears.

CARRIAGES AND WAGONS

Of every description made to order and at shortest notice. Particular attention paid to the building of Wide Track Buggies and Wagons with Brakes, for mountain use. Orders from the country promptly attended to.

N. B. Kimball's Patent Goose Neck Trucks on hand.

mar2 3m

BEER AND WINE SALOON.

Faust Cellar.

Southeast corner of Clay and Montgomery streets.

A. L. THIELE.....Proprietor

WESTPHALIA HAMS, RUSSIAN CAVIAR, SARDINES, Anchovies, Swiss and Limburg Cheese, etc.; the finest Brands of Liquors, Wines, Cigars, and Seltzer Water, Wholesale and Retail.

☞ Fishing and Hunting Parties fitted out at the shortest notice. fe24 3m

THE ONLY LIVING ASTROLOGER,

PROF. COHEN,

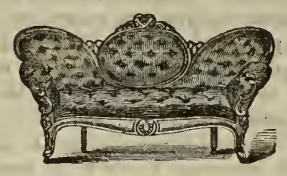
530 California street, San Francisco,

THROUGH HIS NATURAL GIFT, can give correct information on the Past, Present and Future, on any subject that may be required so as to avoid trouble. As evidence of his reputation, he has received over 18,000 consultations during his residence of six years in San Francisco! Consultation fee, $2. By letter, $3. Letter box, 104. It is not necessary to give the age. Office, 530 California street. Hours from 8 A. M. to 11 P. M. mar15 3m

COME AND SEE ME!

DR. JOHN HEALD,

DENTIST,



HAS REMOVED TO THE

CORNER KEARNY AND CALIFORNIA STS,

Where he will be pleased to see all old friends, and plenty of new ones. Every variety of Dental Operations performed in the best manner, and at prices that shall suit all persons. ☞ ENTRANCE ON CALIFORNIA SREET.

ap28-3m

FURNITURE AND BEDDING!

LARGEST STOCK!

LATEST STYLES!

The Best Workmanship,

AND

LOWEST PRICES!

AT

Goodwin & Co.'s

FURNITURE WARE-ROOMS,

Nos. 508, 510, 518 and 528 Washington-st.

ja16 SAN FRANCISCO.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,

IMPORTERS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN

FINE CLOTHING,

AND

Gent's Furnishing Goods,

TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,

Nos. 200 and 202 Montgomery street,

Corner of Bush, - - - San Francisco.

JOS. WINTERBURN & CO.

J. WINTERBURN, V. A. TORRAS, W. HOFFSCHNEIDER.
(Successors to W. P. Harrison.)

Printers and Electrotypers,

413 TO 417 CLAY ST., (Below Sansome,)

SAN FRANCISCO.

ALL KINDS OF JOB PRINTING

Neatly and Promptly Executed.

ELECTROTYPING

Done at the shortest notice.

Stamps of all kinds made to order.

Printing in Spanish, French, German and Italian Languages, executed with correctness.

A "Mammoth" and two No. 3 Hand Presses FOR SALE very cheap. fe3-3m

SMOKE THE PATENT RUSSIAN CIGARETTES,

MANUFACTURED BY

GIBB & STAHL,

120 KEARNY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.

☞ For sale at all Cigar Stores. ap28-3m

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,

No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,

SAN FRANCISCO.

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Metal Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship-Work of all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.

All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.

Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.

JOHN P. GALLAGHER,
JOSEPH H. WEED,
mar10 3m SAMUEL WHITE.

MONEY TO LOAN!

MONEY TO LOAN

On City Real Estate, Dwellings, Factories, Shipping and Merchandise, for such time as may be agreed for. Deposits received in small or large sums, at interest, by the CALIFORNIA BUILDING, LOAN AND SAVINGS BANK, my5 3m THOMAS MOONEY, President.

California street, (one door from Sansome street.)

LES BOURRAS PAILLE SON.

AT Marseilles, on the 4th of September, 1865, there died by the hand of the executioner a man, whose crime of murder with very *un*extenuating circumstanees, had excited a strong feeling of indignation against him. Immense crowds, of whom the majority were women, assembled to see him pay the last penalty of the law. The weakness of the prisoner was so great that he had to be carried in the arms of the executioner to the cart which conveyed him to the place where the guillotine was erected; and arriving at the Place Sebastopol, he was assisted by two men to ascend the steps that led to the platform. To add to the horrors of the seene, the mother of his vietim was among the crowd; and when she saw him on the platform of the guillotine, uttered the most piereing cries, calling for vengeance upon the murderer of her child. To a foreigner, happening to witness the execution, there was another circumstanee which, if not so horrible as the cries of the mother for blood, must have been equally strange and interesting. When the knife had done its work, and the executioner and his assistants had disappeared, four men, grave, silent, unknown, their faces covered with an impenetrable veil, made their appearance, and took possession of the dead body. The crowd manifested no surprise on seeing them; it was evident that though none knew their names, every one knew their office, and on every hand might be heard in a low tone, "Voila les Bourras Paille Son." Any one who saw them for the first time on the platform in the Place Sebastopol, in the early light of that September morning, and who knew nothing of their office and work, will probably never forget the impression produeed on his mind. They were covered from their shoulders to their feet with a long robe of coarse cloth, such as is used for packing; around their waists was a thick rope, which served as a belt or girdle; the whole of their head and face was covered with an immense cowl or hood, in which two small holes were made to enable them to see their way. Such were the Bourras Paille Son; and the question might well rise to the stranger's lips, What are they, and what do they do?

The system of public penitence which the Church of Rome instituted at an early period of her history, was the occasion of many strange developments, and in one of these this order took its rise.

Abbe Fleury, in his Histoire de l'Eglise, says that in the year 1259 there grew up a new kind of doctrine, or, as he calls it elsewhere, penitence; that, beginning at Perouse, it spread to Rome, and thence through the whole of Italy. The nobles and the common people, old and young, even to children of five years of age, were so in awe of the wrath of God, in consequence of the great crimes that were committed throughout the country, that they went in penitence through the streets of the city naked from their waists upwards. They marched two and two in procession, each having in his hand a whip made of leather, with which they struck themselves till their bodies were covered with blood, at the same time uttering the most doleful lamentations, imploring the mercy of God, and the help of the Virgin. They did this even in the night, through a very cold winter. Thousands, and, in some places, ten thousand at once, thus walked in procession, attended by priests carrying the cross and its banners, visiting the churches, and prostrating themselves before the altar. The same scenes were acted in small towns and villages, so that the mountains and the plains resounded with the cries of the penitents. From Italy this penitence spread to Germany and Poland, the devotees adopting the practice of covering their heads and faces, so as not to be known. This new kind of devotion, however, soon became obnoxious to the rulers both of the church and the state; to the former because there was an evident tendency to form a sect—indeed, a sect was in some measure formed, the members of which attributed to themselves priestly functions; to the latter from a fear lest such crowds of people might be made use of for political purposes. All such practices were therefore forbidden under the severest penalties, and Fleury says, in his own naive way, "This sect was thus soon dispersed and abandoned, as it was formed without authority and without reason."

From the ruins of this sect there sprung up a number of brotherhoods, each of which gave itself to some special work. One undertook the care of the sick, another the burying of the dead, another the performanee of certain special devotions in the public cemeteries. Each society was known and named from the color of the robe worn by its members; and so there were black penitents, white penitents, gray penitents; in fact, almost every color known to the dyer. "Each," to quote a writer in the Petit Journal, "aimed at the accomplishment of an act of charity, the observance of an act of penitence, the doing regularly a religious work." Some of these are still found in the south of France, and among them Les Bourras Paille Son. The work to which they devote themselves is the burial of the poor; but among them there is a select band, who have vowed not only to bury the poor, but also to perform this last act of charity for those who have perished by the hand of the executioner. These are distinguished from their brethren by wearing a tan-colored robe; this peculiar color may have been chosen for the same reason that the guillotine is painted red—that is, that spots of blood may the less easily be seen. On the eve of an execution, what is called a chapel is held, at which all the members of the fraternity assist who have taken upon themselves the vow of interring the condemned. Lots are drawn in order to ascertain which of their number are to do duty on the following day. The four thus selected, clad in their hoods and robes, make their way through the crowd to the foot of the scaffold. The executioner and his assistants, when they have done their work, retire from the platform, leaving the body of the vietim still attached to the plank, and his head in the receptacle into which it falls. Standing at the foot of the ladder, the priest of the community then addressed the four brethren thus: "There is no longer a criminal here, but the mortal remains of a man whom God created in his own image, and we are come to bury him." The brethren respond, "Amen." They then ascend the ladder, detach the body from the plank, and, having made a thick bed of straw and bran in the middle of a large coarse cloth, place the dead body upon it. They then take the head and join it to the trunk, and sew up the winding-sheet with strong thread. This being done, the body is placed on a bier, and, attended by the priest who has given absolution to the criminal, they carry it to the cemetery.

Their name, Bourras Paille Son, is derived partly from the material of which their robe is made, and partly from the straw and bran they use so largely in the performance of their self-imposed duty. Bure, the French word for coarse packing-cloth, is pronounced in the patois of the South bourra; paille is French for straw, and son for bran. Every grade and profession of society is represented in this strange brotherhood, and, like poverty, the vow to enter it brings a man into singular associations. General Camas, peer of France, and for some time general-in-chief of the eighth division, was one of the Bourras Paille Son. His colleague in the stall of the chapel belonging to the order was Father Jerome, a crossing-sweeper, and one day the latter was heard to say to the general, "There is nothing equal in the world; no man is just like his brother; one blade of grass differs from its fellows: but true equality, real brotherhood is found at the foot of the cross in our little chapel, Les Bourras Paille Son." Men enter the order from different motives; one because he has been crossed in love; another because he has lost those dear to him by bereavement; with another, conscience has been busy, and under the influence of remorse or contrition, he vows to enter the brotherhood Les Bourras Paille Son. But the vow once made is, as a rule, observed. The writer of the article in the Petit Journal, from whom I have before quoted, relates the following anecdote in illustration of this: M. Lombardon, who had filled the office of President of the Tribunal of Commerce, took the vow. Some time after, he met a friend, who remarked that he was extremely agitated, and asked what was the matter. "The lot has fallen on me, and I have to attend the execution to-morrow." His friend suggested that he might easily find a substitute. "No," said he; "I have made a vow, and I must accomplish it to the end." In a few days he again met his friend, and in answer to his inquiries, said, "O my friend, nothing gives a man strength like the performance of duty."

THE STORY OF A MACHINE.

DO those who go about their daily avocations or pursuits, ever for a moment think of the brain-work that has been necessary to enable them to more effectually do what they do?

Are we not every day passing through a world where the minutest object we see should remind us of the great mechanical skill of the age? Every hour of the day we are indebted to a pin for aid, and yet how few of us know anything about a pin! How little do we think of the great minds that have been brought to bear upon the making of that simple bit of pointed brass—of the brains that have plodded over the machine—of the skillful men who have worked beside it, year after year, bringing forth daily new thoughts, all of which should tend to its perfection.

All this went through our head as we stood and viewed the almost human working of a machine—a sewing machine. We remember the day, not so many years ago, when the idea of a machine to sew would have been scouted; but at last came a whisper, and then a rumor, and, finally, an announcement that something of the kind was upon the tapis, and at last the machine of Howe was announced. This was barely 20 years ago, and from that time till now we do not intend to follow the improvements, but simply to speak of the march of the sewing machine as one of those wonderful things that are occurring about us every day, which we do not stop to wonder at until our attention is absolutely arrested.

We select the Florence Sewing Machine for our illustration, for the simple reason that we cannot help endorsing it as the greatest of all machines calculated to do that style of labor. What it claims for itself is, that it makes four different stitches—the lock, knot, double-lock, and double-knot, each stitch being alike on both sides of the fabric—and that each machine has the reversible feed motion, enabling the operator, by turning a screw, to run the work either to the left or right. The next point is the self-adjusting tension, that tension being always in proportion to the size of the bobbin. These are the main points of excellence claimed for the machine, and the points wherein it differs from all other sewing machines; and having stated these, we will give a short history of the machine itself, and the place of its manufaeture.

The original idea of the Florence Sewing Machine came from Leander W. Langdon, an inventive genius, who was always about machine shops, and always making something after his own ideas. Finally, after a variety of singular mechanical successes, he took it into his head to make a sewing machine, and did so. This was in Rochester, and the same machine is now in the possession of the present Florence Company. After various efforts to bring his machine into notice, he came to Florence, Massachusetts, a village within a short distance of Northampton, Hampshire county, so near as almost to be considered a suburb, and brought it before Mr. S. L. Hill, then a manufacturer of sewing machines, and Mr. D. G. Littlefield. They saw its merit, and the final result was the formation of a company, with a capital of $200,000, to manufacture. The fame of the machine spread rapidly, and it became necessary to increase its production. This increase will be understood when it is known that in 1861 only 50 machines were sold; in 1862, 1,100; in 1863, 3,500; and in 1864, 6,000; while now, with a sale of 1,500 per month, the company are putting $200,000 more capital, and the facilities will be so increased that the production will be doubled.

The buildings of the company cover three acres of ground, and the work employs 350 men. In the increase of manufacture, it will not be necessary to increase the number of men in the same ratio as the manufactured machines come out, the present machinery being capable of doing twice the work, with a small addition of force; and yet the company are just about to embark the sum of $200,000 more for the purpose of extending their manufacture, from the fact that they are not able now to supply the demand.

The process of manufacture is simply this: Upon the first, or ground-floor of this immense factory, is the foundry. There all the castings are made, and the finishing, and on the same floor the japanning is done. This is a most important branch of the manufacture, and, though apparently the rough part only, by comparison, is capable of the highest degree of attention.

From the finishing and japanning rooms of the first floor we go to those of the second, where all the small parts of the machine are made. There is a nicety of workmanship necessary here, that must be seen to be understood. Every part of this beautiful machine must be accurate as those of a watch; and to see that this end is reached, and no machine goes from the factory without this accuraey and finish, is the especial labor of the company. Every one of these many parts, upon being finished, goes to the Assembly-room upon the third floor, where it is put together and set running by power. It runs for one or two days, until the fact of its workmanship is made satisfactory and all is smooth, after which it is removed to the Adjusting-room, on the same floor. In this room it is tried in every way upon both cotton and silk, from No. 12 to No. 200, and if found to work with accuracy and decision, is removed to the Inspecting-room. Here it undergoes another thorough examination in all its parts, and if finally pronounced fit and a perfect machine, it is lowered to the first floor and there receives its table.

These tables are made of different material—walnut, mahogany or rosewood, according to the taste of those who will become the owners, and are not made in the main building, but form a separate manufaeture in another place.

We have here endeavored to give a clear and unvarnished account of what we must term a wonderful machine. That it has been appreciated quietly by the public is manifest from the steady increase in its sales. It has not been forced on the public, but has worked its own way. It is not a cheap machine in the common acceptation of the word, but it is still a cheap machine in fact. The cheapest of the Florence Machines costs $63, while the same grade of other first-class machines costs $55; but at the same time, the Florence Machine charges nothing for all the extras, while the others do. This is the secret of its cheapness, to say nothing of its capability to do work of every kind. We are not disposed in this summary to over-commend anything placed before the public for its suffrage, but when we know an article to be good, we think we are only doing our duty as public journalists to say so emphatically.—Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper.

CHOICE PROPERTY AT AUCTION.—John Middleton & Son will sell, on Monday next, that beautiful block of property, which has been subdivided into building lots, belonging to the estate of the late Dr. H. M. Gray, and lying between Mission, Howard, Eleventh and Lafayette streets. This property is beautifully sheltered by live oak shade trees, and lies adjacent to some of the most beautiful homesteads in the city. The streets bounding it are all graded, and the lots will be graded free of expense to the purchaser. The Howard street cars pass the property, and the Market street cars pass within a block of it. The sale will be peremptory, to settle up the affairs of the estate. For terms see advertisement.

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.

A toilet delight. Superior to any cologne. used to bathe the face and person, to render the skin soft and fresh, to allay inflammation, to perfume clothing, for headache, etc. It is manufactured from the rich Southern Magnolia, and is obtaining a patronage quite unprecedented. It is a favorite with actresses and opera singers. It is sold by all dealers, at $1.00 in large bottles, and by DEMAS BARNES & Co., New York, Wholesale Agents.

Lyon's Magnetic Insect Powder will exterminate Fleas, Ticks, Roaches and all insects almost instantly. Its reputation is well known, and hence has been counterfeited. Inquire for and take none but LYON'S, bearing the stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., and the signature of E. LYON.

"OUT OF SORTS" expresses the feelings of many that cannot be otherwise described. Langnor, weakness, enervation, listlessness, sleepiness, melancholy, want of appetite, etc., compose a class of ailments greater than all others combined. It is exactly for these indescribable complaints that PLANTATION BITTERS are prepared. It is for the relief of these same complaints they have become so famous. Hence it is that they are so extensively used by clergymen, merchants, ladies, and persons of sedentary habits. They are as pleasant to the taste as they are beneficial to the Stomach. The extent of their sale is almost incredible.

Intrinsic virtue alone could ever insure the success met by the Mexican Mustang Liniment. For Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Cuts, Bruises, Burns, Swellings, etc., upon man, or Spavin, Ringbone, Poll Evil, Scratches, Struins, etc., upon beasts, its effects are instantaneous, soothing and wonderful. It saves time, suffering and expense to have it always in the house. None genuine unless in a steel plate label, with signature of G. W. Westbrook, and having stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., over top. Sold by all dealers.

Lyon's Kathairon is a most delightful article as a Hair Dressing—to eradicate scurf and dandruff, to keep it clean, soft and silky, and the head cool. It also prevents the hair from falling off and turning gray, and promotes its growth upon prematurely bald heads. It is sold by all dealers.
E. THOMAS LYON, N. Y.

LYON'S EXTRACT OF PURE JAMAICA GINGER—for Indigestion, Nausea, Heartburn, Sick Headache, Cholera Morbus, Flatulency, etc., where a warming stimulant is required. Its careful preparation and entire purity make it a cheap and reliable article for culinary purposes. Sold everywhere, at 50 cents per bottle. Ask for "LYON'S" Pure Extract. Take no other. c7m

THE MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK.—In regard to this company the "Wall Street Underwriter" says: "Figures are potent arguments to employ in dealing with the affairs of any Insurance Company. The Twenty-Third Annual Report of 'The Mutual,' made up to the first of February instant, is published in this paper, and the results manifested upon it are well worthy of consideration. In the first instance, as the prime result of the past year's work, the gross assets of 'The Mutual' show an

Increase of	$2,549,871 02
Total increase in premium account is	1,083,565 34
The total income of $3,853,065 80 is an increase of	1,003,199 24
The full disbursements for 1860, were	1,540,130 63
Number of policies issued Feb. 1865 to Feb. 1866, were 8,600—insuring over double the number of 1864, and over double the amount, viz.	31,394,407 00

All approving comment seems held in the presence of the truly eloquent figures presented by the 'Mutual Life.' No record of success can be more complete for any financial institution in the world. Wherever Life Insurance has been heard of on the American Continent, the name and prestige of the great 'Mutual' of New York, stand out pre-eminent. Many successful modern companies have grown up to prosperity through the example and influence of the 'Mutual Life.' Its great success, its wealth, and its manifest advantages have been constantly referred to as incontrovertible arguments in favor of Life Insurance." "The Mutual Life" has paid losses on this coast (including dividends,) during the last four years, to the amount of $101,819 02, and among the recent losses to be paid are policies for $5,000 each, of Francis E. Webster and W. L. Haven, who were both killed by the nitro-glycerine explosion at the office of Wells, Fargo & Co., in addition to which amounts, there is to be paid about $1,200 for accrued dividends. S. F. Examiner.

NO FORFEITING.—Heretofore, if a person holding a Life Policy became unfortunate, and could not raise the sum of money required to pay his next premium, his policy was declared forfeited. The BROOKLYN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK has decided to make EVERY POLICY it issues NON-FORFEITABLE, giving a PAID-UP POLICY to the party if unable to continue his payments of premiums. The dividends of the Brooklyn Life Insurance Company are settled annually in cash. This plan is far more acceptable to insurers than at the end of three or five years, as in other companies. The Brooklyn Life Insurance Company allows thirty days grace in the payment of premiums. Its policies are incontestable, and its losses are promptly paid. The Brooklyn Life Insurance Company offers every known plan of Life and Endowment Insurance. Get a pamphlet at the office, 240 Montgomery street, southeast corner of Pine, from Stephen T. King, General Manager, or David B. Arrowsmith, Local Agent.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

BUGGIES AND CARRIAGES.—If you want a trim neat, light, and yet durable style of buggy or carriage, go to Nos. 37 and 39 Webb street, between Sacramento and California, where you will find just such a vehicle as will suit your taste. POLLARD & CARVILL not only deal in these articles, but manufacture them to order, and do repairing, painting, trimming and blacksmithing with dispatch and neatness. Go and see them.—California Leader.

WAGONS.—Every species of wagons that any one can need, made of the best material, well fitted and finished, can be found at the Depot of MILLS & EVANS, 587 Market street, two doors from Second. Light, Express, Milk and Thoroughbrace wagons, also Lumber Gears, Extra Poles and Whiffletrees, with Lead Bars, are kept constantly on hand.—California Leader.

FOR the best finished, fashionable hats, go to McGann & Co.'s, Hatters, 654 Washington street, two doors below the Plaza.

RHEUMATISM.

Throughout this coast a great deal of suffering is experienced from Rheumatism. Weeks and even months of protracted and aggravated misery is endured by the victims of medical inefficiency and ignorance, which could be cured just as speedily as was Mr. Sparrow, whose testimony is given below, and is only the echo of hundreds of other cases. Dr. Bonrne cures without medicines, which accounts for his extraordinary success. No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street entrance:

SAN FRANCISCO, September 6, 1861.

Dr. Bonrne: Last Winter I was nearly dead, by an attack of inflammatory rheumatism. I suffered the most excruciating pains for about five weeks, without any hope of relief, when a friend, hearing of my illness, called to see me, and assured me that if I would stop "drugging and dosing," and go to you, that you would have me walking about the streets in three days. Sure enough, although I was utterly helpless, and conveyed to your house in a carriage, and carried into it by three stout men, and was by them lifted into the bath, yet, on coming out of the bath I was able to largely assist myself, doing much toward dressing, and without assistance walked from the bath to the carriage. On the fourth day, I discharged my carriage and walked with a friend's aid the entire distance to your house (nearly a mile) and home again, and so on until cured; and I had not taken more than twelve baths when, all pain and swelling having ceased, I felt myself a well man. And now I am happy to do this little service of publicly certifying to the simple truth, leaving it to do its own work among such of my friends and acquaintances as may chance to see this. Your friend. JOSEPH SPARROW.

A SUMMER AND WINTER MEDICINE.

"Great oaks from little acorns grow."

The worst diseases known to the human race spring from causes so small as to almost defy detection. The volumes of scientific lore that fill the tables and shelves of the medical fraternity only go to prove and elaborate these facts.

Then guard yourselves while you may. The smallest pimple on the skin is a tell-tale and indicator of disease. It may fade and die away from the surface of the body, but it will reach the vitals, perhaps, at last, and death be the result and final close. Maggiel's Bilious, Dyspeptic and Diarrhœa Pills cure where all others fail. While for Burns, Scalds, Chilblains, Cuts, and all abrasions of the skin, Maggiel's Salve is infallible. Sold by J. Maggiel, 43 Fulton street, New York, and all Druggists, at 25 cents per box.

WANTED—Agents to sell, by subscription only the most popular work ever written: "GRANT AND SHERMAN; their Campaigns and Generals." By the world-renowned historian, Hon. J. T. Headley, author of Washington and his Generals, Sacred Mountains, etc. Agents are taking as high as thirty subscribers per day, and all agree in pronouncing it the most saleable work they ever took hold of. The people want Headley's illustrated "GRANT AND SHERMAN," etc. For terms and territory, address E. E. SHEAR, No. 8 Montgomery Street, and Box 1,430, San Francisco, California

CONCORD WAGONS AND HARNESS.—The Pacific Concord Carriage Manufactory is prepared to supply the Pacific Coast with Concord wagons and harness made to order. The members comprising this firm have long been in the employ of the celebrated manufacturing house of L. Downing & Son, Concord, New Hampshire; so that parties wishing Concord wagons or harness can obtain just the same quality of article here and save 25 per cent. on their purchase money. We have seen some of their workmanship, and can recommend it to the public Address Belduke & Co., 820 Folsom street, between Fourth and Fifth.—San Francisco Leader.

DAINTY WORK.—About the daintiest work we ever saw were specimens of hair jewelry at the establishment of Mrs. C. Cook, 645 Clay street, between Montgomery and Kearny streets, yesterday. This lady manufactures all sorts of jewelry—watch-chains, earrings, finger rings, breastpins, and various other kinds of ornaments—from human hair. We witnessed the process of manufacture, and it is intricate and ingenious in the highest degree.—S. F. Examiner.

BREWSTER & CO.'S

Carriage Manufactory,

372 Broome steet, New York.

We desire to announce to our California friends that we have made extensive arrangements by increasing our works for the coming season, and with a view to

SUPPLYING THE

WANTS OF CALIFORNIA,

will manufacture a style of work particularly adapted to city and country use, and in view of the destructive effects of city railroads on all light work, will give

PARTICULAR ATTENTION

to remedying the evil, and guard against it in work shipped to California.

CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, PHAETONS, COUPES, and Vehicles of every description, of our own manufacture, on hand and made to order.

Orders or communications should be addressed to

BREWSTER & CO.,
Of Broome street,

The firm of Brewster & Baldwin not being in any way connected with

BREWSTER & CO.,
Of No. 372, Broome street,

TO FARMERS, MINERS, LABORERS

And all those wishing to secure themselves a portion of

THE MOST VALUABLE AGRICULTURAL AND MINERAL LANDS OF MEXICO,

With an equal interest in the Profits of the Plantations of

THE MEXICAN SEA ISLAND COTTON COMPANY.

HOMES FOR THE POOR AND COMPETENCY FOR ALL.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The Mexican Sea Island Cotton Company, having reserved from their final Subscription List a Limited Number of Unassessable Shares, (the remaining shares of the Company having been taken up by the stockholders,) hereby offer the same for sale at the original subscription price of Sixteen Dollars each, payable in cash. Every holder of a share will be entitled to a portion of the Company's lands, having the privilege to settle thereon and participate in all the advantages and profits of the enterprise, and special privileges granted to this Company by an Imperial Decree of Maximilian, dated 9th January, 1866, without being subjected to the conditions of regular Government emigrants, this Company settling upon their own lands, secured by private purchase, and held under indisputable Spanish titles.

Shareholders becoming actual settlers will also have the privilege of any employment upon the Company's plantation. Portions of land will be allotted to settlers, to be held by them until a final division makes it their property.

For the purpose of increasing the value of the Company's land, and to create all the comforts of a home and society, it is the intention of the company to form a regular settlement and to lay out a town adjoining their present plantation into building lots, which will likewise be fairly divided between the 8,000 shares which comprise the total number of the company.

A large number of shareholders will settle upon the company's lands after the rainy season in October next. Many of them may then be employed by the company, or by others able to plant for themselves, or in developing the mineral resources of the adjoining mountains, etc., etc.

Men of all trades and professions, desiring to emigrate to Mexico, will have great advantages as shareholders of this company. They will find the lands already purchased for them at a rate equivalent to a free gift, to be held by each shareholder as his property, protected by the best Spanish titles, and the good will of all political parties now contending for the reins of government; the climate the most salubrious, and the land rich and fertile beyond description; every kind of game abounding; the rivers full of fish and with extensive beds of large oysters; altogether, a country where it is easy to procure a livelihood and the comforts of a home with less labor and less capital than in any other part of the

For Maps and Survey, and further information, apply at the office of the MEXICAN SEA ISLAND COTTON CO., Beige's Book Store, Russ House, Montgomery street, between the hours of 11 and 1 o'clock.

☞ All the assessable stock having been taken up by mutual subscription of stockholders, the company will have no more shares to offer after the limited number of unassessable shares have been placed, and shall prefer to sell these to actual settlers—a single share of which will be sufficient to entitle them to a large portion of the lands.

WE, THE UNDERSIGNED shareholders in the Mexican Sea Island Cotton Company, having investigated and satisfied ourselves of the importance of the enterprise, recommend the same to the public. We are convinced that under the management of the present officers of the company, with their efforts to induce industrious parties to locate upon the land, that the enterprise must become very profitable to all parties interested, and most beneficial to actual settlers.

S. R. Kettlewell, Blacksmith, 264 First street.
W. C. Mead & Son, 224 Sansome street.
M. O'Neil, Proprietor New Branch Hotel, 12 Sutter street.
Winall & Clapp, 505 Market street.
R. A. S. Repiton, M. D., 816 Montgomery street.
Wm. Rudolph, Gunsmith, 216 Pacific street.
G. Burkhardt, Jeweller, No. 209 Pacific street.
E. Keil, East India Tea Co., 631 Washington-st.
P. D. O'Regan, People's Bakery, corner Fourth and Jessie streets.
Wm. Meyer, Provision Dealer, 258 Third street.
John Duff, Painter and Paper Hanger, 642 Clay street.
A. E. Mylott, Importer and Dealer in Cigars and Tobacco, 305 Battery street
M. M. Baldwin, Jeweller, 433 Montgomery-st.
S. Baysen, Hatter, No. 346 Kearny street.
Mathew McCloskey, 644 Howard street.

San Francisco, March 20th, 1866. mar24 1m

HALL'S SARSAPARILLA,

YELLOW DOCK AND IODIDE POTASS,

THE

Best Blood Purifier Known.

Persons that are troubled with Rheumatism, Scrofula, Neuralgia, Morbid Liver, Salt Rheum, Pimples, Boils, or any of the many diseases that originate from Impure Blood, would find it much to their advantage to give this justly celebrated article a trial. One or two bottles are quite sufficient to convince the most skeptical of its merits. It contains neither Spirit, ARSENIC nor MERCURY which cannot be truly said of any other preparation called "Sarsaparilla."

SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,
ap7-3m N. W. cor. Sansome and Commercial streets

RATES OF POSTAGE.

Valuable letters may be registered on application at the office of mailing, and the payment of 20 cents registration fee.

Transient newspapers, periodicals, blanks, proofsheets, book manuscripts, pamphlets, and all mailable printed matter, except circulars and books, 2 cents for each and every 4 ounces. Double these rates are charged for books.

Seeds, cuttings, roots, etc., 2 cents for each 4 ounces or less quantity.

All packages of mail matter not charged with letter postage must be so arranged that the same can be conveniently examined by Postmasters; if not, letter postage will be charged.

Unsealed circulars, to one address, not exceeding three in number, 2 cents, and in the same proportion for a greater number.

No package will be forwarded by mail which weighs over 4 pounds.

All postage matter, for delivery within the United States, must be prepaid by stamps (except duly certified letters of soldiers and sailors;) otherwise, double the above rates will be charged on delivery.

Weekly newspapers (one copy only) sent to actual subscribers within the county where printed and published, free.

Letters to Canada and other British North American Provinces, when not over 3,000 miles, 10 cents for each ½ ounce. When over 3,000 miles, 15 cents. Prepayment optional.

Letters to Great Britain or Ireland, 24 cents. Prepayment optional.

THE

AWARDED THE HIGHEST PREMIUM

AT THE

State Fair of California,

The only Fair on the Pacific coast at which any two double-thread Machines were exhibited in competition in 1865.

If there is a FLORENCE SEWING MAchine within one thousand miles of this office that is not working well, it will be attended to if I am informed of it, without expense to the owner. SAMUEL HILL,

General Agent,

111 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

THE

FLORENCE

SEWING MACHINE

RECEIVED THE FIRST PREMIUM, A GOLD MEDAL, at the Great Exhibition of the AMERICAN INSTUTE, - - - New York, 1865.

my10-3m

FARRAND'S OSCILLATING

Amalgamator.

THIS UNRIVALLED IMPROVEMENT FOR THE REduction and amalgamation of Gold and Silver Ores, is now running daily at No. 206 Commercial street, between Front and Davis.

THIS AMALGAMATOR INVOLVES

NO COMPLICATED MACHINERY

And possesses the following advantages over all others now in use:

1st. It is capable of doing double the amount of work of the ordinary Pans, at a saving of more than one-half the power.

2d. It reduces the pulp finer, thereby producing a better result.

3d. It requires less quicksilver by one-half at a charge, whilst the loss by trituration is comparatively nothing.

4th. As an Amalgamator for gold contained in sulphurets, as also for very fine or flour gold, it has no equal.

5th. This Amalgamator involves no complicated machinery, and is less liable to get out of order than any of the pans.

Trials made with this machine in the presence of experts, during the last six months, have been pronounced highly satisfactory. It is peculiarly well adapted to employment by small mining operators in distant localities, as it can readily be taken to pieces and packed upon mules.

A large size machine is constructed without dies or mullers, but simply with arms to act as stirrers, to be used in connection with several of the Amalgamators as a "Separator," as it is found that the peculiar motion given to these arms, in connection with the concave shape of the body of the machine, renders it most effectual for such a purpose.

The peculiar construction of this superior machine admits of its being worked with a much smaller charge of quick silver, to any given amount of pulp than the flat-bottomed Pans. The spiral springs greatly assist in the work of reduction, by allowing the free admission of the pulp between the mullers and dies, so that the pulp is made to actually work upon itself—as the dust of the diamond is made to reduce the gem itself.

W. D. FARRAND

BOWMAN & CO.,
Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware,
mar24 6m Main street, Petaluma.

THIS LADY ENJOYS THE PURE AND Delicious Tea Bought AT THE STORE OF MESSRS. HASKELL & CO.

THIS LADY BUYS TEA FROM THE "Corner Grocery" AND THE CHINESE PEDLARS.

HASKELL'S TEA STORE

FRONTS ON 514 MARKET-ST., AND 15 SUTTER-ST.,

Two doors below the Market House.

ap14 3m

THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD.

DR. MAGGIEL'S

Pills and Salve.

These Life-giving remedies are now, for the first time, given publicly to the world. For over a quarter of a century of private practice the ingredients in these

LIFE-GIVING PILLS!

Have been used with the greatest success. Their mission is not only to prevent disease, but to cure. They search out the various maladies by which the patient is suffering, and re-invigorate the failing system. To the aged and infirm a few doses of these valuable PILLS will prove to be

A VERY FOUNTAIN OF YOUTH,

For in every case they add new life and vitality, and restore the waning energies to their pristine state. To the young and middle-aged, they will prove most invaluable, as a ready, specific, and sterling medicine. Here is a dream realized, that Ponce-de-Leon sought for three hundred years ago, and never found. He looked for a fountain that would restore the old to vigor and make youth ever

AN ETERNAL SPRING!

It was left for this day and hour to realize the dream, and show in one glorious fact, the magic that made it fair.

THESE FAMOUS REMEDIES

Cannot stay the flight of years, but they can force back, and hold aloof, diseases that might triumph over the aged and the young. Let none hesitate then, but seize the favorable opportunity that offers. When taken as prescribed—

FOR BILLIOUS DISORDERS

Nothing can be more productive of cure than these Pills. Their almost magic influence is felt at once; and the usual concomitants of this most distressing disease are removed. These remedies are made from the purest

VEGETABLE COMPOUNDS.

They will not harm the most delicate female, and can be given with good effect in prescribed doses to the youngest babe.

FOR CUTANEOUS DISORDERS

And all eruptions of the skin, the SALVE is most invaluable. It does not heal externally alone, but penetrates with the most searching effects to the very root of the evil!

Dr. Maggiel's Pills

Invariably cure the following diseases:

Asthma,
Bowel Complaints,
Coughs,
Colds,
Chest Diseases,
Costiveness,
Dyspepsia,
Diarrhœa,
Dropsy,
Debility,
Female Complaints, Fever and Ague
Headache,
Indigestion,
Influenza,
Inflammation,
Inward Weakness,
Liver Complaint,
Lowness of Spirits,
Ringworm,
Rheumatism,
Salt Rheum,
Scalds,
Skin Diseases.

NOTICE.—None genuine without the engraved trade-mark around each pot or box, signed by Dr. J. Maggiel, 43 Fulton st., New York, to counterfeit which is felony.

☞ Sold by all respectable Dealers in Medicines throughout the United States—at 25 cents per box or pot. ap14-1y

STOCKDALE HOUSE,
Corner Main and Oak streets, Petaluma.
mar24 6m H. STOCKDALE, Proprietor.

AMERICAN HOTEL,
Main street. Petaluma.
mar24 6m EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors.

J. PEIRCE,

FURNITURE AND

Bedding Warerooms.

NOS. 415, 417, AND 419 CALIFORNIA STREET, NEAR MONTGOMERY.

THIS STOCK OF FURNITURE, etc., was selected with great care, and special attention given to the wants of this market, ENTIRELY AT THE EAST. It is NOT COMPOSED OF REFUSE GOODS, ODDS AND ENDS OF OTHER HOUSES that have lately closed out here, but CONSISTS ENTIRELY OF NEW GOODS, made after the latest patterns and in the most durable manner.

The present Stock is fully TWICE as large as that of any other house here. Parties having any doubts of this, or that the assortment is not superior to any in the city, can easily satisfy themselves by calling.

The stock of Case Goods is larger than ever before.

J. PEIRCE,
Ware-rooms 415, 417 and 419 California street
de16-3m SAN FRANCISCO.

A CARD.

M. Howard's Hair Restorative,

NO. 315 MONTGOMERY STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO.

THE ABOVE PREPARATION, which has been recently discovered and patented, is purely a Vegetable Extract

The undersigned are fully aware of the many unsatisfactory and useless preparations for restoring hair that have been introduced to the public, and how little confidence is to be placed in any pretensions to restoring the hair to bald heads, but, we are able to state that it not only prevents the Hair from falling out, but absolutely reproduces it, and that we now have good suits of Hair growing where we were entirely bald. Therefore, as a matter of justice to Mr. Howard, and of consolation to bald heads, we leader him this testimonial Mr H. keeps the article for sale in bottles, with directions for its use, or applies it himself, as may be desired.

HAVING TRIED MR. HOWARD'S PREPARATION,

San Francisco, April 6, 1866.

Frank M. Thayer,	R. A. Redman,
W. S Davis,	J. O. Rountree,
T. A. Hall,	G. W. Gamble,
A. C. Knox,	J. W. Miller,
Bradbury Sanborn,	E. C. McComb,
George Wells,	D. C. Ross,
Joseph Wells,	ap7

T. RODGERS JOHNSON,

ODD FELLOWS' HALL, 329 Montgomery street,
dc30 3m San Francisco.

NATHANIEL GRAY,
UNDERTAKER,
CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,
641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB

Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

mar17-3m

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,

PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,

517 CLAY STREET,

Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,

SAN FRANCISCO.

FRANKLIN PRINTING OFFICE,

509 CLAY STREET, (near Sansome,)

SAN FRANCISCO,

"The oldest and most complete Book and Job printing establishment in California. All descriptions of work neatly executed at low rates."

ja1-tf FRANK EASTMAN, Proprietor.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,

WHOLESALE

DRUGGISTS,

IMPORTERS OF

Drugs, Chemicals, Herbs,

PATENT MEDICINES,

PAINTS, VARNISHES,

ACIDS, DYE STUFFS,

OILS, PERFUMERIES,

TOILET ARTICLES,

BRUSHES.

We are just receiving, direct from Spain, a complete assortment of

CORKS! CORKS! CORKS

which we offer at lower prices than usual

DUSTING, PAINT, VARNISH, SHOE, SCRUB, HAIR AND TOOTH BRUSHES:

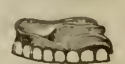
We have a splendid stock, which we offer at extremely low prices.

HERBS.

We have received, direct from the Shakers, all kinds of fresh Herbs, and intend to keep every article used of this description.

TILDEN'S SOLID AND FLUID EXTRACTS, PILLS, AND CONCENTRATED PREPARATIONS.

We have on hand, and shall keep a full assortment of the above celebrated preparations, which we offer to the trade at such prices as will defy competition.



FLAVORING EXTRACTS.

A great variety, not to be equalled in the market as to quality and price.

Parties about purchasing would do well to give us a call and examine prices and goods before purchasing elsewhere.

PLAIN AND GUM TEETH.

We have the largest assortment of any house on the Pacific coast.

GOLD FOIL.

We are manufacturing Foil which we can recommend to the profession as being a superior article. We also have on hand a full assortment, of all the various makers

VULCANIZERS,

DENTAL CHAIRS AND LATHES,

FILES,

VULCANITE AND GUTTA PERCHA,

FORCEPS,

BURRS, DRILLS AND EXCAVATORS,

MIRRORS, ETC.

We have, besides the above, every article used by the Dentist, and are daily in receipt of all the new inventions in use.

Dentists will find it to their interest to call and examine our stock and prices before purchasing elsewhere.

R. H. McDonald & Co.,

CORNER SANSOME AND PINE STREETS,

SAN FRANCISCO.

AND

J STREET - - SACRAMENTO.

ap28 3m

DISTANCES FROM SAN FRANCISCO

To various points:

To Fort Point, 4 miles, by omnibus, four trips a day.
Lone Mountain, 3, street railway.
Seal Rock, 6, cars and omnibus, two trips a day.
Mission Dolores, street railways; Ocean House 8.
San Mateo, 20, railroad.
Crystal Springs, 23, railroad and stage
Half-Moon Bay, 29, do. do.
Redwood city, 30, do.
Mountain View, 38, do.
Santa Clara, 47, do.
San Jose, 50, do., or steamer and stage, 54.
Alviso, 46, steamer, daily.
Almaden mines, 67, steamer and stage; or by railroad and stage, 64.
Santa Cruz, 78, railroad and stage.
Oakland, 8, steamer and railroad, six trips a day.
Alameda, 11, steamer, three trips a day.
San Leandro, 15, steamer and railroad.
Mission San Jose, 34, steamer, railroad and stage.
Warm Springs, 37, do. do.
Benicia, 30, steamer leaves at 4 P. M. daily.
Sacramento, 117, do. do.
Stockton, 117, do. do.
Martinez, 33, do.
Pacheco, 38, steamer and stage.
Diablo Coal Mines, 44, steamer and stage.
Suisun, 50, steamer, or 54 by steamer and stage
Vallejo, 28; Mare Island, 37; Napa city, 50
White Sulphur Springs, 67, stage from Napa.
Geyser Springs, 118, do. do.
Souoma, 52, steamer, tri-weekly.
Petaluma, 48, steamer, daily.
Healdsburg, 80, stage daily from Petaluma
San Quentin, 12, steamer; Farallone Islands, 20.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,

1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, situated on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

It was built expressly for a Hotel, with all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

LARGE READING ROOM

Attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge.

JOHN KELLY, Jr.,
Proprietor.

fe6-3m

THE PACIFIC

INSURANCE COMPANY,

HAVING ADDED

MARINE INSURANCE

TO THEIR BUSINESS, ARE NOW PREPARED TO ISSUE POLICIES ON

Marine, Inland Navigation, and Fire Risks,

ON THE MOST FAVORABLE TERMS.

Office, 436 California street.

J. HUNT, President

A. J. RALSTON, Secretary. fe5-3m

MARKET STREET RAILROAD

CHANGE OF TIME TABLE.

ON AND AFTER AUGUST 1, 1865, Trains will start from the City and the Mission every hour instead of every forty minutes, as heretofore.

Trains from the City will start at the odd hour, commencing at 6:30 A. M. and every hour thereafter until 11:30 P. M.

mh25 F. McCOPPIN, Superintendent.

WHO WANTS

Profitable Employment

OR

PAYING INVESTMENTS?

PARTIES desirous of getting into OLD-ESTABLISHED BUSINESS CONCERNS, either as Partners or Sole Proprietors in Mercantile, Manufacturing, Trading, or any kind of business in city or country, can do so by applying at my office.

Men desiring profitable situations in business houses, with MONEY TO LOAN on satisfactory security, can secure such appointments.

Partnerships negotiated, where large or small capital is required.

Business Interests sold quickly for cash.

Real Estate bought and sold.

Help furnished for all kinds of employment.

Situations obtained for parties desiring employment.

S. P. WHITMAN,

Property, General Agency, and Business House, 313 Montgomery street, San Francisco. mar17-3m

ALLEN'S

LUNG BALSAM!

A CERTAIN CURE FOR

COUGHS, COLDS, INFLUENZA, NIGHT SWEATS, BRONCHITIS, SPITTING OF BLOOD, ASTHMA, WHOOPING COUGH,

CONSUMPTION,

And all Diseases of the

CHEST AND LUNGS!

This celebrated Cough Remedy effects a speedy cure by producing a free and easy expectoration, heals abscesses of the lungs, prevents unhealthy secretion of the bronchial tubes, and removes from them those accumulations of morbid matter which cause oppression of the breast, difficulty of breathing, etc, soothes irritation of the respiratory organs which produces cough.

PRICE.....ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE.

Sold by all Druggists.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
401 Battery corner of Clay,
ja27-3m San Francisco.

DR. HUMPHREYS'

Homœopathic Specifics

Have proved, from the most ample experience, an entire success—simple, prompt, efficient and reliable. They are the only Medicines perfectly adapted to popular use—so simple that mistakes cannot be made in using them; so harmless as to be free from danger, and so efficient as to be always reliable. They have received the highest commendation from all, and will always render satisfaction.

No. 1	cures Fevers, Congestion, Inflammations.	0 25
" 2	cures Worms, Worm Fever, Worm Colic,	25
" 3	cures Crying Colic, or Teething of infants	25
" 4	cures Diarrhœa of children or adults...	25
" 5	cures Dysentery, Griping, Bilious Colic,	25
" 6	cures Cholera Morbus, Nausea, Vomiting,	25
" 7	cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis.....	25
" 8	cures Neuralgia, Toothache, Faceache.	25
" 9	cures Headaches, sick-Headache, Vertigo,	25
" 10	cures Dyspepsia, Bilious Stomach.....	25
" 11	cures Suppressed, or Painful Periods..	25
" 13	cures Croup, Cough, difficult Breathing,	25
" 14	cures Salt Rheum, Erysipelas Eruptions,	25
" 15	cures Rheumatism, Rheumatic Pains...	25
" 16	cures Fever and Ague, Chill Fever, Agues	50
" 17	cures Piles, blind or bleeding.....	50
" 18	cures Opthalmia, and Sore or Weak Eyes,	50
" 19	cures Catarrh, acute or chronic, Influenza	50
" 20	cures Whooping-Cough, violent coughs.	50
" 21	cures Asthma, oppressed Breathing.....	50
" 22	cures Ear Discharges, impaired Hearing	50
" 23	cures Scrofula, Enlarged Glands, Swellings	50
" 24	cures General Debility, Physical Weakness.....	50
" 25	cures Dropsy, and scanty Secretions....	50
" 26	cures Sea-Sickness, sickness from Riding,	50
" 27	cures Kidney Disease, Gravel.....	50
" 29	cures Sore Mouth, Canker.....	50
" 31	cures Painful Periods, even with Spasms	50
" 32	cures Sufferings at change of life.....$1	00
" 33	cures Epilepsy, Spasms, St. Vitus' Dance. 1	00
" 34	cures Diphtheria, Ulcerated Sore Throat,	50

FAMILY CASES.

35 vials, morocco case, and book.....$10 00
28 vials, morocco case, and book..... 8 00
20 vials, morocco case, and book..... 6 00

These Remedies, by the case or single box, are sent to any part of the country, by Mail or Express, on receipt of the price.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
ja27-3m San Francisco

A BEAUTIFUL COMPLEXION!

Secret of Beauty!

USE GEO. W. LAIRD'S

BLOOM OF YOUTH,

OR

LIQUID PEARL!

See that the name,

GEO. W. LAIRD,

is stamped

ON THE BOTTLE.

No other is Genuine.

The best article in the world for Preserving and Beautifying the Complexion and Skin.

This magnificent Toilet Article is prepared only by GEO. W. LAIRD, 74 Fulton street, New York, formerly 483 Broadway.

Sold by Druggists everywhere.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
ap27-3m San Francisco.

NEW

BOOK

AND STATIONERY

STORE.

THE UNDERSIGNED DESIRE TO INFORM THE PUBLIC that they have opened a School Book and Stationery

STORE,

At 691 Market, Corner Third,

"NUCLEUS" BUILDING,

With a complete assortment of everything pertaining to a first class establishment.

Having unsurpassed facilities for obtaining all our stock, direct from the Publishers and Manufacturers, on the most favorable terms, we feel confident of giving satistisfaction to all who may favor us with their patronage.

In addition to our large stock of the above goods, we shall keep constantly on hand a complete assortment of

BIBLES,
PRAYER BOOKS,
BLANK BOOKS,
PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,
PORTFOLIOS,
WRITING DESKS,
SCRAP BOOKS,
JUVENILE BOOKS,
CHILDREN'S TOY BOOKS,
CARDS, BLOCKS, and GAMES.

Especial attention given to

Ladies' Stationery,

embracing all the varieties of Note, Letter Paper, and Envelopes, all which we stamp with purchaser's INITIALS, in colors or plain.

Wedding and Visiting Cards

engraved, written, or printed in the latest style and at the lowest rates. Monograms of all kinds cut to order.

A liberal discount made to Teachers and the Trade.

TYLER BROS,

No. 632 WASHINGTON STREET,

AND

691 MARKET STREET, CORNER THIRD

my12 3m

THE CALIFORNIAN.

TERMS—FIVE DOLLARS PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

A PAPER FOR THE TIMES

DEVOTED TO LIVE TOPICS,

THE DISSEMINATION OF A PURE LITERATURE, DEVELOPMENT OF HOME TALENT,

AND THE

BEST INTERESTS OF CALIFORNIA.

Published

EVERY SATURDAY MORNING

AT

532 MERCHANT STREET,

BY THE CALIFORNIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY.

A. A. STICKNEY, J. P. BOGARDUS, W. J. BINGHAM, C. H. WEBB

No effort will be spared to enable THE CALIFORNIAN to appeal to the Public for support, not only as the

BEST JOURNAL ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

But also as being

THE EQUAL OF ANY ON THIS CONTINENT

THE BEST TALENT OF THE STATE

Is employed upon THE CALIFORNIAN.

The voluntary notices bestowed by the press of the Eastern cities have been no less warm and congratulatory than those which we have received the hands of our cotemporaries of the Pacific Their verdict is unanimously in favor of

THE CALIFORNIAN

and all join in pronouncing their unqualified approval of its unequalled merits.

Its reputation is now fully established. It is not

EXCELLED BY ANY LITERARY JOURNAL

on the Continent.

THE TERMS OF THE CALIFORNIAN are $5 per year, mailed to subscribers, invariably in advance; 50 cents per month served by carriers.

All communications and correspondence must be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN,

No 532 Merchan street

SAN FRANCISCO

OPPOSITION STEAMER-DAY,

FRIDAY, JUNE 15, 1866.

GREAT REDUCTION IN RATES,

VIA NICARAGUA!

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN TRANSIT COMPANY will despatch the favorite Steamship

MOSES TAYLOR,

ON FRIDAY, - - - - JUNE 15TH,

From Mission street Wharf, at 10 o'clock, A. M., precisely.

Connecting at GREYTOWN with the splendid Steamship

SANTIAGO,

2,500 TONS, FOR NEW YORK.

☞ For Passage and Freight, and Insurance on Treasure, at greatly REDUCED RATES, apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,
Up stairs, San Francisco.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE - - - - - - - - PROPRIETOR.
C. L. GRAVES - - - - - - - STAGE MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON - - - - - - - TREASURER.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON AND EVENING,
MAY 26, 1866.

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Dress Circle and Orchestra, - - - - - - - $1 00
Parquet, - - - - - - - - - - 50
Upper Circle, - - - - - - - - - - 25

Mr. John McCullough,

SUPPORTED BY THE LEGITIMATE COMPANY, will appear in the play entitled

THE DEAD HEART.

NEXT WEEK:

EDWIN FORREST

WILL PLAY

VIRGINIUS, - - - - - - - MONDAY
RICHELIEU, - - - - - - - TUESDAY
DAMON, - - - - - - - WEDNESDAY
KING LEAR, - - - - - - - THURSDAY
MACBETH, - - - - - - - - FRIDAY

Reserved Seats.....$1 50
Dress Circle and Parquet.....1 00
Upper Circle.....50

NATURE UNVEILED,

AT THE
PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
ja27-tf between California and Pine.

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE
Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
ja27-tf between California and Pine.

LOW PRICES

IN

Gents' Furnishing Goods,

AT

WARD'S SHIRT STORES,

323 MONTGOMERY STREET,

AND CORNER OF MARKET AND THIRD STREETS,

SAN FRANCISCO.

P. S.—Printed directions for self-measurement for Shirts and Price Lists of Goods sent free by mail.
ap21-3m

SPRING MEDICINE.

PURIFY THE BLOOD!

AND

Constitution,

WITH

LE DOYEN'S

SARSAPARILLA,

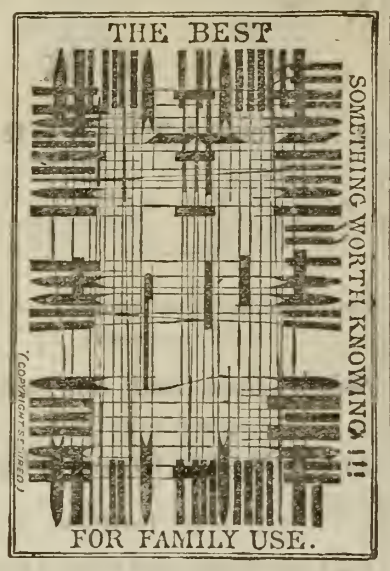
YELLOW DOCK,

IODINE ALTERATIVE.

CRANE & BRIGHAM, Agents,
my19 1m SAN FRANCISCO

THE BANK OF CALIFORNIA,

SAN FRANCISCO, MAY 9, 1866.



NOTICE.

At a meeting of the Stockholders of this Bank, held on the 5th inst., it was resolved to increase the Capital Stock of the corporation to $5,000,000, gold, to take effect on

THE FIRST DAY OF JULY NEXT,

and the President and Cashier were authorized to receive subscriptions for $2,000,000 of said capital stock. Parties desirous of subscribing will make application at the Bank, either personally or by letter, when further details will be given.

D. O. MILLS, President.
my20 1m W. C. RALSTON, Cashier.

JOHN MIDDLETON & SON,

REAL ESTATE, STOCK AND GENERAL

Auctioneers.

Office and Salesroom, 404 Montgomery street, one door from Northeast corner California and Montgomery.

Regular Real Estate Auction Sale Day, MONDAY.

W. W. LAWTON.....NOTARY PUBLIC

LARGE AND IMPORTANT SALE OF BUSINESS AND

HOMESTEAD LOTS

AT AUCTION.

MONDAY, MAY 28, 1866, AT 12 O'CLOCK,

Mission Block No. Eleven,

BELONGING TO THE ESTATE OF THE LATE DR. H. M. GRAY.

Positive and Peremptory Sale of one of the most beautiful blocks of land in the city, fronting on

MISSION,
HOWARD,
ELEVENTH,
NATOMA,
MINNA, AND
LAFAYETTE STS.,

SUBDIVIDED INTO 67 BUILDING LOTS.

On the above date, at our Salesroom, we will sell, on easy terms, the lot of land known as Mission Block, Number Eleven, and fronting on Mission, Howard, and Eleventh streets, and Lafayette Avenue, and intersected by Minna and Natoma streets. The Block is subdivided into sixty-seven Building Lots.

The Property is covered with large and handsome native Oak Trees, and presents rare inducements to purchasers desirous of purchasing large Lots for Homestead purposes.

Each Lot will be graded; also Layfayette street and Eleventh street, thus saving all expense to purchasers.

The Howard Street Cars pass the Lots every few minutes, and the Market Street Cars pass within one block of it

Mission street is graded, macadamized and side walked to Eleventh street.

Diagrams, showing the Subdivision of the Property, will be found on the Lots, and small diagrams for distribution are ready at the Office of the Auctioneers.

TERMS—One-half Cash; one-half in One or Two Years, at one per cent. per month interest. Deferred Payments secured by Mortgages on the Premises.

JOHN MIDDLETON & SONS,
my19 td AUCTIONEERS.

GOOD

WANTED TO SELL THE LEASE, FURNITURE, AND GOOD WILL, OF

One of the Best Localities on Montgomery-st.

House contains nearly 100 rooms, furnished in the best manner, and filled with paying and permanent lodgers.
Address "GOOD BUSINESS," ap14-tf Postoffice, Box 1618.

CARPETS.

Removal! Removal!

KENNEDY & BELL

HAVE REMOVED TO

BUSH STREET,

Below Montgomery,

Store lately occupied by the Franco-American Commercial Company.

ap21-3m

B. F. STERETT, 533 Clay St., a few doors below Montgomery, continues to print all kinds of Books, Bills, Circulars, Cards, etc. in superior style, and at reasonable prices.

A CARD.

D. WARREN SMITH

Has commenced his business of canvassing the city for subscribers for

MIDDLETON'S OIL PORTRAITS,

the series of which embrace

WASHINGTON AND MARTHA, LINCOLN, WEBSTER, CLAY, DOUGLAS, GRANT, SHERMAN, and JACKSON.

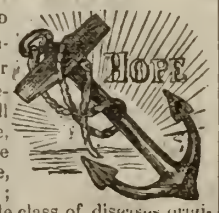
Mr. Smith will call at the business places of our city, and at dwellings at reasonable hours, and exhibit some of the above beautiful Oil Portraits. He hopes to meet with success, as the Pictures are worthy a place in every drawing-room in our country. AGENT'S HEADQUARTERS,

JOHN MIDDLETON & SONS,
my26 2m 404 Montgomery street.

DRY GOODS.

BARGAINS

IN



BLACK SILKS! And still a FEW DRESES LEFT OF THAT BEAUTIFUL AND MUCH-ADMIRED DRESS GOODS,

"SUNBURST!"

S. MOSGROVE,
222 Third street, Colton's Building.
my23-tf

AYER'S AGUE CURE,

FOR THE SPEEDY AND Certain Cure of Intermittent Fever, or Chills and Fever, Remittent Fever, Chill Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical Headache or Bilious Headache, and Bilious Fevers; indeed, for the whole class of diseases originating in biliary derangement, caused by the malaria of miasmatic countries.

This remedy has rarely failed to cure the severest cases of Chills and Fever, and it has this great advantage over other Ague medicines, that it subdues the complaint without injury to the patient. It contains no quinine or other deleterious substance, nor does it produce quinism or any injurious effect whatever. Shaking brothers of the army and the West, try it and you will endorse these assertions.

Prepared by J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by

CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco,
my26-2m and all Dealers.

VINCENT'S COLD PREVENTIVE.

A Sure Cure

FOR COUGHS, COLDS, BRONCHITIS DYSPEPSIA,

CONSUMPTION,

NIGHT SWEATS, AND PULMONARY DISEASES.

Read the following:

REMARKABLE CURE.

San Francisco, September 5th, 1865.

I desire to make known the fact that I was afflicted with a very bad cough for fifteen years, and, during this time, used everything which I could hear of without getting the better of my disease, until I tried Dr. D. B. Vincent's Cold Preventative or Cough Mixture, which cured me sound and well.

NEWTON MOORE.

This is to certify that my wife has been troubled with indigestion for nearly eighteen months, and, by using one bottle of Dr. Vincent's medicine, has been completely cured.

San Francisco, April 6th, 1866.
JOHNSON J. THOMAS.

San Francisco, July 17th, 1865.

I hereby certify that, having had a Cough some five months since, which had troubled me for two years, and I was so bad that I was able to do but little labor of any kind, and could not walk fast without putting myself out of breath. I was so far gone that I had chills over me and night sweats, and had what other physicians called disease of the lungs. I had been doctoring a part of the time for the last year, when I saw Dr. D. B. Vincent, and he gave me a small vial of medicine, which relieved me of the chills and night sweats and the cough entirely went away, and I do not take cold so easy, and my health is much better in every respect. My appetite is much better; and I heartily recommend all others who are afflicted with similar complaints to him.

JOHN O'NEILL, National Hotel.

The above named diseases nearly all originate from the same or similar causes, and will cure all of them. It is a sure cure for Dyspepsia. Price, 50 cents per bottle.

THE COLD PREVENTIVE

D. B. VINCENT, M. D.,
PHYSICIAN AND OCULIST,

Treats all diseases successfully on the Electric system. Particular attention paid to treating all Diseases of the Eyes, Rheumatism, Paralysis, etc. Cures guaranteed, or all moneys refunded—in most cases even where others fail.

☞ OFFICE—No. 103 Kearny street, first floor, where he can be consulted at all hours, unless professionally engaged. All orders from the country promptly attended to. ap7

NEW BOOKS, JUST RECEIVED

AT

A. Roman & Co.'s.

Ænone—A Tale of Slave Life in Rome.
The Queen Mother and Rosamond. By Swinburne.
May and December. By Mrs. Hubbard.
The Gold Brick. By Mrs. Ann H. Stephens.
Leighton Court. By Charles Kingsley.
Only a Woman's Heart. By Ada Clare.
The Toilers of the Sea. By Victor Hugo.
The Adventures of Reuben Davidger.
Citoyenne Jacqueline — A Woman's Lot in the French Revolution. By Sarah Tytler. 12mo.
The Story of Kenneth. By Bayard Taylor.
St. Martin's Summer. By Anne H. M. Brewster.
The Fortune Seeker. By Mrs. Southworth.
Six Months Among the Charities of Europe. By John De Liefde
Palfrey's History of New England. 2 vols. 12mo.
Life of Robert Owen. 16mo.
The Song Book. By John Hullah.
The Republic of Plato. Translated by Vanahan & Davis.
St. Martin's Eve. By Mrs. Henry Wood,
Walter Goring. By Anne Thomas.
Cherry and Violet. A Tale of the Great Plague. By the author of May Powell. 16mo.
Geological Sketches. By Professor Agassiz.
The Phenomena of Plant Life. By L. H. Grindon.
Lucy Arlyn. By J. T Trowbridge.
The War of the Rebellion. By H. S. Foote.
Letters of Life By Mrs. L. H. Sigourney.
Stonewall Jackson. A Military Biography. Philip E. Cooke
Eccentric Personages. By W Russell, L. L. D.
Broken to Harness. A Story of English Dramatic Life. By Yates.
The Lost Tales of Miletus. By Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED BY EVERY STEAMER.

ENGLISH BOOKS IMPORTED DIRECT TO ORDER, WITH PROMPTNESS AND AT MODERATE PRICES.

PUBLIC AND PRIVATE LIBRARIES SUPPLIED.

A. ROMAN & CO.,
417 and 419 Montgomery street.
my19 San Francisco.

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL

Confectioners,

111 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter.

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge. fe24 3m

The California.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME V., No 2. OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET. | SAN FRANCISCO, JUNE 2, 1866. | TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE. 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

PROSE.
- Commodore John Rodgers and the Bombardment of the City of Valparaiso.
- Floral Pleasures.—By Iris.
- The Wehrwolf—An Historical Tragedy.
- The Flower Girl of the Palace Garden.
- My Luck in a Tunnel.
- Dark Hours.
- Misery-Mongers.
- Letter from Rome.
- Jacob's Well.
- What the Paris Grand Opera Costs.
- Perfumes Among the Ancients.

AMUSEMENTS:
- Theatrical Events, and Announcements.

NEW BOOKS:
- Review of Recent Publications.

POETRY:
- The Lost Tails of Miletus—By Sir E. L. B-lw-r.—By "Bret."
- "Dion"—(Lyman R. Goodman.)—By Charles Warren Stoddard.

[For the Californian.]

THE LOST TAILS OF MILETUS.

BY SIR E. L. B-LW-R.

[ARGUMENT.—Bopeep, a young shepherdess of the plains beside the city of Miletus, loses her flocks through incautiousness. She foolishly bewails her loss, refuses to be comforted by the gods, and is punished by Zeus, who returns her flocks to her tailless.]

HIGH on the Thracian Hills, half hid in the billows of clover,
Thyme and the asphodel bloom, and lulled by Pactolian stream-lets,
She of Miletus lay; and beside her an aged satyr
Scratched his ear with his hoof and playfully mumbled his chestnuts.

Vainly the Mænid and the Bassarid gambolled about her,
The wild-eyed Bacchante sung, and Pan, the renowned, the accomplished,
Executed his difficult solo. In vain were their gambols and dances—
High o'er the sacred groves still echoed the shepherdess' wailing.

"Ai, for the fleecy ones, the meek-nosed, the passionless faces!
Ai, for the tallow-scented, the sprightly ones, the high-stepping!
Ai, for the eyes whose glance is that which the rustic, sagacious,
Ascribes to him that loves, yet dare not disclose his passion!"

Her then Zeus answered, "O! daughter of song and of sorrow!
Thoughtless guider of sheep! arise from thy deep lamentation,
Since thou canst not trust Fate, nor behave as becomes a Greek maiden, Look and behold thy flocks!" and lo, they returned to her tailless.

BRET.

(For the Californian.)

FLORAL PLEASURES.

IN leaving spring and entering upon summer, the transition is so gradual, that we scarcely know whether to class the month of May as the last of the spring months or the first of those of summer. Much depends on the weather; but perhaps it is the combination of spring with summer that makes this month so universal a favorite with all. Make a note of what is most desirable in your own or your neighbor's garden; what the peculiarities are of each favorite class of plants—their time and length of flowering. There is no way of learning the peculiarities of plants so successful as by experimenting and noting the results of success or failure.

Old garden diaries have an interest of their own only known to those who have kept them. The comparison of one year with another as to time of appearing; the varieties of color; what flowers bloom in each month, and how they are grown—whether from seeds, or cuttings, or bulbs. A celebrated writer, in speaking of the enjoyment of a garden, says: "I have often wondered why people so seldom avail themselves of this luxury. They will live year after year in the country, and never go out except for a walk or a drive. Some men never go to a new place, but almost the first thought is, where they may sit in the open air, and ere two days have elapsed, the out-of-doors drawing-room is as familiar as the in-doors."

There is much to be learned, no doubt, in communion with nature, even in "the trim garden's narrow round." Many types of higher things are suggested by almost all the occupations there, as well as by our plants and flowers themselves; some of these, being scriptural, will recur to every one, but it is by no means an unprofitable task to find new analogies and types for ourselves. It must be a very dull and prosaic mind that does not almost involuntarily do so:

> "For all that meets the bodily sense I deem > Symbolical—one mighty alphabet
> For infant minds, and we in the low world,
> Placed with our backs to bright reality,
> That we may learn with young, unwounded ken
> The substance from its shadow."

Few people, it is true, can make such use of these symbols as the poets have done, to instruct others, but the power of discovering and enjoying these teachings from God's book of nature adds greatly to the pleasure of our work, and occupies the mind while the hands are employed "dressing and keeping" the garden.

It is a good thing to have plenty of flowers—common flowers, every-day favorites:

> "Creatures not too bright or good
> For human nature's daily food;"

flowers that may be pulled, flowers suitable for nosegays, flowers that seem to grow better for having their blossoms gathered. This gathering of flowers for one's self or friends is such a pleasure, that I often wonder at its being so frequently deputed to the gardener. How often a branch of flowers carries with it an association of ideas that the possessor longs to retain, even after the flowers have withered. Those who are true lovers of the garden, with what pleasure and delight do they look upon the gift of a few flowers, and with what care and attention are they preserved! It is not long since I saw a most interesting incident—the growth of a plant from a small branch. When in flower, it was given to a person who had rendered a service; the time, place and circumstances were so peculiar, that it was preserved; a cutting or slip was made of it, and grew to be a splendid plant, covered with its beautiful flowers. Now it is a constant reminder of that scene, and no money would induce the owner to part with it.

The pleasure of growing plants from cuttings is very great, and with a little practice almost any of our garden plants can be very successfully grown, filling our windows and porches and gardens with their beautiful forms. How frequently do we hear the remark, "Oh, that is so beautiful, I wish I could preserve it!" So you can: propagate it. Make a cutting of it and grow it, and you will soon have a plant rivalling the parent from which it was taken. The pleasure of seeing it grow under your care, and the knowledge that you can increase it and be able to supply your friends, will be one of the purest joys you can experience.

FLORAL CALENDAR—CONTINUED.

May 20th. St. Bernardine of Sienna, Horse-chestnut, (Æschylus.)
May 21st. St. Felix, Ragged Robbin, (Lychnis flos-cuculi.)
May 22d. St. Yvo, Yellow Star of Bethlehem, (Arnithoglum pratensis.)
May 23d. St. Julia, Lilac, (Syringa vulgaris.)
May 24th. St. Vincent, Monkey Poppy, (Papaver Orientale.)
May 25th. St. Urban, Common Avens, (Geum Urbanum.)
May 26th. St. Augustine, Yellow Azalia, (Azalia Pontica.)
May 27th. St. Bede, Buttercups, (Ranunculus Acris.)
May 28th. St. Germain, Lurid Fleur de lis, (Iris Lurida.)
May 29th. St. Cyril, Blue Bottle, (Centaurea Montana.)
May 30th. St. Ferdinand, Spearwort, (Ranunculus flammula.)
May 31st. St. Petronnilla, Turk's cup Lily, (Lilium flavium.)
June 1st. St. Justin, Yellow Rose, (Rosa Lutea.)
June 2d. St. Erasmus, Pimpernel, (Anagallis Arvensis.)

IRIS.

A RECENT writer says of Cuvier: "It was to his mother, a woman of considerable spirit and enlightenment, that he was indebted for the means of cultivating his mind. To her he repeated his lessons: she taught him to draw, and read with him works of history and literature. In fact, it was by her the key to learning was put into his hands. She imparted to him no small portion of that sagacity and penetration which he cultivated to such an advantage in after life. A copy of Buffon, a book he met with by accident in his father's house, gave his mind a turn to natural history. He began by copying the figures for amusement."

JACOB'S WELL.

THE following interesting description of this famous locality we find in Good Words, from the pen of Rev. Norman McLeod, D. D.:

"There has never been a doubt entertained by the most skeptical or critical traveller regarding the authenticity of this well. Beyond all question, it is the one at which our Savior rested as he journeyed along the route which travellers generally follow from Jerusalem to Galilee. Every feature of the landscape starts into life as we read the narrative of his memorable conversation with the woman of Samaria; the plain of cornfields which were then as now whitening to the harvest; the mountain rising above, on which the Samaritan temple was built; the neighboring town of Shechem: the Samaritans worshipping, as they still do, toward 'this mountain,' and there only; all are evidences of its truth, apart from the common and unbroken tradition.

"This well is not what we understand by that name. It is not a spring of water bubbling up from the earth, nor is it reached by an excavation. It is a shaft cut in the living rock, about nine feet in diameter, and now upwards of seventy feet deep. As an immense quantity of rubbish has fallen into it, the original depth must have been much greater, probably twice what it is now. It was, therefore, intended by its first engineer as a reservoir rather than as a means of reaching a spring. Then, again, if any wall, as some suppose, once surrounded its mouth, on which the traveller could rest, it is now gone. The mouth is funnel-shaped, and its sides are formed by the rubbish of old buildings, a church having once been erected over it. But we can descend this funnel and enter a cave, as it were, a few feet below the surface, which is the remains of a small dome that once covered the mouth. Descending a few feet, we perceive in the floor an aperture partly covered by a flat stone, and leaving sufficient space through which we can look into the darkness. We sent a plumb-line down into the water—with which the well certainly seemed to be abundantly supplied at the time of our visit.

"Many have been puzzled to account for Jacob's having dug such a well here, when the whole valley of Shechem, only a quarter of an hour's walk off, is more musical with streams than any other in Palestine. But some one dug the well—and who more likely than Jacob, not only to have on his own property what was, in his time, more valuable than a private coal mine would be with us; but also for the moral purpose of keeping his family and dependents as separate as possible from the depraved Shechemites.

"This well is, indeed, a holy spot. One is glad that the contending ecclesiastical parties in the land have built their churches on places which have but little historical value, and that a merciful Providence has preserved untouched, and open to the eye of heaven, such spots as that on the Mount of Olives, 'over against the Temple,' and, above all, Jacob's well. It is now said, however, that the Greek Church have purchased it, as the site of a church, for 70,000 piastres. Universal Christendom, to which it belongs, should protest against such 'pious profanation.'"

WHAT were Landor's "Imaginary Conversations" to the following, which is vouched to have taken place in Main street, in the prosaic city of Taunton, Mass. The parties were an ancient from the outskirts, in a soldier's overcoat and battered hat, with maudlin eyes and a tobacco-stained chin, who was seated in a wagon beside a coffin fresh from the undertaker's. To him approached another venerable bummer with a fur collar and a pair of unsteady legs. The conversation may be briefly condensed thus: "What have you got there?" "A coffin." "Is it new?" "Yes; just bought it and gin fifteen dollars." "Aint you going to wet it?" At this point our informant left, and the question whether the owner of the coffin submitted gracefully to the usual tax upon newly-purchased articles, remains in doubt.

WHY does an angry man resemble a lady in full dress? Because he is very much ruffled.

THE WEHRWOLF.

AN HISTORICAL TRAGEDY.

THOSE who have travelled through the south of France may have seen, scattered here and there, some traces of a lost race, separate and distinct from the mass of the inhabitants of the country. Forming a respectable community with regard to numbers, in the Middle Ages, they have gradually died out under the injustice and oppression with which they were treated by their more powerful neighbors. Forced to remain to themselves, and cut off from all the social advantages of other people, frequent intermarriages were not slow in producing a dwarfed and really inferior race. From contempt, the feelings of the people among whom they existed soon changed to a fierce and vindictive hate. They left no opportunity unimproved by which they could oppress and wrong these miserable Cagots, as the race of whom I write was called. The Church, with greater sympathy and love for these unfortunates, was their friend and protector. Yet it was as much as the priests could do, powerful as they were, to effect their admission into the churches, from which the pure blood sought to exclude them; and this privilege was gained solely on condition that they should enter the church only by a side door, built so low as to force them to bow their heads in humility in approaching their superiors.

In the eyes of the people the poor Cagots were infidels, heathens, poisoners, worshippers of Satan; and it was a favorite superstition with them that these poor wretches lived chiefly on human blood, and that they were wehrwolves—that is, possessed of power to assume at pleasure the form of a wolf, and to pursue the destructive habits of that terrible monster. In vain the priests combated this notion, and exerted their power on behalf of the unfortunates; the people of the country were too thoroughly imbued with the idea to abandon it.

Sunk in ignorance and degradation as the Cagots were, there were those among them, few and far between, it is true, who would do honor to any race, to any blood, even the purest. There were instances of rare beauty, virtue and goodness among them, which almost atoned for the darkness and shame of the race.

In the latter part of the year 1445 there was in the south of France a village (now destroyed) of these unhappy people, containing a population of at least two hundred. The village had no name, and was known throughout the surrounding country as the Cagot hamlet. Its dwellings were nearly all mere huts, small and meanly constructed, and the inhabitants lived in the most abject poverty. They barely eked out a miserable support by cutting wood from the neighboring forest, and supplying the thriving town of Lannes, which stood near by, with that commodity. Between the two places there was the slightest possible intercourse. The townspeople only permitted the Cagots to enter Lannes at stated periods to bring wood and procure such articles as they needed, and then rarely failed to drive them away with curses, and sometimes with blows.

Yet the hamlet had one friend, that was the good priest, Father Basil, who had devoted his life to the service of the poor creatures. He had built a chapel in the hamlet, and there ministered daily to their spiritual wants. He pitied them, and his heart warmed to them as he saw the injustice which was heaped upon them.

One day Father Basil having wandered abstractedly beyond the limits of the hamlet, toward Lannes, was startled from his revery by a loud shout. Looking up, he saw a young girl flying in terror before a crowd of the townspeople, who were pursuing her with hoots and curses. The girl saw him, and, rushing toward him, fell at his feet and clung to his robe.

"Save me, father!" she cried, imploringly.

The priest waved the crowd back sternly, and demanded what they wanted of the girl.

"She is a devil, a wehrwolf," said one of the crowd, a stout, burly artisan. "We want her life before she fatteus on more of our blood."

"For shame, Jean Coquin," exclaimed the priest, sternly. "Have you no more manliness than to persecute a poor girl thus?"

"She is not a poor girl, father," said the man, sullenly. "She is a witch, a wehrwolf, and we mean to put a stop to her mischief. Do we not, my friends?" he added, appealing to the crowd, who answered him with a storm of curses aimed at the poor girl.

The priest gazed at them scornfully for a moment, and then drawing the girl closer to him, said calmly: "This is no wehrwolf. She is one of God's children, and has sought the protection of his holy church, and thus do I throw it around her. Let him who dare touch her at his peril."

As he spoke, he threw over her neck the crucifix and rosary which he wore at his girdle. The crowd hesitated, and then drew back, and taking the girl's hand he led her safely to the hamlet.

"What have you done, Adele?" asked Father Basil, as they went along.

"Nothing, father. They found me on the edge of the forest nearest town, and said I was a wehrwolf, and threatened to kill me."

"What were you doing in the forest, my child?" asked the curé.

The girl blushed and hung her head.

"Ah! You were there to meet a lover. Is it so?"

Still she was silent; but the blushing face answered him, and he continued:

"Is he of your own race, Adele?"

"No, my father, he belongs there;" and she pointed to the town.

"My child," said the old man, kindly, "I fear this is not right. You had better beware of the gallants of the town. You are not the equal of any of them, and I cannot think they will deal honorably with you. Let them alone, my daughter, or you will have cause to repent it."

"But François is brave and honorable, father," she exclaimed indignantly. "He loves me, though I am a poor, down-trodden Cagot. And why should he not love me? Have I not beauty? Am I not as worthy of him as any of the girls in the town that look so coldly at me when they pass me? Why should he not love me?"

She spoke rapidly and with passion, and her face seemed to the good old man more beautiful than anything he had ever seen. He knew nothing of the art of managing affairs of the heart, having been in the Church since his boyhood; but he saw that it was useless to attempt to check this.

Adele was the daughter of an old widow. Her father had been killed years before in a brawl with the townspeople; and being a man of strong, ungovernable passions, and feeling keenly the degradation of his race, it is likely that his death was not unprovoked. The cottage in which the mother and daughter resided, was a little removed from the hamlet, and stood nearer to the forest than any of the others. It was small and poor, but Adele made it neater and more attractive than any in the hamlet. She had trained vines over the doors, and around it had planted some flowers of rare beauty. Still it had the stern, sullen look that all the Cagot residences bore. Nothing, it seemed, could remove the mark of the curse. Old Louise, Adele's mother, had been bedridden for more than a year, and now awaited her daughter's coming with impatience. She knew that Adele had gone to the forest, and, knowing the hatred which was felt for the Cagots, feared that some harm had befallen her. As the young girl entered at last, she asked her sharply what had detained her so long; and Adele told her of her adventure with the townspeople.

"Curse them!" shrieked the old dame. "They murdered your father, child, and now they would take you from me. Oh, that I were a wolf! I would tear them, I warrant me. Girl, girl, if ever you love one of them, as I did once when I was young, you will repent it bitterly. You'd better die first."

Adele shuddered. Twice in an hour she had received this warning, and she could not shake off the feeling which it threw over her. Still she could not give up her love for François, even though he was a townsman. He was a young man, a few years older than herself, and had first met her in the forest, and had loved her. She had returned his passion from the first; and all of their meetings had been held in the woods. He did not wish his people to know of his attachment to her, for he well knew the opposition it would evoke, and he had not the courage to avow openly his love for a Cagot girl, even though she was as pure and beautiful as Adele. It would draw down upon him all the prejudice which was exhibited toward the despised race, and this he did not care to brave. Still he loved Adele sincerely and honestly; and he meant, when he had earned a sufficiency of money, to take her to some other part of the country and marry her.

On the morning in which my story opens he had met her in the forest, and upon hearing some one approach had plunged into the wood to avoid being seen with her, and Adele had been discovered by a party of townsmen, and had been pursued by them. Had she fallen into their clutches when Father Basil rescued her, there is not a doubt that she would have fared badly. François had not seen the adventure, and was ignorant of it until Adele told him of it at their next meeting. Then he could only sigh, and press her closer to him.

Thus matters went on until the winter set in. It was very long and severe, and brought with it a still more terrible visitant. The Cagot hamlet and the town of Lannes were both built near a large forest, which has now given place to a smiling vineyard. This forest had once been famous for the terrible wolves which haunted it in the winter season. Of late years they had disappeared; but now, as the winter set fairly in, they came again. Of course, popular prejudice at once declared that these monsters were not real wolves, but wehr-wolves, or, in other words, the Cagots, who inhabited the neighboring hamlet, and this was the occasion of renewed persecutions.

Adele and François continued to meet in the forest, and, if they knew that the wolves were there, paid no attention to them.

Late one afternoon, Adele started out to cut some wood for her hut. The long cold season had exhausted the scanty stock which she had laid in at the beginning of winter, and she was forced to cut the wood from the forest from day to day. Taking her hatchet, although it was late, and the distance long, bent her steps to that part of the wood where she usually met her lover, hoping she might see him there. Arriving at the spot, she saw nothing of him, and, as the darkness was coming on, fell at once to chopping her wood.

She soon obtained a sufficient quantity, and was about to start on her return home, when she saw her lover coming toward the forest. When he joined her, he said it was so late that he would walk with her a portion of the way toward her home.

As they approached the hamlet they were joined by Father Basil, who was also going thither from the town; and François now left them.

The next afternoon she repaired to the trysting-spot again; and this time, just before dark, François met her again. He told her he was ready to go with her to some distant part of the country and be married, as soon as the spring should set in, and that she must make her preparations to go with him. This she readily promised to do; but, while she was speaking, footfalls were heard, and François turned away and plunged into the gloom of the woods, to escape recognition. Adele fell at once to chopping wood; but she was so nervous and agitated that she cut her hand badly with her hatchet, and while she was trying to bind it up, a man came up with her, and, stopping, said in a harsh tone:

"What are you doing here at this hour, girl?"

She glanced at him in alarm, for she recognized his voice. It was Jean Coquin, who had been the chief of her persecutors on the day when she was rescued by Father Basil.

"What are you doing here, I say?" he continued, fiercely. "By St. Peter, I think you are lying in wait for some honest fellow who may chance to pass this way after nightfall. But, I'll put a stop to that."

With these words he sprang after her, and, wrenching her hatchet from her hand, aimed a terrible blow at her. She eluded it, and fled into the woods, closely pursued by him. It was dark and gloomy in among the trees, and she paused a few yards from where she had started, and her blood froze with horror, as she beheld two bright eyes shining before her in the darkness. Jean Coquin saw them, too, and paused, for a moment, in dismay; and Adele, taking advantage of this, slipped by him, unobserved, and regaining the path, fled homeward.

Well might Jean Coquin pause, and utter an exclamation of dismay. Straight before him stood a large she-wolf, with her bright eyes glaring fiercely at him, and her huge gray form standing out boldly amid the gloom. Jean Coquin was not a coward; and in this case he saw that his only safety lay in making a good, bold fight for his life. So he grasped the hatchet firmly, and breathed a hasty prayer. As he did so, the animal uttered a savage growl, and sprang at his throat.

A sharp, short struggle followed, in which Jean was sorely put to it to defend himself. At last, however, he gave the wolf a deep cut in the fore paw; and, with a yell of baffled rage, the animal turned and fled from him, leaving him a little scratched and bruised, but in nowise badly hurt.

Now, as he had come so suddenly upon the wolf while in pursuit of the young Cagot girl, and as he was a firm believer in the wehrwolf superstition, Jean Coquin did not for an instant doubt that the wolf he had fought was no other than Adele, in her lupine form. Indeed, when we consider the prevalence of the superstition in that dark period, we cannot wonder at this. He had received positive proof that she was a wehrwolf, and had seen her, with his own eyes, change from a woman into a she-wolf. This was all he wanted; and, filled with the idea which the desire for vengeance called up, he hastened to the town to put it into execution.

Lannes was full of wild excitement when his story was told. He was thought very highly of in the town, and no one dreamed of disputing his word. His statement made the townspeople, who had collected to hear it, furious.

"Down with the Cagots!" was shouted by several voices.

"Ay! that's it," said Jean; "down, not only with this Cagot, but with the whole race."

"Let us burn their hamlet, and cut the throats of the whole set!" shouted another.

"Not so, my friends," cried a third. "Let us go to this she-wolf's den and take vengeance upon her, and burn the den over her head. We have nothing as yet to punish the rest for; but we can rid ourselves of this one. But," he added, turning to Jean, "did you not say that you wounded the wolf in the fore paw?"

"Ay, that I did!" replied Jean, "in the right fore-paw."

"Then," said the other, "if this girl is guilty of the charge you bring against her, she will bear the mark of the wound on the left arm or hand. Come, my friends. To the she-wolf's den—away!"

With loud shouts, the crowd rushed madly toward the Cagot hamlet. Each moment their wrath grew fiercer and fiercer still, until it passed beyond all control. As they neared the hamlet, their cries and shouts roused the poor wretches from their slumbers, and caused them to tremble with dread, for their hour had come. But, with unusual steadiness of purpose, the mob swept through the wretched streets, and passed on toward the lonely cottage near the forest.

Adele, upon reaching her home, had bound her wounded arm, and was now sleeping quietly, dreaming of her lover, and little thinking of the terrible danger which threatened her. She had not waited to see the issue of the fight in the forest between Jean and the wolf, and was ignorant of all that had transpired.

She was roused from her slumbers by loud cries and the tramping of many feet around the house. Then there came a fierce rapping at the door, and a sharp demand to be admitted. Instinctively the poor girl knew that some new persecution awaited her, and she shrank cowering into a corner, behind some old rubbish. In an instant the door was burst in, and the crowd poured into the house. The old dame, divining their purpose, received them with a storm of curses, and shook her withered fists at them in impotent rage.

"Silence, old wolf!" cried Jean Coquin, brutally. "Tell us, where is your cub?"

Just then his keen eye chanced to spy Adele, who was crouching in the corner, and she was soon dragged forth into the midst of the throng. Jean seized her bandaged hand, and holding it up forcibly, cried exultantly, "Behold the proof! I wounded the wolf in the left forepaw. Here is the cut."

And with these words he tore the bandage from the hand, and exposed a newly-made cut.

There was a murmur of wonder from the crowd, and then Jean shouted, "Take her out, and tie her hand and foot. Then light the old hut, and let us burn her before she does more harm to us!"

"But what shall we do with the old one?" asked one of the crowd.

"Burn her, too!" was the inhuman reply. "Let her stay where she is. She cannot escape us."

The crowd now left the cottage; and Jean, holding Adele with a grasp of iron, led her out with him. Upon reaching the open air, he produced a stout cord, and, in spite of her prayers and struggles, was about to bind her, when he was hurled with force to the ground, and François, passing his arm round the young girl's waist, drew her to him.

"She is mine!" he exclaimed. "She is my promised wife. She is no wehrwolf. She shall not be harmed while I have life to protect her."

"The lad is mad. Seize him, friends, and save him from his folly."

The speaker was François' father. The young man had just arrived, and had come with the intention of defending Adele with his life. But he was powerless to contend against such a crowd, whose excitement and frenzy were becoming greater every moment. Before he could reply to his father, Adele was torn from his grasp, and he was seized and held by four strong men. All his efforts to release himself were vain, and he was forced to witness the tragedy which followed, powerless to help her whom he loved so dearly.

Adele was bound securely. The cruel wretches into whose hands she had fallen had no pity. Her beauty and youthfulness only maddened them the more; and to all her weeping, pleading, and praying, they turned deaf ears. Led on by Jean Coquin, they were hurrying with her to the flames, when Father Basil rushed up almost out of breath, and exclaimed in a loud voice:

"Hold!"

The men paused, and the priest demanded, sternly, to know what they meant. Alas! their meaning was too plain. The cottage was already in flames, and the shrieks of the bedridden old dame were heart-rending. She had been in the burning building, and was being consumed with it.

"She is a wehrwolf, father!" cried a score of voices. "We have proved it on her, and we mean to burn her in her den."

"She is a human creature," cried Father Basil; "and in the name of our most holy church I command you to release her."

There was a murmur of disapproval from the crowd.

"She must die, father! You have no right to interfere. She is not a woman, but a wild beast, and has no soul to save."

The men moved toward the flames with their victim; but Father Basil sprang between them and the fearful elements, and, lifting the crucifix with both hands high over his head, shrieked in a tone which made his hearers' blood run cold:

"In the name of the holy Church, I pronounce all who countenance or aid this murder accursed—and here I shut the gates of Heaven against them!"

The fearful interdict was cut short, for the priest was felled to the earth by a heavy blow from the hand of Jean Coquin. The crowd had sunk on their knees as Father Basil began the sentence of excommunication which was to shut them out from the Church here and from Heaven hereafter. The wretches released their victim; but Jean, lifting her in his brawny arms, bore her quickly to the cottage, and with prodigious strength hurled her far into the burning mass. There was a wild shriek as the flames closed around her, and then all was still.

When Father Basil recovered, he went in haste to Paris, and soon the officers of the law came down to Lannes to visit upon the offenders the vengeance of the State. Jean Coquin was broken upon the wheel, and several who had been prominent in the affair were hung. The town was placed under a direful sentence of excommunication by the bishop of the diocese, and the sacraments and relics contained in the church were carried away in solemn procession.

François did not long survive the terrible tragedy through which he had passed. His father, who really loved him, did all in his power to bring him back to his old happy condition; but to the last the young man manifested toward him the greatest aversion.

MISERY-MONGERS.

MISERY-MONGERS (the word is not to be found in Johnson, yet it suits) are those who do not really suffer affliction, but make a trade of it—and often a very thriving business, too. They are scattered among every class, but especially they belong to the "genus irritable"—the second or third-rate order of people who live by their brains. Not the first order—for the highest form of intellect is rarely miserable. True genius of the completest kind is not only a mental but a moral quality. Itself creates the atmosphere it lives in: a higher and rarer air than that of common earth.

"Calm pleasures there abide;—majestic pains."

To a really great man, the petty vanities, shallow angers, and morbid crotchets of smaller natures are unknown. Above all, genius gives to its possessor a larger, clearer vision; eyes that look outwards, not inwards. That enormous Ego—the source of so many puny woes to lesser minds—rarely grows rampant in a man who is great enough to know his own littleness. Consequently, he is saved at once from a hundred vexations which dog the heels of a mental Chang—a seven-foot giant of genius—who is always measuring himself with Tom, Dick, and Harry, and requiring, or fancying he requires, larger clothes, longer beds, and bigger hats than they. When Tom, Dick, and Harry, annoyed at these exactions, find that the small son of Anak is not so very much taller than themselves, cut him up in reviews or snub him in society, great is the vexation of spirit he endures. But your real giant, who never thinks of Tom, Dick, and Harry at all, takes the matter quite calmly: whatever be his own altitude, he sees before him an ideal far higher than himself, and ten times higher than anything they see, and this keeps him at once very humble in his own opinion, and very indifferent to theirs. The present essayist, though decidedly not a man of genius, has known a good many such, and has always found them neither strutting like peacocks nor marching on stilts, but moving about as tame as the elephant in the Zoological Gardens, and as apparently unconscious of their own magnitude. It is your second-rate, your merely clever man, who, ape-like, is always rattling at the bars of his cage; mopping and mowing to attract attention, and eagerly holding out his paw for the nuts and apples of public appreciation, which, if he does not get—why he sits and howls!

Such people have rarely suffered any dire calamity or heart-deep blow. To have sat down with sorrow—real sorrow—more often gives a steadiness and balance to the whole character, and leaves behind a permanent consistent cheerfulness, more touching, and O how infinitely more blessed, than the mirth of those who have never known grief! Also, after deep anguish comes a readiness to seize upon, make the best of, and enjoy to the uttermost, every passing pleasure: for the man who has once known famine will never waste even a crumb again. Rather will he look with compassionate wonder at the many who scatter recklessly their daily bread of comfort and peace; who turn disgusted from a simple breakfast, because they are looking forward to a possible sumptuous dinner; or throw away contemptuously their wholesome crust, because they see, with envious eyes, their opposite neighbor feeding on plum-cake.

No, the miserable people whom one meets are not the really unhappy ones, or rather those who have actual misfortune to bear, there being a wide distinction between misfortune and unhappiness. How often do we see moving in society, carrying everywhere a pleasant face, and troubling no one with their secret care, those whom we know are burdened with an inevitable, incommunicable grief: an insane wife, a dissipated husband, tyrannical parents, or ungrateful children? Yet they say nothing about it, this skeleton in the cupboard, which their neighbors all know of or guess at, but upon which they themselves quietly turn the key, and go on their way; uncomplaining, and thankful to be spared complaining. What good will it do to them to moan? It is not they, the unfortunate men, nor yet the men of genius, who contrive to make miserable their own lives and those of everybody connected with them. The true misery-mongers are a very different race; you may find the key to their mystery in Milton's famous axiom—

"Fallen cherub, to be weak is miserable, Doing or suffering."

There, for once, the Devil spoke truth. Miserable people are invariably weak people.

"O well for him whose will is strong,
He suffers, but he will not suffer long;
He suffers, but he cannot suffer wrong."

Of course not, because his firm will must, in time, shake off any suffering; and because no amount of externally inflicted evil is to be compared to the evil which a man inflicts upon himself; by feebleness of purpose, by cowardly non resistance to oppression, and by a general uncertainty of aims or acts. He who sees the right, and cannot follow it; who loves all things noble, yet dare not fight against things ignoble in himself or others; who is haunted by a high ideal of what he wishes to be, yet is forever falling short of it, and that his friends are judging him, not unjustly, by what he is rather than by what he vainly aims at being—this man is, necessarily, one of the unhappiest creatures living. One of the most harmful, too, since you can be on your guard against the downright villain, but the æsthetic evil-doer, the theoretically good and practically bad man, who has lofty aspirations without performances, virtuous impulses and no persistence—against such an one you have no weapons to use. He disarms your resentment by exciting your pity; is forever crying "Quarter, quarter!" and, though you feel that he deserves none, that his weakness has injured yourself and others as much as any wickedness, still, out of pure compassion, you sheathe your righteous sword and let him escape unpunished. Up he rises, fresh as ever, and pursues his course, always sinning and always repenting, yet claiming to be judged, not by the sin, but the penitence; continually and obstinately miserable, yet blind to the fact that half his misery is caused by himself alone.

And this brings us to the other root of misery-mongering—selfishness. None but a thoroughly selfish person can be always unhappy. Life is so equally balanced that there is always as much to rejoice as to weep over, if we are only able—and willing—to rejoice in and for and through others.

"Time and the hour run through the roughest day"—

if we will but let it be so—if we will allow our sky to clear and our wounds to heal—believing in the wonderfully reparative powers of Nature when she is given free play. But these poor souls will not give her free play; they prefer to indulge in their griefs, refusing obstinately all remedies, till they bring on a chronic dyspepsia of the soul, which is often combined with a corresponding disease of the body.

It may seem a dreadful doctrine to poetical people; but two-thirds of a man's woes usually begin in his stomach. Irregular feeding, walking, and sleeping, with much too regular smoking, are the cause of half the melancholy poetry and cynical prose with which we are inundated. Also of many a miserable home, hiding its miseries under the decent decorum which society has the good taste and good feeling to abstain from prying too closely into; and of not a few open scandals, bankruptcies and divorce cases. If a modern edition of the Miseries of Human Life were to be written, the author might well trace them to that unsanitary condition, first of body and then of mind, into which civilization, or the luxurious extreme of it, has brought us, and upon which some of us rather pride ourselves, as if it were a grand thing to be "morbid;" quite forgetting the origin of the word, and that such a condition, whether mental or physical, or both combined, is, in truth, not life, but the beginning of death, to every human being.

And suppose it is so. Granted that I am a man with "nerves" or "liver," or any other permanent ailment, am I to make my ill-used and consequently ill-conducted interior a nuisance to all my family and friends? Did no man's head ever ache but mine? Is no one else blessed (or cursed) with a too sensitive organism, obliged to struggle with and control it, and at least contrive that it shall trouble others as little as possible? Why should my wife, sister, or daughter be expected to bestow unlimited sympathy upon every small suffering of mine, while she hides many an ache or pain which I never even know of, or, knowing, should scarcely heed, except so far as it affected my own personal comfort, or because it is a certain annoyance to me that anybody should require sympathy but myself? Have my friends no anxieties of their own, that I should be forever laying upon them the burden of mine—always exacting and requiting nothing? People like a fair balance—a cheery give and take in the usefulnesses as well as the pleasantnesses of life. Is it wonderful, then, that, after a time, they a little shrink from me, are shy of asking me to dinner?—at least, often. For they feel I may be a cloud upon the social board; my moods are so various, they never know how to take me. They are very sorry for me, very kind to me, but, in plain English, they would rather have my room than my company. I am too full of myself ever to be any pleasure or benefit to others.

For it is a curious fact, that the most self-contained natures are always the least self-engrossed; and those to whom everybody applies for help, most seldom ask or require it. The centre sun of every family, round which the others instinctively revolve, is sure to be a planet bright and fixed, carrying its light within itself. But a man whose soul is all darkness, or who is at best a poor wandering star, eager to kindle his puny candle at somebody else's beams, can be a light and a blessing to nobody.

And he may be—probably without intending it—quite the opposite. Who does not, in visiting a household, soon discover the one who contributes nothing to the happiness of the rest, who is a sort of eleemosynary pensioner on everybody's forbearance, living, as beggars do, by the continual exhibition of his sores, and often getting sympathy—as beggars get half pence—just to get rid of him? Who does not recognize the person whose morning step upon the stair, so far from having "music in't," sends a premonitory shiver, and even a dead silence, round the cheerful, chattering breakfast-table?—whose departure to business, or elsewhere, causes a sudden rise in the domestic barometer?—nay, whose very quitting a room gives a sense of relief as of a cloud lifted off? Yet he may have many good qualities, but they are all obscured and rendered useless by the incessant recurrence to and absorption in self, which is the root of all his endless woes. And, alas! while believing himself—as he wishes to be—the most important person in his circle, our miserable friend fills really the lowest place therein—that of the one whom nobody trusts, nobody leans upon; whom everybody has to help, but who is never expected to help anybody. How could he? for in him is lacking the very foundation of all helpfulness—the strong, brave, cheerful spirit which, under all circumstances, will throw itself out of itself sufficiently to understand and be of use to its neighbor.

Truly, as regards usefulness, one might as well attempt to labor in an unlighted coal-mine as to do one's work in the world in an atmosphere of perpetual gloom. Certain it is, Nature herself scorns the idea. Some of her operations are carried on in tender temporary shadow—but only temporary. Nothing with her is permanently dark, except the corruption of the grave. Wherever, in any man's temperament, is incurable sadness, morbid melancholy, be sure there is something also corrupt; something which shrinks from the light because it needs to be hid; something diseased, in body or mind, which, so far from being petted and indulged, and glossed over with poetical fancies, needs to be rooted out—with a hand gentle, indeed, but strong and firm as that of the good surgeon, who deals deliberately present pain for future good.

A healthy temperament, though not insensible to sorrow, never revels in it or is subdued by it; it accepts it, endures it, and then looks round for the best mode of curing it. We cannot too strongly impress on the rising generation—who, like the young bears, have all their troubles before them—that suffering is not a normal, but an abnormal state; and that to believe otherwise is to believe that the world is a mere chaos of torment made for the amusement of the omnipotent—not God, but Devil—who rules it. Pain must exist—for some inscrutable end—inseparable from the present economy of the world; but we ought, out of common sense and common justice, and especially religion, to regard it, not as the law of our lives, but as an accident usually resulting from our breaking that law. We cannot wholly prevent suffering, but we can guard against it, in degree; and we never need wholly succumb to it till we succumb to the universal defeat, preparatory to the immortal victory.

When one thinks of death—of how brief, at best, is our little day, and how quickly comes the end that levels all things, what folly seems the habit of misery?—for it grows into a mere habit, quite independent of causes. Why keep up this perpetual moan, and always about ourselves, because we are not rich enough, or handsome enough, or loved enough—because other people have better luck than we? Possibly they have, and possibly not; for we all know our own private cares, but few of us know our neighbor's. And so we go on, always finding some pet grievance to nurse, and coxing it from a trifling vexation into an incurable grief or an unpardonable wrong. Little matter what it is; to a man of this temperament any peg will do whereon to hang the gloomy pall, self-woven, of perpetual sorrow. Or else he spins it, spider-like, out of his own bowels, and when its filmy meshes grow into great bars between him and the sky, he thinks with his petty web he has blurred the whole creation.

Poor wretch! if he could only pull it down and sweep it away; if he could accept his lot, even though a hard one, an afflicted stomach, sensitive nerves, a naturally bad temper, or an unnaturally empty purse. Still, my friend, grin and bear it! Be sure you do not suffer alone; many another is much worse off than you. Why not try to give him a helping hand, and strengthen yourself by the giving of it? For we do not wish to make a mock of you, you miserable misery-monger, since you are much to be pitied; and there is a sad reality at the bottom of your most contemptible shams. We would rather rouse you to forget yourself, and then, be sure, you will gradually forget your sufferings. And supposing these should remain in greater or less degree, as the necessary accompaniment of your individual lot or peculiar idiosyncracy, still, according to the common-sense argument of the sage author of Original Poems, remonstrating with an unwashed child,

> "If the water is cold, and the comb hurts your head,
> What good good will it do you to cry?"

Alack! we are exceedingly like naughty children; we do not enjoy being made clean.—By the Author of "John Halifax."

[For the Californian.]

"DION."

(LYMAN R. GOODMAN.)

YOU sang too early in the Spring
Of our uncheerful year of song;
You felt the bitter chill of wrong,
And on a sudden ceased to sing.

And on a sudden sang no more
In skilful measure to our needs·
But there is One who ever heeds
Your numbers on the farther shore.

I picture you as one who lies
Among the palms, with harp and crown.
A silver, quivering thread, let down
From crystal walls of Paradise,

Is the sweet echo of a voice
That thrills me. In your vineyard's throng
I taste your purple grapes of song,
And in their honey-blood rejoice.

CHARLES WARREN STODDARD.

DARK HOURS.

I'M what we calls a ganger, and have so many men under me when we're making a new line o' rail. I passed best part o' my time in the country; but I have worked on the lines in France and Spain; but what I'm about to tell you happened in London, where we'd sunk a shaft right down, and then was tunnelling forrards and backards—the shaft being to get rid of your stuff, and sometimes for a steam-engine to be pumping up the water. It's rather dangerous work, and many men gets hurt; but then a great deal of it's through carelessness, for lots of our fellows seems as though the whole o' their brains is in their backs and arms, where they're precious strong, and nowheres else; but I'd got so used to it, that in cutting or tunnel it was all the same to me, and now I was busy supering the men digging, and sometimes bricklaying a bit, so that I thought werry little about danger when I'd seen as all the shores and props was well in their places.

It was just at the end o' the dinner-hour one day, and I was gone down the shaft to have a good look round before work begun again, and I'd got my right hand man, Sam Carberry, with me. It was a new shaft, about thirty foot deep, with ladders to go down, and a windlass and baskets for bringing up stuff and letting down bricks and mortar.

We hadn't tunnelled more than p'r'aps some ten or a dozen foot each way, so as you may suppose it was werry fresh—green, as we calls it; and I wasn't quite satisfied about the shoring up, and so on, for you know fellows do get so precious careless when once they've got used to danger; and as for some of our big navvies, why they're jest like a set o' babies, and for everything else but their regular work, they're quite as helpless. Tell 'em to fill a lorry, or skid a wheel, or wheel a barrer, they'll do it like smoke; but as to taking care o' themselves—but there, I needn't say no more about that—just look at the great, good-tempered, lolloping fellows! A man can't have it all ways; and if he's got it all in bone and muscle, why 'tain't to be expected as he's going to have all the brains too.

"That's giving a bit, there, Sam," I says, a-pointing to one part o' the shaft where the earth was a-bulging, and looked loose. "That ain't safe. There'll be a barrer full o' stuff a-top o' somebody's head afore the arternoon's over. That's the rain—that is. Take your mell and knock out that lower shore, and we'll put it a couple o' feet higher up. Mind how you does it!" Sam nods his head, for he was a chap as never spoke if he could help it, and then he gets up, while I takes a look or two at the brickwork, so as not to be done by the men, nor yet dropped on by the foreman. Then I hears Sam banging away at the bit o' scaffold-pole, and directly after it comes down with a hollow sound; and then there was a rattling o' loose gravelly earth as I peeps out, and then feels as though my heart was in my mouth, as I shouts out: "That's the wrong one!" But in an instant Sam dropped to the bottom, and as he did so it seemed as though some one drew a curtain over the hole, and then I felt a tremendous blow on the chest, and was driven backwards and dashed up against the wood scaffolding in the tunnel, I suppose I was stunned, for I knew nothing more for a bit. Then it seemed as though I was being called, and I sorter woke up; but everything was dark as pitch and silent as death, and, feeling heavy and misty and stupid, I shut my eyes again, and felt as if going to sleep, for there didn't seem to be anything the matter with me. It was as though something had shut up thought and sense in the dark, and not a wink of light could get in. But there I was in a sort of dreamy comfortable state, and lay there perfectly still, till a groaning noise roused me, when thought come back with a blinding flash, and so sharp was that flash that my brain seemed scorched, for I knew that I was buried alive.

For a few minutes I stood where I first rose up in a half-stooping position, with my head and shoulders touching the poles and boards above me; but a fresh groan made me begin to feel about in the darkness, and try to find out where I was, and how much room I had to move in. But that was soon done, for at the bottom there was about a yard space, and as far up as I could reach it seemed a couple of yards, while the other way there was the width of the tunnel. I dared not move much, though, for the earth and broken brickwork kept rolling and crumbling in, so that every moment the space grew less, and a cold sweat came out all over my face, as I thought that I should soon be crushed and covered completely up. Just then, however, another groan sounded close by me, and for the first time I remembered Sam Carberry, and began feeling about in the direction from whence the sound came.

Bricks, bits o' stone, crumbling gravel, the uprights and cross-pieces and bits of board all in splinters, and snapped in two and three pieces, with their ragged ends sticking out of the gravel. But I could feel nothing of Sam, and I sat down at last, panting as though I had been running, and there was the red drops a-rolling off me, while I drew every breath that heavy that I grew wild with horror and fear; for it seemed as though I shouldn't be able to breath much longer, and then I must be stifled. It was awful, the thoughts of all that; and had such an effect on me that I dashed about like a bird in a cage—now here, now there—in mad efforts and struggles to get out. I cried, "Help, help!" and swore and tore about, jumping up and plunging my hands into the earth; till at last, panting, and bleeding, and helpless, I lay upon the gravel crying like a child.

Ah! That did me good, and seemed to clear my thoughts, and make me mad with myself to think I had been wasting my strength so for nothing, when perhaps I might have been doing something towards making my escape; and while I was thinking like this, all at once I started, for there was a groan again close to my head; then, after feeling about a bit, I got my hand upon a bit of broken board, when I felt a groan again, and then, after searching about, found that underneath the board was a face which, by scratching away the earth, I could touch and feel to be warm.

The first thing I did was to start up and strike my head violently against a cross piece, so that I was half stunned; and then I began to feel about for a shovel till I got hold of a handle, and found that the rest was so tightly bedded in the soil, that I must have been a good hour grubbing it out with my fingers. But I kept leaving off to go and speak to the face, which I knew must be that of Sam Carberry; and though, poor fellow, it did him no good, he being quite insensible, yet it did me good, for there was company—I was not alone—and after leaving off that way now and then, I worked again like a good 'un till the shovel was at liberty; for while I was hard at work, I had no time to think about anything else.

And now, though I could feel that poor Sam was breathing, he didn't groan; and I began with the shovel to try and set his face more at liberty; but at first trial I threw down the tool with a horrible cry, as the loose gravel came rattling down, and in another minute the poor fellow's face would have been completely covered, if I had not thrust myself against the earth and kept it back.

If I could only have kept from thinking, I would not have cared; but now that I was forced to keep still and hold up the earth, the thoughts would keep coming thick and fast, and mixed up with them all were coffins—black cloth coffins with white nails; black coffins with black nails; elm coffins; workhouse shells; and inside every one of 'em I could see myself lying stiff and cold. There was one light grained elm, which looked sometimes quite like a little speck right off in the distance, and then came gradually closer, and closer, and closer, till it seemed as though next moment it would crush me, or drive me into the earth where I was crouching; then it would gradually go back further and further, till it was quite a speck again. Then there were processions o' people in black, constantly crowding by.

Now and then there was a noise of a stone falling or a little bit of rolling earth, else all was as still and silent as if there wasn't such a thing as hearing. It was so still that the quietness was horrible, and I began to talk out loud for the sake of having something to hear; and then I listened again, hoping to hear the sounds of pick and spade, for I knew they would be trying to dig us out, alive or dead.

"That'll be it," I says out aloud; "they'll dig, and dig, and dig till they gets to us; but then they've got all the stuff to get up the shaft, and shore up again as they goes, and I shall be gone long before they gets to me!"

Then the horror of death came again, and I leaped up and beat myself about till I was drenched with blood and sweat, and then I lay still again, with my heart throbbing and beating, and, try what I would, I couldn't get enough breath. I tried to reach the face of my poor mate, and I found it still warm, and that the earth had not settled over it. It was company to be able to touch it, so long as he was alive; but I thought about what must come, and then shivered as I felt that I should scrape the loose gravel over it, and creep to the far end of the narrow hole. And now I began, for the first time, to think about home, and my two girls, and their mother; and there was no comfort there, for I began to wonder what could become of them when I was gone. Quietly as could be, I calculated what my funeral would cost the Odd Fellows, and then abont the allowanee ther'd be for my people out o' the Widow and Orphan's Fund, and then I thought how things might have been worse than they was. At last of all, I feels quiet and patient like, and, for the first time since I'd been buried, I was down on my knees with my face in my hands.

I don't know long I stopped like that, when all at once I fancied I heard a voice speaking, and I started up; but it sounded no more, and as I sat listening I could see again all things eoming and going. Now it was coffins; now strange-looking beasts and things without any particular shape; and as they moved, and coiled, and rolled forward, I kept feeling as though they must touch me; but no, they glided off again, and at last, to keep from thinking, I stripped off coat and waistcoat, and, groping about till I got hold of the shovel, I cried out, "God help me!" and began to try and dig a way out.

"Every man for himself," I half-roared, and the curious, stifled sound of my voice frightened me; but I worked on till I had thrown back a few spadefuls, when I found that I had put it off too long, and that I could do nothing but sink down, panting for air. I conldn't keep off the idea that something was pressing down upon me and trying to force out my breath; at last this idea got to be so strong that I kept thrusting out my hands and trying to push the something away. I don't know how time went, but at last I was lying, worn and helpless, upon the ground, feebly trying to grub or burrow a way out with my fingers.

All at once I remembered poor Sam, and, after a good deal of groping about, I found the board againu, and laid my hand upon his face, but only to snatch it away with a chill running through me, for it was as cold as ice. Then I tried to touch his breast, but soon gave up; for, with the exception of his face, he was completely bedded in the earth, while the board had ouly saved him at the first moment from instantaneous death.

I crept as far off as I could; for now it seemed that death was very near me, and that my own time must be pretty well run out.

I won't tell you how weak I was again, and how all my past actions came trooping past me. There they all were, from boyhood till the present; and I couldn't help groaning as I saw how precious little good there was in them—just here and there a bright spark amongst all the blackness. At last, I began to think it was all over, for a heavy stupid faintness came over me, and I battled against it with all my might; but it was likc—to me, there, in that darkness—like a great bird coming nearer and nearer with heavy shadowy wings; and, as I tried to drive it off, it went back. but only to come again, till at last the place seemed to fade away; for after groping round and round the place such a many times, I seemed to see and know every bit of it as well as if I saw it with my eyes, till it faded away, and all seemed to be gone.

Nex' thing as I remembers is a dull "thud thud-thudding" noise, and it awoke me up so that I sat holding my head, which ached as though it would split, and trying to recolleet once more where I was; and I s'pose my poor mind must have been a bit touched, for I could make nothing out until I had crawled and felt about a few times over, when once more it all came back with a flash, and I remember thinking how much better it would have been if I had kept half stunned, for now I knew what the noise was, and I could hardly contain the hope, which seemed to drive me almost mad. Would they get to me before I was dead? Could I help them? Would they give up in despair, and leave me?

I lay listening to the "thud-thud-thud," till all at once it stopped, and the stillness that succeeded was so awful that I shrieked out, for I thought they had given up digging. But the dull distant sound roused me again, and once more I lay listening and counting the spadefuls that I knew were being laboriously and slowly thrown out. Now I was crying weakly, now foaming at the mouth, every now and then the noise could not be heard; at last, wheu I could just faintly hear the sound of voices and tried to shout in reply, I found I couldn't do more than whisper.

All at once the earth came caving in again, and I was half buried. Weak as I was, it took me long enough to get free, and to crawl up and sit behind an upright post or two, and it was well I did, for no sooner was I there than the gravel caved in again, and I heard a shout; saw a flash of light; and then was jammed close into the corner, and must have been suffocated but for the wood framing about me, which kept the earth off. But as I set wedged in, I could hear the sound of the shovels and picks, and I knew how men would toil to get out a brother-workman. And now, feeling quite helpless and resigned, I tried my best to pray for my life, or, if uot, for mercy for what I had done wrong.

"Ain't nobody here?" said a voice, as it seemed to me in the dark, and I could not speak or cry for help.

"Must be," said another voice. "Poor chap's under them planks!" And then come that sound of shovels again, and then a loud hurraying, and I felt hands about me, and that I was being carried, and something trickled into my mouth. Then voices were buzzing about me more and more, and I began to feel able to breathe, and I heard some one say: "He's coming to;" and then one spoke and I knew I was being taken up the shaft; but all was as it were in a dream, till I heard a loud scream, and felt two arms rouud me, and knowing that now I was saved indeed, I tried to say—"Thank God!" but eould only think it.

After a bit I managed to speak, but I suppose I said all sorts of foolish unconnected things, till I asked the time, when the voice that revived me so, whispered in my ear that it was nearly three.

"And how long was I there?" I got out at last.

"Twenty-five hours!"

WHAT THE PARIS GRAND OPERA COSTS.

"SPIRIDION," in the Boston Saturday Evening Gazette, says: "Some time sinee the orchestra of the Grand Opera complained of their wretched pay. The manager told them he could do nothing as the Grand Opera was a clear loss to the Emperor of twenty or forty thousand dollars a year, and he, the manager, could not think of asking the Emperor to increase this loss, which, as it was, bore heavily on the privy purse. The orchestra told the manager if he did not increase their salary they would play inaudibly. He paid no attention to their threat and they carried it into execution. The irritation of the public assumed such a menacing height the matter was laid before the Emperor, and he authorized the Minister of his Household to say to the orchestra that if they would return to their duty he would attend to their complaints and see what redress could be afforded. They took the hint, and recently the Minister acquainted them his Majesty had been pleased to increase their salary fifty dollars apiece. Their disappointment was great. They had reckoned on the imperial bounty to raise them to an easy independence of fortune. The dole did not sensibly lessen their pains. In the moment of annoyance they wrote a letter to Marshal Vaillant (the Minister of the Imperial Household) which he deemed impertinent and ungrateful; and which consequently made him extremely angry. He went directly to the Emperor (the Marshal lives in the Tuileries) and read him the letter. It raised the Emperor's wrath as high as it had done the Marshal's, and upon the latter making the suggestion to transform the Opera into an ordinary imperial theatre (it is now a portion of the Emperor's household) his Majesty not only gave his consent, but ordered the decree to be prepared forthwith and to be published in the Evening Moniteur. This is a penny paper whieh heretofore has been but an echo of the official organ. The decree was at once prepared and sent to the Evening Moniteur. It was said the manager of the Grand Opera knew nothing of it until he saw it in this newspaper. This is a mistake. Marshal Vaillant sent for him and informed him of the Emperor's decision. It is said to have taken him extremely by surprise, and he asked if it was directed against him personally.

"There had been a few evenings before a dreadful uproar at the Grand Opera. Villaret was announced to appear in La Juive. He was suddenly taken ill and a provineial tenor who had repeatedly solicited the manager for a hearing was asked to fill the vaeant place. Mathieu (this was the candidate's name) declined, he said he could not sing without a rehearsal, without even going over the opera with the leader of the orchestra. The mauager said: "Fortune offers you her flood tide—take it, you may be borne to fame and wealth; such opportunities rarely occur." Mathieu over-persuaded by these suggestions, agreed to sing. He spent all day running about town iu search of costumes, and when eveuing came he was exhausted by fatigue. The audience who expected to hear Villaret were furious to find an unknown candidate. No offer was made to return money. The moment the poor substitute appeared a great tumult arose which even the fall of the curtain and the return of money failed to appease. The police found their presence necessary, and even they who are aeeustomed to allay our popular storms as easily as Neptune tames winds and waves of ocean, failed to restore order although they had the gas turned off. Villaret's sudden illness, and Mathieu's unexpected appearauce were not the sole causes of the storm.

"The subscribers to the Grand Opera have for some time been extremely angry with the manager for his obstinacy in playing L'Africaine night after night, and for giving them—if by chance Meyerbeer's posthumous work reposed—other operas and never a ballet. Subscribers think the Grand Opera a temple of the ballet, aud operas cannot be played other than as exceptional business—anchovy paste intended to increase the relish of dances by girls whose dresses end before they may well be said to have begun. Furthermore, the manager knows he passes in the Imperial Household for a sour, obstinate, majestic fellow, because—but here the ground ends and very slippery ice commences. Excuse me if I decline putting my foot on it. If you will remember the dissolute morals of this country, the faseination of women on the stage, and the restlessness of vanity of actress and dancing-girls and their 'protectors,' you may pierce my silence and discover the words which lie unuttered on my tongue's end. The manager (who had not seen the orchestra's letter) suspected the decree was aimed at him. Marshal Vaillant assured him it was not. He theu asked, if he should appear as a eandidate, what would be his chauces of success. Marshal Vaillant declined answering this question, further than to say his chances would bc as good, if not better, than those of anybody else. The manager, not satisfied with this reply, at once solieited audienee of the Emperor. I am ignorant of the result of the audience. A great many candidates are in the field. I am told the antechamber of the Minister of the Emperor's Household is literally filled with them. A dozen names are before the public, several score of people are intriguing in the dark. Dr. Veron's name has been mentioned, but he has replied: 'I undertake the Opera! Were I forty years younger, and without a sou, I might think of sueh a thing; I should be delighted to fulfil the first condition and very sorry to find myself in the latter condition—as I am in neither, I decline appearing as a candidate.' It is said he and Mons. Delabonte offered to deposit the one hundred thousand dollars surety-money for Nestor Roqueplan, whom rumor places on the list of candidates.

"A writer who has for many years been behind the scenes draws this picture of the life of the manager of the Grand Opera. It is curious: Complaint is made that the manager of the Grand Opera denies himself to everybody. I can understand very well how a man who, besides his private relations of husband, father, kinsman, has on his hands music, dancing, the old operas, the opera in rehearsal, the ambassador who patronizes a thin dancing-girl, the prince who protects a fat songstress, the minister who wants to see him on busiuess, the hostile newspapers, and all other things, has not always time to receive a prizeman of the School of Fine Arts who wishes to propose a cantata for some anniversary; a chemist who has discovered a new mode of lighting theatres and asks leave to make an experiment in the opera house; an inventor whose seheme is to establish machinery under the pit to veutilate the house; a spectator of the last performance, who comes to get his lost umbrella; a veiled lady who refuses to give her name, but must absolutely see the manager and nobody else; the mother of a little dancing-girl who comes to complain that the ballet-master does not treat her daughter with sufficient respeet; a German who has the manuscript of au unpublished opera by Mozart; a plumber who has a superb tenor's voice and asks to be sent to the Conservatory at the Opera's expeuse; a college chum of the manager, who wishes to bid him good day; thirty loungers who have absolutely nothing to say, but who like to smoke the manager's cigars in the manager's private room, see the women come and go, and get, if opportunity offers, a parquet stall for the evening performance. To be a manager of the Opera, onc must be as modest as a prompter, disdaining no detail, able to superintend the magazine of costume and seenery, knowing how to measure a yard of silk. a background seene aud a sliding scene, or with resignation enough to see several hundred thousand francs go to profit-and-loss on these items alone. When he comes out of the third story under ground he must put on a white cravat, become a fine gentleman who is patient, well-bred, and has at his fingers' ends phrases whieh seem to promise things he cannot perform. After he has received ambassadors and princes (including princes who write music) and influential subscribers, he must go the rounds in the green-room, where legs and throats are practising, reply to all demands and complaints; hear patiently the anger of a dancing-girl who threatens to send 'her general' after him; calm a songstress who vows she will not sing unless she is 'called out' after the second act, and conciliate all the superintendents of music, ehorus, dancing, machinery, etc. Before he is through all this he receives a despateh brought by a dragoon; it is from the Minister of the Imperial Household. The fine and courteous gentleman must now become a diplomatist; he must negotiate, struggle, retreat and bend without losing an inch of ground. He is ordered to let Mlle. So-and-so make her appearance, or to bring out an opera from a crowned head. It would be impolitic to refuse; he must agree, and afterwards elude the order and secretly raise up obstacle after obstacle which will prove fatal. As far as art is concerned, the manager of the Grand Opera cannot move one step forward. Au opera is brought him by an unknown composer. He must distrust him and say: 'Go elsewhere aud show of what stuff you are made.' If it is by a popular composer, he makes the opera company study it, and he plays it without knowing what he is doing. He cannot do here as if he was the manager of a dramatic theatre—read a piece, have it studied, say this is well, that is bad, this is too long, that is too short. A box comes from Berlin; it contains the score of L'Africaine. The mauager says to his singing-master and leader of the orchestra: 'Set to work.' He has nothing else to do with it. As for his singers and songstresses, his position is the same. A songstress comes from Vienna, Naples or Milan with a made or exaggerated reputation. What can the manager do but try her? She fails. Thereupon everybody exclaims: 'This manager is an unlueky dog!' If he reluses to let her appear, people and newspapers say: 'The manager is the puppet of a miserable clique; will you believe he has refused to allow the celebrated Gargorilla to appear at the Grand Opera?'"

THE FLOWER GIRL OF THE PALACE GARDEN.

NANETTE LOLLIER was born in Paris, in the parish of Saint Leu. Her father had the care of one of the public squares; her mother sold fresh fish in the market. Nanette was the youngest of sixteen children, with all of whom, as well as with her parents, she was a favorite, on account of her pretty face, her gentle ways, and artless, winning speech.

Her grandmother, the widow of a bailiff, who had lodgings in the same house with the Lolliers, taught her to read and write, and trained her heart and voice, especially the latter, which was very musical, charming all who heard it. When she was only twelve years old, she sung a "Stabat" and a "Te Deum," in one of the churches during Holy Week, to the great delight and edification of the worshippers.

She had at this time received so many praises, attentions, and presents, that her little head was almost turned. Her mother wished her to betake herself to the fish market with her. Nanette declared that she had rather sell bouquets and roses. Her mother answered this natural expression with a cuff and a kick, but the fish monger soon repented her rudeness. Nanette disappeared one morning from the paternal roof, and from that day no trace of her could be found by her parents, although they sometimes heard that she was well.

This absence lasted for three years. They afterward tried in every possible way to learn the history of these years from the young girl; she maintained a profound silence in the matter. She had promised, on her hope of paradise, that she would never tell what had then taken place; and neither caresses nor threats, nor cunning, could draw from her her secret.

She had reached her sixteenth year when an errand-boy informed her parents that she was at the Convent of the Carmelites, and would be restored to them if they would go for her in person, or send some priest.

The mother was beside herself with joy at this news. She left her fish-trough, put on her best clothes, and went to tell the curate. He accompanied her to the convent, with her eldest son, a bold, manly fellow, sergeant in the French Guard.

Arrived at the Convent, Madam the Superior appeared and gave them a gracious reception. She told them that the young girl had been brought there one evening by a strange woman, and left with a sum of twenty thousand livres to pay her dowry when she should become a nun.

All this seemed dubious to the curate and mother. Nanette appeared. She wept and sobbed, and nearly fainted. But she was silent to all their inquiries, further than to tell them of her aversion to a nunnery, and her desire to be a flower-girl. The Lady Superior, seeing that the girl and her dowry were lost to her, made her adieus to the family and took her leave. The curate went to visit a friend in the neighborhood, and the mother, the pretty Nanette, and her fighting brother returned home in a hackney-coach.

The Lolliers at first refused to let Nanette become a flower-girl, but she desired it so much that at last they yielded. Her success was marvellous. Every one was charmed by her, and bought her flowers.

She made her entrance into the garden of the royal palace. A strange flower-girl. She was dressed in silks, gauzes, laces, and jewels. Her basket was a gilded sea-shell, lined with blue satin and held by a blue sash that encircled her waist. Her pretty shoes, fastened by a buckle and favor-knot, covered the foot of a nymph.

Nanette was talked of at Versailles. Thirty lords of the court rivalled each other in attempts to win her favor. She received their hearts and took their presents. She was ready, gay, full of zest and chatted with spirit, yet maintained so much reserve that she gained in reputation as fast as in fortune.

Every morning when she appeared in the Palace Garden, a circle at once gathered around her. Servants in livery and a waiting-woman attended her at a distance, ready to refill her little basket, which was rapidly emptied. She received more than a small coin in exchange for the flowers that were so gracefully offered by her pretty hand.

The Princesses of Lorraine, Rohen, and Bouillon, ladies of high rank, accepted the pinks, roses and violets which the flower-girl presented them as gifts. In return they gave her jewels, laces and wrought silver. In two years Nanette had a fortune in lands and houses which brought her forty thousand livres in rent, and she had bestowed largely upon her parents and sisters.

Among her lovers was a young man of twenty-two. He was always in the garden before she arrived, and seemed to be waiting for her. When she appeared with her basket, he took a bouquet, paid her twelve sous, said a few words, and disappeared. No one saw him again until the next day. It would seem that he failed to appear at the usual hour; an attack of fever had confined him to his bed. Nanette was dull and gloomy. The young man reappeared, and with him the gaiety of Nanette.

Nanette would have given a large part of her fortune to have known who the young man was. She was ignorant even of his name. It is true that she might have asked the thousand persons who came to buy flowers of her during the day, but no sooner had she begun her question than she felt a mortal embarrassment, stammered, blushed, and ended in silence. Her heart was too much interested. She was sure that he whom she loved was of noble birth; he wore a sword. But he was poor, for his sword had never a ribbon-knot, and his neckerchief was without lace.

One day she saw the brilliant Marquis of Louvois speaking to him, and then he joined the Count of Chatre, who was sitting near, and said in a low tone:

"That simpleton, Courtenay, provokes me. The King has been asking why he does not go to Versailles. I have just repeated his Majesty's compliments to him and—ah, well! he is busy with a song. How can he bury himself in Paris in this way?"

"He has good reasons for it. Besides, where could he get the money we spend? His father has ruined him."

"True enough, he is poor. What a pity! such a fine young fellow!"

"And one of such birth—a relative of the royal house."

"Why don't the young man marry?"

"It would be impossible for him. With his name he could not marry an inferior. He would have to marry a princess."

Nanette did not lose a single word. She left the palace garden and forgot to go, as usual, to the Tuileries and Boulevard. She could think of nothing but the noble and unfortunate young man. At night she could not sleep, and the next morning had left her bed long before any one else in the house. She was sitting alone, so rapt in her dreams of the Prince of Courtenay that she did not hear the steps of a young man who approached her, stooped and kissed her arm. She was startled and gave a scream, but on looking up a pleasant smile succeeded her surprise. The rash youth was her favorite brother, Marcel, only a year older than herself. He was employed at the office of a leading publishing house, where he frequently saw the men of letters of that day.

"Why, Marcel," said the young girl, "how you frightened me; I did not expect such gallantry from my brother."

"What brother would not be proud of such a sister, Nanette, who is the talk of Paris? Wherever one goes, it is 'Nanette, the flower-girl,' 'the pretty Nanette.' Yesterday, I went to the house of M. Diderot, to carry some copy that he wanted for correction. Some noble lords were there, among whom was the Prince of Courtenay. They did not know that I was your brother, and were under no restraint about speaking of you in my hearing. One of them denied your virtue. I was so angry that I was about to take up your defence, when the excellent young Prince of Courtenay nobly replied:

"'Oh, my lord, how can you repeat the odious calumnies invented by worthless libertines? Nanette is as pure as she is beautiful, and I want no other proof than the history of the lovers she is said to have, of whom no one knows anything. If Nanette had a lover, it would not be a day before all Paris would know the name of the fortunate man.'

"The warm and earnest tone with which these words were spoken excited a smile from those who heard it. M. Diderot sustained the Prince."

The simple-hearted Marcel concluded by saying:

"Now, would it not be proper, in gratitude for the good opinion he has of you, that you should send the Prince a bouquet of the rarest flowers? I will carry it to him, if you like, for I am going to him with a splendid copy of our folio edition of Telemachus."

"You are going to him! You know where he lives?" exclaimed Nanette.

"Certainly; in the Hotel Carnavalet."

When Marcel had gone, Nanette lost no time in writing the following epistle:

"My dear young friend, I am your relative. I am pained that you are not in your proper place. Is it fit that you should live in obscurity in Paris, when persons of meaner birth are the delight of Versailles? You are poor; I am rich. My age cuts me off from the exciting pleasure that yours demands. Permit me, in consideration of our relations of blood and friendship, to offer you what is for me a superfluity, for you a necessity. On the first day of every month you will receive from me four thousand livres. I now send you twenty-four thousand, which will perhaps be sufficient to establish you according to your rank."

A few expressions of kindness closed the letter, which was left unsigned, and a few hours after it was received by the Prince of Courtenay. The modest young man at first refused to accept a fortune so received; but several of his older friends, whom he consulted, blamed him for an excess of delicacy. He yielded to their advice and applied it to his own use. He was now rich. He lived in splendor; his equipage was one of the finest in Paris, and every one was talking of his good fortune. He was the rage; yet every day, at the same hour as before, he came to the palace garden to buy a bouquet of Nanette, for which he now paid six livres.

A year rolled away. One day, the Count of Chatre being in the garden, seated near Nanette, the Marquis of Louvois joined him.

"My dear sir," he addressed the Count, "Courtenay is mad. They have offered him Mademoiselle de Craon with eight hundred thousand livres a year, and he refuses. What ails him?"

"Love."

"Love! For whom?"

"I know not."

"Who can it be? I'll wager it's some girl of the opera. Some worthless woman of pleasure."

"Louvois," answered the Count, "such a supposition is unjust to Courtenay. You know he has always hated vice, and I am certain that the woman he loves is not only charming but virtuous."

Louvois answered with a laugh; and Nanette arose to return home. She went to her chamber and locked the door. The next day the Prince of Courtenay received a letter which ran thus:

"My dear young friend, why do you refuse to marry Mademoiselle de Craon? She would bring you both birth and fortune. In two days, you will receive from me the capital of the sum you now enjoy—and with it some jewels for your future bride.

"Should you consent to the proposed marriage, wear a pink in your button-hole for eight days; should you refuse it, wear a rose."

The next day Nanette gave orders to her man of business to sell a million livres worth of houses and lands; there would still remain to her thirty thousand livres of income.

When she had received the money from this sale, she sent it to Courtenay, and with it, in a magnificent casket, a set of diamonds of such rare water that the jewellers valued them at a hundred thousand crowns. Never was Nanette so happy as when she had thus diminished her fortune.

Nothing could have detained her from the Palace Garden that day. She was pale, trembling, half-dead with hope and fear. The Prince de Courtenay had, as usual, arrived before her; but in his button-hole there was neither pink nor rose. He approached Nanette and she handed him a bouquet. It was like the Prince's button hole, without pink or rose.

He looked at it and a smile passed over his face. He seemed studying a moment, then in a firm voice, he said:

"My pretty child, will you make me a present of a rose?"

Nanette fell fainting. . . On recovering, she found herself in her own chamber surrounded by her family. Alas! her eyes did not meet those she most wished to see. Her mother and sisters in their excitement told her that she had fainted in the palace garden; that a great lord, the Prince of Courtenay, had lifted her in his arms and without waiting for a carriage, without wishing any one to help him, had carried her to her hotel. Nanette's pulses throbbed with pleasure. She asked what had become of the kind nobleman. They told her that he had waited to hear the opinion of the physicians concerning her, and had then departed as he came. At this moment Marcel entered to say that the servant of Prince de Courtenay had come to obtain tidings of the beautiful flower girl. . . The Prince had not come. And yet Nanette smiled—

For she was happy—knowing as she did that the Prince did not wish to marry. The next day, Nanette's favorite waiting-woman came to announce to her that the Prince de Courtenay was in her drawing-room and asked the favor of an interview. A sign of consent was the only answer of Nanette. Making an effort to rise, she fell back powerless, covering her face with her hands. The Prince fell on his knees before her and tenderly kissed her hands.

"Ah," he exclaimed, "I have divined everything. I have come not to return your gifts, but to beseech you to render them still dearer by granting me one far more precious."

"You wish—" began Nanette.

"Your hand," interrupted the Prince.

In offering his name to the young girl, he had tried to surpass her in generosity. Nanette prayed him to wait till the next day for her reply. He consented, full of hope. For the third time he received a letter from Nanette. It was the last time she ever wrote him, and contained these words:

"Love has made you blind. A marriage with me would dishonor you. You love me too well to renounce me. I therefore, for your sake, renounce you. When you shall have received this letter, the flower girl Nanette will have forever quitted the world. I leave to my parents that part of my fortune which I have gained by selling flowers. The million you have received was your own. Your nearest relative thought to make amends by it for a crime which I have sworn to keep an eternal secret. Adieu. Think often of her who in the cloister where she hides herself will daily pray for you."

The story of Nanette ends here. No one knew more of her except that the archbishop of Paris himself conducted her to the convent to which she retired. The Prince of Courtenay never married. He recalled the rumors he had heard touching his father, but none of them explained his mysterious ruin, or his later remorse.—Boston Eve. Gazette.

In one of the Western States there was a certain church whose members were not exactly a unit on the subject of immersion. At a meeting of church officers, on one occasion, a certain person, not remarkable for purity of life, sent in a request for admission into their fold. One of the committee—a rather rough man—on hearing the name of the individual, exclaimed: "That man! Well, if that man is to be admitted, he ought to soak overnight!"

MY LUCK IN A TUNNEL.

I AM an old miner. Not one of the now-a-day Washoe and Nevada stripe, but an old Forty-nine California miner. I have been engaged in all descriptions of mining transactions, except the newfangled one of mining stock in companies—"feet," I believe they call it. Among my varied undertakings was one operation in a tunnel, in which I and my partners engaged, in the summer of 1852.

One afternoon in that year, as I was carrying up a bucket of water from the river to our tent at the top of the bank, my foot caught under a large stone, and my perpendicular was at once changed to a horizontal posture, while the water from the overturned bucket spread itself in various directions. With a few expletives of rather forcible character, quite customary and common in that region and period, I raised myself to my feet again, and picking up the bucket, was about to retrace my steps to the river, when my attention was attracted by a folded paper, which had been under the stone causing my fall. When my foot tripped, the stone was overturned, and the paper, folded in letter-form, lay exposed to view. Bending over, I picked it up, and proceeded to examine it. It was written with a pencil, in characters very irregular and stiffly formed, as if made by a person with a wounded hand. The contents were as follows:

"If this letter should fall into the hands of any person, I wish to inform him that I have been attacked and mortally wounded by my two partners, who wished to obtain my money. Failing to discover it, after wounding me, they have fled, leaving me here to die. Whoever gets this letter will find, buried in a ravine at the foot of a 'blazed' tree, twenty-five paces due north of this, a bag containing five thousand dollars in gold dust. That it may prove more fortunate property to him than it has to me, is the hope of

"ANDREW INDUS."

I stood for some minutes after reading the letter like one awakened from a dream. I could not convince myself that the letter in my hand was a genuine document, and read it over and over again, thinking I might get some clue from the handwriting to the real author. It might be a trick got up by my partners, to raise a laugh at my expense. No; the place where it was found, and the purely accidental discovery, rendered such a surmise very improbable. I sat down on a log, and turned the matter over and over in my mind for some time. At last I got up, and pacing off the required distance in the direction mentioned in the letter, I came to a large tree. Carefully examining it, I discovered a scar, clearly indicating that the tree had been "blazed" at some remote period. This was "confirmation strong as proofs of Holy Writ," and I immediately undertook to discover the locality of the ravine. Here I was at fault. Nothing of the kind was to be seen. To all appearances, a stream of water never had passed in the neighborhood of the tree. This was not encouraging; and I sat down on the ground and read the letter again, to see if I had not mistaken some of its directions. No; I was in the right place, but where was the ravine?

A tap on my shoulder aroused me from my meditations, and looking up, I saw my two partners, who loudly berated me for having neglected the preparation of their supper. As an excuse, I showed them the letter, and detailed the manner of my finding it. To my surprise, they were as much excited by its perusal as I had been, and we all looked around perseveringly for the ravine, but without effect for some time. At last, Jack Nesbitt, who had been a miner since '48, said:

"I think there has been a ravine here, but it has been filled up by the rains."

On close examination, we decided that his supposition was correct, and after some consultation we determined that we would commence digging the next morning.

Morning came, and we repaired to the spot with pick and shovel. Jack proposed that we should follow the course of the ravine, which appeared to run into the body of the hill, rather than to dig down, for, as he said, we would be more likely to find the bag in the bed of the ravine, by following it up, than by digging down in any one place. The result was, that in a few days we had formed quite a cave in the side of the hill.

We worked at this tunnel for four days without finding the bag. On the fourth day, Jack proposed that he and my other partner, Bill Jennings, should carry the dirt we had excavated down to the river, and wash it, leaving me to dig in the tunnel. In that way, they thought, we might at least "make grub," while searching for the hidden money. I thought the idea foolish, but, as they had entered so eagerly into my views regarding the buried bag of dust, I made no objection to the plan, and dug away with redoubled energy. In fact, I had thought so much about the object of our search, that I had become utterly regardless of almost everything else. I had dreamt of it when sleeping; mused on it when waking, and it had obtained complete control of my mind. Day after day we worked—I digging, my companions washing; yet, strange to say, I did not become discouraged. They said nothing about the bag of gold dust; and I asked them nothing about the result of their washing the excavated dust.

We had worked about three weeks, and had formed a tunnel extending about fifteen feet into the hill, when, one afternoon, completely tired out, I sat down to rest in the cave. I had only intended to sit a little while, but five minutes had not elapsed before I was fast asleep. I was awakened by a crash, and found my feet and legs completely covered by a mass of dirt and stones. The front part of the tunnel had fallen in, and I was in a manner buried alive. About ten feet of the tunnel remained firm, and, from my observation of its structure prior to the accident, I was convinced that I had no reason to apprehend any danger in that quarter. My partners had carried dirt enough to the river to keep them busy there for the rest of the day; so I had nothing to hope from their assistance. The question that first presented itself to my mind was, how long can life be sustained in this confined state? I had read, a dozen times, statistics in relation to the amount of air consumed hourly by a human being's lungs, but, like almost everybody else, had merely wondered at the time, and then forgot the figures. How much I would have given then to be able to recall them! The next thought was, how can I proceed to extricate myself? This question was difficult of solution. If I went to work with shovel and pick to clear away the dirt that had fallen, it was extremely likely that all which I should be able to remove would be immediately replaced by that which would fall from above. This was pleasant! I racked my brain to devise some means of liberating myself, but without effect. Leaning against the wall in utter despondency, I was about to throw myself on the ground and await my fate, when I observed that quite a current of water, on a small scale, was making its way down the side of the cave. At first I was alarmed, as I thought it might loosen the earth above and bring another mass down on my head. The next moment, the thought struck me that it might be turned to my advantage. Why could I not so direct it that it would wash away sufficient earth in its progress to the outlet of the cave to admit the air, and perhaps make an opening large enough to allow me to crawl out through it? Even if I only succeeded in making an air-hole, it would enable me to exist till my partners could come to my assistance. Carefully examining the course of the water, I succeeded in finding the spot where it entered the cave, and to my great joy ascertained that I could easily direct it, by cutting a channel out of the side of my prison to the mass of earth that blocked up the entrance to the tunnel. The air at this time was quite close and stifling, and I became aware that whatever was done must be done quickly, or I should perish from want of oxygen. After I had cut a channel for the water to flow toward the entrance, I enlarged the opening by which the stream entered the cave, and was delighted to observe that it flowed with redoubled force. Taking my shovel, I pushed it through the moistened earth as far as I was able, and then awaited the further action of the water. In a few minutes I was enabled to push it still further, till at last it was out of my reach. Then, placing my pick-handle against it, I pushed both as far as I could. With what eagerness did I watch to see the first opening made by the water! At first it was swallowed up by the earth, but I was soon gratified by observing that it flowed in a steady stream in the direction in which I had pushed the pick and shovel.

In a few minutes I discovered a faint glimmering in the distance, which might be an opening or the effect of an excited imagination, I scarcely knew which. But the doubt soon resolved itself into certainty, and an opening some five inches in diameter speedily disclosed itself. Larger and larger the opening grew; lump after lump of earth was washed away by the stream, till the channel became large enough for me to place my head in it and halloo lustily for assistance. Just as I was drawing my head back, I caught sight of a buckskin bag. Hastily seizing it, I found that it was the one we had been in search of, and which, but for the accident, I would never have found. Wishing to surprise my comrades, I concealed it, and redoubled my cries. In a few minutes they came running up the hill, and soon liberated me from my unpleasant position.

"Well, Ned," said Jack, as he shook me by the hand, "I'm glad you're safe, old fellow—the more so, as Bill and I have been deceiving you a little. You know we have been trying all the summer to get you to go into a tunneling operation, and you have only laughed at us?"

"Yes," said I, wondering what would come next.

"Well, when you found that letter, Bill and I made up our minds that we would go into the job with you; not in the hope of finding any bag, but because we knew you would work twice as hard with such an inducement, intending, meanwhile, to wash the excavated dirt. This we have done; and, my boy, we have never made less than three hundred dollars any day since we commenced."

"Then you think the bag a humbug, do you?"

"Why, of course," said he.

"Well, I don't, and I intend to go on looking for it."

"Now, what's the use of being foolish," quoth Bill Jennings. "We've got as much dirt as we can wash for some time, and it pays. I can't see the use of continuing such a wild-goose chase as the hunt for that bag."

"Be that as it may," said I, "I intend to follow it up."

Bill and Jack conferred together a while, and then the former said:

"Well, Ned, we might as well tell you first as last. I wrote that letter in order to get you to go into tunneling."

"And the 'blazed' tree," said I, "how about that? The 'blaze' is certainly two years old."

Jack hesitated. "Why, you see," said he, "we found that tree, and wrote the letter to suit it."

"Then what do you think of this?" asked I, showing him the bag I had found in the cave.

Jack was nonplussed. On opening the bag, we found about three thousand dollars. Jack never would own up, but always insisted that the variance between the statement in the letter and the amount in the bag was proof enough that the letter and it had no connection with each other. I don't think so, however, and I believe that Jack's assertion of having written the letter was untrue. We never could ascertain anything about Mr. Indus, so we divided the money among us.

LOCAL ANÆSTHESIA.—An important addition to the means of diminishing pain has been made by an English physician, who has introduced a new method of producing local insensibility to the knife. Chloroform robs the most terrible surgical proceedures of the worst horrors which formerly surrounded them, and has even rendered possible some operations which could hardly have been attempted without it; but it has its own peril—the peril of death. Surgeons justly encourage their patients, by reciting to them the statistics of fatal accidents under chloroform, which, incomplete though they be, demonstrate the extreme rarity of such misfortunes. It has, however, been observed by all authors who have collected these cases, that a remarkably large proportion of the recorded deaths have occurred where only minor operations have been contemplated. Hence a rapid and efficient means of producing local anæsthesia, and one free from any of the constitutional risks attending the administration of chloroform, is a boon of great price. Dr. B. W. Richardson effects this result by dividing on the skin a finely divided spray of pure ether, using an ingenious modification of the spray tubes, lately much in vogue as toys for diffusing perfumes. A rapid blanching of the skin, and insensibility to pain, follow in from about thirty seconds to two minutes. Upwards of a hundred operations have within the last few weeks been painlessly conducted under this method. It is only likely to be generally useful for superficial operations; but these are so often undergone at the cost of great terror and anguish, through dread of the risks of chloroform, that the value of this invention must be very great.

"MARK TWAIN," in one of his letters to the Union, mentions a singular character he met with while visiting the Government Prison at Honolulu:

We were next introduced to General George Washington, or, at least, to an aged, limping negro man, who called himself by that honored name. He was supposed to be seventy years old, and he looked it. He was as crazy as a loon, and sometimes, they say, he grows very violent. He was a Samson in a small way; his arms were corded with muscle, and his legs felt as hard as if they were made of wood. He was in a peaceable mood at present, and strongly manacled. They have a hard time with him occasionally, and some time or other he will get in a lively way and eat up the garrison of that prison, no doubt. The native soldiers who guard the place are afraid of him, and he knows it.

His history is a sealed book—or at least all that part of it which transpired previously to the entry of his name as a pensioner upon the Hawaiian Government fifteen years ago. He was found carrying on at a high rate at one of the other islands, and it is supposed he was put ashore there from a vessel called the Olive Branch. He has evidently been an old sailor, and it is thought he was one of a party of negroes who fitted out a ship and sailed from a New England port some twenty years ago. He is fond of talking, in his dreamy, incoherent way, about the Blue Ridge in Virginia, and seems familiar with Richmond and Lynchburg. I do not think he is the old original General W.

AT the time of the threatened invasion of Scotland by the French, the laird of Logan was taunted at a meeting at Ayr with a want of loyal spirit at Cumnock, as no volunteers had been raised there. Cumnock is on a high station ten or twelve miles from the coast. "What sort of people are you, up at Cumnock?" said an Ayr gentleman, "you have not a single volunteer." "Never you heed," said Logan quickly, "if the French land at Ayr, there will soon be plenty of volunteers up at Cumnock!"

A YOUNG LADY went into a book-store, recently, for the purpose of purchasing a piece of music entitled, "When I sleep, I dream of thee," but by one of those ludicrous mistakes which will sometimes happen in the best families, she astonished the young man by inquiring if he had the music entitled, "When I dream, I sleep with thee!" The mistake brought a modest blush to the cheek of the fair enquirer—ditto the young gentleman.

NOTICE.

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes ploce on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by corriers on the morning of publication.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are Generol Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

letters relating to the Business, Editorial or other Departments of the poper should be addressed to the Publishers of THE ALIFORNIAN, No. 532 Merchant street, San Francisco.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JUNE 2, 1866.

FULL volumes of The Californian, from the commencement, can be obtained at the office, 532 Merchant street. Price, in muslin, $4 per volume; two volumes (one year) bound together, $6. Unbound, per volume, $2 50.

COMMODORE JOHN RODGERS

AND THE BOMBARDMENT OF THE CITY OF VALPARAISO.

THE navy of the United States has, since its organization, deservedly sustained a high reputation for discipline, gallantry, and a chivalrous readiness to redress wrongs, no matter by whom and upon whom they were sought to be imposed. If any fault could be found, it was with their too ready promptitude in mediation and interference. It has always been asserted they were too quick with their interposition and that they forget consequences under those impulses which are the distinctive indications of a high-strung courage. They have felt, too, that they could always, when their purpose evinced courage and loyalty to high principle, albeit not within the scope of orders and prudence, rely upon the support of a noble, enthusiastic, and generons people who would stand between them and governmental disapproval.

When in the Bay of Smyrna an Austrian brig-of-war held in custody a man who claimed to be an American citizen, and as such entitled to demand the protection of the flag, Ingraham gave notice that if Koszta was not released in eight hours, he would take him by force. He could not determine whether a mere declaration of an intention to become a citizen was of itself sufficient, in a legal point of view to authorize him to interfere; he simply heard the appeal from one who had taken the initial steps to citizenship, and he pursued a course which proved him to be intrepid and patriotic. Neither did the American people pause to inquire as to the legal status of the case. All that was left where it properly belonged—to diplomacy and the government; they, by meetings and through the press, declared that Ingraham showed, what they love, pluck; and it was Ingraham and his pluck that settled the whole matter. And when, too, Congress by resolution presented him with a medal for his gallantry, it not only enunciated a national principle, but it declared for all those who served the country, especially in a military capacity, a rule and authority for their government in such and analagous cases.

When, too, at the mouth of the Peiho, in the attack of the English gunboats on the Chinese forts, Commodore Tatnall moved to their aid, the whole country applauded his act and echoed his noble sentiment—"Blood is thicker than water." Every officer of the navy can rehearse you an hundred examples of this sort which are the lex non scripta of the service, and which, being traditional, pass from mouth to mouth, stirring the blood as Homeric epics did in the primal days of history, filling each breast with that ardor and desire of emulation, without which chivalry and heroism would not be. Officers of the United States navy do not, as a rule, require any incitement; they ask only for opportunity; the result, then, is with themselves.

The recent bombardment of Valparaiso furnished one of those instances which naval men pray for, and which do not occur once in a century—an occasion when an armed interference would have been attempted by most officers, whether that interference could have been justified by law or not Law! What are the principles of law in which the commanders of our ships are educated, and how far shall they control professional conduct in the presence and under the provocation of a barbarous exercise of power, and in view of the commission of the cowardly and wanton destruction of a defenceless city? In such an exigency, which appeals so strongly to all who have the power to restrain and prevent outrages, does an officer pause, and from the precedents of law excuse himself from an endeavor to go behind the emergency, seeking a rule to justify inaction, and looking to discover whether he can find a legal defence for interference? Ready and enthusiastic pluck will never stop while shells hiss destruction to the weak and unarmed, to determine the question of neutrality. Such is not the quality which makes heroes. They spring up under a higher inspiration than can be found in books or International Law—the inspiration of manhood, of an abhorrence of tyranny and cruelty. They reach out, strike, rescue and defend, and then leave to the respective governments the settlement of the law of the case.

It has been well and truly said by high English authority, that an officer was not fit to bear Her Majesty's commission, who was not ready at all times to act for the honor and good of his country and humanity, although his acts might be illegal, and he ran the risk of being hanged for what he had done. How many are there in the Navy who would gladly have given commission, and neck even, for the opportunity presented to John Rodgers, in April last, in the harbor of Valparaiso? How, too, an officer of his character for courage and acceptance of responsibility could have kept his fleet idle, under such a temptation, is more than we can comprehend. It is a pity, and he will confess it one of these days, that he allowed his head to attend in council when he offered to join the English Admiral in interfering with the Spanish bombardment. He says he had instructions "to observe a strict neutrality;" and yet he offers to "pitch in" if he can get an ally. Will he ever have such an opportunity again? The war waged against Chili is universally reprobated, is declared to be without excuse or justification, and Spain is without encouragement from any power on earth. Aye, worse than this, she is denounced as a conceited braggart, who finds antagonisms only where there is poverty of resource and population, and an entire absence of equality: a nation that knows whom to kick. Her discomfiture would be hailed with joy everywhere, and the means used to that end would be accepted with approbation by all civilized people. Wherever the news of the bombardment has reached, it is characterized as disgraceful to the age, and an exhibition of savage and puerile resentment peculiarly Spanish. Besides all this, the relation of the United States as guardian of the South American republics, and the abhorrence felt by its people for the unjust war carried on by Spain, would have made an interference by John Rodgers the most acceptable offering he could have made his countrymen. We do not ask whether the law is on the side of John Rodgers—whether he had the right to interfere, or not. This is a question outside our view of the case; we only wonder he could have debated with himself as to his duty in that emergency. He could have discussed all the questions when he had disposed of the Spanish squadron. He had but one of two courses to pursue—positive neutrality without reference to any other power, or interference with or without the English or French squadrons. What he offered to do with the aid of the other fleets, he should have done—failing their cooperation—by himself. If his instructions and the advice of our Minister could be violated by an offer to interfere if the French and English did, then they should have had no influence with him so far as his separate action was concerned. What was wrong in itself could not be cured by dragging allies in with him. Conscious of his ability to have opposed and beaten the whole Spanish force, after he had received the refusal of the English Admiral, he should have declared to the Spanish commander that he would interfere with all his strength to prevent the bombardment of a city where no damage would be done, comparatively speaking, except to the property of neutrals. If he had done this, no warlike shell would have exploded in the streets of that city, and free, chivalrous and independent people everywhere would not now be mortified at the spectacle of the cruel and unprovoked destruction of a city in the presence of the superior squadrons of the three great thinking and powerful nations of this Christian age.

For our part, we are sorry our squadron reached Valparaiso when it did, or that Rodgers did not boldly execute alone what he offered to do in conjunction with others. Had he done so, he might have been dismissed the navy, although we doubt it; but with the people, the world, and in history, he would have been recognized as a man who dared to consult justice rather than law; who shielded the weak and unarmed from the assaults of a strong and unscrupulous enemy, and who was merciful when the Law was cruel. In such cases, an officer of courage and sensibility will look beyond mere personal risks and considerations; he will, like a true knight, obey the impulse which tells us to succor the feeble and oppressed; he will do this, and leave his character and life to be vindicated by a civilization which abhors such an outrage as the Spaniard committed in the bay of Valparaiso.

LANGLEY'S COMMERCIAL DIRECTORY OF THE PACIFIC COAST—A compendium of business firms, statistical and notable matters of the towns and cities of California, Oregon, Nevada, Idaho—we learn is receiving substantial support from the business community of the interior. The want of such a work of reference has long been felt, and we are pleased to state that the enterprise of Mr. Langley is meeting with adequate success.

AN English paper speaking of the Reform Bill, says: "The only epitaph suitable to be inscribed over its remains is one furnished by the verdict of a jury on an Irish coroner's inquest—'The child was found dead in a cabinet, having been born alive and never breathed, and it died immediately afterwards for want of proper care and assistance at the time of its birth.'"

LORD WILLIAM LENNOX'S Drafts on My Memory has a new bon mot attributed to Sydney Smith. In writing to a friend, he said: "Unfortunately the house is full of cousins—would they were once removed."

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

A. ROMAN & CO., Nos. 417 and 419 Montgomery street, seem determined that our citizens shall have no reason to complain of any remissness on their part in supplying the demand for literary food. Among the works recently placed upon our table are the following:

Baked Meats of the Funeral: A Collection of Essays, Poems, Speeches, Histories, and Banquets. By Private Miles O'Reilly. New York: Carleton.

Charles G. Halpine ("Miles O'Reilly") is one of those roystering, jolly souls which, somehow or other, war throws to the surface, for the purpose, we must suppose, of lessening its horrors by fun and frolic.

Campaigning is not, as a rule, the most agreeable and delightful way of employing one's self. And so soldiers are left to their own devices and resources for amusements. A life of this sort brings out every man, it develops individual qualities, and sharpens a talent for wit and fun. As one of the editors of the New York Leader, Halpine never displayed the extent and delicacy of humor he has done since he put on the button as an officer of the Sixty-ninth regiment.

The volume in question is a very entertaining melange of satire and narration. The lyric "My Strong Wakeness for Widdies," is as clever as any of Charles O'Malley's songs, and full of that expression and sentiment which form the charm of Irish lays. To all those who love keen satirical thrusts and amusing narrative and songs, we recommend Baked Meats of the Funeral.

Only a Woman's Heart. By Ada Clare. New York: M. Doolady.

Ada Clare is clever, although her peculiar power is perhaps best displayed in such newspaper articles as she has been accustomed to write, and by which she is known. We doubt her ability to carry a story through a volume of 336 pages, and also whether she has invention enough to construct a plot that requires so much writing to devevelop and sustain it. However, this book is interesting to one who is curious to discover how so eccentric a person as the authoress is can portray that passion and emotion which, it is fair to infer, have been the controlling influences of her life and conduct. The cursory and rapid examination we have given this book satisfies us that, as a literary performance, it is a failure.

Campaigns of a Non-Combatant, and his Romaunt Abroad during the War. By George Alfred Townsend. New York: Blelock & Co.

If any proof was wanted as to the claim of the American people to be a reading and scribbling nation, it would be abundantly found in the number of books which have been published since and during the late war—books of campaigning, war incidents, narrative and history. This volume is a record of the impressions of a civilian and war-correspondent, of the Army of the Potomac and its operations, the country and the people as he saw them, together with personal adventures; all of which unite in making it very readable and entertaining. He tells the story of the whole campaign which ended in the capture of Richmond, and tells it agreeably and well. We recommend this volume to those of our readers who, at this season of the year, at home or wandering through the country, can find a spare hour or two after dinner for reading.

Culture of the Grape. By W. C. Strong. Boston: J. E. Tilton & Co.

When one remembers how important an element of wealth the culture of the grape is to be to California, he will thank those publishers and authors who contribute any new facts and information that are likely to aid us in our efforts to equal the old countries in the manufacture of wines and brandies. This book is written from the experience of the author, and as a practical treatise, as an instructor in the modes of planting, pruning, and training, will be found to be of great utility to all grape growers. Its description of the varieties, of itself, is worth the price of the book.

It is only by an intelligent, scientific, and practical knowledge of this subject that we can hope to place the grape among the most eminent sources of State and individual wealth. The closest reader and acutest observer among grape culturists, will be the most successful. This volume deserves to be in the hands of all those who own vineyards.

Memoir of James Louis Petigru. A Biographical sketch, by William J. Grayson. New York: Harper & Bros.

This book is printed from the MS. of Grayson, late of Charleston, S. C. It was written, as the preface informs us, during the "privations and anxieties" of the siege of that city, on scraps of old paper; and the author only completed it a few hours before his death. Independently of its agreeable style, this volume has a touching interest to all loyal men as the biography of one of the very few men of South Carolina who opposed secession, and foresaw the ruin and desolation it would produce.

Short as is this biography, it abounds in many details illustrative of the life and character of Petigru, and which fairly represent one who was no less eminent as a lawyer, than honorable and elevated as a man. In intellectual capacity, assiduity, and professional success, Mr. Petigru was one of the most notable men at the bar. This book will well repay perusal.

Snow-Bound—A Winter Idyl. By John Greenleaf Whittier. Boston: Ticknor & Fields.

This is a beautiful contribution to American poetical literature. To say that it will take the same place in the literature of our country that the Deserted Village of Goldsmith occupies in that of England, is briefly asserting the position it will hold in the minds of all cultivated people. It is a clearly, delicately drawn picture of what is within the experience of every New England citizen. Here is pictured the "ominous prophecy" of the "thickening sky" that ushers in the snow-storm. One can feel in the air

> "A chill no coat, however stout,
> Of homespun stuff could quite shut out,
> A hard, dull bitterness of cold,
> That checked, mid vein, the circling race
> Of life-blood in the sharpened face."

The poet pictures the preparations about the home, and then the > "Whirl-dance of the blinding storm,

> As zigzag wavering to and fro,
> Crossed and recrossed the wingèd snow;"

and the morning scene that follows the storm:

> "No cloud above, no earth below—
> A universe of sky and snow!
> The old familiar sights of ours
> Look marvellous shapes; strange domes and towers
> Rose up where sty or corn-crib stood,
> Or garden wall, or belt of wood;
> A smooth white mound the brush-pile showed,
> A fenceless drift what once was road;
> The bridle-post an old man sat
> With loose-flung coat and high cocked hat;
> The well-curb had a Chinese roof;
> And even the long sweep, high aloof,
> In its slant splendor, seemed to tell
> Of Pisa's leaning miracle."

The family gathering within doors,

> "While the red logs before us beat
> The post-line back with tropic heat;"

he tells with the fondness that clings about the memories of childhood, and of > "The dear home faces whereupon

> That fitful firelight paled and shone—
> Henceforward, listen as we will,
> The voices of that hearth are still.
> * * * * * * * * *
> Yet Love will dream, and Faith will trust,
> (Since He who knows our need is just,)
> That somehow, somewhere, meet we must.
> Alas for him who never sees
> The stars shine through the cypress trees!
> Who, hopeless, lays his dead away,
> Nor looks to see the breaking day
> Across the mournful marbles play!
> Who hath not learned, in hours of faith,
> The truth to flesh and sense unknown,
> That Life is ever lord of Death,
> And Love can never lose its own!"

We can scarcely withstand the temptation to limit our quotations to our proper space. The poet shows herein more distinctly than in any of his former works, his close alliance to nature. The poem touches the affections of the refined and the uncultured, and is clearly worthy the maturity of the poet's genius.

Ralph and other Poems. By Henry L. Abbey. Roundout: Horatio Fowks. New York: N. Tibbals, 37 Park Row.

The title of this volume would seem to imply that "Ralph" is a poem, which is very evidently a mistake. It is a very ordinary story of half a dozen pages, divided into lines of ten or twelve syllables, each line commencing with a capital letter. It begins (the italics are ours) thus:

> "How fast, how calm, how cold the snow comes down,
> Each flake falls like a lifeless, wee white hand
> Laid on a mother's breast. Ah, me! Ah, me!"

It's all about an unreasonable old lady, aged seventy, whose son, a lad of about forty, went to the war. The lad's father, "who was not always kind, ah, no! ah, no!" "hung about the tavern all the day, and steeped his soul in liquor 'till he died." She complains of being pretty cold, yet goes on in her rythmical way, without once getting tired of hearing herself talk, evidently under the impression that she is poetizing, and even ventures on politics to a certain extent: "What was the use of war? I asked Ralph that; why not adjust the law, make compromise and spare the precious blood?" etc.

The author labors under the impression that he is writing poetry when he makes this innocent, imaginative, and improbable old person say, divided into lines beginning with capitals: "I tried to get a pension but in vain. I tried to have the acres worked on shares; but men were scarce, and all the harvest through the hay remained uncut, the land untilled. The man who promised Ralph to do my work, went off to the war himself," etc.

We have looked at several of the pieces in this volume but have failed to find anything to which the word "poem" could be applied. There is some miscellaneous talk about "Seteb," "Hagi," "Adrian Avidon and the fair Estelle," "Eleanore," "Yelama," "Milicent," "Ghismond," but no poetry. Mr. Abbey has apparently read Tennyson and the "Village Voices" of Robert Buchanan, but only to prove how poorly one can imitate very good poetry.

The volume is issued by two publishers, but neither of the names strike us as familiar. The paper is cheap, the type cheaper, and the contents may be described by the superlative degree of the same adjective. On the whole, if we could persuade Mr. Abbey never to try to write any more "poems," we should consider that we had done him a favor, and would ask no expression of gratitude for it, although we might run the risk of thereby depriving the printer of a very small job.

Unto this Last. Four essays on the First Principles of Political Economy, by John Ruskin. John Wiley & Son, New York.

These papers were originally published in the Cornhill Magazine, and they were at once assailed as false in principle and of impossible use and application. Let this be as it may, Mr. Ruskin is a man of so much ability and learning, and so vivid and eloquent in expression, although too frequently redundant in phrase, that whatever he writes will be, as it deserves to be, read. Those of us who have read his Modern Painters cannot hesitate to follow, whether he leads us to nursery rhymes or metaphysics—which latter, by-the-by, he professes to despise. Our author seems to desire to show, first, what wealth is, and that its acquisition is "possible only under certain moral conditions of society." We fear that Ruskin has forgotten his realism and gone head over heels into idealism. It appears as if he sees the reverse of what actually exists, for, according to prevalent ideas, the greater the roguery the greater the success. It is useless to say, read this book, because all readers will do so independent of newspaper notices.

Letters of Life. By Mrs. L. H. Sigourney. New York: D. Appleton & Co.

This "is the autobiography of a woman no less reputable for her literary ability than for the graces and charms" of her true womanhood. The printing press does a good office when it gives to the world a record of so pure a life as Mrs. Sigourney's has been. No family, in which there are children to be educated, can furnish them nobler lessons of calm, religious motives and conduct, than the book in question. To those, then, who are interested in educational pursuits—whether they be parents or teachers—particularly to those who have the care and control of girls, do we recommend it.

—

The following we can only mention by title at present:

The South Since the War. By Sidney Andrews. Boston: Ticknor & Fields.

Citoyenne Jaqueline. By Sarah Tytler. London and New York: Alexander Strahan.

Honor May Boston: Tickuor & Fields.

St. Martin's Summer. By Anne H. M. Brewster. Boston: Ticknor & Fields.

Thomas a Becket—A Tragedy, and Other Poems. By G. H. Hollister. Boston: W. V. Spencer.

The Idle Word. Short Religious Essays. By Edward Meyrick Goulbern, D.D. New York: Appleton & Co.

Broken to Harness. A Story of English Domestic Life. By Edmund Yates. Boston: Loring.

Roebuck. A Novel. New York: Doolady.

The Gold Brick. By Mrs. Anne S. Stevens. Philadelphia: Peterson & Co.

Man of the World. By Wm. North. Philadelphia: Peterson & Co.

False Pride; or, Two Ways to Matrimony. Philadelphia: Peterson & Co.

Hall's Guide to the Great West. New York: Appleton & Co.

Costly Bridal Presents.—A set of emerald jewelry, valued at $75,000 in gold, has been made in New York, which is intended as a present to a Spanish bride. The Home Journal thus describes it:

"The set of jewels under mention, in the opinion of Paris jewellers, is the most perfect collection of emeralds in the world. They are formed into a necklace and a pair of ear-rings. The necklace is composed of fourteen perfect emeralds, each weighing five carats, and each surrounded with thirty-two diamonds, all festooned and set in silver in similar fashion to the court jewels. The necklace is adjusted in two parts in such a manner that they may be detached and each form a bracelet. The ear-rings, also made brilliant in diamonds, set in polished silver, are of the pendent style, two and a half inches in length, and consist of three emeralds each. The stone at the top of the ear-rings weighs two and a half carats; that in the centre, one carat; while the lower stone—a pearl-shaped drop—weighs seven and a half carats. Our readers will have some idea of the scarcity of such a set of gems, when we say that they are the result of twenty-five years' search in the celebrated mines of New Granada, being the choice of the products of these mines during that period.

AMUSEMENTS.

THE Forrest season at the Opera House is proving the most successful one, both in a histrionic and monetary point of view, that has ever been known in this city. All the seats in the dress circle, and most of those in the parquette, have been engaged for days in advance of each performance during the past week; although Mr. Forrest has only appeared in the parts which he played during the two previous weeks, with the exception of last evening, when he produced Macbeth for the first time. The masterly manner in which Mr. Forrest personates the characters of "Virginius," "Richelieu," "Damon," and "Lear"—the plays respectively performed during the first four nights of the present week—has been freely admitted by both the press and the public, and has won from both a more exalted opinion than that which he enjoyed before witnessing his tragic delineations. Thousands who have not seen Mr. Forrest for the last fifteen years, who held his reputation as a great actor in a somewhat equivocal balance, admitting that his triumphs were marred by those excesses of style that were the faults of his acting in his earlier years. But seeing is believing, as the old adage has it, and there is no other profession in which the qualities of its votaries are so quickly gauged as that of the actor. The great improvement in the style and manner of his readings, the impress of mental culture in subduing the strongly-marked physical extravagances of his earlier characterizations, have gained for him a reputation which should outweigh, as far as the results of his Pacific coast trip are concerned, all other considerations. It is freely conceded that Mr. Forrest's representations of these grand characters exhibit a great intellectual improvement; that they are mellowed and ripened by age and study; and that he ranks to-day as the best living personator of the great tragic characters of the drama.

The early hour that our paper goes to press will not permit us to speak of last night's performance of "Macbeth."

This afternoon and evening: The Three Guardsmen, Mr. McCullough appearing as "D' Artignon."

Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday: The Broker of Bogata. Thursday: Macbeth. Friday: Othello.

—

Mrs. Sedley Brown is to be the recipient of a complimentary benefit to-night at the Metropolitan. Let it be a bumper, for the lady is deserving of it. Mrs. Brown, as manageress, has not had a successful season; but, on the contrary, has lost heavily—not from inefficiency of management, but because of the great attraction at the rival theatre. It was ill-advised to attempt to stem the Forrest current with only the counter-attraction of a stock company. The bill presents a new transformation extravaganza, under the taking title of Hocus Pocus; or, The Magic Egg. May it prove a golden one to the lady for whose benefit it is to be produced.

—

Mr. George Felix Benkert's first concert will be given at the Academy of Music on Thursday evening next. Mr. Benkert has the reputation of being a superior pianiss, and an excellent musician. He has secured the able assistance of Signorina Brambilla, Madame Lizzie Northrup, and others; Mr. Herold will act as a director. There has been a dearth of concerts lately, and the attractions presented for this one should fill the Academy on Thursday evening.

—

Dr. Benton, believing that our citizens may possibly enjoy a sensation somewhat differing from that produced by street killing and suicide, announces an exhibition at Platt's Hall this evening of the ludicrous effects of laughing gas.

Different Constitutions.—Some years ago a lot of city tourists were wandering over Scotland. One rainy night a poor fellow got wet, tired, and benighted, sat down by the roadside, and there died of fatigue and exposure. The hardship was very great to a town-bred man. The story was told in the papers, and came to the ears of a Highland keeper. "Weel, weel," he said, "I canna understand that. I was oot watchin' the river mysel' yon nicht, and it was kind o' weet, but fine and warm. I was tired, and I lay doon, and, though I should have keepit awake, I just sleepit. Weel, when I wakened about six o'clock, the water had come two inches up my side where I lay in the shough. I was kind o' cold and stiff-like, but I took a rin and warmed myself, and then I came over the hull to my own house and got my breakfast. I canna understand how the man died; he must have been ill some other way surely.—Rough Nights' Quarters, by One of the People who have Roughed it.

A very funny man in Greenfield, Massachusetts, signally failed once in the description of a book he put up in selling a library at auction. He hadn't read very much in books, Robbins hadn't, but scanned the titles, trusted to luck, and went ahead: "Here you have Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress. Now, how much am I offered for it? How much do I hear for the Pilgrim's Progress, by John Bunyan? It's a first-rate book, gentlemen, with six superior illustrations; how much do I hear? All about the Pilgrims, by John Bunyan! Tells where they come from, an' where they landed, an' what they done after they landed! Here's a picter of one of 'em going about Plymouth peddlin', with a pack on his back."

DISTANCES FROM SAN FRANCISCO

To various points:

To Fort Point, 4 miles, by omnibus, four trips a day.
Lone Mountain, 3, street railway.
Seal Rock, 6, cars and omnibus, two trips a day.
Mission Dolores, street railways; Ocean House 8.
San Mateo, 20, railroad.
Crystal Springs, 23, railroad and stage
Half-Moon Bay, 29, do. do.
Redwood city, 30, do.
Mountain View, 38, do.
Santa Clara, 47, do.
San Jose, 50, do., or steamer and stage, 54.
Alviso, 46, steamer, daily.
Almaden mines, 87, steamer and stage; or by railroad and stage, 64.
Santa Cruz, 78, railrond and stage.
Oakland, 8, steamer and railroad, six trips a day.
Alameda, 11, steamer, three trips a day.
San Leandro, 15, steamer and railroad.
Mission San Jose, 34, steamer, railroad and stage.
Warm Springs, 37, do. do.
Benicia, 30, steamer leaves at 1 P. M. daily.
Sacramento, 117, do. do.
Stockton, 117, do. do.
Martinez, 33, do.
Pacheco, 38, steamer and stage.
Diablo Coal Mines, 44, steamer and stage.
Suisun, 50, steamer, or 51 by steamer and stage
Vallejo, 28; Mare Island, 37; Napa city, 50
White Sulphur Springs, 67, stage from Napa.
Geyser Springs, 118, do. do.
Sonoma, 52, steamer, tri-weekly.
Petaluma, 48, steamer, daily.
Healdsburg, 80, stage daily from Petaluma
San Quentin, 12, steamer; Farallone Islands, 20.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,

1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, situated on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

It was built expressly for a Hotel, with all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

LARGE READING ROOM

Attached to the Hotel.

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge.

JOHN KELLY, Jr.,
Proprietor.

fe6-3m

THE PACIFIC

INSURANCE COMPANY,

HAVING ADDED

MARINE INSURANCE

TO THEIR BUSINESS, ARE NOW PREPARED TO ISSUE POLICIES ON

Marine, Inland Navigation, and Fire Risks,

ON THE MOST FAVORABLE TERMS.

Office, 436 California street.

J. HUNT, President

A. J. RALSTON, Secretary. fe5-3m

MARKET STREET RAILROAD

CHANGE OF TIME TABLE.

ON AND AFTER AUGUST 1, 1865, Trains will start from the City and the Mission every hour instead of every forty minutes, as heretofore.

Trains from the City will start at the odd hour, commencing at 6:30 A. M. and every hour thereafter until 11.30 P. M.

mh25 F. McCOPPIN, Superintendent.

WHO WANTS

Profitable Employment

OR

PAYING INVESTMENTS?

PARTIES desirous of getting into OLD-ESTABLISHED BUSINESS CONCERNS, either as Partners or Sole Proprietors in Mercantile, Manufacturing, Trading, or any kind of business in city or country, can do so by applying at my office.

Men desiring profitable situations in business houses, with MONEY TO LOAN on satisfactory security, can secure such appointments.

Partnerships negotiated, where large or small capital is required.

Business Interests sold quickly for cash.

Real Estate bought and sold.

Help furnished for all kinds of employment.

Situations obtained for parties desiring employment.

S. P. WHITMAN,

Property, General Agency, and Business House, 313 Montgomery street, San Francisco. mar17-3m

ALLEN'S

LUNG BALSAM!

A CERTAIN CURE FOR

COUGHS, COLDS, INFLUENZA, NIGHT SWEATS, BRONCHITIS, SPITTING OF BLOOD, ASTHMA, WHOOPING COUGH,

CONSUMPTION,

And all Diseases of the

CHEST AND LUNGS!

This celebrated Cough Remedy effects a speedy cure by producing a free and easy expectoration, heals abscesses of the lungs, prevents unhealthy secretion of the bronchial tubes, and removes from them those accumulations of morbid matter which cause oppression of the breast, difficulty of breathing, etc, soothes irritation of the respiratory organs which produces cough.

PRICE.....ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE.

Sold by all Druggists.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
401 Battery corner of Clay,
ap27-3m San Francisco.

DR. HUMPHREYS'

Homœopathic Specifics

Have proved, from the most ample experience, an entire success—simple, prompt, efficient and reliable. They are the only Medicines perfectly adapted to popular use—so simple that mistakes cannot be made in using them; so harmless as to be free from danger, and so efficient as to be always reliable. They have received the highest commendation from all, and will always render satisfaction.

No. 1	cures Fevers, Congestion, Inflammations.	0 25
" 2	cures Worms, Worm Fever, Worm Colic,	25
" 3	cures Crying Colic, or Teething of in-
" 4	cures Diarrhœa of children or adults...	25
	faints.....	25
" 5	cures Dysentery, Griping, Bilious Colic,	25
" 6	cures Cholera Morbus, Nausea, Vomiting,	25
" 7	cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis.....	25
" 8	cures Neuralgia, Toothache, Faceache.	25
" 9	cures Headaches, sick-Headache, Vertigo,	25
" 10	cures Dyspepsia, Bilious Stomach.....	25
" 11	cures Suppressed, or Painful Periods..	25
" 13	cures Croup, Cough, difficult Breathing,	25
" 14	cures Salt Rheum, Erysipelas Eruptious,	25
" 15	cures Rheumatism, Rheumatic Pains...	25
" 16	cures Fever and Ague, Chill Fever, Agues	50
" 17	cures Piles, blind or bleeding.....	50
" 18	cures Opthalmia, and Sore or Weak Eyes,	50
" 19	cures Catarrh, acute or chronic, Influenza	50
" 20	cures Whooping-Cough, violent coughs.	50
" 21	cures Asthma, oppressed Breathing.....	50
" 22	cures Ear Discharges, impaired Hearing	50
" 23	cures Scrofula, Enlarged Glands, Swellings.....	50
" 24	cures General Debility, Physical Weakness.....	50
" 25	cures Dropsy, and scanty Secretions....	50
" 26	cures Sea-Sickness, sickness from Riding,	50
" 27	cures Kidney Disease, Gravel.....	50
" 29	cures Sore Mouth, Canker.....	50
" 31	cures Painful Periods, even with Spasms	50
" 32	cures Sufferings at change of life.....$	1.00
" 33	cures Epilepsy, Spasms, St. Vitus' Dance.	1.00
" 34	cures Diphtheria, Ulcerated Sore Throat,	50

FAMILY CASES.

35 vials, morocco case, and book.....	$10 00
28 vials, morocco case, and book.....	8 00
20 vials, morocco case, and book.....	6 00

These Remedies, by the case or single box, are sent to any part of the country, by Mail or Express, on receipt of the price.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
ap27-3m San Francisco.

A BEAUTIFUL COMPLEXION!

Secret of Beauty!

USE GEO. W. LAIRD'S

BLOOM OF YOUTH,

OR

LIQUID PEARL!

See that the name,

GEO. W. LAIRD,

is stamped

ON THE BOTTLE.

No other is Genuine.

The best article in the world for Preserving and Beautifying the Complexion and Skin.

This magnificent Toilet Article is prepared only by GEO. W. LAIRD, 74 Fulton street, New York, formerly 483 Broadway.

Sold by Druggists everywhere.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
ap27-3m San Francisco.

NEW

BOOK

AND STATIONERY

STORE.

THE UNDERSIGNED DESIRE TO INFORM THE PUBLIC that they have opened a School Book and Stationery

STORE,

At 691 Market, Corner Third,

"NUCLEUS" BUILDING,

With a complete assortment of everything pertaining to a first class establishment.

Having unsurpassed facilities for obtaining all our stock, direct from the Publishers and Manufacturers, on the most favorable terms, we feel confident of giving satistisfaction to all who may favor us with their patronage.

In addition to our large stock of the above goods, we shall keep constantly on hand a complete assortment of

BIBLES,
PRAYER BOOKS,
BLANK BOOKS,
PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,
PORTFOLIOS,
WRITING DESKS,
SCRAP BOOKS,
JUVENILE BOOKS,
CHILDREN'S TOY BOOKS,
CARDS, BLOCKS, and GAMES.

Especial attention given to

Ladies' Stationery,

embracing all the varieties of Note, Letter Paper, and Envelopes, all which we stamp with purchaser's INITIALS, in colors or plain.

Wedding and Visiting Cards

engraved, written, or printed in the latest style and at the lowest rates. Monograms of all kinds cut to order.

A liberal discount made to Teachers and the Trade.

TYLER BROS,

No. 632 WASHINGTON STREET,

AND

691 MARKET STREET, CORNER THIRD

my12-3m

THE CALIFORNIAN.

TERMS—FIVE DOLLARS PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

A PAPER FOR THE TIMES

DEVOTED TO LIVE TOPICS,

THE DISSEMINATION OF A PURE LITERATURE, DEVELOPMENT OF HOME TALENT,

AND THE

BEST INTERESTS OF CALIFORNIA.

Published

EVERY SATURDAY MORNING

AT

532 MERCHANT STREET,

BY THE CALIFORNIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY.

A. A. STICKNEY, J. P. BOGARDUS, W. J. BINGHAM, C. H. WEBB

No effort will be spared to enable THE CALIFORNIAN to appeal to the Public for support, not only as the

BEST JOURNAL ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

But also as being

THE EQUAL OF ANY ON THIS CONTINENT

THE BEST TALENT OF THE STATE

Is employed upon THE CALIFORNIAN.

The voluntary notices bestowed by the press of the Eastern cities have been no less warm and congratulatory than those which we have received the hands of our cotemporaries of the Pacifi Their verdict is unanimously in favor of

THE CALIFORNIAN

and all join in pronouncing their unqualified approval of its unequalled merits.

Its reputation is now fully established. It is not

EXCELLED BY ANY LITERARY JOURNAL

on the Continent.

THE TERMS OF THE CALIFORNIAN are $5 per year, mailed to subscribers, invariably in advance; 50 cents per month served by carriers.

All communications and correspondence must be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN,

No 532 Merchan street

SAN FRANCISCO

OPPOSITION STEAMER-DAY,

FRIDAY, JUNE 15, 1866.

GREAT REDUCTION IN RATES,

VIA NICARAGUA!

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN TRANSIT COMPANY will despatch the favorite Steamship

MOSES TAYLOR,

ON FRIDAY, - - - - JUNE 15TH,

From Mission street Wharf, at 10 o'clock, A. M., precisely.

Connecting at GREYTOWN with the splendid Steamship

SANTIAGO,

2,500 TONS. FOR NEW YORK.

☞ For Passage and Freight, and Insurance on Treasure, at greatly REDUCED RATES, apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,

Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets

Up stairs, San Francisco.

RATES OF POSTAGE.

Valuable letters may be registered on application at the office of mailing, and the payment of 20 cents registration fee.

Transient newspapers, periodicals, blanks, proof-sheets, book manuscripts, pamphlets, and all mail able printed matter, except circulars and books, 2 cents for each and every 4 ounces. Double these rates are charged for books.

Seeds, cuttings, roots, etc., 2 cents for each 4 ounces or less quantity.

All packages of mail matter not charged with letter postage must be so arranged that the same can be conveniently examined by Postmasters; if not, letter postage will be charged.

Unsealed circulars, to one address, not exceeding three in number, 2 cents, and in the same proportion for a greater number.

No package will be forwarded by mail which weighs over 4 pounds.

All postage matter, for delivery within the United States, must be prepaid by stamps (except duly certified letters of soldiers and sailors;) otherwise, double the above rates will be charged on delivery.

Weekly newspapers (one copy only) sent to actual subscribers within the county where printed and published, free.

Letters to Canada and other British North American Provinces, when not over 3,000 miles, 10 cents for each ½ ounce. When over 3,000 miles, 15 cents. Prepayment optional.

Letters to Great Britain or Ireland, 24 cents. Prepayment optional.

THE

AWARDED THE HIGHEST PREMIUM

AT THE

State Fair of California,

The only Fair on the Pacific coast at which any two double-thread Machines were exhibited in competition in 1865.

If there is a FLORENCE SEWING MAchine within one thousand miles of this office that is not working well, it will be attended to if I am informed of it, without expense to the owner. SAMUEL HILL,

General Agent,

111 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

THE

FLORENCE

SEWING MACHINE

RECEIVED THE FIRST PREMIUM, A GOLD MEDAL, at the Great Exhibition of the AMERICAN INSTUTE, - - - New York,

1865.

my10 3m

FARRAND'S OSCILLATING

Amalgamator.

THIS UNRIVALLED IMPROVEMENT FOR THE REduction and amalgamation of Gold and Silver Ores, is now running daily at No. 206 Commercial street, between Front and Davis.

THIS AMALGAMATOR INVOLVES

NO COMPLICATED MACHINERY

And possesses the following advantages over all thers now in use:

1st It is capable of doing double the amount of work of the ordinary Pans, at a saving of more than one-half the power.

2d. It reduces the pulp finer, thereby producing a better result.

3d. It requires less quicksilver by one-half at a charge, whilst the loss by trituration is comparatively nothing.

4th. As an Amalgamator for gold contained in sulphurets, as also for very fine or flour gold it has no equal.

5th. This Amalgamator involves no complicated machinery, and is less liable to get out of order than any of the pans.

Trials made with this machine in the presence of experts, during the last six months, have been pronounced highly satisfactory. It is peculiarly well adapted to employment by small mining operators in distant localities, as it can readily be taken to pieces and packed upon mules.

A large size machine is constructed without dies or mullers, but simply with arms to act as stirrers, to be used in connection with several of the Amalgamators as a "Separator," as it is found that the peculiar motion given to these arms, in connection with the concave shape of the body of the machine, renders it most effectual for such a purpose.

The peculiar construction of this superior machine admits of its being worked with a much smaller charge of quick ilver, to any given amount of pulp than the flat-bottomed Pans. The spiral springs greatly assist in the work of reduction, by allowing the free admission of the pulp between the mullers and dies, so that the pulp is made to actually work upon itself—as the dust of the diamond is made to reduce the gem itself.

W. D. FARRAND

BOWMAN & CO.,

Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware.

mar21 6m Main street, Petaluma.

J. PEIRCE,

FURNITURE AND

Bedding Warerooms.

NOS. 415, 417, AND 419 CALIFORNIA STREET, NEAR MONTGOMERY.

THIS STOCK OF FURNITURE, etc., was selected with great care, and special attention given to the wants of this market, ENTIRELY AT THE EAST. It is NOT COMPOSED OF REFUSE GOODS, ODDS AND ENDS OF OTHER HOUSES that have lately closed out here, but CONSISTS ENTIRELY OF NEW GOODS, made after the latest patterns and in the most durable manner.

The present Stock is fully TWICE as large as that of any other house here. Parties having any doubts of this, or that the assortment is not superior to any in the city, can easily satisfy themselves by calling.

The stock of Case Goods is larger than ever before.

J. PEIRCE,

Ware-rooms 415, 417 and 419 California street

dc16-3m SAN FRANCISCO.

B. F. STERETT, 533 Clay St., a few doors below Montgomery, continues to print all kinds of Books, Bills, Circulars, Cards, etc. in superior style, and at reasonable prices.

T. RODGERS JOHNSON,

ODD FELLOWS' HALL, 329 Montgomery street,

de30 3m San Francisco.

NATHANIEL GRAY,

UNDERTAKER,

CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,

641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB

Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

mar17-3m

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,

PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,

517 CLAY STREET,

Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,

SAN FRANCISCO.

CHARLES F. RIEHN,

OF

Riehn, Hemme & Co.,

ASSAYERS,

GIVES LESSONS IN ASSAYING—ALSO IN MINERalogy and Chemistry, as far as required to become a Practical Assayer.

Montgomery street, corner of Sacramento, under Donohoe, Kelly & Co.'s Bank, San Francisco. mar5 3m

THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD.

DR. MAGGIEL'S

Pills and Salve.

These Life-giving remedies are now, for the first time, given publicly to the world. For over a quarter of a century of private practice the ingredients in these

LIFE-GIVING PILLS!

Have been used with the greatest success. Their mission is not only to prevent disease, but to cure. They search out the various maladies by which the patient is suffering, and re-invigorate the failing system. To the aged and infirm a few doses of these valuable PILLS will prove to be

A VERY FOUNTAIN OF YOUTH,

For in every case they add new life and vitality, and restore the waning energies to their pristine state. To the young and middle-aged, they will prove most invaluable, as a ready, specific, and sterling medicine. Here is a dream realized, that Ponce-de-Leon sought for three hundred years ago, and never found. He looked for a fountain that would restore the old to vigor and make youth ever

AN ETERNAL SPRING!

It was left for this day and hour to realize the dream, and show in one glorious fact, the magic that made it fair.

THESE FAMOUS REMEDIES

Cannot stay the flight of years, but they can force back, and hold aloof, diseases that might triumph over the aged and the young. Let none hesitate then, but seize the favorable opportunity that offers. When taken as prescribed—

FOR BILLIOUS DISORDERS

Nothing can be more productive of cure than these Pills. Their almost magic influence is felt at once; and the usual concomitants of this most distressing disease are removed. These remedies are made from the purest

VEGETABLE COMPOUNDS.

They will not harm the most delicate female, and can be given with good effect in prescribed doses to the youngest babe.

FOR CUTANEOUS DISORDERS

And all eruptions of the skin, the SALVE is most invaluable. It does not heal externally alone, but penetrates with the most searching effects to the very root of the evil!

Dr. Maggiel's Pills

Invariably cure the following diseases:

Asthma,
Bowel Complaints,
Coughs,
Colds,
Chest Diseases,
Costiveness,
Dyspepsia,
Diarrhœa,
Dropsy,
Debility,
Female Complaints, Fever and Ague
Headache,
Indigestion,
Influenza,
Inflammation,
Inward Weakness,
Liver Complaint,
Lowness of Spirits,
Ringworm,
Rheumatism,
Salt Rheum,
Scalds,
Skin Diseases.

NOTICE.—None genuine without the engraved trade mark around each pot or box, signed by Dr. J. Maggiel, 43 Fulton st., New York, to counterfeit which is felony.

Sold by all respectable Dealers in Medicines throughout the United States—at 25 cents per box or pot. ap14 1y

A CARD.

M. Howard's Hair Restorative,

NO. 315 MONTGOMERY STREET

SAN FRANCISCO.

THE ABOVE PREPARATION, which has been recently discovered and patented, is purely a Vegetable Extract.

The undersigned are fully aware of the many unsatisfactory and useless preparations for restoring hair that have been introduced to the public, and how little confidence is to be placed in any pretensions to restoring the hair to bald heads, but, we are able to state that it not only prevents the Hair from falling out, but absolutely reproduces it, and that we now have good suits of Hair growing where we were entirely bald. Therefore, as a matter of justice to Mr. Howard, and of consolation to bald heads, we tender him this testimonial Mr H. keeps the article for sale in bottles, with directions for its use, or applies it himself, as may be desired.

HAVING TRIED MR. HOWARD'S PREPARATION,

San Francisco, April 6, 1866.

Frank M. Thayer,	R. A. Redman,
W. S Davis,	J. O. Rountree,
T. A. Hall,	G. W. Gamble,
A. C. Knox,	J. W. Miller,
Bradbury Sanborn,	E. C. McComb,
George Wells,	D. C. Ross,

Joseph Wells, ap7

FRANKLIN PRINTING OFFICE,

509 CLAY STREET, (near Sansome,)

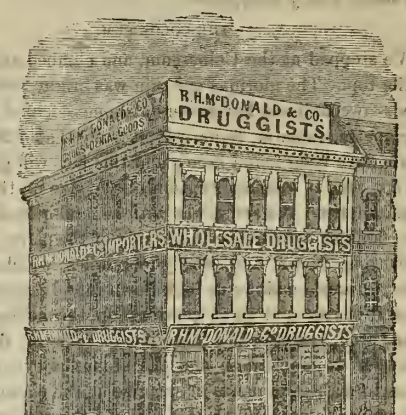
SAN FRANCISCO,



"The oldest and most complete Book and Job printing establishment in California. All descriptions of work neatly executed at low rates."

ja1-tf FRANK EASTMAN, Proprietor.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,

WHOLESALE

DRUGGISTS,

IMPORTERS OF

Drugs, Chemicals, Herbs,

PATENT MEDICINES,

PAINTS, VARNISHES,

ACIDS, DYE STUFFS,

OILS, PERFUMERIES,

TOILET ARTICLES,

BRUSHES.

We are just receiving, direct from Spain, a complete assortment of

CORKS! CORKS! CORKS

which we offer at lower prices than usual

DUSTING, PAINT, VARNISH, SHOE, SCRUB, HAIR AND TOOTH BRUSHES:

We have a splendid stock, which we offer at extremely low prices.

HERBS.

We have received, direct from the Shakers, all kinds of fresh Herbs, and intend to keep every article used of this description.

TILDEN'S SOLID AND FLUID EXTRACTS, PILLS, AND CONCENTRATED PREPARATIONS.

We have on hand, and shall keep a full assortment of the above celebrated preparations, which we offer to the trade at such prices as will defy competition.

FLAVORING EXTRACTS.

A great variety, not to be equalled in the market as to quality and price.

Parties about purchasing would do well to give us a call and examine prices and goods before purchasing elsewhere.

PLAIN AND GUM TEETH.

We have the largest assortment of any house on the Pacific coast.

GOLD FOIL.

We are manufacturing Foil which we can recommend to the profession as being a superior article. We also have on hand a full assortment, of all the various makers

VULCANIZERS,

DENTAL CHAIRS AND LATHES,

FILES,

VULCANITE AND GUTTA PERCHA,

FORCEPS,

BURRS, DRILLS AND EXCAVATORS,

MIRRORS, ETC.

We have, besides the above, every article used by the Dentist, and are daily in receipt of all the new inventions in use.

Dentists will find it to their interest to call and examine our stock and prices before purchasing elsewhere.

R. H. McDonald & Co.,

CORNER SANSOME AND PINE STREETS,

SAN FRANCISCO.

AND

J STREET SACRAMENTO.

ap28 3m

LETTER FROM ROME.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Springfield Republican writing from Rome, says :

We have been out for my dearest drive ; past the Forum and Colosseum, and along the old Appian way to the new, with the ancient tombs in sight, the Claudian aqueduct and the silent, sunny Campagna.

THE COLOSSEUM.

We stopped at the Colosseum, and climbed up all the stairs to the top. The glorious old ruin was bright with blossoming weeds—weeds here, but flowers at home—fennel and vervain, mignonette, fumaria, ferns. It it said that 420 species of plants have been found here ; and this fact will give one who has not seen it some conception of the size of this enormous amphitheatre. An artist was with us, and helped me with his more familiar eyes to see the beauty of the place, pointing out enchanting views, and weedy loop-holes which themselves were pictures—making us look down into dungeons and cages for wild beasts, and up at carvings on the ceiling of an entrance arch, rosettes like those inside some of the triumphal arches of Rome ; these and the stones above, so delicately cut as to make one pause in surprise at the elaborateness and uniformity of work which this little fragment hints at as having been spread over the whole building ; it is like the one fish-bone of Agassiz. Oh, but to see the great feathery leaves, and golden torches of wall flower, waving atop of the tall arches ; and the daisies, moss, and violets, nestling in every rent which time or man's cupidity had made ; nature laying her sweet hand of pity on the wound, and more than healing it ; and quite up against the sky, mignonette spreading and blossoming on the stones ; nothing higher except heaven, and the lark that was singing, circling over us.

We looked down into the dizzy depth and width of the amphitheatre, where on public days 87,000 Romans had sat feasting their eyes upon the death struggles of Christian martyrs, and their ears upon the death howls of thousands of wild beasts, 5000 slain in the opening week alone. Now only a butterfly or two flutters across the arena, and violets blossom at the foot of the tall cross which rises where the martyrs' blood was shed. At the top, we can still find a few of the curious tent-props, like brackets in the wall ; but modern ingenuity has failed to devise any means of stretching across the acres of canvas which would be required to cover the seats ; its own weight bears it down to the ground. It is curious, where the outer coating of stone is broken away, to see the architectural fragments that have been filled into the wall, showing that even ancient Rome was rich in the antiquities of a more ancient Rome ; for this old pile was built by the captive Jews, it is believed, in the time of Titus, nearly as far back as the Christian era.

Seated up here in the air, on the base of a broken column almost 2,000 years old, we looked down upon the glory of Rome as it is, and thought of the glory which had departed, of the palaces and baths miles wide, glittering with gilding and populous with statues, statues whose beauty makes the finest work of modern art seem as naught. Close by were the beautiful ruins of the Forum, with those few exquisite fluted columns which have become the whole world's model for symmetry ; and there were the Temple of Peace, and of Venus and Rome, with their majestic arches, three within a stone's throw of each other ; and there were the triumphal arches of white marble, built for emperors whose exploits have become mere legend. Time, which has strained and hacked the bas-reliefs upon these arches, and swept away their statues, has left them still richer and grander than any others on the round earth of to-day.

On a hill beyond the Forum rose the ruins of the palace of the Cæsars : from our perch we could realize as never before their huge dimensions, and between these and an eminence at the left was as lovely a landscape as ever artist put upon canvass ; the artist beside us demurred that its sky line was too straight. We saw the quaint old pyramid of Caius Cestus and the Protestant cemetery with its cypress trees, an arch and two of the Claudian aqueducts, and the sea-like Campagna, which last means always sunshine, quiet and color. We could not resist the enticement of these green fields, and clambered down the steep stairs, of which a Dutch friend remarked gravely, "I tink vat ve Roman peoples made higher legs van ve, because those steps in the Colosseum vey are so vewy high."

TO THE NEW APPIAN WAY.

We drove through the arch of Titus, glancing, as we passed, at the inner bas-relief, with its candlestick, modelled from that very Jewish one upon which His eyes had rested, who was Himself a Lamp to light the world. Along the Via Sacra, where Horace loved to walk, and out of the city at last through the gates of San Sebastiano, and the picturesque old arch of Drusus, verdant with vines and weeds, the oldest of all the triumphal arches in Rome. Leaving our carriage for a walk, we strolled along the old Appian way, picking the daisies which blossomed among its tombs and broken temples, and our whole souls steeped in its serenest sunshine. Rows of picturesquely dressed peasants, in their pointed hats, were at work in the fields, and now and then a lark would rise trilling into the air, his voice a very echo of Shelley's song, "Art thou bird or spirit ? Bird thou never wert." It is the most ethereal sound, as if a note of music had dropped down from heaven, and taking bodily shape, hung trilling in the air, too lost to find its way back, too ethereal to descend.

Taking a cross road to the new Appian way, we had the Alban hills in sight, all violet beneath, and sun-lit snow above, and, distant as they were, the bright light showed us all the little towns and convents strewn along their heights and hollows, Albano, Frascati, and the rest, like handfuls of white shells. Linking the hills to the city, and stretching all across the sunshine of the Campagna, was the long broken line of arches which remain of the Claudian aqueduct, tall arches hung with ivy, gilt with sunshine, or soft with shadow, and each having some glimpse of the hills, or else the pure bright blue light of this Roman sky which is very Heaven. We drove home, feasting all the way upon the rare old weedy arches, crumbling into a loveliness which they never could have shown in their prime. As we neared the city, the noble front of St. John Lateran greeted us, with its pillars and statues, a worthy entrance to the bishopric of one who accounts himself the world's high priest. The church within is in poorer taste, but this does not matter to us, as we hurry past to the Colosseum again, admiring its rows of beautiful columns, and sighing over the rents and bruises which have been made in digging out its iron fastenings ; for the stones were laid together closely, without mortar, and rivetted with iron or bronze. "Look in, look in, every arch is a picture !" exclaimed the artist ; "and look at the sunshine—it is not sunshine, it is gilding, it's go-o-ld," with that lingering on the vowels which Italians use.

We passed the strange old temple of Antoninus and Faustina, a bridge midway across its columns, to admit one into the Catholic church with which the heathen temple has become incorporated. We passed the column and forum of Trajan, and the column of Marcus Antoninus, to which I always bow in passing, for he is my hero in history, and then to the Hotel de Rome, our winter-home, and the most home-like, cleanly, agreeable, the best hotel which we have found in Europe. But see what an afternoon !

PERFUMES AMONG THE ANCIENTS.

THE Romans, in the art of perfumery, as in almost every other art but that of war, were the copyists of the Greeks. It was long, indeed, before the effeminating and luxurious fashions of the latter made progress among them, and, when they did, it was more in the decline of their power than in their rising greatness. Nevertheless, among the upper classes and the refined, their use was largely resorted to. In their baths and dining chambers the richest and most costly perfumes were abundant. Three kinds were principally used—solid unguents, liquid unguents, and powdered perfumes. One of those most in favor with the Romans was saffron ; they had not only their apartments and banqueting halls strewed with this plant, but they also composed with it unguents and essences, which were highly prized. Some of the latter were often made to flow in small streams at their entertainments, or to descend in odorous dews over the public, from the valarium forming the roof of the amphitheatre. In addition to their liquid essences and unguents, they also made use of an immense variety of cosmetics for improving and preserving the complexion. These, according to Pliny, who describes their preparation, were certain kinds of pastes and poultices, that were kept on the face all night and part of the day ; some, indeed, only removed them for the purpose of going out, alluded to by Juvenal, in one of his satires, where he says : "A Roman husband seldom sees his wife's face at home, but when she sallies forth." Another device, besides poulticing, was tried by Poppæa, the wife of Nero, "who used to bathe in asses' milk every day, and, when she was exiled from Rome, obtained permission to take with her fifty asses, to enable her to continue her favorite ablutions.

The Druids knew, and highly prized the many aromatic plants indigenous to the soil. Druidesses crowned their brows with verbena, and composed, with fragrant herbs, mysterious balms which cured the heroes' wounds and enhanced the charms of the fair. The Roman conquest introduced the graceful costumes and elaborate cosmetics of Italy, and the provinces soon rivalled the metropolis in elegance and refinement. Barbarism, however, again supervened, and perfumes did not come into general use in England until the reign of Elizabeth. In the fifteenth year of her reign, the Earl of Oxford came from Italy, and brought with him gloves, sweet bags, a perfumed leather jerkin, and other pleasant things, and that year the queen had a pair of perfumed gloves. She took such pleasure in these gloves that she was pictured with them on her hands, and for many years afterward it was called the Earl of Oxford's perfume. On another occasion, when visiting the University of Cambridge, she was presented with a pair of perfumed gloves, and was so delighted with them that she put them on at once. She, also, usually carried with her a pomander, which was a ball composed of ambergris, benzoin, and other perfumes, and with the gift of "faire gyrdle of pomander," which was a series of pomanders strung together and worn around the neck. These pomanders were supposed to be preservators from infection.—Philadelphia Transcript.

BLUNDERS.—A writer in the Round Table says : "A distinguished English scholar has said that he knew but three of his countrymen who spoke their native language with uniform grammatical accuracy. I fear that a careful examination would prove these statements almost literally true. Goldsmith says : 'The Greeks, fearing to be surrounded on all sides, wheeled about and halted, with the river on their backs.' Not to mention the tautology, what a drenching they must have received ! The elder Disraeli informs us that 'the beaux of that day used the abominable art of painting their faces, as well as their women.' Swift writes in his Gulliver's Travels : 'It contained a warrant for conducting me and my retinue to Traldragdubh, or Trildrogdrih, for it is pronounced both ways, as near as I can remember, by a party of ten horse.' Truly, a strong memory—ten horse power ! Or does he mean that the words were so hard that it required a party of ten horse to pronounce them ? Even Hallam, in his History of Literature, makes the following ridiculous statement : 'No one has as yet exhibited the structure of the human kidneys, Vesalius having only examined them in dogs.' "

"AN eminent and witty prelate was asked if he did not think such a one followed his conscience. "Yes," said his grace ; "I think he follows it as a man does a horse in his gig. He drives it first."

[COMMUNICATED.]

THE MYSTERIES OF NEW YORK.—Wars, national resources, political contests, religious conventions, amusements, the Central Park, its swans, gondolas, etc., have been discussed—this letter is of the "Mysteries of New York." In the car, steamboat, saloon, parlor, at dinner, in the street, everywhere do I hear some story with relation to, or an inquiry as to the meaning of those mythical words, posted, printed, and advertised wherever I go :

S. T.—1860.—X.

accompanied with a crescent and a shepherd's hook. A secession sympathizer said it was : "Satan Triumphed in 1860 in granting the Xpectation of Abolitionists ;" while a Republican said it was : "Stump Tail Democrats of 1860, gone to Texas ;" another, "To the State-Taxes of 1860 add ten (X) dollars ;" another, that they were the watch-words of some secret society, like "Sons of Tecumchia are 1860 Strong," or "Seward Tricksters of 1860 Used Up," etc., etc Well, your correspondent was ill—had been ill for a long time—in fact, his late suppers had given him a horrid dyspepsia. He read the advertisements, and of course bought a bottle of Plantation Bitters ; the Bitters cured him, and on the bottle appeared those same cabalistic letters : S. T.—1860.—X. I travelled straight for 21 Park Row, introduced myself to the celebrated Dr. Drake, and was shown the elephant—tusks, S. T. and all—and a great institution it is. A six story building in Dey street, from cellar to garret, is occupied as a laboratory for producing this single medicine. Some forty persons are employed ; several vats, holding six thousand gallons each, are filled with roots, herbs, and material, and then soaked in water, and the expression preserved in pure St. Croix Rum. I here saw the bags, boxes, and bales of Calisaya Bark, Wintergreen, and other material—and the original St. Croix Rum puncheons bearing the Custom-house brand. It seemed that medicine could here be turned out to supply a world of invalids—yet these gentlemen are unable to fill their orders for Plantation Bitters alone. I was shown many certificates of extraordinary cures effected by these Bitters. The statistics of the medicine business as presented to the last Congress in the report of Mr. D. S. Barnes are enormous and startling, amounting to some six million dollars annually. The proprietors of these Bitters will pay Uncle Sam near fifty thousand dollars for stamps this year ! * * * * J. H.

UNLOCKING THE ROCKS.—The great cost of silver and gold arises not so much from their scarcity in the earth, as the difficulty of extracting them from their stony combinations. Dr. J. C. Ayer, the well known chemist of Massachusetts, has cut this gordian knot. After having merited and received the gratitude of half mankind, by his remedies that cure their diseases, he is now winning the other half, by opening for them an easy road to the exhaustless treasures of the hills. He has discovered and published a chemical process, which renders, at little cost, the hardest rocks and ores friable like chalk, so that the precious metals are loosed from their confinement, and easily gathered. Mines too poor to pay may be worked at a profit now, and the yield of rich mines is largely increased, while the cost of extracting the metals from the ore is diminished. Either is a great achievement, to enrich mankind, or cure their diseases. But we are informed our celebrated countryman adheres to the latter, as his speciality and chief ambition.—Buffalo Sentinel. *

MIDDLETONS' NATIONAL OIL PORTRAITS consist of portraits o Washington, Martha Washington, Lincoln, Clay, Jackson, Webster, Douglas, Grant, and Sherman, imprinted on canvas by the newly invented process of Mr. E. C. Middleton, of Cincinnati, in such a manner as to be faithful counterparts of oil paintings. As works of art, they are peculiarly appropriate, as well as patriotic, for parlor ornaments ; and, as portraits, their accuracy and fidelity are attested by Edward Everett, Senator Richardson, Speaker Colfax, Mrs. Lincoln, Mrs. Daniel Webster, Mrs. Stephen A. Douglas, Mrs. General Grant, Mrs. General Sherman, and scores of others. These portraits are on exhibition at the salesroom of John Middleton & Son of this city. Mr. D. Warren Smith has been appointed special agent for the soliciting of subscriptions. *

"THE Human Face Divine" should be the point by which beauty reaps its reward, and it should be dressed with that first of all toilet dressings—Davidson's Circassian Bloom. Sold by all druggists. *

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.

A toilet delight. Superior to any cologne. used to bathe the face and person, to render the skin soft and fresh, to alluy inflammatiou, to perfume clothing, for headache, etc. It is manufactured from the rich Southern Magnolia, and is obtaiuing a patronage quite unprecedented. It is a favorite with actresses and opera siugers. It is sold by all dealers, at $1.00 in large bottles, and by DEMAS BARNES & Co., New York, Wholesale Agents.

Lyon's Magnetic Insect Powder will exterminate Fleas, Ticks, Roaches and all insects almost instantly. Its reputation is well known, and hence has been counterfeited. Inquire for and take none but LYON'S, bearing the stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., and the signature of E. LYON.

"OUT OF SORTS" expresses the feelings of many that cannot be otherwise described. Languor, weakness, enervation, listlessness, sleepiness, melancholy, want of appetite, etc., compose a class of ailments greater than all others combined. It is exactly for these indescribable complaints that PLANTATION BITTERS are prepared. It is for the relief of these same complaints they have become so famous. Hence it is that they are so extensively used by clergymen, merchants, ladies, and persons of sedeutury habits. They are as pleasant to the taste as they are beneficial to the Stomach. The extent of their sale is almost incredible.

Intrinsic virtue alone could ever insure the success met by the Mexican Mustang Liniment. For Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Cuts, Bruises, Burns, Swellings, etc., upon man, or Spaviu, Ringbone, Poll Evil, Scratches, Straius, etc., upon beasts, its effects are instantaneous, soothing and wonderful. It saves time, suffering and expense to have it always in the house. None genuine unless in a steel plate label, with signature of G. W. Westbrook, and having stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., over top. Sold by all dealers.

Lyon's Kathairon is a most delightful article as a Hair Dressing—to eradicate scurf and dandruff, to keep it clean, soft and silky, and the head cool. It also prevents the hair from falling off and turning gray, and promotes its growth upon prematurely bald heads. It is sold by all dealers.

E. THOMAS LYON, N. Y.

LYON'S EXTRACT OF PURE JAMAICA GINGER—for Indigestion, Nausea, Heartburn, Sick Headache, Cholera Morbus, Flatulency, etc., where a warming stimulant is required. Its careful preparation and entire purity make it a cheap and reliable article for culinary purposes. Sold everywhere, at 50 cents per bottle. Ask for "LYON'S" Pure Extract. Take no other c7m

THE MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK.—In regard to this company the "Wall Street Underwriter" says: "Figures are potent argumeuts to employ in dealiug with the affairs of any Insurauce Company. The Twenty-Third Annual Report of 'The Mutual,' made up to the first of February instaut, is published in this paper, and the results manifested upon it are well worthy of consideration. Iu the first instance, as the prime result of the past year's work, the gross assets of 'The Mutual' show an

Increase of	$2,549,871 02
Total increase in premium account is	1,083,565 34
The total iucome of $3,853,065 80 is an increase of	1,003,199 24
The full disbursemeuts for 1860, were	1,540,130 63
Number of policies issued Feb. 1865 to Feb. 1866, were 8,600—insuring over double the number of 1864, and over double the amount, viz.	31,394,407 00

All approving commeut seems bald in the presence of the truly eloqnent figures presented by the 'Mutual Life.' No record of success can be more complete for any finnncial institution in the world. Wherever Life Insurance has been heard of on the American Continent, the name and prestige of the great 'Mutual' of New York, stand out preeminent. Many successful moderu companies have grown up to prosperity through the example and influence of the 'Mutual Life.' Its great success, its wealth, and its manifest advantages have been constantly referred to us incontrovertible arguments in favor of Life Insurance." "The Mutual Life" has paid losses on this coast (including dividends,) dnring the last four years, to the amount of $101,819 02, and among the recent losses to be paid are policies for $5,000 each, of Francis E. Webster und W. L. Haven, who were both killed by the nitro-glycerine explosion at the office of Wells, Fargo & Co., in addition to which amounts, there is to be paid about $1,200 for accrned dividends. S. F. Examiner.

NO FORFEITING.—Heretofore, if a person holding a Life Policy became unfortunate, and could not raise the sum of money required to pay his next premium, his policy was declared forfeited. The BROOKLYN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK has decided to make EVERY POLICY it issues NON-FORFEITABLE, giving a PAID-UP POLICY to the party if unable to continue his payments of premiums. The dividends of the Brooklyn Life Insurance Company are settled annually in cash. This plan is far more acceptable to insurers than at the end of three or five years, as in other companies. The Brooklyn Life Insurance Company allows thirty days grace in the payment of premiums. Its policies are incontestable, and its losses are promptly paid. The Brooklyn Life Insurance Company offers every known plan of Life und Endowment Insurance. Get a pamphlet at the office, 240 Montgomery street, southeast corner of Pine, from Stephen T. King, General Manager, or David B. Arrowsmith, Local Agent.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

BUGGIES AND CARRIAGES.—If you want a trim neat, light, and yet durable style of buggy or carriage, go to Nos. 37 and 39 Webb street, between Sacramento and California, where you will find just such a vehicle as will suit your taste. POLLARD & CARVILL not only deal in these articles, but manufacture them to order, and do repairing, painting, trimming and blacksmithing with dispatch and neatness. Go and see them.—California Leader.

WAGONS.—Every species of wagons that any one can need, made of the best material, well fitted and finished, can be found at the Depot of MILLS & EVANS, 587 Market street, two doors from Second. Light, Express, Milk and Thoroughbrace wagons, also Lumber Gears, Extra Poles and Whiffletrees, with Lead Bars, are kept constantly on hand.—California Leader.

FOR the best finished, fashionable hats, go to McGann & Co.'s, Hatters, 654 Washington street, two doors below the Plaza.

RHEUMATISM.

Throughout this coast a great deal of suffering is experienced from Rheumatism. Weeks and even months of protracted and aggravated misery is endured by the victims of medical inefficiency and ignorance, which could be cured just as speedily as was Mr. Sparrow, whose testimony is given below, and is only the echo of hundreds of other cases. Dr. Bourne cures without medicines, which accounts for his extraordinary success. No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street entrance:

SAN FRANCISCO, September 6, 1861.

DR. BOURNE: Last Winter I was nearly dead, by an attack of inflammatory rheumatism. I suffered the most excruciating pains for about five weeks, without any hope of relief, when a friend, hearing of my illness, called to see me, and assured me that if I would stop "drugging and dosing," and go to you, that you would have me walking about the streets in three days. Sure enough, although I was utterly helpless, and conveyed to your house in a carriage, and carried into it by three stout men, and was by them lifted into the bath, yet, on coming out of the bath I was able to largely assist myself, doing much toward dressing, and without assistance walked from the bath to the carriage. On the fourth day, I discharged my carriage and walked with a friend's aid the entire distance to your house (nearly a mile) and home again, and so on until cured; and I had not taken more than twelve baths when, all pain and swelling having ceased, I felt myself a well man. And now I am happy to do this little service of publicly certifying to the simple truth, leaving it to do its own work among such of my friends and acquaintances as may chance to see this. Your friend, JOSEPH SPARROW.

A SUMMER AND WINTER MEDICINE.

"Great oaks from little acorns grow."

The worst diseases known to the human race spring from causes so small as to almost defy detection. The volumes of scientific lore that fill the tables and shelves of the medical fraternity only go to prove and elaborate these facts.

Then guard yourselves while you may. The smallest pimple on the skin is a tell-tale and indicator of disease. It may fade and die away from the surface of the body, but it will reach the vitals, perhaps, at last, and death be the result and final close. Maggiel's Bilious, Dyspeptic and Diarrhœa Pills cure where all others fail. While for Burns, Scalds, Chilblains, Cuts, and all abrasions of the skin, Maggiel's Salve is infallible. Sold by J. Maggiel, 43 Fulton street, New York, and all Druggists, at 25 cents per box.

WANTED—Agents to sell, by subscription only the most popular work ever written: "GRANT AND SHERMAN; their Campaigns and Generals." By the world-renowned historian, Hon. J. T. Headley, author of Washington and his Generals, Sacred Mountains, etc. Agents are taking as high as thirty subscribers per day, and all agree in pronouncing it the most saleable work they ever took hold of. The people want Headley's illustrated "GRANT AND SHERMAN," etc. For terms and territory, address E. E. SHEAR, No. 8 Montgomery Street, and Box 1,430, San Francisco, California

CONCORD WAGONS AND HARNESS.—The Pacific Concord Carriage Manufactory is prepared to supply the Pacific Coast with Concord wagons and harness made to order. The members comprising this firm have long been in the employ of the celebrated manufacturing house of L. Downing & Son, Concord, New Hampshire; so that parties wishing Concord wagons or harness can obtain just the same quality of article here and save 25 per cent. on their purchase money. We have seen some of their workmanship, and can recommend it to the public Address Beldnke & Co., 820 Folsom street, between Fourth and Fifth.—San Francisco Leader.

DAINTY WORK.—About the daintiest work we ever saw were specimens of hair jewelry at the establishment of Mrs. C. Cook, 645 Clay street, between Montgomery and Kearny streets, yesterday. This lady manufactures all sorts of jewelry—watch-chains, earrings, finger rings, breastpins, and various other kinds of ornaments—from human hair. We witnessed the process of manufacture, and it is intricate and ingenious in the highest degree.—S. F. Examiner.

E GOLDSMITH & Co., at No. 646 Sacramento street, three doors below Kearny, have just received some beautiful new style Garibaldis and Zouave Jackets, that for taste and style are particularly worthy of the attention of our lady readers. They have also a fine assortment of Ladies' Furnishing Goods of the choicest description. French corsets for one dollar. A great variety of French toilet and fancy articles, the newest styles of buttons and dress trimmings, may always be found at Goldsmith's, 646 Sacramento street.

SCHOOL FURNITURE.

RANKIN'S PATENT SCHOOL DESK;
Liquid Slating for Blackboard;
ARITHMETICAL FRAME;
Babbitonian System of Writing—the Best System known.

W. HOLT,
de9 305 Montgomery street, Room No 2.

FRAGRANT SOZODONT FOR THE TEETH

READ the Testimony of a few of the many Eminent Clergymen and their Families of New York city, who, having used the Sozodont for a long time past, are convinced of its excellent and invaluable qualities, and give it their cordial commendation:

Rev. THOMAS DEWITT, Pastor Collegiate Ref. Dutch Church, Lafayette Place.
Rev. J. W. ALEXANDER, D. D., Presbyterian Church, Fifth Avenue.
Rev. J. B. WAKELEY, M. E. City Missionary.
Rev. W. F. MORGAN, D. D., Rector St. Thomas Church, Broadway.
Rev. E. H. CHAPIN. D. D., Pastor Fourth Universalist Church, Broadway.
Rev. SAMUEL COOKE, D.D., Rector St. Bartholomew's Church, Lafayette Place.
Rev. SAMUEL OSGOOD, D.D., Pastor Church of Messiah, Broadway.
Rev. B. M. ADAMS, M. E. Church, Duane street.
Rev. HEMAN BANGS, late Pastor Centenary M. E. Church, Brooklyn.
Rev. W. S. MIKELS, Pastor Baptist Church, Sixteenth street.
Rev. GEO. POTTS, D.D., Pastor Presbyterian Church, University Place.
Rev. E. E. RANKIN, Pastor Presbyterian Church, Forty second street.
Rev. T. E. VERMILYE, D. D., Pastor of Col. Dutch Reformed, Lafayette Place.

FROM G. F. J. COLBURN, DOCTOR DENTAL SURGERY, NEWARK, N. J.

The Popular Dentrifice known as Van Buskirk's "SOZODONT," besides being a very pleasant addition to the toilet, contains ingredients that, if used according to the directions, will prove of the greatest utility to the health of the mouth and teeth.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS!

Sold by all Druggists and Perfumers.

HALL & RUCKEL,
je2 4m NEW YORK.

HALL'S SARSAPARILLA,
YELLOW DOCK AND IODIDE POTASS,
THE
Best Blood Purifier Known.

Persons that are troubled with Rheumatism, Scrofula, Neuralgia, Morbid Liver, Salt Rheum, Pimples, Boils, or any of the many diseases that originate from Impure Blood, would find it much to their advantage to give this justly celebrated article a trial. One or two bottles are quite sufficient to convince the most skeptical of its merits. It contains neither Spirit, ARSENIC nor MERCURY which cannot be truly said of any other preparation called "Sarsaparilla."

SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,
ap7-3m N. W. cor. Sansome and Commercial-streets

BREWSTER & CO.'S
Carriage Manufactory,
372 Broome steet, New York.

We desire to announce to our California friends that we have made extensive arrangements by increasing our works for the coming season, and with a view to
SUPPLYING THE
WANTS OF CALIFORNIA,
will manufacture a style of work particularly adapted to city and country use, and in view of the destructive effects of city railroads on all light work, will give
PARTICULAR ATTENTION
to remedying the evil, and guard against it in work shipped to California.
CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, PHAETONS, COUPES, and Vehicles of every description, of our own manufacture, on hand and made to order.
Orders or communications should be addressed to
BREWSTER & CO.,
Of Broome street,
The firm of Brewster & Baldwin not being in any way connected with
BREWSTER & CO.,
Of No. 372, Broome street,

GUSTAVE A. SCOTT,
(Organist of Cavalry Church,)
TEACHER OF MUSIC.

Residence, "Miel Institute," 55 and 56 South Park.

Class Lessons every day, from 3 till 8 P. M. Terms, $6 per month.
Private Lessons at the Institute or Pupils' Residence, at the usual prices. ja30

TO FARMERS, MINERS, LABORERS

And all those wishing to secure themselves a portion of

THE MOST VALUABLE AGRICULTURAL AND MINERAL LANDS OF MEXICO,

With an equal interest in the Profits of the Plantations of

THE MEXICAN SEA ISLAND COTTON COMPANY.

HOMES FOR THE POOR AND COMPETENCY FOR ALL.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The Mexican Sea Island Cotton Company, having reserved from their final Subscription List a Limited Number of Unassessable Shares, (the remaining shares of the Company having been taken up by the stockholders,) hereby offer the same for sale at the original subscription price of Sixteen Dollars each, payable in cash. Every holder of a share will be entitled to a portion of the Company's lands, having the privilege to settle thereon and participate in all the advantages and profits of the enterprise, and special privileges granted to this Company by an Imperial Decree of Maximilian, dated 9th January, 1866, without being subjected to the conditions of regular Government emigrants, this Company settling upon their own lands, secured by private purchase, and held under indisputable Spanish titles.

Shareholders becoming actual settlers will also have the privilege of any employment upon the Company's plantation. Portions of land will be allotted to settlers, to be held by them until a final division makes it their property.

For the purpose of increasing the value of the Company's land, and to create all the comforts of a home and society, it is the intention of the company to form a regular settlement and to lay out a town adjoining their present plantation into building lots, which will likewise be fairly divided between the 8,000 shares which comprise the total number of the company.

A large number of shareholders will settle upon the company's lands after the rainy season in October next. Many of them may then be employed by the company, or by others able to plant for themselves, or in developing the mineral resources of the adjoining mountains, etc., etc.

Men of all trades and professions, desiring to emigrate to Mexico, will have great advantages as shareholders of this company. They will find the lands already purchased for them at a rate equivalent to a free gift, to be held by each shareholder as his property, protected by the best Spanish titles, and the good will of all political parties now contending for the reins of government; the climate the most salubrious, and the land rich and fertile beyond description; every kind of game abounding; the rivers full of fish and with extensive beds of large oysters; altogether, a country where it is easy to procure a livelihood and the comforts of a home with less labor and less capital than in any other part of the world.

The extensive placer diggings, veins of silver, and solid quartz ledges, which are to be found in the immediate vicinity, and acknowledged to be rich and very extensive, can, by the presence of a number of settlers, be profitably developed. Many of these mines are to be found within the limits of the company's grant. The Sierra Madre or Mother Mountain of Mexico, situated only within about twenty miles from the coast, can be reached and developed with much greater facility than the more remote mines in the interior, and will therefore make the company's lands the most desirable to locate upon.

For Maps and Survey, and further information, apply at the office of the MEXICAN SEA ISLAND COTTON CO., Betge's Book Store, Russ House, Montgomery street, between the hours of 11 and 1 o'clock.

☞ All the assessable stock having been taken up by mutual subscription of stockholders, the company will have no more shares to offer after the limited number of unassessable shares have been placed, and shall prefer to sell these to actual settlers—a single share of which will be sufficient to entitle them to a large portion of the lands.

WE, THE UNDERSIGNED shareholders in the Mexican Sea Island Cotton Company, having investigated and satisfied ourselves of the importance of the enterprise, recommend the same to the public. We are convinced that under the management of the present officers of the company, with their efforts to induce industrious parties to locate upon the land, that the enterprise must become very profitable to all parties interested, and most beneficial to actual settlers.

S. R. Kettlewell, Blacksmith, 261 First street.
W. C. Mead & Son, 224 Sansome street.
M. O'Neil, Proprietor New Branch Hotel, 12 Sutter street.
Winall & Clapp, 505 Market street.
R. A. S. Repiton, M. D., 816 Montgomery street.
Wm. Rudolph, Gunsmith, 216 Pacific street.
G. Burkhardt, Jeweller, No. 209 Pacific street.
E. Keil, East India Tea Co., 631 Washington-st.
P. D. O'Regan, People's Bakery, corner Fourth and Jessie streets.
Wm. Meyer, Provision Dealer, 258 Third street.
John Duff, Painter and Paper Hanger, 642 Clay street.
A. E. Mylott, Importer and Dealer in Cigars and Tobacco, 305 Battery street
M. M. Baldwin, Jeweller, 433 Montgomery-st.
S. Baysen, Hatter, No. 346 Kearny street.
Mathew McCloskey, 644 Howard street.

San Francisco, March 20th, 1866. mar24 1m

MR. AND MRS. COGILL
AND SONS,

Teachers of Dancing,

CONGRESS HALL,

On Bush-st., adjoining Russ House.

SCHOOL.—MONDAYS AND WEDNESDAYS. Ladies at 2 P. M. Gentlemen and Ladies at 7 1-2 P. M. Soirees every Friday Evening. Hall to rent. my5 3m

STOCKDALE HOUSE,
Corner Main and Oak streets, Petaluma.
mar24 6m H. STOCKDALE, Proprietor.

SPRING AND SUMMER STYLE

SILK  HAT,

1866,

INTRODUCED - - - - - - MARCH 3

BY

McGANN & CO.,
FASHIONABLE HATTERS,
No. 654 Washington street,
Two doors below Kearny.

SPRING AND SUMMER STYLES.—Silk, Felt, Beaver, and other HATS for sale at the lowest prices.

CAPS of every description, suitable for all ages, made to order.

McGANN & CO., being experienced and skilled in all the branches of the manufacture of Hats, feel confident of giving entire satisfaction to their patrons. Every description of Hats and Caps made to order.

Remember, McGANN & CO., Practical Hatters, 654 Washington street, two doors below the Plaza.

☞ New Goods by every steamer. mar10

THE NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE INSURANCE CO
OF LONDON AND EDINBURGH.
ESTABLISHED, 1809.

Capital, - - - - - -	$10,000,000
Accumulated Funds, March 6, 1865, -	11,522,500
Annual Income, - - - -	2,827,290
Deposit in California under State law, -	$75,000

GENERAL AGENCY FOR THE PACIFIC STATES AND TERRITORIES,

No. 422 California street, - - - San Francisco

Insurances effected at the lowest rates on buildings of both Brick and Wood, throughout the State, whether occupied as Stores, Dwellings, or Warehouses, together with their contents.

Also, VESSELS in port, with or without their Cargoes.

Also, QUARTZ MILLS and MACHINERY.

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN immediately on adjustment.

WM. H. TILLINGHAST, Agent.
au19

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS

CREATE A HEALTHY APPETITE!

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa and Constipation.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Invigorate the System and enliven the mind.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Overcome the effects of Drunkenness and Late Hours.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure all Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Are Palatable to the Taste.

They are the
BEST BITTERS IN THE MARKET,

And when once used will always be called for again.

They are made in the most careful manner

From Pure Old Wheat Whisky, Medicated from

Roots and Herbs

Especially adapted for the cure of all Stomachic Diseases and Liver Complaints.

Try Them and You will be Satisfied.

For sale everywhere by Druggists and Liquor Dealers or by

N. B. JACOBS & CO.,
423 Front street,
fe11-6m San Francisco

CALIFORNIA
Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS.CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA....CAPT W. BROMLEY.
" JULIA.....CAPT. E. CONCKLIN.

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.

Steamships AJAX, PACIFIC, ORIZABA, CALIFORNIA, ACTIVE, and SENATOR, leave as advertised, for Honolulu, Portland, Oregon, New Westminster, British Columbia, Victoria, (V. I.,) Santa Barbara, San Pedro, and San Diego.

Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.

mar26 B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

OCCIDENTAL
INSURANCE COMPANY,
S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

CHRISTOPHER CHRISTIANSEN, President.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary. mh25 tf

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York. my25

AYER'S
AGUE CURE,

FOR THE SPEEDY AND Certain Cure of Intermittent Fever, or Chills and Fever, Remittent Fever, Chill Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical Headache or Bilious Headache, and Bilious Fevers; indeed, for the whole class of diseases originating in biliary derangement, caused by the malaria of miasmatic countries.

This remedy has rarely failed to cure the severest cases of Chills and Fever, and it has this great advantage over other Ague medicines, that it subdues the complaint without injury to the patient. It contains no quinine or other deleterious substance, nor does it produce quinism or any injurious effect whatever. Shaking brothers of the army and the West, try it and you will endorse these assertions.

Prepared by J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by

CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco,
my26 2m and all Dealers.

DRY GOODS.

BARGAINS

IN

BLACK SILKS! And still a FEW DRESSES LEFT OF THAT BEAUTIFUL AND MUCH-ADMIRED DRESS GOODS,

"SUNBURST!"

S. MOSGROVE,
222 Third street, Colton's Building.
my23 tf

THE ONLY LIVING ASTROLOGER,

PROF. COHEN,

530 California street, San Francisco,

THROUGH HIS NATURAL GIFT, can give correct information on the Past, Present and Future, on any subject that may be required so as to avoid trouble. As evidence of his reputation, he has received over 18,000 consultations during his residence of six years in San Francisco! Consultation fee, $2. By letter, $3. Letter box, 104. It is not necessary to give the age. Office, 530 California street. Hours from 8 A. M. to 11 P. M. mar15 3m

COME AND SEE ME!

DR. JOHN HEALD,

DENTIST,

HAS REMOVED TO THE
CORNER KEARNY AND CALIFORNIA STS.
Where he will be pleased to see all old friends, and plenty of new ones. Every variety of Dental Operations performed in the best manner, and at prices that shall suit all persons. ☞ ENTRANCE ON CALIFORNIA SREET. ap28-3m

AMERICAN HOTEL,
Main street, - - - Petaluma.
mar24 6m EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors.

FURNITURE
AND BEDDING!

LARGEST STOCK!
LATEST STYLES!
The Best Workmanship,
AND LOWEST PRICES!
AT
Goodwin & Co.'s
FURNITURE WARE-ROOMS,
Nos. 508, 510, 518 and 528 Washington-st.
ja16 SAN FRANCISCO.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,
IMPORTERS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS
IN FINE CLOTHING,
AND
Gent's Furnishing Goods,
TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,
Nos. 200 and 202 Montgomery street,
Corner of Bush, - San Francisco.

JOS. WINTERBURN & CO.

J. WINTERBURN, V. A. TORRAS, W. HOFFSCHNEIDER.
(Successors to W. P. Harrison.)

Printers and Electrotypers,
413 TO 417 CLAY ST., (Below Sansome.)
SAN FRANCISCO.

ALL KINDS OF JOB PRINTING
Neatly and Promptly Executed.

ELECTROTYPING
Done at the shortest notice.

Stamps of all kinds made to order.

Printing in Spanish, French, German and Italian Languages, executed with correctness.

A "Mammoth" and two No. 3 Hand Presses FOR SALE very cheap. fe3 3m

SMOKE !

THE PATENT

RUSSIAN

CIGARETTES,

MANUFACTURED BY

GIBB & STAHL,
120 KEARNY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.
☞ For sale at all Cigar Stores. ap28 3m

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,

No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,

SAN FRANCISCO.

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Metal Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship-Work of all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.

All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.

Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.

JOHN P. GALLAGHER,
JOSEPH H. WEED,
mar10 3m SAMUEL WHITE.

MONEY TO LOAN!

MONEY TO LOAN

On City Real Estate, Dwellings, Factories, Shipping and Merchandise, for such time as may be agreed for. Deposits received in small or large sums, at interest, by the CALIFORNIA BUILDING, LOAN AND SAVINGS BANK,
California street, (one door from Sansome street.)
my5 3m THOMAS MOONEY, President.

UNITED STATES STAMP DUTIES.

AS AMENDED MARCH 3, 1865.

CAREFULLY REVISED AND CORRECTED FOR THE CALIFORNIAN.

PENALTIES.

Penalty for making, signing, or issuing any instrument, document, or paper of any kind whatsoever, without the same being duly stamped, for denoting the duty hereby imposed thereon, $50; and the instrument shall be deemed invalid and of no effect; or for counterfeiting stamps or dies, $1,000, and imprisonment to hard labor not exceeding five years. For making, signing, issuing, accepting, or paying any bill of exchange, draft, order, or note without stamp, $200. For selling proprietary cosmetics, matches, photographs, etc., without proper stamps, $10. For removing stamps on these articles, $50.

STAMP DUTIES.

Agreement Contract or Appraisement, not otherwise specified, each sheet or piece of paper	$0 05
Assignment of Mortgage, Lease, or Policy of Insurance, same as original instrument. Assignment of Patent Right	05
Bank Checks, Drafts or orders, exceeding $10, at sight or on demand	02
Bills of Exchange, (inland,) or draft otherwise than at sight or on demand, or promissory note except bank notes for circulation,) or any memorandum, check or receipt, or any evidence of an amount of money payable on demand or at a designated time, for a sum not exceeding $100	05
Every additional $100, or fractional part	05
Bill of Exchange, (foreign,) or letter of credit, drawn in, but payable out of the U. S., if drawn singly, the same rates as inland bills of exchange, or promissory notes. If drawn in sets of three or more, for each bill of the set, where the sum shall not exceed $100 or its equivalent in any foreign currency in which such bill may be expressed, according to the standard value fixed by U. S.	02
Every additional $100, or fractional part	02
Bill of Lading, or receipt for any merchandise or effects, to be exported to a foreign port or place	10
Bill of Sale, conveying any ship or vessel, or any part thereof, where the consideration does not exceed $500	50
For every additional $500, or fractional part thereof	50
Bill of Sale of personal property other than ships or vessels	05
Bond, indemnifying any person for the payment of money, where the amount recoverable is $1,000 or less	50
For every additional $1,000, or fractional part thereof	50
Bond for the due performance of the duties of any office	1 00
Bond of any other description, except such as may be required in legal proceedings, or used in connection with mortgage deeds, and not otherwise charged in this schedule	25
Charter-Party, ship, vessel or steamer, not over 150 tons, $1; 150 to 300 tons, $3; 300 to 600 tons, $5; over 600 tons	10 00
Certificate of Profits, or any memorandum showing an interest in property, or accumulations of any incorporated company, for a sum not less than $10 nor exceeding $50	10
Exceeding $50 and not $1,000	25
For every additional $1,000 or fract'al part	25
Certificate of Damage, and all other certificates or documents issued by Port Wardens or Marine Surveyors, or other persons acting as such	25
Certificate of Deposit, not exceeding the sum of $100, 2 cents; exceeding $100	05
Certificate of stock in any incorporated comp'y,	25
Certificates, other than specified	05
Contract, broker's note or memorandum of sale of goods, stocks, bonds, exchange notes of hand, real estate, or other description of property, issued by any person acting as a broker, for each note or memorandum of sale	10
Deed or Conveyance of Real Estate, value not over $500, 50c.; every additional $500, or fractional part thereof	50
Entry of Goods at any custom-house, value not over $100, 25c.; over $100 and not over $500, 50c.; over $500	1 00
For the withdrawal of goods from bonded warehouse	50
Gauger's Returns, quarterly, for quantity not over 500 galls. gross, 10c.; over 500 galls. gr.	25
Insurance (Marine, Inland and Fire) policy or renewal, premium not over $10, 10c.; $10 to $50, 25c.; over $50, 50c.; Life policy, under $1,000, 25c.; $1,000 to $5,000, 50c; over $5,000.	1 00
Lease of lands or tenements, rent not over $300 per annum, 50c.; each add'l $200 or fraction.	50
Manifest, cargo to foreign port, registered tonnage not over 300 tons, $1; over 300 and not over 600, $3; over 600 tons	5 00
Measurer's Returns, for quantity not over 1,000 bushels, 10c.; over 1,000 bushels	25
Mortgage, Trust deed, or personal bond for payment of money, $100 to $500, 50c.; each additional $500	50
Each assignment of mortgage, lease or policy of insurance, or renewal of the same, is subject to same duties as the original.
Medicines or Preparations, Perfumery and Cosmetics—Every package, box, bottle, etc., retailing for 25c. or less	01
Each additional 25c. or fractional part thereof, up to $1, 1c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof, over $1	02
Playing Cards—Each pack, price not over 18c., 2c.; from 18 to 25c., 4c.; 25 to 50c., 10c.; 50c. to $1, 15c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof	05
Photographs, Ambrotypes, Daguerreotypes or Sun Pictures, upon each, retailing for 25c. or less, 2c.; over 25 and not over 50c., 5c.; over 50c. and not over $1, 3c.; each additional $1 or fractional part thereof	05
Passage Ticket to foreign port, cost not over $35, 50c.; over $35 and not over $50, $1; every additional $50 or fractional part thereof	1 00
Power of Attorney to sell or transfer stock, scrip, bonds, or collect dividends or int. thereon	25
To vote for officers of incorporated comp'y or society not religious, charitable or literary, or public cemeteries	10
To receive or collect rents	25
To sell, convey, rent or lease real estate	1 00
For any other purpose	50
Probate of Will, or letters of administration, estate not over $2,000, $1; each additional $1,000 or fractional part thereof	50
Protest of note, bill, acceptance, check or draft,	25
Promissory Note—See Bill of Exchange, inland.
Receipt for payment of money or debt over $20, not being for satisfaction of mortgage, judgment or decree of Court, and receipt for the delivery of property	02
Warehouse, for property stored, not over $500 in value, 10c.; $500 to $1,000, 20c.; every additional $1,000	10
For any goods held in storage, and not otherwise provided for	25
Weigher's Returns, up to 5,000 lbs., 10c.; over 5,000 lbs	25
Writs, or original process, for commencing suit in Court of record, and in Court not of record, when amount claimed is $100 or over, except before Justices of the Peace, or in court of no greater jurisdiction as to damages, or in suit commenced by the United States or any State	50
Upon every confession of judgment, or cognovit, for $100 or over, except where tax for a writ has been paid	50
Writs or process on appeal from Justice's courts and other courts of inferior jurisdiction to courts of record	50
Warrant of distress—rent claimed under $100, 25c.; over $100	50

GREAT ATTRACTION!

THE FASHIONS ARE ALL THE GO!

Lamott, - - - Hatter,

IS NOW THE MAN! HE IS READY WITH HIS BROADWAY STYLES FOR THE Spring of 1866.

JUST SEE THE DIFFERENCE between his styles and the others in this city. There is style about his Hats that does not appear in others.

FACTS ARE STUBBORN THINGS!

LAMOTT, 227 Russ Block, is bound to be the LEADER of Fashions.

LAMOTT'S SPRING STYLES

show taste. It is a good thing that you have a man among you who is willing to take a stand outside of others, to introduce a style that is new, and not follow in the wake of others that are about one year behind the times.

GO TO HIS STORE FOR A HAT,

No. 220 Montgomery street,

and get something that is new. mar22-3m

HEUSTON,

HASTINGS

& CO.

The Fashionable Clothiers

OF

SAN FRANCISCO,

Have established a TRUNK DEPOT in the basement of their Store equal to any in New York, and prices 20 per cent. lower than any other House in the city.

mar17-3m

BALD-HEADED GENTLEMEN,

Who frequent the Parquet of Theatres, exciting by their grotesque appearance the merriment of Ladies in the Dress Circle, would profit by using Little & Co.'s Chinese

Vegetable Hair Restorative.

The proprietors of this astonishing remedy for Baldness, confident of its infallibility, agree to refund the purchase money in every instance where its use for three months, according to directions, is unattended with success. Price per jar, $2.50.

Manufactured by Little & Co.; sold by

CHAS. E. HINCKLEY & CO.,

Chemists and Druggists,

Southeast corner of Clay and Kearny streets,

ap21-1m San Francisco.

BRITISH PERIODICALS.

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW (Conservative.)
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW (Whig.)
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW (Radical.)
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW (Free Church.)
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE (Tory.)

The interest of these Periodicals to American readers is rather increased than diminished by the articles they contain on our late Civil War, and though sometimes tinged with prejudice, they may still, considering their great ability, and the different stand-points from which they are written, be read and studied with advantage by the people of this country, of every creed and party.

TERMS FOR 1866.

For any one of the Reviews, per annum	$4
For any two of the Reviews, per annum	7
For any three of the Reviews, per annum	10
For all four of the Reviews, per annum	12
For Blackwood's Magazine, per annum	4
For Blackwood and one Review, per annum	7
Blackwood and any two of the Reviews, per an.	10
Blackwood and three of the Reviews, per annum.	13
Blackwood and the four Reviews, per annum	15

CLUBS.

A discount of twenty per cent. will be allowed to clubs of four or more persons. Thus, four copies of Blackwood, or of one Review, will be sent to one address for $12 80. Four copies of the four Reviews and Blackwood, for $18, and so on.

POSTAGE.

When sent by mail, the Postage to any part of the Union will be but Twenty-four Cents a year for Blackwood, and but Eight Cents a year for each of the Reviews.

REDUCED PRICES FOR PREVIOUS YEARS.

Subscribers may obtain the Reprints immediately preceding 1866, as follows, viz:

Blackwood from September, 1861, to December, 1865, inclusive, at the rate of $2 50 a year.

The North British from January, 1865, to December, 1865, inclusive; the Edinburgh and the Westminster from April, 1864, to December, 1865, inclusive, and the London Quarterly for the year 1865, at the rate of $1 50 a year for each or any Review.

A few copies yet remain of all the Four Reviews for 1863 at $1 a pot, or $1 50 for any one.

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., Publishers,
38 Walker street, New York.

VINCENT'S COLD PREVENTIVE.

A Sure Cure

FOR COUGHS, COLDS, BRONCHITIS DYSPEPSIA, CONSUMPTION, NIGHT SWEATS, AND PULMONARY DISEASES.

Read the following:

REMARKABLE CURE.

San Francisco, September 5th, 1865.

I desire to make known the fact that I was afflicted with a very bad cough for fifteen years, and, during this time, used everything which I could hear of without getting the better of my disease, until I tried Dr. D. B. Vincent's Cold Preventative or Cough Mixture, which cured me sound and well.

NEWTON MOORE.

This is to certify that my wife has been troubled with indigestion for nearly eighteen months, and, by using one bottle of Dr. Vincent's medicine, has been completely cured.

San Francisco, April 6th, 1866.

JOHNSON J. THOMAS.

San Francisco, July 17th, 1865.

I hereby certify that, having had a Cough some five months since, which had troubled me for two years, and I was so bad that I was able to do but little labor of any kind, and could not walk fast without putting myself out of breath. I was so far gone that I had chills over me and night sweats, and had what other physicians called disease of the lungs. I had been doctoring a part of the time for the last year, when I saw Dr. D. B. Vincent, and he gave me a small vial of medicine, which relieved me of the chills and night sweats, and the cough entirely went away, and I do not take cold so easy, and my health is much better in every respect. My appetite is much better; and I heartily recommend all others who are afflicted with similar complaints to him.

JOHN O'NEILL, National Hotel.

The above named diseases nearly all originate from the same or similar causes, and

THE COLD PREVENTIVE

will cure all of them. It is a sure cure for Dyspepsia. Price, 50 cents per bottle,

D. B. VINCENT, M. D.,

PHYSICIAN AND OCULIST,

Treats all diseases successfully on the Electric system. Particular attention paid to treating all Diseases of the Eyes, Rheumatism, Paralysis, etc. Cures guaranteed, or all moneys refunded—in most cases even where others fail.

☞ OFFICE—No. 103 Kearny street, first floor, where he can be consulted at all hours, unless professionally engaged. All orders from the country promptly attended to. ap7

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL

Confectioners,

111 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter.

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double-refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge. fe24-3m

OCCIDENTAL HOMESTEAD Association,

OFFICE, - - - 305 MONTGOMERY STREET.

CAPITAL STOCK, $33,660.

102 SHARES.....$330 EACH.

THIS ASSOCIATION was formed to enable its members to obtain desirable homestead lots in this city at a cheap and easy rate, paying for the same by regular monthly instalments.

For this purpose they have purchased Blocks 409, 500, and 501, in the Western Addition to this city, bounded by Devisadero, Pine, Broderick and Clay streets.

Subscribers will pay an initiation fee of $5 on each share taken, to form a fund for defraying current expenses, and $11 per month for thirty months, commencing in April, 1866.

The property is within three blocks of the

TURK STREET RAILROAD,

IS NEARLY ALL ON THE GRADE,

and is most desirably located for Homestead purposes.

It is directly east from the lands of the California Association.

The property has been purchased on very reasonable terms, and offers a rare opportunity for investment.

A number of fine houses are in process of erection, and streets are being graded near this property, which will greatly increase its value.

When twelve monthly payments have been made, the property will be divided among the members in the usual manner, and each shareholder will receive a contract for a deed to the lot or lots to which he may be entitled, and have the privilege of taking immediate possession of the same.

The lots average 27 feet in front by 120 feet in depth. The whole amount due upon any lot may be paid at any time, and discount at the rate of one and one-half per cent. per month will be deducted therefrom.

Persons wishing to visit the lands of this Association will take the Turk street cars to Devisadero street, and thence go northerly along Devisadero to Pine street.

Twenty thousand dollars of the capital stock is taken, and the books are open for subscription to the balance at the office of the Secretary, where the Official Map of the Association can be seen, and full particulars obtained.

The Title to this Property is Perfect.

J. S. LUTY, Secretary,

Office, 305 Montgomery street, corner of Pine,

my19 3m Rooms 2 and 6.

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME!

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,

New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17

Have received a Large Stock of

GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING

—AND—

FURNISHING GOODS,

Which they are selling

AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.

ja1 624 Clay street, San Francisco.

PACIFIC OCEAN HOUSE,

SANTA CRUZ, CAL.

THIS NEW AND COMMODIOUS HOTEL, built and furnished in accordance with the most modern and improved plans, and with a view to the comfort and convenience of its patrons, is now open for the reception of guests.

To those who have visited Santa Cruz, it is unnecessary to speak of its beauties and its natural advantages over all other places of Summer Resort.

To those who have not, the Proprietor can only say COME AND JUDGE FOR YOURSELVES—giving all who may come the assurance that his earnest endeavors shall be to make the Hotel, in all its appointments, equal to the surroundings of this delightful Sea side Resort.

GEO. T. BROMLEY,

Santa Cruz, April 4, 1866. Proprietor.

GEO. P. KIMBALL & CO.,

Carriage Manufacturers,

CORNER MARKET AND FOURTH STREETS,

San Francisco.

GEORGE P. KIMBALL.....W. H. KNIGHT.

We have always on hand a large assortment of Coaches, Carriages, Buggies, Thoroughbrace Wagons, Express, Grocery, Soda and Butcher Wagons and Lumber Gears.

CARRIAGES AND WAGONS

Of every description made to order and at shortest notice. Particular attention paid to the building of Wide Track Buggies and Wagons with Brakes, for mountain use. Orders from the country promptly attended to.

N. B. Kimball's Patent Goose Neck Trucks on hand.

mar3 3m

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE - - - - - - - - PROPRIETOR.
C. L. GRAVES - - - - - - - STAGE MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON - - - - - - - TREASURER.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON AND EVENING, JUNE 2, 1866.

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Dress Circle and Orchestra, - - - - - - - $1 00
Parquet, - - - - - - - - - 50
Upper Circle, - - - - - - - - - 25

Mr. John McCullough,

SUPPORTED BY THE LEGITIMATE COMPANY, will appear in the play entitled

The Three Guardsmen.

NEXT WEEK:

EDWIN FORREST

WILL PLAY

THE BROKER OF BOGATA,
MONDAY, TUESDAY, AND WEDNESDAY
MACBETH, - - - - - - - THURSDAY
OTHELLO, - - - - - - - - FRIDAY

Reserved Seats.....$1 50
Dress Circle and Parquet..... 1 00
Upper Circle..... 50

THE PEOPLE ARE WILD

For Excitement and Fun!

DR. H. A. BENTON will assist them, by an exhibition of Laughing Gas, Pscychology,

MESMERISM, ETC.,
AT PLATT'S HALL, for a few evenings, commencing
SATURDAY EVENING.....JUNE 2,
Admittance, 50 cents; Children, 25 cents.

NATURE UNVEILED,
AT THE
PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
ja27-tf between California and Pine.

WONDERS OF WONDERS!
TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE
Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
ja27-tf between California and Pine.

LOW PRICES
IN
Gents' Furnishing Goods,
AT
WARD'S SHIRT STORES,
323 MONTGOMERY STREET,
AND CORNER OF MARKET AND THIRD STREETS,
SAN FRANCISCO.

P. S.—Printed directions for self-measurement for Shirts and Price Lists of Goods sent free by mail.
ap21 3m

SPRING MEDICINE.

PURIFY THE BLOOD

AND

Constitution,

WITH

LE BOYEN'S

SARSAPARILLA,

YELLOW DOCK,

IODINE ALTERATIVE.

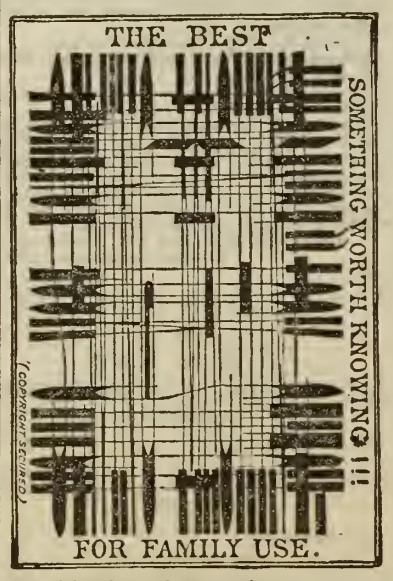
CRANE & BRIGHAM, Agents,
my19 1m SAN FRANCISCO

ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

GEO. FELIX BENKERT'S

FIRST

GRAND CONCERT,



ON

Thursday Evening, June 7th,

On which occasion he will be assisted by
SIGNORINA ELVIRA BRAMBILLA,
MADAM LIZZIE NORTHRUP,
MR. F. BUCH, (Violin,)
MR. A. DESVACHEZ, (Violoncello,)
AND
MR. RUDOLPH HEROLD.....Director.

Concert to commence at precisely 8 o'clock.

Tickets of Admission.....One Dollar.
Reserved seats, fifty cents extra.
Can be secured three days before the Concert, at the Box Office of the Academy.

To decipher, lower the top of the paper to an angle of forty-five degrees; then close one eye, and read at your ease.

NEW BOOKS, JUST RECEIVED
AT
A. Roman & Co.'s.

Ænone—A Tale of Slave Life in Rome.
The Queen Mother and Rosamond. By Swinburne.
May and December. By Mrs. Hubbard.
The Gold Brick. By Mrs. Ann H. Stephens.
Leighton Court. By Charles Kingsley.
Only a Woman's Heart. By Ada Clare.
The Toilers of the Sea. By Victor Hugo.
The Adventures of Reuben Davidger.
Citoyenne Jacqueline — A Woman's Lot in the French Revolution. By Sarah Tytler. 12mo.
The Story of Kenneth. By Bayard Taylor.
St. Martin's Summer. By Anne H. M. Brewster.
The Fortune Seeker. By Mrs. Southworth.
Six Months Among the Charities of Europe. By John De Liefde.
Palfrey's History of New England. 2 vols. 12mo.
Life of Robert Owen. 16mo.
The Song Book. By John Hullah.
The Republic of Plato. Translated by Vaughan & Davis.
St. Martin's Eve. By Mrs. Henry Wood.
Walter Goring. By Annie Thomas.
Cherry and Violet. A Tale of the Great Plague. By the author of May Powell. 16mo.
Geological Sketches. By Professor Agassiz.
The Phenomena of Plant Life. By L. H. Grindon.
Lucy Arlyn. By J. T. Trowbridge.
The War of the Rebellion. By H. S. Foote.
Letters of Life. By Mrs. L. H. Sigourney.
Stonewall Jackson. A Military Biography. Philip E. Cooke
Eccentric Personages. By W. Russell, L. L. D.
Broken to Harness. A Story of English Dramatic Life. By Yates.
The Lost Tales of Miletus. By Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED BY EVERY STEAMER.

ENGLISH BOOKS IMPORTED DIRECT TO ORDER, WITH PROMPTNESS AND AT MODERATE PRICES.

PUBLIC AND PRIVATE LIBRARIES SUPPLIED

A. ROMAN & CO.,
417 and 419 Montgomery street.
my19 San Francisco.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S
SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

BATHS.
Dr. Bourne's, (Medical,) 10 Post, near Montgomery.

APOTHECARY.
George H. Clapp, corner Sixth and Howard.

BUSINESS AND PROPERTY AGENCY.
S. P. Whitman, 313 Montgomery st.

BOWLING ALLEYS.
Wholers & Sturke. Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.)

BOOKS.
A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street.
I. M. Wentworth & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine st.

CLOTHS, CASSIMERES, AND TRIMMINGS.
E. Weill & Sons, removed to 616 Sacramento street.

COLLECTOR.
B. Pulverman, 526 Montgomery—Office hours, 1 to 3 P.M.

CLOTHING.
H. M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.
Dell, Cranna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.

COPPER CRUSHER AND SAMPLER.
S. W. Howland, 24 California street, (at Thomas' Mill.)

DRESS TRIMMINGS, WORSTEDS, ETC.
Mrs. Norcross, 5 Montgomery street (Masonic Temple.)

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Dr. A. N. Clark (late Knowles & Clark) removed to 410 Kearny.
Whitcomb & Dyer, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.
Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.

DRUGGISTS.
R. H. McDonald & Co., (Wholesale) Sansome, cor. Pine.
Shepardson & Gates, (successors to R. Hall & Co.,) corner Sansome and Commercial.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.
Cal. Collegiate Institute, Miss M. Lammond, 68 Silver.
Miel Institute, Miss Florence James, 55 South Park.
Pacific Business College, 751 Market street, above Third.

FURNITURE.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
J. Peirce, 415, 417 and 419 California street.

GROCERS.
N. Boschen, corner Fifth and Minna.
Slosson & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
P. J. Flynn, corner Howard and Eighth streets.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market
W. M. Noble & Co., cor Howard and Twelfth streets.

HATTER.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street,

HOTELS.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.

INSURANCE.
Bigelow & Bro., N.W. cor. Montgomery and Sacramento.
Mutual Life Ins. Co., H. S. Homans, Agent, 609 Clay.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Ag'ts, 206 Front, cor Cal.
National Ins. Co., N.E. cor. Montgomery and California.
Occidental Ins. Co., S.W. cor. Montgom'y and California.
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

MAPS.
Pacific Map Depot, A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.

MERCHANT TAILORS.
J. H. Hammond removed to 328 Montgomery.

MILLINERS.
Mrs. Wheeler, Popper's building, Third, near Mission.

PAPER HANGINGS, WINDOW SHADES, ETC
H. Ward, 132 Third street.

PIANO SCHOOL.
Mr. Gustave A. Scott, at Miel Institute, 55 South Park.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
M. Gray, 613 Clay street.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

REAL ESTATE.
Fifteen-dollar lots for sale by H. S. Brown, S.E. corner of Battery and Commercial streets.

RESTAURANTS.
Bivalve, Nolting & Spreen, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Eureka, C. H. Brickwedell & Co., Clay, near Montgom'y
Market, by Felix and Gustave Besson, 520 Merchant.
Philadelphia, Jacob Weiss, 308 Montgomery street.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Saulmann's, 506 Montgomery street.

SALOONS.
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N E cor Third and Howard
Ghio's 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
Hunter & Myers, 332 Montgomery street.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street.
Sun Burst, Carolin & McArdle, cor. Second and Market
Coates & Henderson, 37 Sutter street.

SCALES.
Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scales 324 Montgomery street.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, J. W. J. Pearson, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento

TOYS, ETC.
Feldhush & Co., 207 Montgomery street.
A. Kohler, 620 Washington street.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery

CARPETS.

Removal! Removal!

KENNEDY & BELL

HAVE REMOVED TO

BUSH STREET,

Below Montgomery,

Store lately occupied by the Franco-American Commercial Company.

ap21-3m

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S
Through Line to New York.

CARRYING THE U. S. MAIL!

Leave Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.

On the 16th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.

On the 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.

When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 19th connects with French Transatlantic company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamer for Southampton, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America.

Departure of 30th connects with English steamer for Tumaco, the port of the new mines.

STEAMERS FOR JUNE:

The following steamships will be despatched from San Francisco on the date given:

JUNE 9th, - - - - - GOLDEN AGE
Captain E. S. Farnsworth.
(Connecting with the COSTA RICA, Captain Bradbury.)
JUNE 18, - - - - - - CONSTITUTION
Captain F. R. Baby.
(Connecting with the NEW YORK, Captain Gray.)
JUNE 30th, - - - - - GOLDEN CITY,
Captain Watkins.
(Connecting with ARIZONA, Captain Maury.)

An experienced Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

Cabin Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Messrs. Wells, Fargo & Co.

The steamer will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

A CARD.

D. WARREN SMITH

Has commenced his business of canvassing the city for subscribers for

MIDDLETON'S OIL PORTRAITS,

the series of which embrace

WASHINGTON AND MARTHA, LINCOLN, WEBSTER, CLAY, DOUGLAS, GRANT, SHERMAN, and JACKSON.

Mr. Smith will call at the business places of our city, and at dwellings at reasonable hours, and exhibit some of the above beautiful Oil Portraits. He hopes to meet with success, as the Pictures are worthy a place in every drawing-room in our country. AGENT'S HEADQUARTERS,

JOHN MIDDLETON & SONS,
my26-2m 404 Montgomery street.

THE BANK OF CALIFORNIA,
SAN FRANCISCO, MAY 9, 1866.

NOTICE.

At a meeting of the Stockholders of this Bank, held on the 5th inst., it was resolved to increase the Capital Stock of the corporation to $5,000,000, gold, to take effect on

THE FIRST DAY OF JULY NEXT,

and the President and Cashier were authorized to receive subscriptions for $2,000,000 of said capital stock. Parties desirous of subscribing will make application at the Bank, either personally or by letter, when further details will be given.

D. O. MILLS, President.
my20-1m W. C. RALSTON, Cashier.

PISCO!

G. & F. MARTELL'S COGNAC;
JAMES HENNESSY'S Cognac;
STEAMBOAT GIN;
OLD TOM GIN;
IRISH WHISKY,
from Bond direct.

For sale by V. SQARZA, my28 Liedesdorff street, San Francisco.

BOWMAN & CO.,
Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware,
mar24-6m Main street, Petaluma.

The Californian.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME V., No 3.
OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, JUNE 9, 1866.

TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE
50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

PROSE.

Railway Reading.—By "Bret."
Geueral Winfield Scott.
Mr. Thompson's Umbrella.
Mrs. Brown Loses a Dog.
The Conundrum in the Country.
The Rival Antiquaries.
Romance of Royalty.
Evenings from Home.
The Last Banquet of the Girondists.
Mme. George Sand.
Reminiscences of Beau Brummel

AMUSEMENTS:

Theatrical Events, and Announcements.

POETRY:

Forbidden.—By Emilie Lawson.
Aspiration.—By "Ingle."
Abraham Davenport.

[For the Californian.]

FORBIDDEN.

THERE flows a river by my very door,
Oft times I wander by this silvery stream;
Delightful blossoms flutter on its shore,
And when they bloom—I dream.

It feeds the frail bud trembling on its brink,
I am a-hunger—and its waves are bread;
The chaffering birds dip thanklessly, and drink,
I thirst, while they are fed.

I never cull the simplest leaf nor flower,
Though day by day they call with odorous speech;
Though flaming petals woo me every hour,
Tempting my wishful reach.

My brain is aching with the wildest pain,
A blissful balm goes rippling by my side;
But the cool waters murmur all in vain,
All vainly calls the tide.

Upon its banks the softest mosses grow,
My feet are sore, and weary is my breast;
Rest at my very feet! and yet to know
I never may find rest.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 5, 1866. EMILIE LAWSON.

MRS. BROWN LOSES A DOG.

I DID say as I never would have a dog for to darken my doors, but when Mrs. Brown brought it in I must say I never see such a beauty, as is called Sikey, though its wrote on the collar "Physic," as plain as can be, but I suppose that's what it is in French, where it come from.

I never see a lovelier coat than the creetur had got, as soft as silk, with a eye as seemed for to beam on you, as the sayin' is. I never did see such a dog in a house; no trouble no ways, exept a nasty 'abit of gnawin' things, as I very soon cured it on.

I'm sure that dog know'd what I was a thinkin' about, with a temper like a lamb, or else our cat never would have took to it as she did, though a mother herself through me 'avin' saved two beautiful kittens, one a tabby and the other a black, as is both promised, for parties as knows me is glad to have a cat out of my house.

I'm sure the way as that dog took to them kittens if he'd been their own uncle he couldn't have been kinder, though at times more free than welcome, as the sayin' is, through a takin' them out of the basket whenever the mother had turned her back, as was a good mother I must say.

Brown was always at me about not overfeedin' that dog, and I'm sure I never did, not as he were a greedy dog, nor ever touched the cat's dinner, as I considers honorable, and might make many a Christian blush, as I've knowed take mean advantages at my own table in helpin' theirselves to the best, a-thinkin' me to be unawares.

The trouble as I took with washin' and combin' that dog nobody wouldn't believe; he knowed Friday by his instinct, and would hide in the copper-hole, for I must say as I did take a pride in his coat, as shone like silver, and not a tangle in it, and wouldn't have trusted him to our Liza, as is too hasty in her ways.

Well, I must say as I was anxious about the animal, for Brown was a-talkin' constant about that dog bein' lost, "For," says he, "there money in him." I says, "Well, then, if he should be lost through my fault I'll find him."

I don't think it was three weeks after as I'd said it when one day I wanted to go as far as the Wandsworth-road, and took the dog with me, through a-thinkin' as the poor thing were a pinin' for exercise.

I'm sure I can't a-bear lookin' after a dog, for turnin' round constant don't suit me, but I'd had it out once or twice quite safe, and so hadn't no fears, and certainly he followed beautiful, till all of a minute I looked round and he was gone. I stared again, for I thought he must have flowed away, and then I says to myself, "He's been and run into a shop or somewheres." So I stops and calls "Sikey, Sikey," till parties asked me what I'd lost, and one young chap with his impudence told me I'd better whistle for him. I'm sure I was up and down that road two good hours, but not a vestment of him could I see, and as it was a-gettiu' dusk I give him up. I could have cried when I got home, and Brown was put out, for we really felt quite lonesome without the poor thing.

I says, "I'll have bills and offer five shillins reward." He says, "Don't be a fool, you'll never get him back for five pounds."

I says, "If I know'd he was that valuable, he never should have moved but with a collar and string."

Well, there, he was gone more than ten days when I was a-mentionin' of my loss to Mr. Rawlinson, as keeps the "Risin' Sun," as says to me, "Why ever don't you apply to the bishop for him."

I says, "What's the bishop got to do with lost dogs?" "Oh," he says, "everythin.' Why, bless you, he's got Acts of Parliaments for 'em, and there ain't a dog-stealer in London as don't quake at his name."

I says, "Wherever is he to be found, bless him?" Says he, "In Bond street, that's where he's bishop of.

I says, "Oh, indeed; but," I says, "won't it be a liberty in me for to go and speak to a bishop about my dog, as is unbeknown to his lordship?" He says, "Not at all."

"I says, "What's the number?" Says he, "Ask any one when you gets there, everybody knows him and every one looks up to him." I says, "I'm there the first thing to-morrow."

I didn't say nothin' to Brown, through wantin' for to surprise him in bringin' the dog back with me, but off I went by the West-end 'bus, as put me down in Piccadilly, and soon found my way to Bond street, as I walks up till I meets a policeman, as I asked for to direct me to the bishop's. "Bishop of what?" says he.

"Why, of Bond street, of course," says I. "Oh," he says, "there it is, and him a-standin' in the doorway."

A noble figger with a apron on like the driven snow, as I've heerd say bishops always wears. Of all the kind parties as ever I see he was the kindest. He felt for me like a father over that dog.

"Ah," he says, "my dear, I've had losses myself, heavy losses; but," he says, "I'll try and help you. Walk in," says he.

I did walk in, as is noble premises, and the guns all about the place, as, of course, is a terror to them dog-stealers. Well, he showed me his dogs as is picters, and told me how he'd lost a hangel through a fancy old maid a-takin' it into her head as it was a rabbit, and had it destroyed.

She must have been a fool I should say, and wanted lockin' up herself, as nobody wouldn't be safe with; but with all his kindness he wasn't able to throw no lights over my dog. So I says, "I turns you many thanks for you kindness; for," I says, "kind you are and a feelin' heart," for I could see as tears was a comin' into his eyes when he spoke of his loss; and, bless you, the place full of the very first lords in the land, as he showed me hisself a duke as he nuss'd a babby, and pr'aps 've christened, not as he carries on the bishop now through havin' retired, but he's a noble-'arted man as ever I see.

I was a-goin' home with a 'eavy 'art, and a-walkin' slow down Parliament street for the 'bus to overtake me, when what should I see in a man's arms but the very dog itself.

Well, just as I come up he puts it down for to light his pipe. I gives a chirrup like for to make sure as it were the dog. The animal looked up and know'd me. I pouuces on him and ketches hold of his neck.

"Let my dog alone," says the fellow, a-scowlin' at me. "Shan't," says I, "it ain't your dog."

"It is," says he. "You're a falsehood," says I, "for it's mine."

Well, I'd got the dog that tight as he couldn't jerk it out of my hand, and there was plenty of people a-passin' as stopped.

"What's the row?" says a fellar. "Why, this old female's tryin' to grab my dog," says the other.

"And she's a-goin' to grab it, too," says I. "Are you?" says he.

"Yes," says I, "and here's the police," and up one come in the very nick. I says, "Policeman, this is my dog as I lost last Thursday week in the Wandsworth Road, as this fellar has got." The man says, "Who are you a-calling a fellar? I tell you this dog is the property of a gentleman in St. John's Wood as lost it on Friday, and I've got it back for him.

I says, "Policeman, it's all lies," I says, "I'll swear to the dog." I says, "My name is Brown, I'll give you my address."

So he wrote it down, and asks the man the gentlemau's address in St. John's Wood, as he said he'd forgot, but know'd the house. Says the policeman, "Walker."

If you'd seen them two fellars step it at that you'd 'ave smiled, as was reg'lar roughs, and that dog got that dirty as I don't think any one would have know'd him with a bit of rope round his throat, as had been evidently tied up. I was that pleased as to 'ave a cab, and so got home just before Brown, and to see that dog jump over him when he come in, it was for all the world like a Christian, and I do believe as the cat was as glad to see him back as any of us.

About a day or two after up comes a brougham to the door, and out gets a young lady, leastways she was dressed handsome, but when she opened her mouth she spilt it all through her talkin' that loud, with her face painted and floured up, as I could see though she did keep her wail down, as I considers rude in speakin' to any one. So she bouuces up to the door and says, "I want to see Mrs. Brown." I says, "By all means," through beiu' at the parlor door. I says, "Walk in."

She says, "I've called about that dog" "What dog?" says I.

"The one you claimed on Monday in Parliament street," she says; "it's mine." I says, "Beggin' your pardon, it ain't."

She says, "A friend of mine gave it me on Saturday; he paid five pounds for it, and it was stolen before three o'clock the same day. The poor man you met with it was bringing it home to me when you took it from him." I says, "A poor man he may be, but he's a thief, for he's robbed you as well as me. Why," I says "how could he know about the dog bein' yourn in the time?"

"Oh," she says, "my friend sent a red-coat man down from the club into Westminster Saturday night to ferret it out, and he came and told me he was on the track Sunday mornin'." "Well," I says, "tracks on a Sunday may be all very well for them as likes 'em, but that man is a thief, tracks or no tracks."

"Come," she says, "Mrs. Brown, you're a dear jolly old soul, you'll let me have the dog." "Not if I kuows it," says I.

"What will you take for him?" "Nothin'," says I.

"Then," she says, "I'll summons you and make you give it up. You call people thieves, look at home," she says. "Now," I says, "my good girl, you keep a civil tongue in your head, and take yourself off, or I'll have a policeman in, for I do believe you're one of the gang."

She bounced out of the place a-wowin' wengeance, as I says, "Let her have, but she don't get that dog for all her impudence, as is no doubt one of a gang of swindlers, as goes dashin' about dressed up for to take parties in, but I ain't such a fool as I looks, as the sayin' is, and if they gets hold on Sikey agin they may keep it."—London Fun.

THE LAST BANQUET OF THE GIRONDISTS.

IT has been truly said that the romances of history surpass those of fiction. An instance of this, among a hundred others during the first French revolution, is afforded in the banquet of the Girondists on the night before their execution. It has always, in my estimation, (says a writer in the Citizen,) stood forth as a pleasant and exceedingly interesting, though mournful, incident amidst the wild surges of that terrible time.

The Girondists, having for a time been the most powerful, as they ever were the most intellectual, party in the convention, had been gradually subverted by their implacable foes, the Jacobins, headed by Robespierre, and at length, on May 31, 1793, the latter, having invoked the aid of the canaille and sans culottes, made a demand for their arrest. It was successful, and though forewarned of the impending danger, many made their escape into the country, yet forty-one, and among them the ablest, were seized and consigned to imprisonment, in a portion of the old Carmelite convent near the center of Paris. Its walls still retain the memorials of their illustrious inmates, fresh as on the day when they went forth to their doom. Inscribed with knives and pencils, or traced in letters formed with their own blood, may still be read by the curious eye their last sentiments, generally expressed in words of ancient and favorite authors, as combining the utterance of their own patriotic ideas with their veneration for antiquity. There still live in vivid letters the constancy of Vergniaud, the boldness of Gensonne, the energy of Duchatel, the gentleness of Fauchet, the vivacity of Fonfrede and Ducos, the martial fire of Sillery and Velaze, the heroism of all. Five months elapsed before their persecutors ventured on their trial. Some time was needful to accustom the people to their absence from the public deliberations and pave the way to their ultimate disposal. That weary captivity witnessed a return to the souls of the prisoners of all the true manhood and nobility that gilded the early days of their public life, before contact with baser minds had eclipsed their brightness and stained their glory. Theirs were souls which adversity, more than prosperity, ennobles, as gold tarnishes in a stagnant atmosphere, but grows brighter by attrition. Patriotism and love of liberty, which were their religion, lent them consolation, and from the darkness of the present they turned, alas! not to the prospect of a better future—that they had never taught themselves to do—but to the virtuous theories of the past; the hopes of a Utopia wherewith they once believed this sorrow-laden world, or, at least, their own beloved France, would be blessed. It was age revelling in the visions of youth; it was the mourner recalling the pleasant dreams from which he has altogether too soon awaked to sorrow.

At length, on October 23d, they were summoned before the revolutionary tribunal. At the bar of that court death-warrants were sealed before trial. The farce of justice continued until the 30th, and few of the accused anticipated an acquittal or deigned a defence. On the final announcement of their fate, Velaze drove a poignard into his heart and expired before his judges. Vergniaud threw away a dose of poison which had been furnished by his friends, and resolved to die with his companions. Sillery exclaimed, "This is the most glorious day of my life!" Fonfrede, embracing his bosom-friend Ducos, cried: "Cheer, my friend! we shall die together!" Then, assembling around the corpse of Valeze, they shouted: "We die innocent! Vive la Republique!"

It was past 11 o'clock at night when the condemned were conducted to their prison, which they entered singing the stirring "Marsellaise." At midnight they sat down to a splendid banquet provided by the munificence of a friend in the city, to recruit their strength, and over the choicest of viands for the physical, exchange the last sentiments of the intellectual man. Vergniaud presided with the same calm dignity he had ever shown when filling the chair of the Assembly. During the repast, which none would have supposed to be the prelude of death, the conversation was noisy and animated on the part of the young men; cheerful but more grave among their elder colleagues; but gradually assuming a more serious tone on the part of all as the morning advanced. There began to steal over them the solemn shadow of that unknown land which they were rapidly approaching. A question of Ducos—"What shall we be doing to-morrow at this time?" elicited replies expressive of their various grades of religious belief, from glowing ideas of a happy immortality to the dark depths of blank annihilation. The mysterious problem of the future destiny of the soul became at length the sole topic of conversation, and all naturally turned to their leader, Vergniaud, for his last opinions upon this important theme. Then and there, standing with one foot on the threshold of eternity, that magnificent man poured forth till dawn an eloquence that more intensely affected his listeners than ever did his profoundest efforts from the tribune. The tout ensemble of time, subject, occasion and orator, conspired to give his utterances the force of inspiration. They brought tears to the eyes of many, and infused in all an indescribable tranquility for the awful consummation of the morrow. It was not the ineffable peace that pervades the soul of the dying Christian, based on the sweet assurance of pardoned sin and the certainty of a better life; but its calm similitude, born of philosophy, and leavened, if not vivified, by the doctrine of immortality. In that, as well as in a God of eternal rectitude, Vergniaud was a full believer; but his religion was patriotism. In his final words he sought to reconcile the different opinions of his enraptured hearers. "Let us," said he, "believe what we will; but let us die, certain of our life and the price of our death. Let us sacrifice what we possess, the one his doubt, the other his faith, all of us our blood, for liberty. When man offers himself as a victim to heaven, what more can he give?" So broke the morning of their last day on earth.

At 10 o'clock, October 31st, came the summons for execution. The final preparations were made and the last memorials to friends duly remembered. Gensonne picked up a lock of his raven hair from the scissors of the executioner and sent it by a friend to his wife, saying: "Tell her it is all I can give her of my remains, and that my last thoughts in death were hers." Vergniaud scratched the date of the day upon the inside case of his watch and sent it to a young girl to whom he was said to be espoused. All left their last souvenirs to their dearest friends, and then, forming in column, followed the executioners to the tumbrils that were to convey them to the guillotine. On mounting them they burst again into the "Marseillaise," and continued it on their arrival at the scaffold. There, after mutual embraces, they ascended, one by one, the fatal steps, and suffered the fall of the knife with unblenching firmness. Gradually weaker, as their numbers diminished, grew the hymn, until at length it became a solo by the last survivor, Vergniaud. Truly has it been said of him: "He did not die, but passed away in enthusiasm, and his life, commenced by immortal orations, ended by a hymn to the eternity of the Revolution."

EVENINGS FROM HOME.

AFTER reading up the Institutes of Justinian, all the volumes of GIBBON'S Rome, refreshing ourselves with an abridgment by KEIGHTLEY, and a Catechism of History for the Use of Schools, we, DR. GOODCHILD and myself, went to see Theodora at the Surrey. DR. GOODCHILD took his eldest boy, aged ten, to see the performance, because he looked upon the entertainment as highly instructive. On our road he catechized the unfortunate child, who, having utterly failed to distinguish between the several Cæsars, was on the point of weeping bitterly when we arrived at the theatre. We were courteously received by the officials, one of whom, for a consideration, provided us with bills of the play, which bills, we, contrary to DR. GOODCHILD'S principles, accepted, and then took our seats in the stalls.

We were obliged to begin with the Second Act, because the first was just finishing as we entered. This was of minor importance, seeing that there was an interval of nineteen years, which the audience had to suppose was elapsing while the band played two polkas and a waltz.

Little MASTER GOODCHILD was very sorry to have missed the First Act, in which, he had understood from his Papa, there was a Circus. As his ideas of a Circus were derived entirely from a travelling one which he had seen in the country, he expressed himself much disappointed at not having seen the Clown and "Billy Button's Ride to Brentford," or something of that sort. This regret evoked from the Doctor a short lecture on the ancient Circus, and its degenerate imitation in these modern times. The curtain rose on Act II. as DR. GOODCHILD was explaining the office of a Retiarius, and the use of the prongs to the poor boy, who, I dare swear, heartily wished that his parent had remained at home.

ACT II.

Encampment of the Roman Army beneath the Walls of Carthage.

Enter Roman Guards, Yellow-haired Mercenaries, and Gentlemen of the color of the Country, i. e. Black Guards. Chorus of Soldiers drinking out of Cups of the period, closely resembling circular soap dishes.

Elderly Gentleman (to his Son)—The Romans used to drink out of those sort of cups.

Inquiring Boy of Ten (to his Papa's Friend)—What have they got in those cups?

Papa's Friend—Eh? oh, nothing.

Inquiring Boy (perseveringly)—But what did the Romans drink?

Papa's Friend (wishing the boy hadn't been brought out)—Wine.

Inquiring Boy—But what wine?

Papa's Friend (tries to recollect his Classics, and is about to suggest "nectar," but remembers something about "nectar fit for the Gods," and says cunningly—Ask your Papa.

Boy (to Papa)—Papa! What wine?

Papa—Eh? (takes the opportunity for instruction)—Well, (solemnly) the—(is going to say "Romans," but feeling uncertain as to whether his remarks do not apply to the Greeks as well, substitutes "the Ancients;")—the Ancients knew several sorts of wine, (loudly for the information of the front row of the pit just behind him,) the Falernian, the Chian, the Leshian, the——

Front Row of Pit—Ssssh! 'Old yer row, will yer?

Elderly Gentleman (looks round indignantly, and adds defiantly)—And the Mamertine.

Front Row of Pit (joined for the sake of a row by the gallery above)—Turu 'im out!

Miriam (a Female Villain on the stage)—You (to Philip, Son of Creon)—will go to Constautinople.

Creon (with Hebraic pronunciation—Yesh, to Conshtantinople.

Jovial Person in Gallery (who knows a popular comic song about the place, sings)—"C. o. n., with a Con."

Gallery—Order! Turn 'im out! (Row.)

Creon (telling his private history)—Yesh, she 'ad robbed me of all but you. Take thish: and show it 'er. (Gives a casket.) Life is but a Noahsis (he means "an oasis") in the desert. [Troops arrive, his son departs for Coustantinople.]

ENTR'ACTE.

Elderly Gentleman—Splendid Scenery. (He has been recalling all he knows about wine, and now says to his Son) There were seval sorts of wine. Some was obtained before the grapes had been fully trodden; that was called the mustum lixium. Then there was the mustum tortivum. You know what I told you about the Cæsars?

Son—Yes. (Band plays and distracts Papa's attention. To Papa's friend in a whisper.) I say, shall we see the clown and the red-hot poker?

Papa's friend (explains)—No this isn't a Pantomime. It's a drama.

Inquiring Son—What's a drama?

Papa's Friend—Well—um—a—a—drama is a sort of a—or in fact a play—(is satisfied)—yes, a play—(is dissatisfied with his definition)—a play in which there's an interest—a—(gets out of the difficulty)—But you're not old enough to understand that yet.

[Son wishes he was "in stick-ups," and the Third Act commences.]

ACT III.

[Beautiful Scene, representing Byzantine Court of Elephants in Constantinople.]

Elderly Gentleman (reading from bill)—"Justinian delighted to enrich and ennoble the object of his affections."—Gibbon. (To his Son.) Who was Gibbon?

Son (readily)—One of the Roman Emperors.

Elderly Gentleman (utterly taken aback)—A Rom—no, he was (loudly) Gibbon was—

Front Row of Pit—Ssssh! Order!

Enter, Leo, "an effeminate Officer."

Leo—Here comes the Empress. [Dances in order to express effeminacy.]

Enter, Miss Avonia Jones as Theodora, accompanied by a shabby-looking person supposed to be Justinian.

Elderly Gentleman (to his Son)—That is the Empress.

His Son (knowingly)—And that is the Emperor?

[Pointing at Shabby Person.]

Elderly Gentleman (pleased)—Yes; don't point. What did I tell you all the Roman Emperors were called? (Boy looks puzzled.) Now think.

His Son (decidedly)—Gibbon.

[Elderly Gentleman raises his voice to explain, and is suppressed by Pit.]

Miram (the Female Villain says something to Philip which sounds like) Come and have some jam.

Philip (frowning)—Whose?

Miram (savagely)—The Empress Theodora. (Exeunt both.)

Theodora—I cannot strike. (If she does, Philip is to be beheaded in what appears to be the back drawing-room.) I cannot, but—

[Is about to deliver a splendid speech to finish the act with, when the band strikes up accidentally, and the Prompter rings down the Curtain.]

Theodora (to band frantically, but vainly)—Stop! stop!

[Curtain descends unexpectedly. End of Act.]

ACT IV.

[Elderly Gentleman asleep. His Friend not returned from refreshing himself. Boy much interested.]

ACT V.

[An Eminence in the Neighborhood of Constantinople.]

Enter Happy Peasants to welcome the morning beams. They welcome the beams by looking at one another in a confused manner.

Miriam—Here is gold for you, if you will betray a fugitive.

[Happy Peasants look at a young Happy Peasant who ought to speak but doesn't.]

Young Peasant (after being nudged, says feebly)—We despise your treasures and refuse your gold.

[Exit with Peasants, probably to welcome more beams in another place.]

Miriam—They can not be tempted. (Turns and sees an old Peasant who has come out to welcome the beams with a false nose on.) Ha! [Old Peasant makes faces and intimates that he will betray the fugitive for a consideration. She hands him a purse.]

Miriam—So, after all, man (alluding to Peasant with false nose) is everywhere avaricious. Lead on.

[Peasant hides the purse in his flannel waistcoat, points cunningly to his false nose, and beckons Miriam to follow him: perhaps to see where the false noses are made, or to welcome beams. Exeunt both.]

LAST SCENE.—The Caverns.

Elderly Gentleman (waking up)—We must go now.

His Son (reluctantly preparing)—There's only this scene, Papa. [Theodora finds her son.]

Theodora—The proofs!

Miriam (the Female Villain)—Here! I stole them!

Theodora—Ha! (Falls on Philip, who is lying on the ground.) You cannot arrest him now. (To a Soldier who up to that moment had no idea of doing anything of the sort, he retires to talk to the Peasant with the false nose, who is at the back of the stage making faces.) I have killed you (to Philip)—I (gasps) have (gasps) killed (writhes) you, (struggles with her necklace) my (conquers the necklace and throws it off) Son!

[Falls down again on Philip, and crushes him utterly.]

Creon (seeing an opportunity for doing something with his part before the Curtain comes down, strikes an attitude and says, without any apparent reason)—No.

[Curtain descends. Much applause. Re-appearance of Theodora and the rest of the Company before the Curtain, and Dr. Goodchild took his boy home, with a view to a chapter of Gibbon early the next morning.]

ROMANCE OF ROYALTY.

IT has always been known that the immediate cause of the passing of the royal marriage act of England was the openly manifested displeasure of George III. at the union of his brother, Henry Frederick, Duke of Cumberland, with Lady Anne Horton—a displeasure which remained unchanged until the duke's death. This feeling in the king has usually been attributed to the German pride of birth by which his family had always been distinguished. If, however, the documents produced in the pending Madame Pynes case be genuine, it will be proved that George III. was not offended at his brother because he had married an inferior, but because he had committed deliberately a most serious offence against morality and law—the offence of bigamy. Papers are set forth which demonstrate that when the Duke of Cumberland married Lady Anne Horton, his wife, Olive Wilmot, to whom he had been privately but legally married four years previously, was still alive. As a legitimate descendant of this last mentioned marriage, the petitioner in the pending cause claims the style and honors of a princess of the blood royal. The fact of this marriage is supported by two remarkable certificates, signed by Dr. Wilmot (the lady's father) as the officiating clergyman, and by the king himself, by Lord Chatham, Lord Warwick and Lord Archer as witnesses. The plea put forward by the crown on all former occasions, and which will probably be again resorted to at the approaching trial, is that these certificates, as well as the various other documents bearing on the case, are forgeries, and on this point we anticipate the decision will turn. The duke's second marriage having been made public, the king, partly influenced by a wish to hush the matter up, and partly by another more personal reason, prevailed on Dr. Wilmot, it is asserted, to keep his daughter's marriage secret. In the meantime a child, Olive, was born to the hapless, deserted wife, and the birth certificate signed by Lord Chatham and Mr. Dunning, solicitor general at the time, also forms a portion of the evidence in the case. The infant was duly baptized in private by Dr. Wilmot, as the duke's daughter, in the presence of Lord Warwick; but at the king's request, means were taken to pass her off as the daughter of one of her uncles. For this purpose she was re-baptized as Olive Wilmot merely. Of all these transactions, certificates, purporting to be signed by the king, Lord Chatham and others of high position, are in existence. They may be proved to be forgeries, but, if so, they display a skill and audacity utterly unparalleled in our criminal records. Though the king desired, for peculiar reasons, to keep the child Olive's legitimacy a secret, he was not disposed to act unkindly toward her. Besides numerous private acknowledgements of her true position, and grants of money for her use, he proceeded, when she was less than a year old, to confer upon her the title of Duchess of Lancaster. The patent, which is also to be produced, was deposited with Lord Warwick, who delivered it, in the presence of the late Duke of Kent, to the owner, then Mrs. Serres.

It is needless to follow here the additional documentary evidence which is put forward by the petitioner, including an alleged will of George III., bequeathing to the infant Olive a sum of £15,000, and a long series of letters and papers from the late Duke of Kent acknowledging his cousin's claim. We may very briefly indicate the steps that were taken legally and otherwise by Mrs. Serres, and afterward by her daughter, Mrs. Ryves, the present petitioner, to obtain their rights. Proceedings were first taken in the prerogative court to obtain probate of the king's will, but the application was refused upon the technical ground that the court was not competent to deal with a royal testament. Foiled in her resort to law, Mrs. Serres resolved to submit her claim to Parliament. She found a champion, unluckily for herself, in Sir Gerard Noel, a chivalrous but somewhat crack brained member, who, after introducing the lady's cause with much frothy fervor, succumbed meekly enough to a little argument and a great deal of banter from Mr. Peel. Both during Mrs Serres' life and after her death, many attempts were made to move the royal family by petitions, but, naturally enough, these were for the most part fruitless. In the year 1845, after much difficulty arising from a lack of funds, a chancery suit against the Duke of Wellington, George III.'s surviving executor, was undertaken, but failed on the ground that the will had not been proved. As we have seen, this necessary step had been found impossible, and for a long time the matter remained at a dead lock. The legitimacy declaration act passed in 1858 offered an opportunity of opening up the question anew, and after a considerable delay, sought by the crown, the trial has been definitely fixed for next May.

Besides the deeply interesting details which we have briefly noticed, another and a yet more extraordinary question will, it is gravely affirmed, be brought into discussion in connection with the case. It is only vaguely indicated in the statement published on behalf of the petitioner, and its improbable character is, we feel bound to say, calculated to throw grave suspicion upon the whole claim. We shall therefore only say that this collateral question raised by Mrs. Ryves touches the legitimacy of all George III.'s children. Her statement is briefly this: that George III.'s marriage with Queen Charlotte was an act of bigamy, his former and lawful wife, Hannah Lightfoot, being still alive. Upon this astounding assertion we need not comment; but, from all the circumstances of the case, we anticipate that the trial will prove an interesting and curious addition to our collections of causes celibres.—London Star.

THE RIVAL ANTIQUARIES.

WHEN Bloomsbury was a fashionable locality in London, on a particular day, and in one of the best dwellings in that street of good houses called Great Ormond street, there was considerable commotion, and the old housekeeper, who evidently for some long time past had been the only ostensible head of the establishment, was in her glory. Dusting-brush and broom were hard at work, rooms that had not seen daylight for some years were thrown open, shutters taken down, furniture and curtains uncovered, all denoting the expected return of the master of the house, who, it may be here stated, was a bachelor.

It has been remarked somewhere, that you have but to enter the room where a man spends the greater part of his life, either in labor, study, or idleness, and you penetrate at once very far into his tastes and character. Such might be said with perfect truth in this instance, for there, not only in the library, but in every room and passage, was proclaimed loudly, by the thousand and one mysterious ornaments, glass cases, bones of animals, old armor, quaint furniture, rusty relics, etc., that our friend was an antiquary. More than all, however, did the display of innumerable coins in various receptacles betoken unmistakably that his favorite hobby was numismatology, or the study of coins. He had been journeying abroad in the far East for some two or three years, partly to collect for himself any interesting relics, and partly as the travelling correspondent of a society which had for its main object the elucidation of all mysteries relating to the current coin of every realm, ancient or modern. During his wanderings, of course he had become acquainted with many learned and scientific men of all nations whose pursuits lay in the same direction as his own. In some instances acquaintance had ripened into positive friendship, and particularly had it done so in one case, at Berlin, on his homeward journey.

When on his arrival in that city, he presented letters of introduction to the Baron von Grumbach, president of several learned societies there, he found it was not the first time they had met. It appeared they had formerly been students together at Heidelberg, and up to the time of their both leaving the university they had evinced many tastes in common; but our antiquary, then a young man of nineteen or twenty, returning home, their intercourse was gradually broken off, though they corresponded at intervals upon such topics as studious young men would find interest in. This habit, however, was relinquished by degrees, as time went on, and each became more and more engaged in his own affairs. The young German, whose parents were wealthy, had followed his ardent desire for travel and love of scientific research. Mr. Winkworth, on the other hand, had not again quitted England (for foreign travelling in those days was not so easy as it has since become.) The friends had thus lost sight of each other for nearly twenty years. Of course this recognition led to a renewal, with redoubled intensity, of all the feelings they had originally entertained the one for the other, and the surprise and pleasure were the greater, as the name Grumbach was not known to Mr. Winkworth as that of his old university friend, it having only recently been assumed by the German on his accession to a title and estates.

They were greatly delighted to meet again, and Grumbach insisted upon Winkworth becoming his guest during his stay in Berlin. He would take no denial, and the visit was prolonged from a few days to a few weeks, for the increased knowledge of each other, which ensued upon the gradual opening of storehouses of learning, confirmed their old understanding, and ripened it into a friendship of the liveliest character. The study of coins entered largely into their discussions, and Winkworth displayed with great pride and gratification many rare and choice specimens gathered from the East and elsewhere. But he intimated that, from a certain correspondence which had taken place between himself and one learned in the science at Paris, he hoped on his arrival there to terminate a negotiation which he had in hand for the purchase of a specimen the rarest and most perfect in the world. It is not necessary for me to give in detail an account of what the coin was, or whence it came; I need but add, for the purposes of my story, that it was supposed to be the only one of its kind extant, and that it had been long sought after. Of late years its existence even had been doubted. It had frequently been supposed to have been discovered; but on close examination by the most skilful eyes, the pretended rara avis had always turned out to be possessed by the genuine coin itself. Grumbach admitted that if such an one could be obtained it would be simply invaluable, at the same time slightly discrediting its existence.

Words ran good-humoredly high upon the subject; England all confident in the coming triumph of its own society, and Germany sceptical to the highest degree.

"If my man does not deceive me," Winkworth went on to say, "within a month from this date (for his visit was drawing to a close) I shall have the treasure safely deposited on British soil, for it only awaits my arrival in Paris, I believe, to be made over to me."

The Baron von Grumbach could hardly disguise a slightly ironical chuckle at his friend's enthusiasm at the prospect of so great a success, which being observed by Mr. Winkworth, the matter was allowed to drop.

It had evoked a certain amount of undue self-gratulation on the one hand, and apparently a slight amount of jealousy on the other; jealousy that Germany should allow so valuable a relic to be captured almost under its eyes, and carried off for the glorification of another nation; for even firmly as the friends were bound together, this little matter seemed to afford the possibility of a slight unpleasantness between them. The subject was only once more touched upon during the remainder of Winkworth's sojourn in Berlin, when it was arranged that if this success did attend the labors of our antiquary, Grumbach should become his guest on the occasion of the treasure being first displayed before the eyes of the learned in London. The reader, unless acquainted with the enthusiasm of men of science, or those well versed in this especial study, may hardly understand how so much interest could be excited upon apparently so trivial a matter as the date and impression of a particular coin; yet so it is, and a vast amount of energy, wealth and time, are continually being expended in obtaining the rarest specimens of antiquity of every description by the laborers for the different societies formed for the advancement of each separate branch of knowledge.

In the course of a few weeks after the incidents just referred to had occurred, Mr. Winkworth found himself safely lodged in his museum of rarities in Great Ormond street. He had been home about a fortnight when huge and mysterious packages began to be delivered by carts and wagons at his door, choking up the already crowded passages and rooms. For days and days these cases, which contained the most cumbrous booty gathered in his recent raids in different climes, were allowed to remain unpacked, filling up every available inch of space in the gangways of the house. Now that he had got safely home, it was surely strange that he should take so little apparent interest in them. He sat, however, for hours writing in his study, with a complacent, self-satisfied smile upon his good-natured face, and a little fortune was expended in the prepayment of the then expensive postage of letters to all parts of England and the Continent.

The truth was, that in an out-of-the-way quarter of Paris he had succeeded in purchasing from a Jew dealer in curiosities—who, perhaps strangely enough, was hardly aware of its real value—the much-coveted and unquestionably genuine and unique coin before referred to. This had absorbed for the time all interest in the results of his recent travel. There is little doubt that the last month had proved, as he hoped it would, the most satisfactory portion of the time he had spent abroad; therefore his pleasure was boundless, and he had been scribbling to everybody he knew, or ever heard of, as likely to be interested in a subject, announcing his success, and inviting them on a certain occasion, not far distant, to an exhibition of this wonderful treasure, the discovery of which would render him famous throughout the world, and add an unparalleled lustre to the association of which he was head and chief. For his own part he had no doubt of it; he well knew all the signs, characters, and hieroglyphics appertaining to the question; he knew in every minute particular what had been the shortcomings of the specimens hitherto advanced as genuine, but this was complete in all the requirements.

Whilst he was pondering over a list of names, and endeavoring to think if there were any others to whom he could send an announcement of the great event then occupying all his thoughts, a servant brought into the room a parcel, saying that the cabinet-maker had sent home the case recently ordered. It was a small square mahogany box; when the lid was raised an inner glass case was displayed, within which again was seen a sort of velvet cushion with a circular indentation on the uppermost side; a case similar indeed to that in which jewellers display their valuables. On examination, Mr. Winkworth appeared dissatisfied with it, as it was by no means well finished; and turning it about in his hands, he complained loudly of the bad workmanship; the inner glass case did not fit its wooden covering, the velvet was loosely glued on, and it was altogether a slovenly bit of handiwork. He declared that he would be certainly obliged to get another made, but for the present this must suffice.

When the servant had left the room, he drew from his waistcoat pocket a small packet, which he began carefully to unfold, and eventually, after several coverings of paper had been taken off, exposed to his delighted gaze his priceless gem. Priceless gem, indeed! To the eye of the uninitiated it did not look worth a farthing; it was not much larger, and certainly was not above half the thickness. On closely viewing it you could discover it was gold; but it was so old, worn, and battered, that it might just as well have passed for brass. There it was, however, and after gazing at it fondly for a few minutes, he deposited it, with a proud gesture, in the circular niche on the cushion made for its reception. It did not fit very well, and as he moved the box it slipped into his hand; but replacing it, he shut the case, and put it safely away in his cabinet, which he locked.

At length the eventful day looked forward to by Mr. Winkworth with so much exultation arrived. His friend the Baron von Grumbach had come to pay his promised visit, and was staying in the house; he entreated Winkworth to grant him a private view of the gem, but this privilege was denied with a sort of jocose sternness.

"All in good time," said Mr. Winkworth; "this is a piece of real business, and we must not trifle with it. When my audience is assembled I shall read a paper on the coins of this date, referring particularly to all that is known in connection with this one, giving an account of my first discovery of it, my negotiations for its purchase, and conclude with an ample description of the proofs which I have, and which it bears of its authenticity. It shall then be handed round to the visitors in succession, and they will have the opportunity of commenting to their utmost upon it."

With a smile that was not altogether pleasant, Von Grumbach ceased to urge his request, and in a few days' time from this conversation he formed one of a numerous assembly of some fifty or sixty gentlemen who had gathered to overflowing in the large drawing-room in Ormond street.

Mr. Winkworth had received but few refusals to his invitations; his name stood so high that no one feared a disappointment, and the liveliest interest was created. There were present one or two bishops, several noblemen, learned professors, home and foreign, presidents of academies, directors of literary and scientific institutions—indeed, just such a gathering as could only meet together for the exploration or elucidation of some deeply interesting point of science. They chatted together until the hour arrived for the commencement of business. There were neither seats nor standing room even for every one of the guests within the doors, which were consequently left open.

On a small table stood the case containing the coin, and a roll of manuscript, which the host presently began to read, amidst the most profound attention. A murmur of approbation followed its conclusion. The case was then unlocked, and Mr. Winkworth was about to hand the precious jewel round in its resting-place for inspection, when he suddenly said, "No, gentlemen, it fits so badly in its case, that I will ask you severally to take it in your hands, and pass it from one to the other." Then picking up the coin, he gave it, with a large magnifying glass, to the person immediately on his left. For upwards of two hours there ensued an earnest examination of the treasure; every one had something to say about it, to which all the rest listened. There were but few doubts raised as to its genuineness, and whenever any did rise, and were for a moment pertinaciously maintained, they were soon overthrown by Mr. Winkworth, who advanced to the disputant, and by the most irrefutable proofs demonstrated that the specimen was unique.

The Baron von Grumbach was nearly one of the last into whose hands it fell. A shade of something like disappointment came over his face as he examined it; he made no remark, and while giving it to his neighbor a keen observer might have seen something very like a sneer curling the corners of his mouth. Apparently not a doubt was left on anybody's mind, and jostling words of congratulation began to be showered forth on Mr. Winkworth from all sides. At last a certain reverend gentleman came to the front, and in a short but neatly-worded speech, returned the thanks of the assemblage for the gratifying afternoon they had spent, and reiterated the congratulations which had been generally offered. The host replied, the party was breaking up, and Mr. Winkworth was about to invite his guests to descend to the dining-room for some refreshments, when, on going to lock up the case, around which knots of visitors were standing in conversation, lo! his treasure was not there! He turned to the group nearest to him, anxiously asking them for it, deeming it was still under examination. No, they had not got it. Every one began to ask everybody else if he had it, and the inquiry spread like wild-fire across the room.

It was nowhere to be found! the greatest consternation ensued! What could have become of it? Some of the more immediate friends of the house had already gone into the dining-room. Inquiries were at once made there, but still the same reply—they had not seen it since it was in their hands first. Search was made in all directions, on the ground, on the chairs, along the edges of the carpet by the wainscot, by the rug, fender, and in every possible corner, crack, or cranny in the room, where, in case of its falling, it might have rolled; all were subjected to the strictest investigation. Every one assisted in this; particularly diligent appeared the Baron von Grumbach; still no success attended their unwearied efforts. What was to be done? It was the most awkward thing that could have occurred; the majority of the visitors were personal friends of Mr. Winkworth, but yet one thing only suggested itself to his mind.

It must have been stolen! yet who could have been guilty of so infamous a thing? All present were men of the strictest probity, and of the highest standing and character, engaged most earnestly in one single object, the advancement of learning, and it was impossible almost to conceive that any one in that assembly could be capable of such meanness and dishonesty. Still, where was the coin? No servant had entered the drawing-room, nor indeed were there any above stairs, for the refreshments were laid unostentatiously in the dining-room, ready for every one to help himself; therefore the culprit, after all, must be, if anywhere, amongst the guests. Over and over again the search was renewed, but with no better result. Mr. Winkworth was perplexed beyond measure. How could he, the host, personally accuse any one in those rooms of committing a deliberate theft? Yet do what he could, the conviction would force itself upon his mind that this was the only way to account for the mysterious disappearance of the coin.

Presently he made his way through the bewildered crowd to his friend the bishop, who had just been spokesman for the assembly, and took him aside, and, after they had whispered a few words together, the bishop called every one around him. With the utmost courtesy and good taste, and after expatiating a little on the extraordinary circumstances, he said: "There is but one thing for it, gentlemen—we must all be searched, for our host's satisfaction as well as for our own; and I feel perfectly certain that there is no one here who will object to this. These words were followed by a loud burst of applause, and cries of "Yes, yes, by all means," resounded on every side.

This unparalleled proceeding was then carried out in the following manner. The guests were all to pass through the drawing-room to Mr. Winkworth's bed-chamber, which was on the same landing, thence to descend by another staircase to the ground floor. No guard was kept at the top of the stairs to prevent any one going up or down without being searched, for it was felt to be a point of honor for every one to go through the bedroom. Mr. Winkworth and his manservant acted as searchers; all evinced the most earnest anxiety to display the contents of their pockets, and in some instances insisted on taking off their shoes and Hessian boots.

Had Mr. Winkworth possessed any sense of the ludicrous—which he certainly did not—he would have been diverted from the serious object at stake by the many farcical absurdities educed during this extraordinary scene. It occupied a considerable time, but like everything else, came to an end. There remained but two more gentlemen to be examined, and still no trace of the missing treasure had been discovered. These two entered the bedroom together, and were most zealous in showing how utterly impossible it was for them to have anything secreted about their persons. In fact, every one being innocent, was, as may be naturally supposed, only too glad of the opportunity of proving it. The coin was not found, however, and hopeless dejection settled down over the party. What more could be done? Again were Mr. Winkworth's perplexities redoubled on his servant whispering, "You have not searched the Baron von Grumbach." The sudden recollection of this penetrated like a sting to the heart of the antiquary. Of course not! he had never come into the bedroom; where was he? He was called for, and did not answer. He, now, was also missing; from which circumstance suspicion slowly though naturally began to attach itself to him. He had evidently avoided the test. Could anything be more unpleasant to his friend than this? Why, he was actually living in the house, and not only would it be necessary to search him, but his effects; especially as it had in the meantime been ascertained that his bedroom door was fastened. It was also known that he had not left the house, therefore it was concluded that he had locked himself in.

A polite message was sent up to him, requesting his attendance below, in order that he might explain his conduct and submit to an examination. He sent word back that if he came down he positively must decline allowing either himself or anything belonging to him to be searched. Hitherto although these proceedings had been conducted in the most serious and earnest manner, there had been inseparable from them a certain air of comicality, but now that they had reached this point they now no longer bore that aspect. It did look terribly suspicious that the Baron should withdraw himself in such a way, and under such peculiar conditions. A consultation was held, and after much deliberation it was decided that a deputation should go to his room door, and formally beg, in the name of justice to himself and to all, that he would submit to what they required.

In the event of his refusing, as they had now only too much reason to suppose he would, they must very reluctantly threaten him with the authority of the police. This plan was proceeded with, and it all fell out as they expected, he refusing even to open his door. There was nothing for it, therefore, but to send for a constable, who eventually arrived. After commanding the Baron to let him in in the king's name, and he also meeting with a flat refusal, the door was broken open, and the party stood face to face with Von Grumbach. He was in a wild state of excitement, and with a small pocket pistol in each hand, threatened, in his broken English, to shoot the first man who laid hand on him.

At this moment a shout arose from the drawing-room: "It is found! it is found!" Quite impossible would it be now to describe the mingled consternation, astonishment, and confusion that ensued. Who had found it? Where was it? were the questions asked on all sides; and when the hubbub into which these usually grave men had been betrayed had subsided, it was explained.

One of the guests, while the awkward scene just described was being acted upstairs, had taken hold of the case belonging to the coin, and which, curiously enough, no one had thought of examining after the first moment of its inmate being missed. Whilst idly turning it about, he had removed the glass portion of it, and in doing so slightly disturbed the velvet cushion before mentioned. At the same moment he heard a gentle click, as of something falling to the bottom of the box. This attracted his attention, and turning it upside down, the cushion fell out, and the coin with it, upon the table. It had evidently slipped between the badly fitting edge of the velvet and the woodwork of the case.

Amidst all the pleasure that now followed on the restoration of the missing wonder, there was mingled a great feeling of awkward annoyance. What could be said to M. le Baron? How could Mr. Winkworth and his friends atone sufficiently to him for the outrage he had undergone? However, all that could be said was said, and Grumbach received the apologies graciously enough. Yet a natural curiosity manifested itself upon the simple question of why, as he had not secreted the coin—in fact, had no more to do with it than anybody else—he should have made so vehement and active a protest against being searched. He at first made no reply to the interrogation, but merely drew from the breast of his coat a small packet, which he begged Mr. Winkworth to open. This was done, and there lay exposed to the wondering eyes around a fac simile of the much-vaunted and isolated specimen! Not a mark, not a hair's breadth of difference, could be detected between them. Rigidly they were compared over and over again, and, at last, changing hands so often, it was impossible to tell one from the other.

"There is my answer, gentlemen. Had I submitted to your search, most inevitably I should have been convicted of gross and abominable theft, and at once have forfeited my position, and with it all I hold dear." Then turning to M. Winkworth, he added: "Had you not, my friend, persisted in refusing to show me your prize the other day, I had intended to tell you how, a few days after you had left me, I got scent of the existence of a second specimen in St. Petersburg, which I forthwith secured in person for my society in Berlin, and I was on the point of surprising you all by its production, when the disappearance of yours led to what has just occurred. I had suspected that there was more than one coin of the date extant, but I am sure there are not more than two; here they are!" * * * * * * *

"Fiction founded on fact" is an old expression, used in many cases of story-telling, and I can find none better with which to conclude what I have related. The fiction only has been that part of the story which applied to names, dates, and localities; the main gist of the matter is fact, but, as may have been seen in its narration, could not for many reasons have been given in all its actual reality. Still the circumstances appeared as curious, and the coincidences, perhaps, as odd as any that have ever led to those mistakes and equivoques which sometimes clothe the events of every-day life in the garb of romance.

[For the Californian.]

ASPIRATION.

SOAR HIGH, proud spirit! but e'en in the swell
Of pride and fame,
The weary heart will long but for the spell
In the "magic of a name."

Climb high, aspiring feet! but when you bleed—
Even though none may know—
You fain would tread some spot where none might heed,
In the valley far below.

What though the flattering throng repeat your name
With song and wine,
You'd gladly give it all—the pride and fame—
If one true heart were thine. INGLE.

REMINISCENCES OF BEAU BRUMMEL.

AS few of those who were either contemporaries of the Beau, or who knew him intimately, are now alive, while his name and peculiarities are still fresh in the mind of the public, a favorable reception may be expected for any well-authenticated anecdotes respecting him, coming from one who lived for several years on terms of intimacy with him, and who has hitherto not given them publicity.

My anecdotes assume no character of importance; they are merely characteristic of a very peculiar man, who was rather droll than witty, but always amusing, prompt and happy in reply, and unsparing in severity when attacked. The Beau had a small, gray, scrutinizing eye, which instantly surveyed and summed up all the peculiarities of features, dress, and manners of those who approached him, so that the weak point was instantly hit, of any who accidentally or incautiously transgressed, or who had the temerity to attack him. A trifling instance will illustrate this personal peculiarity. On one occasion, he was in conversation with one or two persons on the Place de Calais, when a gentleman, on joining the group, unintentionally struck the Beau's favorite little white terrier with his foot. It so happened that the new comer had very large feet and awkwardly made boots. Brummel, immediately stooping down, and scarcely noticing the offender, but looking most contemptuously at his boots, patted the little dog on the back, ejaculating at the same time: "Poor little thing; you have not been used to be trod upon by such boots as these." After having discharged this bolt, he turned round on his heel and walked off, continuing his caressing language to the little animal who was with him so great a favorite that no greater affront could be offered the Beau than that which involved any slight, either accidental or otherwise, towards her. She was a handsome little terrier, milky white, but rather fat from being over-fed, so that even at the slow pace at which the Beau walked round the ramparts of Calais, for exercise, before his daily repast at seven, the poor little thing could with difficulty keep up with him.

But, notwithstanding all the Beau's care of his little favorite, poor Vic finally encountered the fate of all pets of this class. Brummel, calling on a friend, earnestly solicited his company at dinner, at the Hotel Bourbon, stating as his reason that poor Vic was so alarmingly ill that he could not remain in the house, but that he had left her in the care of Francois (his valet) and Doctor Jonville, so that everything that could be done for her would be done. After taking his usual walk, he repaired to the Bourbon, and dined with his friend; the repast was scarcely over, when Francois entered with a very melancholy and funereal sort of visage, and pronounced, in a slow and solemn tone: "Monsieur, c'est font fini;" upon which Brummel rose from his chair, and repaired to the window, and wept for several minutes like a child.

This is the man who has been represented as being totally devoid of feeling, merely because on many occasions, on the great stage of life, when fortune smiled upon him, he acted his part conformably to the character which he had assumed, rather than agreeably to the one which nature had given him. He could neither have said nor have done the numerous "good things" which are attributed to him, if he had been influenced by his feelings; his object was to produce effect; he had a particular character to support, and in this respect he eminently succeeded, for he attained a position in life, and kept it for a number of years, which is rarely reached by persons of his rank; it is certain that, in the zenith of his prosperity, noblemen of distinction not only sought his acquaintance, but were actually gratified by walking arm-and-arm with him up and down St. James's street. It is also well known that he was intimate with the Prince Regent, dined frequently with him both at Carlton House in London, and at the Pavilion at Brighton. The cause of the rupture with the Prince is generally supposed to have been his having taken the liberty to request his Royal Highness, after dinner at Carlton House, to ring the bell for wine, when the Prince, first complying with his request, ordered his carriage, and never spoke to him afterwards. On this point, I questioned the Beau, and he assured me the statement was totally devoid of foundation in truth. "From your knowledge of me," said he, "can you possibly suppose that I, who knew the Regent's susceptibility as well as, if not better, than any man breathing, could have been guilty of so gross a want of tact? No; it is not true. I knew the Regent too well to have been guilty of so gross a folly."

I could never ascertain from him what was the real cause the separation; there are, however, several reasons current; one which I heard from pretty good authority is, that the Beau wrote some verses about the Prince and Mrs. Fitzherbert, in which he styled the Prince Big Ben, and the lady Benbina; these lines were, moreover, somewhat sarcastic, and being shown to the Prince by some enemy of Brummel's, produced that feeling on the part of the Prince which led to the rupture.

There were many circumstances which arose during the several years in which a friendly intercourse existed between the Beau and myself, which led me to infer he was not so deficient in good feeling as is generally supposed to have been the case. I cite one instance among many, leaving the estimate of its worth to the decision of the impartial. Some few years after his arrival in Calais, Brummel contracted a liaison with a young French girl, who shortly became the victim of a pulmonary complaint, which ultimately destroyed her. She was long ill. During the whole period of her illness, the Beau not only supplied her with all the necessaries of life, but used constantly to send the half of his dinner to her. If he had kept a regular cuisine in his establishment, and been in affluent circumstances, there would have been nothing worthy of remark in this act; but as the Beau's means were very limited at the time, and his daily dinner was sent to him from Dessein's at five francs per diem, just sufficient for one appetite, the abandonment of the half of it may, I suggest, be fairly considered one of those sacrifices, although trifling in appearance, which entitles the person who makes it to some credit for a good and kindly feeling. During the first few years of Beau's residence at Calais, he was comparatively well off, a noble duke having allowed him two hundred pounds a year as long as he lived; on one occasion he received one thousand pounds through the house of Messrs. Moreon, from some unknown friend: and on another he gained a prize in the French lottery to the amount of about, as far as I can recollect, three thousand francs, which at the time was very acceptable, and caused him considerable satisfaction. He told me, on the occasion of his good fortune, he had just finished his toilet preparatory to taking his daily walk, when Francois entered the room, announcing: "Monsieur a gagne une terne;" which communication was agreeably confirmed by the almost immediate presence of one of the functionaries from the lottery office with a wheel-barrow containing several sacks of five-franc pieces. This, I believe, was the only success of this description the Beau ever had, although he was in the habit of risking weekly a five-franc piece in some one of the lotteries then in existence.

Previous to Brummel's leaving Calais for Caen, to take possession of his consulship, his circumstances were by no means flourishing; he had long lost the annuity of two hundred pounds, in consequence of the death of the noble donor of it, and I believe he had brought very little with him on leaving England in 1816. He told me he once won in one year the large sum of forty thousand pounds by play at Wattier's and at Newmarket; all of which disappeared as rapidly as it had been acquired; in fact, at the stakes he was in the habit of playing, an income of forty thousand pounds was required rather than that simple sum. To a sixpence with a hole in it, which he picked up one morning in 1813 in the street, on leaving Wattier's, he attributed the commencement and continuance of his good fortune; and to the subsequent loss of this little coin, all his subsequent misfortunes. This coin he kept in his waistcoat pocket, and as long as he retained possession of it, fortune smiled; but on the very day that his precious talisman was found wanting, his bad luck set in, and with such continuous and unremitting rigor, that he soon found himself totally without funds. He told me he advertised in several papers with a view of recovering his talisman, and offered five pounds reward, but without success. Mr. Raikes, in his Diary, states the Beau merely picked up a plain sixpence, and bored a hole in it himself; but I always understood from the Beau that the coin he found had a hole in it already made; and, in virtue of this circumstance, he considered it lucky. From this slight anecdote, it may be inferred that the Beau was superstitious, and from what I saw of him I should say that he was very much so.

He mentioned to me that the play at Wattier's in those days was so high that he once witnessed the Hon. W—— go double or quits for thirty-two thousand pounds; which he lost. No pack of cards was ever played with twice, and when a hand was over the cards were thrown on the floor; consequently, when play ceased in the morning, the players, to use the Beau's own expression, were nearly knee-deep in cards. Wattier's was in Piccadilly, at the corner of Bolton street. The club took its name from Wattier, who was a chef decuisine of the first order. Although the Beau played at whist, and played a good rubber, he did not generally play high at that game (although he is supposed to have once won a large stake at White's at one sitting,) his gambling having been mostly at Wattier's—at the game of macao—and at Newmarket. At Calais, he occasionally played at whist in private houses, at moderate stakes, and seemed to enjoy the game. During the first few years of his residence in Calais, he associated with scarcely any of either the English or French families; but during several years prior to his departure to his consulate at Caen, he associated with one or two English residents, and joined in conversation generally with the groups of loungers on the Place, before repairing to the ramparts for his daily walk.

MME. GEORGE SAND.

THE Paris correspondent of the American Literary Gazette says: "We have all been on tiptoe to hear Mme. George Sand deliver a lecture. She has at the last moment declined appearing in public. This is her letter of excuse:

"'SIR—You tore from me a promise which I am unable to fulfill. You, and the eminent writers who seconded you, were persuasive, kind, indulgent, irresistible; but I presumed too much on my strength in the face of a duty to be performed. There are, too, duties owed to the public. It should not be enticed with an attraction which one feels one is incapable of giving it. You would feel regret at having assembled it to exhibit a timid and awkward person who could not open her lips. My children and my friends jumped up at the advertisement of a lecture by me. They oppose it in every way in their power. They know that under no circumstances have I been able to surmount my embarrassment, my absolute distrust of myself. Ask me to do anything, provided I shall not appear in person. I pray you and the members of the committee who honored me with their visit, to believe that I cannot console myself for my want of power and my retreat except by recollection of the kindnesses you showed me, and the gratitude with which they have filled me.

"'GEORGE SAND.'

"Those persons who know Mme. Sand best say that she does not exaggerate her embarrassment in public. They relate the following anecdote of her. Five or six years since she was at Toulon, and expressed a desire to visit a man-of-war. A dozen officers offered their ships at her service. She accepted one offer. The day appointed she went on board, and found the ship decked as if for a festival or an official inspection. Officers and men were all at their posts. She was received by the captain surrounded by his officers, and the attention of a dozen gentlemen did not embarrass her. She is no stranger to drawing-rooms, but when she came to leave the ship the men and officers were all drawn up in two lines, between which she proceeded to her boat. The first lieutenant stood at the end of one of these lines, and the youngest cabin boy at the end of the other. They presented arms. She was embarrassed by all these eyes fixed on her. She did not know whether she was expected to make a speech to them or not. Her heart was in her throat; her lips were convulsively closed; she trembled in every limb. Salutations were addressed to her, and it became necessary for her to make some reply. She tried to speak, but all she could utter were some unintelligible sounds, and when she reached the end of the lines, so confused that she did not know whether she was standing on her heels or her head, she make a profound courtesy to the cabin boy, and patted the first lieutenant on the cheek, saying in her kind, affable, familiar way: 'Good day, my little fellow!'

"While I am speaking of Mme. Sand, let me tell you that last Sunday morning the following note in her writing was despatched to all the friends of the family: 'M. and Mme. Maurice Dudevant-Sand have the honor to inform you of the birth of their daughter Aurore.' This makes Mme. Sand a grandmother. The baby has been baptized in the humble village church near Mme. Sand's chateau, whose spire overlooks the Vallee Noir, which she has made celebrated. Although there is no saint by the name of Aurore in the calendar (you know that on the continent the Roman Catholic Church, as a general rule, refuses to baptize children by any name except those in the calendar,) the name has been so long in Mme. Sand's family, she insisted upon the child's bearing it. You know Mme. Sand's maiden name was Mlle. Aurore Dupin, and she is a grand-niece of the celebrated Marshal de Saxe. Her legal name is Baroness Dudevant, which she received on her marriage. Her husband still lives, but they have been separated for a great many years. Mme. Sand will live at Nohant six months, and at Palaiseau six months of the year. The winter she spends far from Paris; the summer near the capital."

A NEW theatre is about to be erected at Paris, in which the works of Greek and Latin authors will alone be performed—such as those of Euripides, Sophocles, Œschylus, Terence and others. Something like 3,000,000f. have already been subscribed in shares, and the architect has completed his plan for the building.

THE CROWNING TRIUMPH OF ART has been achieved among toilet dressings for the complexion and skin, by that fragrant excellence—Davidson's Circassian Bloom. Sold by all druggists. *

ABRAHAM DAVENPORT.

IN the old days (a custom laid aside
With breeches and cocked hats) the people sent
Their wisest men to make the public laws.
And so, from a brown homestead, where the Sound
Drinks the small tribute of the Mianas,
Waved over by the woods of Rippowams,
And hallowed by pure lives and tranquil deaths,
Stamford sent up to the councils o the State
Wisdom and grace in Abraham Davenport.

'T was on a May-day of the far old year
Seventeen hundred eighty, that there fell
Over the bloom and sweet life of the Spring,
Over the fresh earth and the heaven of noon,
A horror of great darkness, like the night
In day of which the Norland sages tell—
The Twilight of the Gods. The low-hung sky
Was black with ominous clouds, save where its rim
Was fringed with a dull glow, like that which climbs
The crater's sides from the red hell below.
Birds ceased to sing, and all the barnyard fowls
Roosted; the cattle at the pasture bars
Lowed, and looked homeward; bats on leathern wings
Flitted abroad; the sounds of labor died;
Men prayed, and women wept; all ears grew sharp
To hear the doom-blast of the trumpet shatter
The black sky, that the dreadful face of Christ
Might look from the rent clouds, not as he looked
A loving guest at Bethany, but stern
As justice and inexorable Law.

Meanwhile in the old State House, dim as ghosts,
Sat the lawgivers of Connecticut,
Trembling beneath their legislative robes.
"It is the Lord's Great Day! Let us adjourn,"
Some said; and then, as if with one accord,
All eyes were turned to Abraham Davenport.
He rose, slow cleaving with his steady voice
The intolerable hush. "This well may be
The Day of Judgment which the world awaits;
But be it so or not, I only know
My present duty, and my Lord's command
To occupy till he come. So at the post
Where he hath set me in his providence,
I choose, for one, to meet him face to face—
No faithless servant frightened from my task,
But ready when the Lord of the harvest calls;
And therefore, with all reverence, I would say,
Let God do his work, we will see to ours.
Bring in the candles." And they brought them in.

Then by the flaring lights the Speaker read,
Albeit with husky voice and shaking hands,
An Act to amend an Act to regulate
The shad and alewive fisheries. Whereupon Wisely and well spake Abraham Davenport,
Straight to the question, with no figures of speech
Save the nine Arab signs, yet not without
The shrewd dry humor natural to the man:
His awe struck colleagues listening all the while,
Between the pauses of his argument,
To hear the thunder of the wrath of God
Break from the hollow trumpet of the cloud.

And there e stands in memory to this day,
Erect, self-poised, a rugged face, half seen
Against the background of unnatural dark,
A witness to the ages as they pass,
That simple duty hath no place for fear. [Atlantic Monthly.

MR. THOMPSON'S UMBRELLA.

"AUGUSTA, I wish you would practice Chopin's march. Mr. Thompson likes music."

Oh! how sick I was of hearing about Mr. Thompson. My poor aunt, she meant it very kindly, of course, but she little knew how she made me hate those single gentlemen whom she so wished me to please. I was an orphan, and had forty pounds a year, and my aunt's annuity died with her; so I suppose her anxiety to see me married was both commendable and natural, but to me it was dreadful. Moreover, perhaps because I was a proud girl, and perhaps, too, because I was a foolish one, the mere fact of a man, young or middle-aged—for only the old and wedded were excluded—coming to the house on my account, made him detestable in my eyes. I should not wonder if that were not the reason why I pleased none. I was said to be pretty—I may say that now, alas! it is so long ago—but plainer girls, with no greater advantages than I had, went off at a premium in the marriage market, and I remained Augusta Raymond, uncared and unsought for. I did not care, not I. I only lamented that aunt would worry both these unfortunate gentlemen and me with vain efforts to make them admire me, and make me like them. She was my best friend, however, and I loved her dearly. So I now sat down to the piano and played Chopin's march, and practiced for the benefit of the devoted Mr. Thompson, who was to come this evening, and who little knew, poor fellow, he had been invited to spend a week with us for the express purpose of falling in love with his second cousin's niece. I had not seen him since I was a child. He was a young man then, tall, dark, and grave, and already on the road to prosperity. He was a rich man now, at least rich for such a poor girl as I was, but he was Mr. Thompson, and I hated him; besides, he must be old, quite old.

I thought of all these things while I was playing, and then I forgot them, for the divine music bore me away, and music was a passion to me then.

We lived in the country, and a small but beautiful garden enclosed my aunt's cottage. It was a low one, with broad rooms, a little dark, perhaps, yet strangely pleasant. At least, they seemed so to me. I dearly liked the room in which I now sat playing. It was our best room, but it was also our sitting-room. A central table was strewn with books, some of which were dear old friends, and others were pleasant and new acquaintances. Flower-stands, work-baskets, and delightful chairs, chairs made to read or dream in, added to the attractions of this apartment. I enjoyed it even as I played; but then, to be sure, the windows were all open, and every one gave me a glimpse of the green garden with a patch of blue sky above its nodding trees, and the sweet scent of the mignonette came in with every breath of air. Where are you now, pleasant room and green garden? The ruthless hand of man has laid you waste, and my eyes can see you no more. Is there no home for lost places, no dreamland like the Indian's hunting-ground, where the things that have once been may enjoy a shadowy existence? Are you really forever gone and lost, save when you come back every time a woman, whose hair is turning gray, hears that grand mournful music to which your present homeliness would seem so little akin?

"My dear! Mr. Thompson!" said my aunt's voice, as I closed the instrument. I turned round and saw him; tall, dark, grave, very little altered. We had expected him for dinner, and he had come for luncheon: I forget how the mistake arose. As he opened the garden gate, he met my aunt. They had heard me playing, and stood by one of the windows to listen. When I ceased, they entered the room, and it was then that, as I said, I saw him.

I did not know it at the time, but I knew it later; I liked him from that very moment. I am not sure that every girl would have liked Mr. Thompson. He was decidedly good-looking, and was both shrewd and pleasant; but he had a quaint and abrupt manner, which was apt to startle strangers. I liked it well, however. I liked that eccentricity which never took him too far, and that slight want of polish which gave flavor to everything he said or did. I liked all, except his umbrella. That I detested. It was large, solid, massive, and dreadfully obtrusive. He had it in his hand on that bright, warm day, and long as our acquaintance lasted I never saw Mr. Thompson without it. Later, when our intimacy had progressed, I taxed him with this. "Yes," he said, good humoredly, "I confess it is my hobby. My earliest ambition as a boy was to possess an umbrella, and my greatest happiness as a man is to go about with one."

Of course, we did not speak about his umbrella on this the first morning we spent together. Mr. Thompson praised my music, and, looking me full in the face, told me I played divinely. He said it without preamble, and I saw he meant it. My aunt was delighted, and I felt pleased; but, somehow or other, I also felt that Mr. Thompson treated me like a little girl; and so he did—not merely then, but ever afterwards. Tiresome man! I had thought him old before I saw him, and I could not make him think me old now that he saw me.

Mr. Thompson did not stay a week with us, but a month. Oh, that happy month, with long golden days and delicious evenings, and music and sweet converse! shall I ever forget it? If the wakening was bitter, let me remember that the dream was very sweet.

Mr. Thompson was to leave us next morning, and we were in the garden together. I knew by this time how I felt towards him, and, kind though he was, I doubted if he cared much for me. And when he said, "Augusta, I have something to say to you," my heart began to beat. He used to call me Augusta, now and then, having known me as a child; but never had he said it so kindly as this evening.

Ah, well! I suppose many women have to go through the bitterness which came to me then. Mr. Thompson had met my cousin Jessie at Mrs. Gray's, proposed to her, and been accepted. From the moment he mentioned Jessie's name, I knew my fate. Without seeking it, I suppose, she had ever stood between me and every good. She had taken the friendship of my best friend, the liking of my nearest relative—I was not really my aunt's niece, only her late husband's—and now she had forestalled me in the love of the only man I had ever cared for. Surely she was not to blame in that, but, oh, how hard, how very hard, it seemed to me! The nightingale sang in the trees above us, pure brilliant stars burned in the sky, the garden was full of fragrance, and Mr. Thompson went on pouring Jessie's praises in my ear. She was so handsome, so bright, so genial, and so delightfully innocent? And what do you suppose he told me all this for? Why, because he wanted me to go and live with them. My aunt's health had been failing of late, and he was aware that I knew the worst might soon come, so he wanted me to be sure of a home. I burst into tears.

"My dear good child," he cried, warmly, "if I were not going away, I would not have grieved you so. You have, I know, a warm heart. Your dear aunt may live for years; only, if she should not, Jessie and I—"

"Pray don't!" I interrupted. I could not bear it. The more he praised me, the kinder he was, the more I wept and felt miserable. At length, at my request, he left me. I grew calmer after a while, and went in.

"Do play Chopin's march for us, my dear," said my aunt. Poor, dear aunt! she wanted me to fascinate him to the last. She little knew that Jessie, whom she disliked so, had been beforehand with me there.

I played it again. It was the knell of all my hopes. A gray twilight filled the room, and they could not see the tears which flowed down my cheeks. I played well, they said; and I believe I did. Something from myself was in the music that evening, and that something was very sorrowful. Mr. Thompson came and sat by me when I had done. The servant brought in the lights, and a letter for my aunt. While she was reading it, he said, softly:

"You will think over it."

"Pray don't," I entreated.

"But you do not know how much I like you," he insisted; "and then you will do my little, heedless Jessie good—poor childish darling! Besides, I have set my heart on something."

This crowned all. I guessed his meaning; he had a younger brother for whom he meant me. He had all but said so this evening in the garden. "It would do John, who was rather light, all the good in the world." I could not bear it. I rose and went up to aunt.

"What news, aunty?" I asked.

"News, indeed!" she replied, amazed. "There's Jessie going to marry my cousin, Mr. Norris, old enough to be her father. I wonder what he will do with the little flirt?"

There was a pause.

Mr. Thompson came forward. I did not dare to look at him.

"What Jessie is that?" he asked. "Surely not Miss Raymond's cousin?"

"Yes; the same. Do you know her?"

"I have seen her at Mrs. Gray's."

He spoke very calmly. I suppose he did not believe it. I pitied him; from my heart I pitied him.

"Perhaps it is not true, aunt," I said.

"Not true? why she writes it to me herself—there's her letter."

I looked at him now. He was pale as death, but very firm. Neither troubled look nor quivering lip gave token of the cruel storm within. Something now called my aunt out of the room.

"Augusta, may I look at it?" he asked, glancing towards the letter, which my aunt had handed to me.

I could not refuse him. I gave him the letter. He read it through with the same composure, then looking for his umbrella, which he would always keep in a corner of the sitting-room, he said, very calmly:

"I think I shall go and take a walk."

And he went out, and we saw him no more till the next morning, when he left us.

My aunt was disappointed to find that Mr. Thompson had not proposed to me after all, and I was hurt to the heart's core by the coldness of his adieu. My value had gone down with my cousin's faithlessness; mine had been at best but a reflected light. I was liked because Jessie was loved.

She became Mrs. Norris soon after this. She was married from my aunt's house, out of regard to Mr. Norris, who was related to her, and who disliked Mrs. Gray. "That busybody," he called her, and I am afraid she was a busybody. Jessie was very bright, and seemed very happy. She tossed me unmercifully about Mr. Thompson. She was sure, she said, he had made love to me, and she looked at me with cruel significance as she spoke. But I betrayed neither his secret nor mine; and though she vexed me when she quizzed him to Mr. Norris, especially about his umbrella, I did keep silent.

"I am sure he will be married with his umbrella under his arm," she said, the evening before her own wedding. "Don't you think so?"

I did not answer her; I went out into the garden, and wondered how she had charmed him. Alas! I might have wondered how, without seeking it, he had charmed me.

Jessie's marriage was a blow to my aunt. She had always thought I should go off first. She was also cruelly disappointed by Mr. Thompson's indifference, and perhaps she guessed the meaning of my altered looks. I believe I got pale and thin just then. And I was always playing Chopin's march.

"My dear," said my aunt to me one evening, "is not that very mournful?"

"I like it, aunt," I replied; but I resolved to play it no more.

"Mr. Thompson liked it," she said, with a sigh. "I wonder he did not propose to you," she added, abruptly.

I was mute.

"I wish I had never asked him here," she resumed; "I cannot help thinking—"

"Don't, pray don't!" I interrupted.

She did not insist, but she made me go and sit by her. She caressed me, she coaxed me, and little by little she drew my secret from me.

"My poor darling," she said, when I had confessed all, "he may value you yet."

"No, aunt, he never will. But pray do not trouble about me. I mean to get over it, and I will."

I spoke resolutely and my aunt praised me.

"You have always been the best of girls," she said, tenderly, "and I am glad you have confidence in me. I did not mean to leave home this year; but now I will take you to the seaside. You must have a change, my poor darling."

She kissed me, and I remember how calm and happy I felt in that gray room, sitting by my dear aunt's side, and looking at the starry sky. The nightingale was singing again, as on that sad evening when I had felt so broken-hearted; tears rose to my eyes when I remembered it, and his last kindness, and my foolish, withered hopes; but the bitterness was gone from my sorrow.

"You must have a change," said my aunt again.

Alas! the change came with the morning. My aunt was late for breakfast. I went up to her room and found her calmly sleeping. But oh! too calm, too deep were those slumbers. The kind eyes which had rested on me in love were closed, the voice which had ever spoken in praise and endearment was silenced, for ever and ever.

I suppose it was not Jessie's fault that her husband was my aunt's heir-at-law; but I found it very hard. Poor, dear aunt, she always did mean to make a will in my favor, and she never did. Mr. Norris behaved very handsomely, I was told. He gave me the piano which had been bought for me, a few other articles of no great value, and all my aunt's wardrobe. He kept her jewels, which were fine, and the furniture, for which, as he said truly enough, I had no use. Moreover, he allowed me to remain in the cottage till Lady-day; though perhaps, as he could not live in two houses at a time, and must pay the rent whether I stayed there or not, this was no such great favor after all. God forgive me, I fear I was very sinful during the dark days that followed. I had some friends who did, or rather who said, their best; but there was one never came near me, who gave me no token of his existence, who had no kind word for me, who let me struggle through my hard trial, and who never offered a helping hand. He might at least have written, have condoled with me in my sorrow, but he did not. And yet he was in the neighborhood. He was often at Mr. Norris' house. Jessie herself told me so. True, he had business to transact with her husband; but still, how could he do it?

He did it, and he did more. Mr. Norris was thrown off his horse one morning and brought home dead. Jessie became a widow, and a poor one, said the world. Mr. Norris was not a rich man after all, and he left many debts. I only went to see her once. I found her cold, callous and defiant, under her infliction; yet I would have gone again if Mr. Thompson had not been Mr. Norris' executor. He had business to settle with the widow, and I could only interfere; besides, I could not bear to see them together. It was very wrong and very useless, but it was so. Mrs. Gray often came to see me. I cannot say she comforted me much. She gave me a world of wearisome advice, and told me much that I would rather not have heard. What was it to me now, that accounts kept him so often and so late with Jessie? They were both free; and if he chose to forgive her and marry her, and if she chose to marry once more for money—I say it again—what was it to me?

And yet I suppose it was something, after all; for when Mrs. Gray left me one afternoon in February, I felt the loneliest being on this whole earth. She had harped again on that hateful string—that Mr. Thompson seemed quite smitten with Mrs. Norris. "And what do you think, my dear?" she added; "he thought you were gone. He seemed quite surprised when I said I had seen you on Sunday. 'What, is she not gone?' he asked—'gone to London?' 'No, indeed. What would she go to London for?' He did not answer that, but, from something he said, I saw he thought you were engaged to be married. 'I wish she were, poor dear!' I replied; 'it is a hard case to be so young and so lonely.' I have no doubt he thinks so, too, and so it is to prevent Mrs. Norris from being lonely that he goes to see her so often." Thus she rattled on, stabbing me with every word, till at length she left me to my misery. I sat looking at the fire; it was bright and warm, but my loneliness was heavy upon me; besides, it had been snowing, and the gray sky and white garden and silent air had something both lone and chill in them. Yet I was not quite alone. Early in the winter I had taken in a poor, half-starved stray dog, and, though he was but a shaggy half-bred cur, I had made a pet of him. He had laid by his vagrant habits willingly enough, and he now lay sleeping on the rug at my feet. Poor Carlo! he heeded not the morrow, and thought not of the future. Yet how long could I keep him?—and, if I cast him away, who would have him? He had neither youth nor beauty to recommend him—nothing but his old honest heart, and who would care for that? "Poor Carlo—poor Carlo!" I thought; and, perhaps because my heart was rather full just then, tears rose to my eyes as I thought of the fate that lay before him. I believe I thought of something else, too. I remember a vision I saw in the burning coals; how it came there Heaven knows. I saw them both, as no doubt they often were, bending over accounts which they read together, then looking up and exchanging looks and smiles which no one could mistake. I wonder why I came back to images which tortured me—but it was so. I do not know how long Mrs. Gray had been gone, when Carlo gave a short bark; the gate-bell rang; I saw a tall, dark form pass across the window, and my little maid opened the door, saying:

"Mr. Thompson, ma'am."

I rose. He came in, with his umbrella as usual, and Carlo went up to him and wagged a friendly welcome. I could not say one word. I was dreadfully agitated. I felt quite sure he had come to tell me that he meant to marry Jessie, and to ask me to go and stay with them, or something of the kind. Nothing else could have brought him. Or perhaps, as Jessie had, no doubt, told him that I was gone, he had, on learning the truth, felt ashamed of his long coldness, and had come to make some sort of excuse. He made none; but he asked how I was, took a chair, looked rather hard at me, and, without waiting for my answer, feared I was not very well.

"Oh! I am not ill, you know," I replied, a little carelessly. "I trust you are well, Mr. Thompson."

He said he was very well, and he looked at the fire. For a while we were both silent. I spoke first. My remark was scarcely a gracious one.

"I heard you were so much engaged that I scarcely expected to see you," I said.

I was vexed with myself as soon as I had said it. He might think I was annoyed at his long absence, and, surely, I was not! But he took my implied reproach very well. He answered that he had, indeed, been much engaged: but that everything was over now. Mrs. Norris, he added, had left this morning. My heart gave a great throb; but I was mute.

"She left in no contented mood, I believe," he resumed. "The balance in her favor was low—lower than I expected. Mrs. Norris has something like a hundred a year. This and a few jewels constitute the net profit she derives from her marriage. Unluckily, these speculations cannot be repeated often, you see. The capital of youth and beauty has but a time—a brief one; it is apt to wear out, and the first venture ought to be the best. Mrs. Norris, not having found it so, is disappointed. I suppose it is natural; but you know I cannot pity her very much."

I supposed not, but how all that cold, hard talk pained me.

"I have a fancy," he resumed, "that this kind lady expected some other ending to our accounts. This is not very flattering to my vanity, unless, indeed, as showing my marketable value; is it, now?"

I would not answer that question. His tone, his manner, vexed me. Suddenly he raised his eyes to mine.

"Did such a rumor reach you?" he asked.

I could not deny it. My face was in a flame. I believe I stammered something, but I do not know what.

"Even you have heard it," he said; "the world is very kind. And you believed it, too? I had hoped you knew me better."

He seemed quite hurt; but I offered no justification. Then he rather formally asked me to be allowed to mention the business that brought him. So it was business! I scorned myself for my folly, which was not dead yet, and bade him speak.

Was I asleep or dreaming? Mr. Thompson spoke of my aunt, her love for me, my forlorn position, and expressed the strongest wish to take care of me.

"But," he added, with some hesitation, "I can do this but in one fashion—as your husband. Will you overlook all those peculiarities in my temper which used to annoy you, I fear, and take what there is of true and good in me? Can you, will you, do this?"

He looked at me in doubt. Ah! this was one of my bitterest moments. He cared so little for me, that he had never seen, never suspected, how much I loved him. And he expected me to take him so. I clasped my hands and twisted them nervously; I could not speak at once.

"And you, Mr. Thompson," I said at last, "and you—"

"Well, what about me? Do you mean, can I, too, do this?"

"Yes; can you do it?"

"Why, surely—else I had never proposed it."

He half smiled at the doubt my question implied, and looked at me as he smiled. Both the look and smile exasperated me.

"Mr. Thompson," I said, excitedly, "I have not deserved this. Carlo, come here."

My poor, shaggy Carlo came forward, wagging his tail. He laid his head on my knee, and looked up at me wistfully and fondly, as only dogs can look when they vainly seek to read the meaning of a human face.

"He was an outcast," I said, looking at Mr. Thompson; "he was starving; he came to this door; I fed him, and he would not leave it. I took pity on him—I gave him a mat to lie on and a crust to eat. He loves me for it; but, Mr. Thompson, I am not quite so low as to be brought to this poor beast's level—I can take care of myself."

Mr. Thompson threw himself back in his chair, and uttered a dismayed whistle as I made this free commentary upon his proposal.

"Well, well," he said, recovering slowly, "I can understand that you should not care for me, but I did not expect you would take it so."

"And how could I take it?" I cried. "You give me pity. I scorn pity. Ah, Mr. Thompson, if I were not the poor, forlorn girl I am, would you feel or speak so? Do you think I do not know how rich girls are wooed and won? If you cared an atom for me, would you dare to come to me with such language?"

"What language?"

"What did you mean by taking care of me?"

"What I said. Yes, Augusta, I wish to take care of you; true, fond, loving care; nothing shall make me unsay it."

He spoke warmly, and a manly glow rose to his face; but I would not give in, and I said, angrily, that I did not want to be taken care of.

"Do let us drop these unlucky words," he entreated; "and do tell me whether you will marry me, yes or no. Let it be, if you like, that I want you to take care of me. I am much older than you are, you know."

I don't know what possessed me. I said "No." Oh! how I would have liked to recall the word, but it was spoken, and he rose with a clouded and disappointed face. He lingered a little, and asked to know why it was No and not Yes? I said we could not be happy together. He bowed gravely and left me. I suppose he was hurt, for he did not add a word. No assurance of friendship, of good will, no hope that I would relent or change my mind, passed his lips. The door closed upon him. I heard the garden gate fall to, and I felt in a sort of stupor. It was over. What madness had made me banish him? Every step took him away further from me. Never—never again—should we meet. Perhaps he would not have left me then, if I could have spoken the truth. Ah! if I could have said to him, "I cannot be happy with you because I love, and you do not; because my pride and my love would suffer all day long if I were your wife; because it is easier to do without you than have you on these terms." If I could have said all this, would our meeting have ended thus? It was too late to think of that now, but not too late to suffer. I buried my face in the pillow of the couch on which I was sitting, and cried and sobbed as if my heart would break.

Poor Carlo's cold nose thrust in the hand which hung down by my side in the folds of my dress roused me. I looked up, and saw Mr. Thompson. He was very red, and seemed flurried.

"I have forgotten my umbrella," he said, a little nervously. Yes, there it was, in the corner, that horrible umbrella of his! But, instead of going to look for it, he suddenly came and sat down on the couch by me. I do not know how I looked, but I felt ready to die with shame. He took my hand and kissed it.

"My dear Miss Raymond," he said, persuasively, "why should we not be happy together? I cannot bear to give you up, indeed I cannot."

I looked at him in doubt.

"Then you do really like me?" I asked.

"Do I really like you? Why, what else have I been saying all along?"

"You said you wanted to take care of me."

"Oh, if we are to go back to that—" he began, resignedly. But we did not go back to that; we went back to nothing, for a miserable girl suddenly became the happiest of women. Still I was not quite satisfied.

"You would not have come back, if it had not been for that horrible umbrella of yours," I said, with a little jealousy.

"Very true," he replied, with his peculiar smile; "but I did come back, and glanced in through the window first, and I saw you hiding your face on that cushion, and Carlo looking at you as if he thought it strange you should be so forlorn; and so I came in for my umbrella; and, to tell you the truth, I had forgotten it on purpose."

Perhaps he only said it to please me, but as I looked in his face I did not think so then; and, though years have passed over us both, I do not think so now.

INNOCENCE FOR TWO.—A modest gentleman from the rural districts, recently on a visit to the city, was on the point of informing a lady friend of the fact that her dress was tucked up, thereby displaying a portion of her hose, when a gentleman told him that "hitched up" dresses were the latest importation from the land of frogs. The young man was loth to believe that such was the case, and, blushing for the taste of the present day, concluded that he could stand it if the ladies could.

WE generally possess the good or ill qualities which we attribute to mankind.

NOTICE.

The publication of "The Californian" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

White & Bauer, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for The Californian in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

letters relating to the Business, Editorial or other Departments of the paper should be addressed to the Publishers of The Californian, No. 532 Merchant street, San Francisco.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JUNE 9. 1866.

Full volumes of The Californian, from the commencement, can be obtained at the office, 532 Merchant street. Price, in muslin, $1 per volume; two volumes (one year) bound together, $6. Unbound, per volume, $2 50.

GENERAL WINFIELD SCOTT.

ALTHOUGH the late war has made death familiar to the American people, and brought sorrow to almost every household, nevertheless the decease of Gen. Scott, who has been for more than a half century conspicuously associated with public events, will be received with general grief. The eulogy of this eminent man is best written by reviewing his life and services.

Winfield Scott was born in Petersburg, Va., June 13th, 1786. When he had attained his fifth year, he lost his father; and his education and care devolved upon his mother, who was a person of excellent sense and strength of character. He was placed at school at Richmond, and subsequently at William and Mary College; and at the age of twenty he was admitted to the bar. He removed to South Carolina, but, as the laws of that State excluded him from practice until after a year's residence, he returned to his native town, where he joined a volunteer company of cavalry called out by proclamation after the outrage on the frigate Chesapeake. When the questions of English spoliations on our commerce and the right of impressment agitated the public mind of that day, Scott supported the war policy of the Administration, and, by contributions to the newspapers, he endeavored to show that the recommendation of war made by Mr. Madison was the only remedy left the nation, consistent with its honor and dignity. On the increase of the army in 1808, he was appointed Captain of Artillery and ordered to New Orleans, where he soon got into difficulty with Wilkinson for declaring his suspicions of complicity between that General and Burr. He was convicted by a court martial on the specification of speaking disrespectfully of his superior officer and suspended from duty for one year. During this period, the hospitality and the richly endowed library of a friend enabled him to pursue a course of study in the science of war which had its fruit in the contest which ensued. The declaration of war against England found Scott a Lieut.-Colonel of the Second Artillery. His first service was at Queenston Heights, where he assumed command when Van Rensselaer was wounded. The enemy's position on the heights was captured by Scott, who led the charge, but, as our troops on the other side of the river refused to cross, and the British were reinforced, he was compelled to surrender. On his exchange in January, 1813, he was ordered to Canada as chief of General Dearborn's staff. He led the attack on Fort George, and although severely wounded by a fragment from an exploding magazine, he was the first to enter the fort and haul down the English flag. Colonel Porter entering the fort for the same purpose, and finding Scott there said, "Confound your long legs, Scott, you've got in before me."

The year 1813 ended in disaster and gloom. The army under Wilkinson, partially defeated, added to its ignominy by an abrupt retreat. New levies of troops were made and sent to a camp of instruction at Buffalo, under Scott, who had been promoted to a Brigadier—being then 28 years of age. He placed his officers under the same rigor of discipline as the rank and file, and as he was considered the best tactician in the army, as well as a most proficient drill officer, his success at the camps in question was all that could be desired. The battles of Chippewa and Lundy's Lane followed soon after. At the first named contest, Scott crossed a creek under a heavy fire of the enemy, from a battery of nine pieces, and advancing to within eighty paces of the British lines, he called out to McMill's column, saying, "The enemy say we are good at a long shot, but can't stand cold iron. I call on the Eleventh to give the lie to the slander—charge!" And charge they did, when the enemy broke and fled. Gen. Brown said in his official report that "Scott is entitled to the highest praise his country could bestow—for to him more than to any other am I indebted for the victory." At Lundy's Lane he was even more distinguished than at Chippewa. Amid the heaviest fire his vivacity and reckless courage added greatly in assuring and cheering the troops. He had two horses killed under him and was severely wounded twice—that in the shoulder was unusually severe. Thirty-five years afterwards we have heard him complain of the pain that wound still gave him.

On the reduction of the army to a peace footing, he applied himself both in Europe and at home to the highest branches of his profession. War embraces a wide range of knowledge, and its mastery requires not only prolonged and unwearied application, but a peculiar mental fitness which Scott had to an eminent degree. His qualifications were exhibited in his General Regulations or Military Institutes, which was the first work of the kind published in the country. His System of Tactics, which was printed under an Act of Congress, was another valuable contribution he made to military science and art.

The Blackhawk war brought him into the field again. The cholera having broken out among his troops on the Lake, he was obliged, on his arrival at Chicago, to send the greatest part of them to the hospitals, where he was seen moving among the sick from day to day, attending to their wants and giving to his subordinates an example of Christian courage more heroic and beautiful than that brought out on the battlefield. The Secretary of War said to him that his conduct, during these duties, required higher moral courage than the operations of an active campaign.

That same year is memorable for the breaking out of a distemper which has caused more pain and destruction than the cholera has done: Nullification, or Secession. When South Carolina sought to set aside an Act of Congress, and called into existence an army of 20,000 men to coerce the Government into its repeal, Scott was sent to Charleston, and it was wisely left to his discretion what means to employ to recall that State to reason and its duty. He quietly introduced supplies and men into the forts, strengthened the defences, and, as if by accident, vessels of war arrived in the harbor. Delicately and quietly did he perform his labor, and while he was eminently conciliatory, he did not abate in energy. Not only did he do his whole duty to the entire satisfaction of the Government, but he made himself popular with the very men who were even then rehearsing the terrible tragedy we have seen enacted so recently.

His talent for pacification had full exercise during the "Patriot War" of 1837. Canada was then the scene of an insurrection, and many of our countrymen, openly disregarding their duties as neutrals, went so far as to organize a provisional government, entered our arsenals and stole the arms there, and in every way prepared to aid the insurgents. In this exigency Scott was invested with plenary powers and was sent to the frontier. The memories of the battles fought by him in that vicinity, gave him an influence which would not have been accorded any other man in the country; and the President rightly calculated that this influence, added to his unquestioned ability, would have the effect of quieting these disorders. Although it was midwinter he pursued his mission of peace and reconciliation, addressing bands of sympathizers—reminding them that it was their duty to leave all questions in dispute to be settled by the Government in such a way as comported with national honor. He was entirely successful, and no doubt his personal influence saved the country a long and bloody war.

The same good sense and signal ability was manifested in the pacification of the Cherokees. Channing in speaking of that mission said that, "In the whole history of the intercourse of civilized with barbarous nations, I doubt if a brighter page can be found than that which records Scott's agency in the removal of the Cherokees. He has succeeded not so much by policy as by the nobleness and generosity of his character; by moral influences; by the earnest conviction with which he has enforced on all with whom he had to do the obligations of patriotism, justice, humanity, and religion. It would not be easy to find among us a man who has won a purer fame."

Scarcely had he accomplished that work before he was called again to the Maine frontier, to settle the troubles arising out of a question of disputed territory. England and Maine had advanced their military posts, and 8,000 troops were being pushed forward by that State to expel the English trespassers. Congress, so menacing was the appearance of things, authorized the President to call out 50,000 troops, and the country had well nigh abandoned all hope of peace. Sir John Harvey, Governor of New Brunswick, and Scott had held, in their respective armies, staff positions, and by means of flags of truce they had been frequently brought into contact. On one occasion Scott had saved his life, and on another he had found a miniature of Sir John's wife, taken when she was a bride, in some captured baggage, which he purchased and sent Sir John. All these things gave Scott an influence with Sir John, who was persuaded by Scott to make the first step towards a peaceful adjustment of the difficulty. Scott then personally appealed to the Legislature of Maine to withdraw her troops, which was done, and then the controversy was left to be settled by the English and American Governments. Sir John Harvey said that his reliance on Gen. Scott led him to give a willing assent to the proposition which ended so happily. It was the same confidence in his moderation and ability that induced the Administration to send him to this Coast to settle the San Juan difficulty.

The war with Mexico, notwithstanding the stupendous struggle of the past four years, is yet fresh in the minds of the people. That contest was the nursery of those who have been conspicuous on both sides in our civil war. When it was determined to make Vera Cruz the base of operations against the capital, Scott was placed in command. Vera Cruz was invested, and, with the castle of San Juan, surrendered. By the middle of September of that year, the city of Mexico had been captured, and its army of defence scattered in predatory bands, without hope of aggregation. Looking to that campaign in all its aspects, none more remarkable can be found in history.

Scott introduced into his system of warfare a humanity and philanthropy unprecedented in all military annals. Private property was never so safe in that country as during its occupation by our army. Homes were protected from all intrusion from our troops, and the Christian symbols on the altars of the churches were untouched. Even the rude figures of the Madonna at the waysides, hung with the pious offerings of the people, were undesecrated; and private property was never taken for army purposes, except on payment of its full value.

Much as his attention was occupied by the innumerable affairs of his high position, Scott found time to visit the sick of his army, and from actual inspection see they were properly cared for. He organized the civil administration of the Capital, and adapted a system of revenue by means of which the army would be self-supporting; and yet he left the ordinary municipal revenues to be collected by the Mexican rulers, and to be applied by them to the support of the civil administration he had permitted after the conquest. His chief object was to conciliate the enemy and to leave them sufficient vitality by which a government could be constructed. He introduced into the war code principles in accordance with a high moral standard; he raised the conquered to the level of citizens, and made them share the duties and authority of government. Under his firm and equal sway, law resumed its control, and his own troops were compelled to give it obedience as exactingly and rigidly as was the poorest lépero. The hand of the bravo was stayed, and the dread morgue was left without its once daily evidence of the passion and license of lawlessness. The peasants gathered in peace the harvests from the fertile valleys, and, unvexed by odious restrictions, exposed them for sale in the public marts. No wonder, then, that, under his just rule, many of Mexico's citizens should have endeavored to persuade Scott to remain in power—their governor or king.

In February, 1848, the treaty of peace was signed, and with its accomplishment—the object of so much solicitude to our people—Scott's official career in Mexico closed. He surrendered his command to Butler, and, in obedience to orders, presented himself before a Court of Inquiry to answer (it was nothing else) General Pillow's claim to have been the strategist and hero of that campaign. So odious was the prosecution in the eyes of the people, that the Administration virtually abandoned it.

In October, 1860, Scott, in a letter to the Secretary of War, warned the Government of its danger, but without effect. The storm broke, and, enfeebled in health, Scott was unfitted for active duties. He was the adviser of the Government until November, 1861, when, feeling that his days of usefulness had forever gone, he asked to be retired in favor of newer, younger and more vigorous men. But if he had done, during that crisis, nothing at all—nothing beyond new declarations of loyalty to the great and beneficent Government under which he had lived, and which through fifty years he had served so well—it was enough; it had effects of incalculable benefit to the cause of the people—to free government everywhere.

His last few years were spent in preparing his memoirs for the press, and in seeking relief from his bodily pain. And at last, at his beautiful home at West Point, where he had passed so many years of his life; attended by the good wishes of a grateful people—"his last feeble and lingering glance on the gorgeous ensign of the Republic, still full high advanced, not a stripe erased or polluted, and not a single star obscured"—the good old man, the true soldier and Christian, died.

California Prison Commission.—The Second Quarterly Meeting of the Trustees of this Association was held on Tuesday evening. The Agent, Mr. Woodworth, presented the following figures as a part of his report: Number of prisoners visited, for counsel, etc., 412; whole number of interviews with prisoners, 854; number assisted, in various ways, 106; number supplied with board, for longer or shorter terms, 15; number supplied with money, in small sums, generally for necessary expenses when leaving the city, 14; with clothing, 4; number released from imprisonment through the efforts, in various ways, of the Agent, 32; commutation of sentence, in consequence of circumstances brought to light by his investigation, in 3 cases; number of visits to the office of the Commission by discharged prisoners, 100; visits by the Agent to the State Prison, 5; to the County Jail, 44; to the City Prison, 81; addresses to prisoners, at San Quentin, 4; letters and articles for publication written, 39; money collected, $228 50; and nearly a thousand business calls made. There seems to be no lack of zeal on the part of the gentlemen who have engaged in this good work, but their ability to carry it through effectively, depends chiefly upon the liberality of the public in supplying the necessary funds. At present the society is in debt about $175.

[For the Californian.]

RAILWAY READING.

SHORT stories that combine a certain amount of sentiment with a catastrophe suffieiently thrilling, have been invariably found acceptable to the travelling reader. A plot not so intricate as to interfere with the observation of scenery; a sentiment not so exalted as to be incompatible with flirtation or the chewing of spruce gum or lozenges, have been usually considered specially fit for this style of romance. Magaziues, weekly papers, and "Dime Novels" have provided this literary refection for the weary traveller. For the mind as well as the body requires refreshment, and if it comes in that crude and indigestible shape usually so fatal to the traveller's stomach, it is excusable as one of the exigencies of travel.

Of late years the character of these stories has alarmingly changed. The faseinating hero and stately heroine whose fortunes we breathlessly followed in the railway carriage or steamboat cabin, have passed away. Let us recall the almost invariable conditions under which they made their appearanee. The scenery was usually foreign—the dramatis personæ noble. Can we forget the ingenious youth, who in humble circumstances, yet bearing about him an "indescribable air" of being somebody, snubbed one of "England's proudest peers," triumphantly married the daughter of an Earl, and, after asserting the dignity of simple manhood—O, fatal lapsus—proved in the last chapter to be "the rightful heir and the noblest blood in the kingdom." Perhaps there is no better evidence of the innate snobbery of our sympathies than this very common denouement. Forged wills—which by a careful observatiou of romances seem to comprise seven-eighths of all the wills made—liberal quotations from the Freneh, and language which if not always grammatical, was invariably beautiful, lent a fascinating interest to the romance. On this moving picture of high life and its attendant sympathies, the conductor's request to see the reader's ticket—a request which always implies a certain degree of suspicion—broke all too harshly.

When the short-story writer laid his plot nearer home we could not help feeling that his genius was cramped. Yet how masterly the manner in which the American Indian—almost as imperfectly understood as the English nobleman—was handled in those pages. What flowers of rhetoric surrounded the picturesque savage. How perfeetly satisfied we were to believe that he invariably addressed us iu the abstraet, as "the Pale Face," that he seldom spoke three consecutive sentences without an allusion to the "Great Spirit," that his daughter was a model of womanly grace and beauty. Again, the American Revolution was a fruitful source of inspiration to the story-writer of twenty years ago. What liberties were taken with the events of that historic epoch! Were we ever mysteriously introduced to a "tall, commanding figure," and "face of great dignity and benevolence" without instantly recognizing General Washiugton? The private matters in which "the Father of his Country" personally interfered, the love affairs which he conducted to a successful termination, would alone seem to justify his reputation. How often did the genial face of Israel Putnam beam upon us from those pages; how quickly did we recognize Francis Marion, who has passed in some mysterious way into history as perpetually exciting the astonishment of British offieers on the subject of his diet and domestic economy? Nor were the domestic virtues neglected by the short-story writers. Mildly interesting stories of three or four chapters in length, the plot laid iu a New England village—a dark hint of reality conveyed by the initials of some of the principal characters such as "Judge L,," "Squirc B.," and "Deacon O.," were very popular at that period. The heroine usually died early; wastiug away under the combined effeet of fancy fairs, singing schools, donation parties, social teas, and other local excitements. Upon this gloomy peroration did the short-story writer lavish the wealth of his rhetoric. Not content with an affeeting deseription of her death-bed, he evidently took a gloomy satisfaction in the details of her funeral, nor did he dismiss us without the information that "in the lovely little village of D." "a simple slab in the country churchyard" was all that preserved "the memory of Mary B." Per haps it is unnecessary to say that this was in the "spring tide"—a season peculiarly fatal to romantic loveliness.

The different reforms and philanthropic enterprises of our country were also favorable to the genius of the short-story writer. Without alluding to the efforts of that great Master of American Moral Fiction—Mr. T. S. Arthur—a romantic Poor Richard engrafted upon a prose Tupper—what reader has forgotten the young mechanic who drank a single glass of wine at an evening party, and thereby involved himself and family in general ruin; the young couple who laid aside three cents a day and ultimately attained wealth and respectability, the husband dying an Assemblyman; the young woman who lost the affection of her lover—an eligible young man, for the writer never lost sight of the practical in the romantic—through a single pettish word; the young wife who dressed too much; the slatternly wife who didn't dress enough— But why continue? Are not these things still written in the book of Godey—the magazine of Peterson?

The change which has come over the romantic dreams of the short-story writer has been slow but insidious. The heroine whose stateliness we loved, has become arch, vivacious, and witty to a painful degree. Instead of thrilling us with that melancholy glance which was supposed to express in some orthodox manner "the yearnings of a poetic soul" she now transfixes us with a sarcasm. Instead of those conversations magnificent in hyperbole and lofty in sentiment, we have now badinage that becomes almost hysterical in its inteusity. Her head no longer sinks on her lover's manly breast, as she "whispers sweet consent"—"a sudden expression almost of pain"—"a cold rigidity of the small lips"—"a mocking, but silvery laugh" is all that the bashful lover may look for. Not but that she has sentiment, but it is of a singularly perplexing and exasperating quality—she has a way of looking at you "with strange dumb eyes"—her glance is "trance like," and "far off"—she is sybilline," "fateful." She is no longer beautiful, but "singular looking." It may be easily imagined that a heroine of this order would not be satisfied with that one devoted lover which in former times was her predestined partner. She loves two. She is two or three times engaged. She is justified by a philosophy borrowed from our lively Gallic friends. She has all the benefit of those "extenuating circumstances" which French poetical justiee admits equal'y as its literature and law. The modern short story gives us details, where formerly we had mere glittering generalities. The dress of our heroine is described with feminine precision; the writer no longer trusts to white musliu and "simple rosebuds" for the hair. In the matter of accomplishments the same care is displayed. Our heroine no longer allows her fingers to run carelessly over the piano while she listens to her lover's conversation; she deliberately sits down to Chopiu or Schubert. We are forced to listen to an enthusiastic criticism of "Beethoven, choral symphony op. 125," or a "duo in E flat." We are crushed with her knowledge of botany; the "simple rosebud" her lover presents is technically considered; it is no longer pulled to pieces in bashful meditation—she "removes its petals." In the more pretentious short-story, she generally has a profession—painter, musician, sculptor, governess, doctor. The hero—at best, the male of her species—is absorbed in her superior attractions. He is no longer young; middle-aged heroes are naturally much more fascinating to the female short story writers of a certain age. He is fascinatingly rough and outspoken in manner; he is satirical and philosophical; he is learned and ponderous. His voice is deep-toned; his grasp is hearty; he is kind even in his rudeness. In fact, the feminine idea of man would seem to be generally based on a study of Newfoundland dogs and mastiffs. Perhaps he is a soldier—an Union officer—but this supposition opens such an exhausting and illimitable view of hospitals with sick nurses, battlefields, politics, and wounded soldiers returning with high honors—and the countless romances of the civil war whieh have taken the place of the old Revolutionary episodes, that we must needs pause.

Of such stuff are the heroes and heroines of the modern short-stories made. We meet them in the pages of the magazine or weekly that we glance over in the railway car or steamboat; we are more or less interested iu their fate or fortuue, but they are apt to pass out of our minds with the vanishing objects that we hurry past. For the short-story is not a matter of deliberate reading—nor does it exact the attitude of attention and complete abstraction. What is written here of course does not refer to the lighter efforts of the few great romancers of our day, nor the really clever sketches—not stories—of Euglish periodieals, whieh develop humor and satire, rather than plot or incident. And yet an age which puts iuto our hands the latest chapters of the great serial writers, as we walk or ride; which gives us cheap pocket editious of our noblest poets; which collates for our hurried recreation in review or eclectic all that is good of refined and epicurean literature; whieh enables us to delight in the pathos or humor of simple duty as sketched by master hands, instead of the forced aud unnatural romance of the sentimental hack, surely offers us some compensatiou for the gradual decay of short-story telling. It is certainly something to be thankful for that our wives and daughters travelling by land or sea are more likely to refresh themselves with books whose pages breathe an atmosphere as pure, as fresh, aud as wholesome as that which blows through the open window, than in the days when literature spread its refreshment table for the weary traveller with indigestible moral pie, sensational hot coffee, sentimental tea, and emotional soda water.

BRET.

DELICATE RULES OF ETIQUETTE.—It is almost impossible for us Anglo-Saxon folk thoroughly to understand the delicate rules of etiquette which govern the relation of sexes in the East. For instance, it is quite shocking for a married woman to speak of her "husband." She must talk of him as the "master," "my lord," or "father of my son." Ou the other hand, a man never mentions his wife to another man; but there is no impropriety in his discussiug the most sacred and secret subjects of conjugal life with a woman. Said one of the masters: "Of course, I do not speak of my harem to English gentlemen; but to a good lady can speak of it."

AMUSEMENTS.

THE Broker of Bogota, a play written for Mr. Forrest by Dr. Bird, of Philadelphia, was performed on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings; drawing an audience but slightly diminished on its third representation. The play is an interesting one, but has no marked merit of character or construction to win it a place in the ranks of the first class pieces. The character of "Baptista Febro" does not afford Mr. Forrest a sufficient scope to draw much on his better professional qualities, and, though some scenes become interesting and impressive in his hands, the character can never be marked as a great one. Mrs. Sophie Edwin preseuted "Juauna" to us in a most favorable light, and was awarded the compliment of a call before the curtain on its first representation. Miss Lillie, Messrs. McCullough, Thorne, and Pierpont Thayer, made the most of their characters. The piece was excellently placed on the stage, and was well performed throughout in all its parts.

Mr. Forrest repeated his "Macbeth" on Thursday evening. It was by no means equal to his representation of other Shakspearian charaeters.

The bill for the matinée to-day consists of that sterling old comedy, The Wonder; or, A Woman Keeps a Secret. This evening, those reliable assistants, to whom is attributable the mechanical sueeess of the many plays produced at the Opera House during the season—Mrs. Staekhousc and Nichols—put up their names for a benefit, and present an attractive bill, consisting of the fine play, Dreams of Delusion; the lively farce of His Last Legs, with the cork-like Harry Courtaine once more on the surface, in the part of "O'Callaghan." Mr. McCullough will also recite "Shamus O'Brien" for the oceasion.

Next week, Mr. Forrest will personate "Brutus" on Monday and Wednesday evenings; "Macbeth" on Tuesday; "Richelieu" on Thursday; and "Richard III.," for the first time in California, on Friday.

Dr. Jordan's Anotomical Museum continues to receive its share of public patronage. This collection, embracing nearly one thousand different varieties of anotomical preparations and eharts, offers the means of obtaining much useful and praetical knowledge that cannot be obtained from any other source.

MUSICAL.

THE ITALIAN OPERA ASSOCIATION.

WHAT success shall attend the formation of an opera asso-eiation in this eity is problematical. To create, instruct, and encourage a taste for the fine arts the "Art Union" was formed nearly two years ago, but the estimate of its success was incorrect, and its life was completed several months ago. The patrons of music are uudoubtedly more numerons in this city than those of painting and sculpture, and, although the establishment of a permanent opera here seems at the first glance as great an undertaking in proportion to its patrons as the "Art Union," we should be glad to find ourselves in error, and should be the first to rejoice at its complete success.

An organization of this kind has been formed under the name of the "San Francisco Italian Opera Association," which has been eompleted by the election of the following officers: President, R. C. Rogers; Vice President, D. Knight; Treasurer, M. Gray; Secretary, D. Wilder; with an efficient corps of honorary vice presidents and directors. It is to be sustained by a small monthly contribution, and all persons are eligible to membership except professional musicians.

To this association Signor Bianchi has announced that arrangements have already been made for the commencement of a musical season in July, when the followiug operas will probably be preseuted:

Verdi—Il Trovatore, La Traviata, Ernani, Rigoletto, Attila, Macbeth, I Masnadieri, I due Foscari, I Lombardi, Un Ballo en Masehera. Donizetti—La Favorita, Il Poliuto, Lucia di Lammermoor, Belisario, Linda di Chamounix, Lucrezia Borgia. Ricci—Chi dura vince, Crispino e la Comare. Mozart—Don Giovanni. Bellini—Norma, La Sonnambula. Meyerbeer—L'Africaine. Halevy—La Juive. Gounod—Faust. Pacini—Saffo. Petrella—Ione.

The artists who will appear, besides those who reside in this city, are Signor Marra, baritone, and Signor Milleri, basso profundo, now on their way hither. Negotiations on foot may also effect the appearance of the celebrated soprano, Signorina Noel-Guidi. The above will be sustained by a chorus of eighteen voices and an orchestra of sixteeu instruments under the leadership of Mr. Herold.

MR. BENKERT'S CONCERT.

Mr. Benkert was formally received by a very large audience on Thursday evening. An excellent pianist, he does not however, surpass some of our California artists whose names have long been familiar to the musical public. His best performance—the "Reverie au bord de la Mer"—was executed with good taste and style, but in Thalberg's "Home, Sweet Home," he was not as successful. The "Marche Chinoisi" —his own composition—was flatteringly received; it was extremely characteristic—a feature of all the selected pieces. Mr. Northrop sustained his reputation for good style, although cold; Brambilla exhibited her usual artistic finish. Mr. Herold, at the piano, was a very welcome and satisfuctory feature of this concert.

UNITED STATES STAMP DUTIES.

As Amended March 3, 1865.

CAREFULLY REVISED AND CORRECTED FOR THE CALIFORNIAN.

PENALTIES.

Penalty for making, signing, or issuing any instrument, document, or paper of any kind whatsoever, without the same being duly stamped, for deuoting the duty hereby imposed thereon, $50; and the instrument sball be deemed invalid and of no effect; or for counterfeiting stamps or dies, $1,000, and imprisonment to hard labor not exceeding five years. For making, signing, issuing, acceptiug, or paying any bill of exchange, draft, order, or note without stamp, $200. For selling proprietary cosmetics, matches, photographs, etc., without proper stamps, $10. For removing stamps on these articles, $50.

STAMP DUTIES.

Agreement Contract or Appraisement, not otherwise specified, each sheet or piece of paper	$0 05
Assignment of Mortgage, Lease, or Policy of Insurance, same as original instrument. Assignment of Patent Right	05
Bank Checks, Drafts or orders, exceeding $10, at sight or on demand	02
Bills of Exchange, (inland,) or draft otherwise than at sight or on demand, or promissory note except bank notes for circulation,) or any memorandum, check or receipt, or any evidence of an amount of money payable on demand or at a designated time, for a sum not exceeding $100	05
Every additional $100, or fractional part	05
Bill of Exchange, (foreign,) or letter of credit, drawn in, but payable out of the U. S., if drawn singly, the same rates as inland bills of exchange, or promissory notes. If drawn in sets of three or more, for each bill of the set, where the sum sball not exceed $100 or its equivalent in any foreign currency in which such bill may be expressed, according to the standard value fixed by U. S.	02
Every additional $100, or fractional part	02
Bill of Lading, or receipt for any merchandise or effects, to be exported to a foreign port or place	10
Bill of Sale, conveying any ship or vessel, or any part thereof, where the consideratioudoes not exceed $500	50
For every additional $500, or fractional part thereof	50
Bill of Sale of personal property other than ships or vessels	05
Bond, indemnifying any person for the payment of money, where the amount recoverable is $1,000 or less	50
For every additional $1,000, or fractional part thereof	50
Bond for the due performance of the duties of any office	1 00
Bond of any other description, except such as may be required in legal proceedings, or used in connection with mortgage deeds, and not otherwise charged in this schedule	25
Charter-Party, ship, vessel or steamer, not over 150 tons, $1; 150 to 300 tons, $3; 300 to 600 tons, $5; over 600 tons	10 00
Certificate of Profits, or any memorandum showing an interest in property, or accumulations of any incorporated company, for a sum not less than $10 nor exceeding $50	10
Exceeding $50 and not $1,000	25
For every additional $1,000 or fract'al part	25
Certificate of Damage, and all other certificates or documents issued by Port Wardens or Marine Surveyors, or other persons acting as such	25
Certificate of Deposit, not exceeding the sum of $100, 2 cents; exceeding $100	05
Certificate of stock in any incorporated comp'y,	25
Certificates, other than specified	05
Contract, broker's note or memorandum of sale of goods, stocks, bonds, exchange notes of hand, real estate, or other description of property, issued by any person acting as a broker, for each note or memorandum of sale	10
Deed or Conveyance of Real Estate, value not over $500, 50c.; every additional $500, or fractional part thereof	50
Entry of Goods at any custom-house, value not over $100, 25c.; over $100 and not over $500, 50c.; over $500	1 00
For the withdrawal of goods from bonded warehouse	50
Ganger's Returns, quarterly, for quantity not over 500 galls. gross, 10c.; over 500 galls. gr.	25
Insurance (Marine, Inland and Fire) policy or renewal, premium not over $10, 10c.; $10 to $50, 25c.; over $50, 50c.; Life policy, under $1,000, 25c.; $1,000 to $5,000, 50c; over $5,000.	1 00
Lease of lands or tenements, rent not over $300 per annum, 50c.; each add'l $200 or fraction.	50
Manifest, cargo to foreign port, registered ton nage not over 300 tons, $1; over 300 and not over 600, $3; over 600 tons	5 00
Measurer's Returns, for quantity not over 1,000 bushels, 10c.; over 1,000 bushels	25
Mortgage, Trust deed, or personal bond for payment of money, $100 to $500, 50c.; each additional $500	50
Each assignment of mortgage, lease or policy of insurance, or renewal of the same, is subject to same duties as the original.
Medicines or Preparations, Perfumery and Cosmetics—Every package, box, bottle, etc., retailing for 25c. or less	01
Each additional 25c. or fractional part thereof, up to $1, 1c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof, over $1	02
Playing Cards—Each pack, price not over 18c., 2c.; from 18 to 25c., 4c.; 25 to 50c., 10c.; 50c. to $1, 15c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof	05
Photographs, Ambrotypes, Daguerreotypes or Sun Pictures, upon each, retailing for 25c. or less, 2c.; over 25 and not over 50c., 5c.; over 50c. and not over $1, 3c.; each additional $1 or fractional part thereof	05
Passage Ticket to foreign port, cost not over $35, 50c.; over $35 and not over $50, $1; every additional $50 or fractional part thereof	1 00
Power of Attorney to sell or transfer stock, scrip, bonds, or collect dividends or int. thereon	25
To vote for officers of incorporated comp'y or society not religious, charitable or literary, or public cemeteries	10
To receive or collect rents	25
To sell, convey, rent or lease real estate	1 00
For any other purpose	50
Probate of Will, or letters of administration, estate not over $2,000, $1; each additional $1,000 or fractional part thereof	50
Protest of note, bill, acceptance, check or draft,	25
Promissory Note—See Bill of Exchange, inland.
Receipt for payment of money or debt over $20, not being for satisfaction of mortgage, judgment or decree of Court, and receipt for the delivery of property	02
Warehouse, for property stored, not over $500 in value, 10c.; $500 to $1,000, 20c.; every additional $1,000	10
For any goods held in storage, and not otherwise provided for	25
Weigher's Returns, up to 5,000 lbs., 10c.; over 5,000 lbs	25
Writs, or original process, for commencing suit in Court of record, and in Court not of record, when amount claimed is $100 or over, except before Justices of the Peace, or in court of no greater jurisdiction as to damages, or in suit commenced by the United States or any State	50
Upon every confession of judgment, or cognovit, for $100 or over, except where tax for a writ has been paid	50
Writs or process on appeal from Justice's courts and other courts of inferior jurisdiction to courts of record	50
Warrant of distress—rent claimed under $100, 25c.; over $100	50

GREAT ATTRACTION!

THE FASHIONS ARE ALL THE GO!

Lamott, - - - Hatter,

IS NOW THE MAN! HE IS READY WITH HIS BROADWAY STYLES FOR THE Spring of 1866.

JUST SEE THE DIFFERENCE between his styles and the others in this city. There is style about his Hats that does not appear in others.

FACTS ARE STUBBORN THINGS!

LAMOTT, 227 Russ Block, is bound to be the LEADER of Fashions.

LAMOTT'S SPRING STYLES

show taste. It is a good thing that you have a man among you who is willing to take a stand outside of others, to introduce a style that is new, and not follow in the wake of others that are about one year behind the times.

GO TO HIS STORE FOR A HAT,

No. 220 Montgomery street,

and get something that is new. mar22-3m

HEUSTON,

HASTINGS

& CO.

The Fashionable Clothiers

OF

SAN FRANCISCO,

Have established a TRUNK DEPOT in the basement of their Store equal to any in New York, and prices 20 per cent. lower than any other House in the city.

mar17-3m

BALD-HEADED GENTLEMEN,

Who frequent the Parquet of Theatres, exciting by their grotesque appearance the merriment of Ladies in the Dress Circle, would profit by using Little & Co.'s Chinese

Vegetable Hair Restorative.

The proprietors of this astonishing remedy for Baldness, confident of its infallibility, agree to refund the purchase money in every instance where its use for three months, according to directions, is unattended with success. Price per jar, $2.50.

Manufactured by Little & Co.; sold by

CHAS. E. HINCKLEY & CO.,

Chemists and Druggists,

Southeast corner of Clay and Kearny streets,

ap21 San Francisco.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S

Through Line to New York.

CARRYING THE U. S. MAIL!

Leave Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.

On the 16th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.

On the 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.

When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 19th connects with French Transatlantic company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamer for Southampton, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America.

Departure of 30th connects with English steamer for Tumaco, the port of the new mines.

STEAMERS FOR JUNE:

The following steamships will be despatched from San Francisco on the date given:

JUNE 9th, - - - - GOLDEN AGE

Captain E. S. Farnsworth.

(Connecting with the COSTA RICA, Captain Bradbury.)

JUNE 18, - - - - - CONSTITUTION

Captain F. R. Baby.

(Connecting with the NEW YORK, Captain Gray.)

JUNE 30th, - - - - GOLDEN CITY,

Captain Watkins.

(Connecting with ARIZONA, Captain Maury.)

An experienced Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

Cabin Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Messrs. Wells, Fargo & Co.

The steamer will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

BREWSTER & CO.'S

Carriage Manufactory,

372 Broome steet, New York.

We desire to announce to our California friends that we have made extensive arrangements by increasing our works for the coming season, and with a view to

SUPPLYING THE

WANTS OF CALIFORNIA,

will manufacture a style of work particularly adapted to city and country use, and in view of the destructive effects of city railroads on all light work, will give

PARTICULAR ATTENTION

to remedying the evil, and guard against it in work shipped to California.

CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, PHAETONS, COUPES, and Vehicles of every description, of our own manufacture, on hand and made to order.

Orders or communications should be addressed to

BREWSTER & CO.,

Of Broome street,

The firm of Brewster & Baldwin not being in any way connected with

BREWSTER & CO.,

Of No. 372, Broome street,

A CARD.

D. WARREN SMITH

Has commenced his business of canvassing the city for subscribers for

MIDDLETON'S OIL PORTRAITS,

the series of which embrace

WASHINGTON AND MARTHA, LINCOLN, WEBSTER, CLAY, DOUGLAS, GRANT, SHERMAN, and JACKSON.

Mr. Smith will call at the business places of our city, and at dwellings at reasonable hours, and exhibit some of the above beautiful Oil Portraits. He hopes to meet with success, as the Pictures are worthy a place in every drawing-room in our country. AGENT'S HEADQUARTERS,

JOHN MIDDLETON & SONS,

my26 2m 404 Montgomery street.

THE BANK OF CALIFORNIA,

SAN FRANCISCO, May 9, 1866.

NOTICE.

At a meeting of the Stockholders of this Bank, held on the 5th inst., it was resolved to increase the Capital Stock of the corporation to $5,000,000, gold, to take effect on

THE FIRST DAY OF JULY NEXT,

and the President and Cashier were authorized to receive subscriptions for $2,000,000 of said capital stock. Parties desirous of subscribing will make application at the Bank, either personally or by letter, when further details will be given.

D. O. MILLS, President.

my20 1m W. C. RALSTON, Cashier.

PISCO!

G. & F. MARTELL'S COGNAC;

JAMES HENNESSY'S Cognac;

STEAMBOAT GIN;

OLD TOM GIN;

IRISH WHISKY,

from Bond direct.

For sale by V. SQARZA, my28 Liedesdorff street, San Francisco.

OCCIDENTAL

HOMESTEAD

Association,

OFFICE, - - - 305 MONTGOMERY STREET.

Capital Stock, $33,660.

102 SHARES.....$330 EACH.

This Association was formed to enable its members to obtain desirable homestead lots in this city at a cheap and easy rate, paying for the same by regular monthly instalments.

For this purpose they have purchased Blocks 499, 500, and 501, in the Western Addition to this city, bounded by Devisadero, Pine, Broderick and Clay streets.

Subscribers will pay an initiation fee of $5 on each share taken, to form a fund for defraying current expenses, and $11 per month for thirty months, commencing in April, 1866.

The property is within three blocks of the

TURK STREET RAILROAD,

IS NEARLY ALL ON THE GRADE,

and is most desirably located for Homestead purposes.

It is directly east from the lands of the California Association.

The property has been purchased on very reasonable terms, and offers a rare opportunity for investment.

A number of fine houses are in process of erection, and streets are being graded near this property, which will greatly increase its value.

When twelve monthly payments have been made, the property will be divided among the members in the usual manner, and each shareholder will receive a contract for a deed to the lot or lots to which he may be entitled, and have the privilege of taking immediate possession of the same.

The lots average 27 feet in front by 120 feet in depth. The whole amount due upon any lot may be paid at any time, and discount at the rate of one and one-half per cent. per month will be deducted therefrom.

Persons wishing to visit the lands of this Association will take the Turk street cars to Devisadero street, and thence go northerly along Devisadero to Pine street.

Twenty thousand dollars of the capital stock is taken, and the books are open for subscription to the balance at the office of the Secretary, where the Official Map of the Association can be seen, and full particulars obtained.

The Title to this Property is Perfect.

J. S. LUTY, Secretary,

Office, 305 Montgomery street, corner of Pine,

my19-3m Rooms 2 and 6.

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME!

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,

New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17

Have received a Large Stock of

GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING

—AND—

FURNISHING GOODS,

Which they are selling

AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.

jal 624 Clay street, San Francisco.

PACIFIC OCEAN HOUSE,

SANTA CRUZ, CAL.

THIS NEW AND COMMODIOUS HOTEL, built and furnished in accordance with the most modern and improved plans, and with a view to the comfort and convenience of its patrons, is now open for the reception of guests.

To those who have visited Santa Cruz, it is unnecessary to speak of its beauties and its natural advantages over all other places of Summer Resort.

To those who have not, the Proprietor can only say COME AND JUDGE FOR YOURSELVES—giving all who may come the assurance that his earnest endeavors shall be to make the Hotel, in all its appointments, equal to the surroundings of this delightful Sea side Resort.

GEO. T. BROMLEY,

Santa Cruz, April 4, 1866. Proprietor.

GEO. P. KIMBALL & CO.,

Carriage Manufacturers,

CORNER MARKET AND FOURTH STREETS,

San Francisco.

GEORGE P. KIMBALL.....W. H. KNIGHT.

We have always on hand a large assortment of Coaches, Carriages, Buggies, Thoroughbrace Wagons, Express, Grocery, Soda and Butcher Wagons and Lumber Gears.

CARRIAGES AND WAGONS

Of every description made to order and at shortest notice. Particular attention paid to the building of Wide Track Buggies and Wagons with Brakes, for mountain use. Orders from the country promptly attended to.

N. B. Kimball's Patent Goose Neck Trucks on hand.

mar2 3m

SPRING AND SUMMER STYLE

SILK HAT,

1866,

INTRODUCED - - - - - - - MARCH 3

BY

McGANN & CO.,

FASHIONABLE HATTERS,

No. 654 Washington street,

Two doors below Kearny.

SPRING AND SUMMER STYLES.—Silk, Felt, Beaver, and other HATS for sale at the lowest prices.

CAPS of every description, suitable for all ages, made to order.

McGANN & CO., being experienced and skilled in all the branches of the manufacture of Hats, feel confident of giving entire satisfaction to their patrons. Every description of Hats and Caps made to order.

Remember, McGANN & CO., Practical Hatters, 654 Washington street, two doors below the Plaza.

☞ New Goods by every steamer. mar10

THE NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE INSURANCE CO

OF LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

ESTABLISHED, 1809.

Capital, - - - - - - -	$10,000,000
Accumulated Funds, March 6, 1865, -	11,522,500
Annual Income, - - - -	2,827,290
Deposit in California under State law, -	$75,000

GENERAL AGENCY FOR THE PACIFIC STATES AND TERRITORIES,

No. 422 California street, - - - San Francisco

Insurances effected at the lowest rates on buildings of both Brick and Wood, throughout the State, whether occupied as Stores, Dwellings, or Warehouses, together with their contents.

Also, VESSELS in port, with or without their Cargoes.

Also, QUARTZ MILLS and MACHINERY.

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN immediately on adjustment.

WM. H. TILLINGHAST, Agent.

my19

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS

CREATE A HEALTHY APPETITE!

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS

Cure Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa and Constipation

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS

Invigorate the System and enliven the mind.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS

Overcome the effects of Drunkenness and Late Hours.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS

Cure all Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS

Are Palatable to the Taste.

They are the

BEST BITTERS IN THE MARKET,

And when once used will always be called for again.

They are made in the most careful manner

From Pure Old Wheat Whisky, Medicated from

Roots and Herbs

Especially adapted for the cure of all Stomachic Diseases and Liver Complaints.

Try Them and You will be Satisfied.

For sale everywhere by Druggists and Liquor Dealers or by

N. B. JACOBS & CO.,

423 Front street,

fe11-6m San Francisco

CALIFORNIA

Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS.CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA....CAPT. W. BROMLEY.
" JULIA.....CAPT. E. CONCKLIN.

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.

Steamships AJAX, PACIFIC, ORIZABA, CALIFORNIA, ACTIVE, and SENATOR, leave as advertised, for Honolulu, Portland, Oregon, New Westminster, British Columbia, Victoria, (V. I.,) Santa Barbara, San Pedro, and San Diego.

Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.

mar23 B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

TO FARMERS, MINERS, LABORERS

And all those wishing to secure themselves a portion of

THE MOST VALUABLE AGRICULTURAL AND MINERAL LANDS OF MEXICO,

With an equal interest in the Profits of the Plantations of

THE MEXICAN SEA ISLAND COTTON COMPANY.

HOMES FOR THE POOR AND COMPETENCY FOR ALL.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The Mexican Sea Island Cotton Company, having reserved from their final Subscription List a Limited Number of Unassessable Shares, (the remaining shares of the Company having been taken up by the stockholders,) hereby offer the same for sale at the original subscription price of Sixteen Dollars each, payable in cash. Every holder of a share will be entitled to a portion of the Company's lands, having the privilege to settle thereon and participate in all the advantages and profits of the enterprise, and special privileges granted to this Company by an Imperial Decree of Maximilian, dated 9th January, 1866, without being subjected to the conditions of regular Government emigrants, this Company settling upon their own lands, secured by private purchase, and held under indisputable Spanish titles.

Shareholders becoming actual settlers will also have the privilege of any employment upon the Company's plantation. Portions of land will be allotted to settlers, to be held by them until a final division makes it their property.

For the purpose of increasing the value of the Company's land, and to create all the comforts of a home and society, it is the intention of the company to form a regular settlement and to lay out a town adjoining their present plantation into building lots, which will likewise be fairly divided between the 8,000 shares which comprise the total number of the company.

A large number of shareholders will settle upon the company's lands after the rainy season in October next. Many of them may then be employed by the company, or by others able to plant for themselves, or in developing the mineral resources of the adjoining mountains, etc., etc.

Men of all trades and professions, desiring to emigrate to Mexico, will have great advantages as shareholders of this company. They will find the lands already purchased for them at a rate equivalent to a free gift, to be held by each shareholder as his property, protected by the best Spanish titles, and the good will of all political parties now contending for the reins of government; the climate the most salubrious, and the land rich and fertile beyond description; every kind of game abounding; the rivers full of fish and with extensive beds of large oysters; altogether, a country where it is easy to procure a livelihood and the comforts of a home with less labor and less capital than in any other part of the world.

The extensive placer diggings, veins of silver, and solid quartz ledges, which are to be found in the immediate vicinity, and acknowledged to be rich and very extensive, can, by the presence of a number of settlers, be profitably developed. Many of these mines are to be found within the limits of the company's grant. The Sierra Madre or Mother Mountain of Mexico, situated only within about twenty miles from the coast, can be reached and developed with much greater facility than the more remote mines in the interior, and will therefore make the company's lands the most desirable to locate upon.

For Maps and Survey, and further information, apply at the office of the MEXICAN SEA ISLAND COTTON CO., Betge's Book Store, Russ House, Montgomery street, between the hours of 11 and 1 o'clock.

☞ All the assessable stock having been taken up by mutual subscription of stockholders, the company will have no more shares to offer after the limited number of unassessable shares have been placed, and shall prefer to sell these to actual settlers—a single share of which will be sufficient to entitle them to a large portion of the lands.

WE, THE UNDERSIGNED shareholders in the Mexican Sea Island Cotton Company, having investigated and satisfied ourselves of the importance of the enterprise, recommend the same to the public. We are convinced that under the management of the present officers of the company, with their efforts to induce industrious parties to locate upon the land, that the enterprise must become very profitable to all parties interested, and most beneficial to actual settlers.

S. R. Kettlewell, Blacksmith, 264 First street.
W. C. Mead & Son, 224 Saosome street.
M. O'Neil, Proprietor New Branch Hotel, 12 Sutter street.
Winall & Clapp, 505 Market street.
R. A. S. Repiton, M. D., 816 Montgomery street.
Wm. Rudolph, Gunsmith, 216 Pacific street.
G. Burkhardt, Jeweller, No. 209 Pacific street.
E. Keil, East India Tea Co., 631 Washington-st.
P. D. O'Regan, People's Bakery, corner Fourth and Jessie streets.
Wm. Meyer, Provision Dealer, 258 Third street.
John Duff, Painter and Paper Hanger, 642 Clay street.
A. E. Mylott, Importer and Dealer in Cigars and Tobacco, 305 Battery street
M. M. Baldwin, Jeweller, 433 Montgomery-st.
S. Baysen, Hatter, No. 346 Kearny street.
Mathew McCloskey, 644 Howard street.

San Francisco, March 20th, 1866. mar24

MR. AND MRS. COGILL AND SONS,

Teachers of Dancing,

CONGRESS HALL,

On Bush-st., adjoinin Russ House.

SCHOOL—MONDAYS AND WEDNESDAYS. Ladies at 2 P. M. Gentlemen and Ladies at 7 1-2 P. M. Soirees every Friday Evening. Hall to rent. my5 3m

STOCKDALE HOUSE,

Corner Main and Oak streets, Petaluma.

m24 6m H. STOCKDALE, Proprietor.

OCCIDENTAL INSURANCE COMPANY,

S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

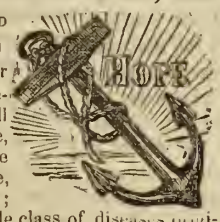
THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

CHRISTOPHER CHRISTIANSEN, President.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary. mh25-tf

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.



The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York. my25

AYER'S AGUE CURE,

FOR THE SPEEDY AND Certain Cure of Intermittent Fever or Chills and Fever, Remittent Fever, Chill Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical Headache or Bilious Headache, and Bilious Fevers; indeed, for the whole class of diseases originating in biliary derangement, caused by the malaria of miasmatic countries.

This remedy has rarely failed to cure the severest cases of Chills and Fever, and it has this great advantage over other Ague medicines, that it subdues the complaint without injury to the patient. It contains no quinine or other deleterious substance, nor does it produce quinism or any injurious effect whatever. Shaking brothers of the army and the West, try it and you will endorse these assertions.

Prepared by J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by

CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco,

my26 2m and all Dealers.

DRY GOODS.

BARGAINS

IN

BLACK SILKS! And still a FEW DRESES

LEFT OF THAT BEAUTIFUL AND

MUCH-ADMIRED DRESS GOODS,

"SUNBURST!"

S. MOSGROVE,

222 Third street, Colton's Building.

my23-tf

THE ONLY LIVING ASTROLOGER,

PROF. COHEN,

530 California street, San Francisco,

THROUGH HIS NATURAL GIFT, can give correct information on the Past, Present and Future, on any subject that may be required so as to avoid trouble. As evidence of his reputation, he has received over 18,000 consultations during his residence of six years in San Francisco! Consultation fee, $2. By letter, $3. Letter box, 104. It is not necessary to give the age. Office, 530 California street. Hours from 8 A. M. to 11 P. M. mar15 3m

COME AND SEE ME!

DR. JOHN HEALD,

DENTIST,

HAS REMOVED TO THE

CORNER KEARNY AND CALIFORNIA STS,

Where he will be pleased to see all old friends, and plenty of new ones. Every variety of Dental Operations performed in the best manner, and at prices that shall suit all persons. ☞ENTRANCE ON CALIFORNIA SREET. ap28 3m

AMERICAN HOTEL,

Main street, - - Petaluma.

mar24-6m EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors.

FURNITURE AND BEDDING!

LARGEST STOCK!

LATEST STYLES!

The Best Workmanship,

AND

LOWEST PRICES!

AT

Goodwin & Co.'s

FURNITURE WARE-ROOMS,

Nos. 508, 510, 518 and 528 Washington-st.

ja16 SAN FRANCISCO.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,

IMPORTERS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS

IN

FINE CLOTHING,

AND

Gent's Furnishing Goods,

TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,

Nos. 200 and 202 Montgomery street,

Corner of Bush, - San Francisco.

JOS. WINTERBURN & CO.

J. WINTERBURN, V. A. TORRAS, W. HOFFSCHNEIDER.

(Successors to W. P. Harrison.)

Printers and Electrotypers,

413 TO 417 CLAY ST., (Below Sansome.)

SAN FRANCISCO.

ALL KINDS OF JOB PRINTING

Neatly and Promptly Executed.

ELECTROTYPING

Done at the shortest notice.

Stamps of all kinds made to order.

Printing in Spanish, French, German and Italian Languages, executed with correctness.

A "Mammoth" and two No. 3 Hand Presses FOR SALE very cheap. fe3-3m

SMOKE

THE PATENT

RUSSIAN

CIGARETTES,

MANUFACTURED BY

GIBB & STAHL,

S.W. COR. KEARNY AND SACRAMENTO STREETS,

SAN FRANCISCO.

☞For sale at all Cigar Stores. ap28 3m

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,

No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,

SAN FRANCISCO.

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Meta Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship-Work of all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.

All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.

Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.

JOHN P. GALLAGHER,
JOSEPH H. WEED.

mar10 3m

MONEY TO LOAN!

MONEY TO LOAN

On City Real Estate, Dwellings, Factories, Shipping and Merchandise, for such time as may be agreed for. Deposits received in small or large sums, at interest, by the CALIFORNIA BUILDING, LOAN AND SAVINGS BANK, my5-3m THOMAS MOONEY, President.

California street, (one door from Sansome street.)

THE CONUNDRUM IN THE COUNTRY.

A FEW years ago, I bought a pleasant place of some twenty acres, on the Hudson river, about thirty miles above the city. I have since regretted that I did not purchase a lot and build a house in the heart of the Adirondacks; for my ideas of the rest, seclusion, and country comfort to be enjoyed in my rural home have received so many rude shocks that they at one time nearly crumbled to pieces. The first summer I spent there, was as agreeable as my anticipations had painted it. Alone, most of the time, I passed my days under the trees, and upon my verdant pastures. With my pipe in my mouth and with a bundle of recently received conundrums, or perhaps a few old favorites, I enjoyed to the utmost my absolute rest and freedom from the annoyances which must beset a quiet man in a great city. I loved the twitter and chirp of the birds, and to me they afforded a delight not known to those who have always been dwellers in the country. Unversed as I was in practical ornithology, I accepted their songs as musical enigmas, and spent hours in endeavoring to guess whether the warbler was a robin, a wren or a catbird. Although familiar with the medical properties of most plants, the flowers that I saw around were to me unsolved puzzles. I had long since made out the rose and the dandelion, but most of the others grew up without their answers attached, so far as I was concerned.

My delightful quiet was disturbed, I believe, but upon one occasion.

It was a beautiful morning in July, a gentle wind tempered the warmth of the air, and spread the perfumes from the garden over the green fields where I was wont to take my ante prandial rambles. Everything was quiet and at rest, except the wayward butterflies and the thoughtless grass-hoppers. Even the birds were winking and nodding on the gently swaying branches, and as I walked down the path I had worn from the house to my favorite tree I could but think that the shining hours were not capable of improvement, even by the busy bees of the pious Dr. Watts. I had not reached my umbrageous haunt when I perceived beneath the tree, the unusual spectacle of a young lady. I soon recognized her as the daughter of my neighbor Tandom, and as I knew her to be as intelligent and witty as she was lovely, and as lovely as the birds and flowers, I was quite pleased with the idea of a social chat. But on nearing her, I saw she was in trouble of some kind. Her face flushed and turned pale by turns, and she seemed endeavoring to do something, or go somewhere, and to be unable to succeed. I accosted her as cheerfully as my anxiety would allow, and soon discovered that she had become apparently hopelessly entangled in the mazes of a conundrum that I had carelessly left beneath the tree the day before. I endeavored to release her from her thralldom, soothing and encouraging her the while, but for the life of me I could not remember the solution.

"Wait here a few minutes," I cried, "and I will run up to the house and get the answer."

She made a reply which I did not hear, as I hurried away, unwilling to keep her in her dilemma a moment longer than was necessary. The day was warm, and the breeze seemed to have died away, and as I am rather stout, I was bathed in perspiration by the time I reached the house. I snatched up the package of conundrums which I had been considering the day before, and hastened back, endeavoring on the way, to select the key by which I could deliver my unfortunate young friend. But when I had approached the tree I saw that she was not there, having doubtless guessed the conundrum and gladly escaped. Pretty little thing! Had I been a younger man, I would have spread many a trap for her. She was caught a few months ago by a young lawyer, and is now engaged in the solution of the enigma, "which are the pleasantest, the buds of youth, or the flowers of love?"

Ah me!

Now that I am on the subject of annoyances, I remember that there was one other occasion, (trifling to be sure) during this first summer at "Spring Cottage" when my quiet was somewhat disturbed.

I was sitting under a large apple tree in my orchard, and had just guessed at the number of seeds in a handsome pippin, which I was cutting open to see if my answer was correct, when I heard approaching footsteps, and turning, saw, coming towards me, a young fellow with whose father, (a farmer of the neighborhood) I had had considerable dealings.

"Good morning, Doctor," said he.

"Good morning, Samuel, what can I do for you today?"

"Well sir," said he, rather bashfully, "I don't want to trouble you any more than I can help, but I thought that perhaps you could tell me of something that would do for sores."

"I should be a poor doctor if I could not tell you that, Samuel. There are many things that would do—simple cerate, for instance, but where is your sore?"

"Ah!" he cried — "cerate, cerate — simple cerate! I don't think that will do, sir—you couldn't work that right, any way you could fix it."

"That's for me to decide, Samuel," said I, firmly, "just tell me first where you have a sore?"

"Oh, sir," he said, "I don't mean that—I want something that will do instead of 'soars.'"

"Well, a whole skin is the best thing I know of."

"You've got it all wrong, sir. This is what I want—I have nearly manufactured a conundrum."

"Oh! a conundrum," I cried.

"Yes, sir; it is this, 'when is an eagle like a carpenter?'"

Ans.—"When it soars o'er plains." "Now, you see, sir, that is good enough as a spoken riddle, but it won't do to write, for 'soars' isn't 'saws,' you see. I have been trying for the last week to get the thing into better shape, but somehow I couldn't do it, and so came to you, knowing your skill in such things."

"Well, Samuel," said I, "if you come to my office in the city sometime next fall, I shall be glad to give you all the help I can, but I can do nothing for you here during the summer. I came here to rest, and have entirely given up professional duties of the enigmatical kind—so you must not be offended if I decline to doctor up your conundrum."

I then engaged him in conversation on rural matters and we soon parted company. But I was troubled to think that even here, in my retreat, I could not have the opportunity of thinking and doing as I pleased, without appearing churlish to my friends.

Little did I expect what I should have to undergo during the next summer. Then it was that my real troubles began. Those who had been in the habit of visiting my office in the city found out my retreat, and came in such numbers, every fine day, during the first part of the season, that my studies and pleasures were entirely broken up.

In vain I tried every expedient I could devise. Dogs and morose servants could not deter them, and they got in in spite of gates with latches of rare contrivance. I tried the plan of locking the gate at the road, but as the servants had to go and see who asked admission every time they heard a knock (for I had friends I would not have excluded on any consideration) and as they were often unable to resist the arguments—generally pecuniary, I presume—of the many eager applicants, this plan soon proved to be no better than the rest.

I had then a patent gate placed at the entrance to my grounds, the secret of which I confided to a select circle of friends, pledging them to silence on the subject. As a high wall separated my place from the public road, and the gate (which by the pressure of an unobservable spring sank into the ground, and rose again in precisely thirty seconds,) showed no signs of latch or lock, I enjoyed immunity from annoyance for about ten days. Unfortunately about this time, the rector of the parish, Reverend Doctor Malvolio, having paid me a visit, was leaving the place. He touched the spring, the gate sank and he passed through, but just then he remembered something, I suppose that he wished to say to me, and stepped back again, pausing for an instant in the gateway. At the expiration of its half-minute, up came the gate, and, taking the Reverend Doctor astraddle of it, hoisted him high into the air. I saw the accident from the house, and hurried down to apologize and release him, but he has not been to see me since.

Shortly after this, a similar accident having occurred to Mrs. Belvidere Montarsin, the wife of the lawyer of the village, and the leader of society in the vicinity, her husband sent me such a note the next day that I found I should have to abolish the gate or suffer a lawsuit. So I had the thing removed, and, after days and nights of thought and perplexity, hit upon a brilliant idea, which I immediately put into execution, and which, for the short time that I remained after its completion, answered my purpose to a charm, and will, I hope, continue to do so during the coming summer.

I had a gate made, with an alphabetical combination lock, which, being locked by a certain arrangement of letters, could only be opened by the same. The key was attached by a chain to the gate, and full directions for its use were posted up.

On the arch above the gate I placed an enigma, and the initials of the words in the answer to this formed the combination which would open the lock.

As before, my friends received the answer, and I very justly considered that should any one guess the riddle, they ought to be made welcome for their ingenuity. The conundrum, I concluded, must not be of the modern style as that would generally necessitate too many words in the answer. It must be simple, yet difficult—I selected the following:

"Why is this gate, when you open it, like the sixth chapter of Genesis?"

Now, I supposed that those who would be likely to solve this enigma would be staid and well read persons, whose conversation would be profitable and interesting, while the mass of would-be visitors, who came to be amused or to sell their productions, and have no idea of what the sixth chapter of Genesis referred to, and not having a Bible on their persons, would be completely at fault; and before they would be likely to pay me a second, I should have changed my conundrum, which I intended to do, as often as it should seem requisite.

As I said before, the plan succeeded admirably, and I often used to conceal myself behind the wall about the time that the boat from the city had stopped at the village landing, and listen to the desperate efforts of the little crowd that was pretty certain to soon reach the gate.

I am sorry that I have not time to give some of the strange answers that these people concocted. None of them, however, hit upon the correct solution, which was very simple, being—"Because it describes an arc."

And the letters B, I, D, A, A, opened the gate.

N. Y. Saturday Press. ANDREW SCROGGIN.

THE CAPTAIN'S YARN.—Conversing with the captain of a vessel, the other day, he related the following anecdote: "I had a first-rate first officer who sailed with me for several years. He was an excellent seaman and a perfect gentleman. I remember I took him once to the Italian Opera in London, and he expressed himself perfectly satisfied with the performance, though he had no ear for music, didn't understand the language, and was was too bashful to look at the figurantes. A particular and very amiable trait of his character was his domestic affection. Sailors roving about the world are very seldom constant—in fact, they too often act up to the libertine proposition of Marmontel—Quand on n'a pas ce qu'on aime, il faut aime ce qu'on a. But this man was a perfect model of conjugal fidelity. He was always thinking and speaking of his wife (he had no children.) Always buying presents for her in every port he visited. Well, one day—we were lying off the River Gambia, in Africa—my mate, after dinner, leaned back in his chair, and fell asleep. I went on deck to smoke a cigar. When I came back I found poor M—— lying on the cabin floor a corpse! A sudden stroke of apoplexy had carried him off. I was inexpressibly shocked. He had a sailor's grave—and every heart on board the brig was heavy at his loss. On the home voyage I was thinking all the while of the agony of M.'s poor wife when she learned of his death, and how I should breathe the news to her. She always flew down to the pier as soon as she heard our brig was coming up the bay, and I believe she could read every signal flag that was thrown out from the station. Well, we had no sooner made fast to the wharf when down came a handsome hack, and out springs the mate's wife rigged out from top to toe like a first-rate frigate on a gala-day—with a fathom or two of ribbon towing astern of her. Poor girl! thought I, how soon my tale will blanch the roses of your cheek. 'My husband?' she inquired, as she sprang lightly on deck, showing a pair of tiny feet, cased in the daintiest satin boots that ever a French shoemaker turned out. 'I am sorry to say, madam,' said I, 'that he has been very sick.' The color came and went in her cheek. 'Tell me all,' she cried, grasping my arm. 'Well, then, madam,' said I, 'if I must say it, he is dead.' 'Glad of it, by jingo!' was her answer. She was ashore and off again in the tying of a reel-point—and next week she married a merchant's clerk. The captain plunged his hands deep into the pockets of his pilot-coat. 'I'm a bachelor'—said he. 'The worse for you,' was our answer. 'Exceptions only prove rules.'"

[COMMUNICATED.]

THE MYSTERIES OF NEW YORK.—Wars, national resources, political contests, religious conventions, amusements, the Central Park, its swans, gondolas, etc., have been discussed—this letter is of the "Mysteries of New York." In the car, steamboat, saloon, parlor, at dinner, in the street, everywhere do I hear some story with relation to, or an inquiry as to the meaning of those mythical words, posted, printed, and advertised wherever I go:

S. T.—1860.—X.

accompanied with a crescent and a shepherd's hook. A secession sympathizer said it was: "Satan Triumphed in 1860 in granting the Expectation of Abolitionists;" while a Republican said it was: "Stump Tail Democrats of 1860, gone to Texas;" another, "To the State-Taxes of 1860 add ten (X) dollars;" another, that they were the watch-words of some secret society, like "Sons of Tecumebia are 1860 Strong," or "Seward Tricksters of 1860 Used Up," etc., etc Well, your correspondent was ill—had been ill for a long time—in fact, his late suppers had given him a horrid dyspepsia. He read the advertisements, and of course bought a bottle of Plantation Bitters; the Bitters cured him, and on the bottle appeared those same cabalistic letters: S. T.—1860—X. I travelled straight for 21 Park Row, introduced myself to the celebrated Dr. Drake, and was shown the elephant—tusks, S. T. and all—and a great institution it is. A six story building in Dey street, from cellar to garret, is occupied as a laboratory for producing this single medicine. Some forty persons are employed; several vats, holding six thousand gallons each, are filled with roots, herbs, and material, and then soaked in water, and the expression preserved in pure St. Croix Rum. I here saw the bags, boxes, and bales of Calisaya Bark, Wintergreen, and other material—and the original St. Croix Rum puncheons bearing the Custom-house brand. It seemed that medicine could here be turned out to supply a world of invalids—yet these gentlemen are unable to fill their orders for Plantation Bitters alone. I was shown many certificates of extraordinary cures effected by these Bitters. The statistics of the medicine business as presented to the last Congress in the report of Mr. D. S. Barnes are enormous and startling, amounting to some six million dollars annually. The proprietors of these Bitters will pay Uncle Sam near fifty thousand dollars for stamps this year! * * * * J. H.

DISCOVERED.—The cheapest place for hotel and housekeepers to buy linens, damasks, sheetings, blankets, etc., and for ladies to buy silks and dress goods, is at Meagher, Tauffe & Co.'s, No. 9 Montgomery street.

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.—The prettiest thing, the "sweetest thing," and the most of it for the least money. It overcomes the odor of perspiration; softens and adds delicacy to the skin; is a delightful perfume; allays headache and inflammation, and is a necessary companion in the sick room, in the nursery and upon the toilet sideboard. It can be obtained everywhere at one dollar per bottle.

LYON'S MAGNETIC INSECT POWDER is instant death to Fleas, Ticks, Roaches, and everything of the insect species. It is one of the few articles that can be relied upon, and for a mere wo bits we can save the bites and bills of these little pests. None is genuine unless signed by E. Lyon, and bearing the private stamp of Demas Barnes & Co., New York.

S—T—1860—X. DRAKE'S PLANTATION BITTERS.

They purify, strengthen and invigorate.
They create a healthy appetite.
They are an antidote to change of water and diet.
They strengthen the system and enliven the mind.
They prevent miasmatic and intermittent fevers.
They purify the breath and acidity of the stomach.
They cure Dyspepsia and Constipation.
They cure Liver Complaint and Nervous Headache.

They are the best Bitters in the world. They make the weak strong, and are exhausted nature's great restorer. They are made of pure St. Croix Rum, the celebrated Calisaya Bark, roots and herbs, and are taken with the pleasure of a beverage, without regard to age or time of day. Particularly recommended to delicate persons requiring a gentle stimulant. Sold by all Grocers, Druggists, Hotels and Saloons. Only genuine when Cork is covered by our private U. S. Stamp. Beware of counterfeits and refilled bottles.

P. H. DRAKE & CO., New York.

"In lifting the kettle from the fire I scalded myself very severely—one hand almost to a crisp. The torture was unbearable. * * * The Mexican Mustang Liniment relieved the pain almost immediately. It healed rapidly, and left very little scar.

"CHAS. FOSTER, 420 Broad street, Philada."

This is merely a sample of what the Mustang Liniment will do. It is invaluable in all cases of wounds, swellings, sprains, cuts, bruises, spavins, etc., either upon man or beast.

Beware of counterfeits. None is genuine unless wrapped in fine steel-plate engravings, bearing the signature of G. W. Westbrook, Chemist, and the private stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., New York.

ALL WHO VALUE A BEAUTIFUL HEAD OF HAIR, and its preservation from premature baldness and turning gray, will not fail to use Lyon's Celebrated KATHAIRON. It makes the hair rich, soft, and glossy, eradicates dandruff, and causes the hair to grow with luxuriant beauty. It is sold everywhere. E. THOMAS LYON, Chemist, N. Y.

LYON'S EXTRACT OF PURE JAMAICA GINGER, for Indigestion, Nausea, Heartburn, Sick Headache, Cholera Morbus, &c., where a warming, genial stimulant is required. Its careful preparation and entire purity make it a cheap and reliable article for culinary purposes. Sold everywhere, at 50 cents per bottle. ap7-1y

THE MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK.—In regard to this company the "Wall Street Underwriter" says: "Figures are potent arguments to employ in dealing with the affairs of any Insurance Company. The Twenty-Third Annual Report of 'The Mutual,' made up to the first of February instant, is published in this paper, and the results manifested upon it are well worthy of consideration. In the first instance, as the prime result of the past year's work, the gross assets of 'The Mutual' show an Increase of.....$2,549,871 02

Total increase in premium account is...1,083,565 34
The total income of $3,853,065 80 is an increase of.....1,003,199 24
The full disbursements for 1860, were..1,540,130 62
Number of policies issued Feb. 1865 to Feb. 1866, were 8,600—insuring over double the number of 1864, and over double the amount, viz.....31,394,407 00

All approving comment seems bald in the presence of the truly eloquent figures presented by the 'Mutual Life.' No record of success can be more complete for any financial institution in the world. Wherever Life Insurance has been heard of on the American Continent, the name and prestige of the great 'Mutual' of New York, stand out pre-eminent. Many successful modern companies have grown up to prosperity through the example and influence of the 'Mutual Life.' Its great success, its wealth, and its manifest advantages have been constantly referred to as incontrovertible arguments in favor of Life Insurance." "The Mutual Life" has paid losses on this coast (including dividends,) during the last four years, to the amount of $101,819 02, and among the recent losses to be paid are policies for $5,000 each, of Francis E. Webster and W. L. Haven, who were both killed by the nitro-glycerine explosion at the office of Wells, Fargo & Co., in addition to which amounts, there is to be paid about $1,200 for accrued dividends. S. F. Examiner.

NO FORFEITING.—Heretofore, if a person holding a Life Policy became unfortunate, and could not raise the sum of money required to pay his next premium, his policy was declared forfeited. The BROOKLYN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK has decided to make EVERY POLICY it issues NON-FORFEITABLE, giving a PAID-UP POLICY to the party if unable to continue his payments of premiums. The dividends of the Brooklyn Life Insurance Company are settled annually in cash. This plan is far more acceptable to insurers than at the end of three or five years, as in other companies. The Brooklyn Life Insurance Company allows thirty days grace in the payment of premiums. Its policies are incontestable, and its losses are promptly paid. The Brooklyn Life Insurance Company offers every known plan of Life and Endowment Insurance. Get a pamphlet at the office, 240 Montgomery street, southeast corner of Pine, from Stephen T. King, General Manager, or David B. Arrowsmith, Local Agent.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

BUGGIES AND CARRIAGES.—If you want a trim neat, light, and yet durable style of buggy or carriage, go to Nos. 37 and 39 Webb street, between Sacramento and California, where you will find just such a vehicle as will suit your taste. POLLARD & CARVILL not only deal in these articles, but manufacture them to order, and do repairing, painting, trimming and blacksmithing with dispatch and neatness. Go and see them.—California Leader.

WAGONS.—Every species of wagons that any one can need, made of the best material, well fitted and finished, can be found at the Depot of MILLS & EVANS, 587 Market street, two doors from Second. Light, Express, Milk and Thoroughbrace wagons, also Lumber Gears, Extra Poles and Whiffletrees, with Lead Bars, are kept constantly on hand.—California Leader.

FOR the best finished, fashionable hats, go to McGann & Co.'s, Hatters, 654 Washington street, two doors below the Plaza.

RHEUMATISM.

Throughout this coast a great deal of suffering is experienced from Rheumatism. Weeks and even months of protracted and aggravated misery is endured by the victims of medical inefficiency and ignorance, which could be cured just as speedily as was Mr. Sparrow, whose testimony is given below, and is only the echo of hundreds of other cases. Dr. Bourne cures without medicines, which accounts for his extraordinary success. No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street entrance:

SAN FRANCISCO, September 6, 1861.

Dr. Bourne: Last Winter I was nearly dead, by an attack of inflammatory rheumatism. I suffered the most excruciating pains for about five weeks, without any hope of relief, when a friend, hearing of my illness, called to see me, and assured me that if I would stop "drugging and dosing," and go to you, that you would have me walking about the streets in three days. Sure enough, although I was utterly helpless, and conveyed to your house in a carriage, and carried into it by three stout men, and was by them lifted into the bath, yet, on coming out of the bath I was able to largely assist myself, doing much toward dressing, and without assistance walked from the bath to the carriage. On the fourth day, I discharged my carriage and walked with a friend's aid the entire distance to your house (nearly a mile) and home again, and so on until cured; and I had not taken more than twelve baths when, all pain and swelling having ceased, I felt myself a well man. And now I am happy to do this little service of publicly certifying to the simple truth, leaving it to do its own work among such of my friends and acquaintances as may chance to see this. Your friend, JOSEPH SPARROW.

A SUMMER AND WINTER MEDICINE.

"Great oaks from little acorns grow."

The worst diseases known to the human race spring from causes so small as to almost defy detection. The volumes of scientific lore that fill the tables and shelves of the medical fraternity only go to prove and elaborate these facts.

Then guard yourselves while you may. The smallest pimple on the skin is a tell-tale and indicator of disease. It may fade and die away from the surface of the body, but it will reach the vitals, perhaps, at last, and death be the result and final close. Maggiel's Bilious, Dyspeptic and Diarrhœa Pills cure where all others fail. While for Burns, Scalds, Chilblains, Cuts, and all abrasions of the skin, Maggiel's Salve is infallible. Sold by J. Maggiel, 43 Fulton street, New York, and all Druggists, at 25 cents per box.

WANTED—Agents to sell, by subscription only the most popular work ever written: "GRANT AND SHERMAN; their Campaigns and Generals." By the world-renowned historian, Hon. J. T. Headley, author of Washington and his Generals, Sacred Mountains, etc. Agents are taking as high as thirty subscribers per day, and all agree in pronouncing it the most saleable work they ever took hold of. The people want Headley's illustrated "GRANT AND SHERMAN," etc. For terms and territory, address E. E. SHEAR, No. 8 Montgomery Street, and Box 1,430, San Francisco, California

CONCORD WAGONS AND HARNESS.—The Pacific Concord Carriage Manufactory is prepared to supply the Pacific Coast with Concord wagons and harness made to order. The members comprising this firm have long been in the employ of the celebrated manufacturing house of L. Downing & Son, Concord, New Hampshire; so that parties wishing Concord wagons or harness can obtain just the same quality of article here and save 25 per cent. on their purchase money. We have seen some of their workmanship, and can recommend it to the public Address Belduke & Co., 820 Folsom street, between Fourth and Fifth.—San Francisco Leader.

DAINTY WORK.—About the daintiest work we ever saw were specimens of hair jewelry at the establishment of Mrs. C. Cook, 645 Clay street, between Montgomery and Kearny streets, yesterday. This lady manufactures all sorts of jewelry—watch-chains, earrings, finger rings, breastpins, and various other kinds of ornaments—from human hair. We witnessed the process of manufacture, and it is intricate and ingenious in the highest degree.—S. F. Examiner.

E GOLDSMITH & Co., at No. 646 Sacramento street, three doors below Kearny, have just received some beautiful new style Garibaldis and Zouave Jackets, that for taste and style are particularly worthy of the attention of our lady readers. They have also a fine assortment of Ladies' Furnishing Goods of the choicest description. French corsets for one dollar. A great variety of French toilet and fancy articles, the newest styles of buttons and dress trimmings, may always be found at Goldsmith's, 646 Sacramento street.

SCHOOL FURNITURE.

RANKIN'S PATENT SCHOOL DESK;
Liquid Slating for Blackboard;
ARITHMETICAL FRAME;
Babbitonian System of Writing—the Best System known.

W. HOLT,
de9 305 Montgomery street, Room No 2.

FRAGRANT SOZODONT FOR THE TEETH

READ the Testimony of a few of the many Eminent Clergymen and their Families of New York city, who, having used the Sozodont for a long time past, are convinced of its excellent and invaluable qualities, and give it their cordial commendation:

Rev. THOMAS DEWITT, Pastor Collegiate Ref. Dutch Church, Lafayette Place.
Rev. J. W. ALEXANDER, D. D., Presbyterian Church, Fifth Avenue.
Rev. J. B. WAKELEY, M. E. City Missionary.
Rev. W. F. MORGAN, D. D., Rector St. Thomas Church, Broadway.
Rev. E. H. CHAPIN. D. D., Pastor Fourth Universalist Church, Broadway.
Rev. SAMUEL COOKE, D.D., Rector St. Bartholomew's Church, Lafayette Place.
Rev. SAMUEL OSGOOD, D.D., Pastor Church of Messiah, Broadway.
Rev. B. M. ADAMS, M. E. Church, Duane street.
Rev. HEMAN BANGS, late Pastor Centenary M. E. Church, Brooklyn.
Rev. W. S. MIKELS, Pastor Baptist Church, Sixteenth street.
Rev. GEO. POTTS, D.D., Pastor Presbyterian Church, University Place.
Rev. E. E. RANKIN, Pastor Presbyterian Church, Forty-second street.
Rev. T. E. VERMILYE, D. D., Pastor of Col. Dutch Reformed, Lafayette Place.

FROM G. F. J. COLBURN, DOCTOR DENTAL SURGERY, NEWARK, N. J.

The Popular Dentrifice known as Van Buskirk's "SOZODONT," besides being a very pleasant addition to the toilet, contains ingredients that, if used according to the directions, will prove of the greatest utility to the health of the mouth and teeth.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS!

Sold by all Druggists and Perfumers.

HALL & RUCKEL,
jc2 4m NEW YORK.

HALL'S SARSAPARILLA,
YELLOW DOCK AND IODIDE POTASS,
THE
Best Blood Purifier Known.

Persons that are troubled with Rheumatism, Scrofula, Neuralgia, Morbid Liver, Salt Rheum, Pimples, Boils, or any of the many diseases that originate from Impure Blood, would find it much to their advantage to give this justly celebrated article a trial. One or two bottles are quite sufficient to convince the most skeptical of its merits. It contains neither Spirit, ARSENIC nor MERCURY which cannot be truly said of any other preparation called "Sarsaparilla."

SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,
ap7-3m N. W. cor. Sansome and Commercial streets

FARRAND'S OSCILLATING
Amalgamator.

THIS UNRIVALLED IMPROVEMENT FOR THE REduction and amalgamation of Gold and Silver Ores, is now running daily at No. 206 Commercial street, between Front and Davis.

THIS AMALGAMATOR INVOLVES
NO COMPLICATED MACHINERY

And possesses the following advantages over all others now in use:

1st. It is capable of doing double the amount of work of the ordinary Pans, at a saving of more than one-half the power.

2d. It reduces the pulp finer, thereby producing a better result.

3d. It requires less quicksilver by one-half at a charge, whilst the loss by trituration is comparatively nothing.

4th. As an Amalgamator for gold contained in sulphurets, as also for very fine or flour gold it has no equal.

5th. This Amalgamator involves no complicated machinery, and is less liable to get out of order than any of the pans.

Trials made with this machine in the presence of experts, during the last six months, have been pronounced highly satisfactory. It is peculiarly well adapted to employment by small mining operators in distant localities, as it can readily be taken to pieces and packed upon mules.

A large size machine is constructed without dies or mullers, but simply with arms to act as stirrers, to be used in connection with several of the Amalgamators as a "Separator," as it is found that the peculiar motion given to these arms, in connection with the concave shape of the body of the machine, renders it most effectual for such a purpose.

W. D. FARRAND

RATES OF POSTAGE.

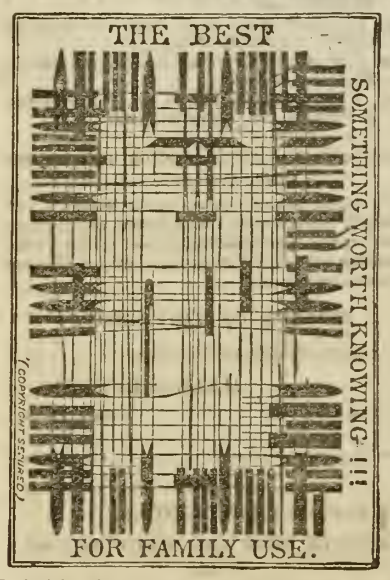
Valuable letters may be registered on application at the office of mailing, and the payment of 20 cents registration fee.

Transient newspapers, periodicals, blanks, proof-sheets, book manuscripts, pamphlets, and all mailable printed matter, except circulars and books, 2 cents for each and every 4 ounces. Double these rates are charged for books.

Seeds, cuttings, roots, etc., 2 cents for each 4 ounces or less quantity.

All packages of mail matter not charged with letter postage must be so arranged that the same can be conveniently examined by Postmasters; if not, letter postage will be charged.

Unsealed circulars, to one address, not exceeding three in number, 2 cents, and in the same proportion for a greater number.



No package will be forwarded by mail which weighs over 4 pounds.

All postage matter, for delivery within the United States, must be prepaid by stamps (except duly certified letters of soldiers and sailors;) otherwise, double the above rates will be charged on delivery.

Weekly newspapers (one copy only) sent to actual subscribers within the county where printed and published, free.

Letters to Canada and other British North American Provinces, when not over 3,000 miles, 10 cents for each ½ ounce. When over 3,000 miles, 15 cents. Prepayment optional.

Letters to Great Britain or Ireland, 24 cents. Prepayment optional.

To decipher, lower the top of the paper to an angle of forty-five degrees; then close one eye, and read at your ease.

THE

AWARDED THE HIGHEST PREMIUM

AT THE

State Fair of California,

The only Fair on the Pacific coast at which any two double-thread Machines were exhibited in competition in 1865.

If there is a FLORENCE SEWING MACHINE within one thousand miles of this office that is not working well, it will be attended to if I am informed of it, without expense to the owner. SAMUEL HILL,

General Agent,

111 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

THE

FLORENCE

SEWING MACHINE

RECEIVED THE FIRST PREMIUM, A GOLD MEDAL, at the Great Exhibition of the AMERICAN INSTUTE, - - - New York,

1865.

my10-3m

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)]

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL

Confectioners,

111 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter.

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge. fe24-3m

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,

WHOLESALE

DRUGGISTS,

IMPORTERS OF

Drugs, Chemicals, Herbs,

PATENT MEDICINES,

PAINTS, VARNISHES,

ACIDS, DYE STUFFS,

OILS, PERFUMERIES,

TOILET ARTICLES,

BRUSHES.

We are just receiving, direct from Spain, a complete assortment of

CORKS! CORKS! CORKS

which we offer at lower prices than usual

DUSTING, PAINT, VARNISH, SHOE, SCRUB, HAIR AND TOOTH BRUSHES:

We have a splendid stock, which we offer at extremely low prices.

HERBS.

We have received, direct from the Shakers, all kinds of fresh Herbs, and intend to keep every article used of this description.

TILDEN'S SOLID AND FLUID EXTRACTS, PILLS, AND CONCENTRATED PREPARATIONS.

We have on hand, and shall keep a full assortment of the above celebrated preparations, which we offer to the trade at such prices as will defy competition.

FLAVORING EXTRACTS.

A great variety, not to be equalled in the market as to quality and price.

Parties about purchasing would do well to give us a call and examine prices and goods before purchasing elsewhere.

PLAIN AND GUM TEETH.

We have the largest assortment of any house on the Pacific coast.

GOLD FOIL.

We are manufacturing Foil which we can recommend to the profession as being a superior article. We also have on hand a full assortment, of all the various makers

VULCANIZERS,

DENTAL CHAIRS AND LATHES,

FILES,

VULCANITE AND GUTTA PERCHA,

FORCEPS,

BURRS, DRILLS AND EXCAVATORS,

MIRRORS, ETC.

We have, besides the above, every article used by the Dentist, and are daily in receipt of all the new inventions in use.

Dentists will find it to their interest to call and examine our stock and prices before purchasing elsewhere.

R. H. McDonald & Co.,

CORNER SANSOME AND PINE STREETS,

SAN FRANCISCO.

AND

J STREET - - SACRAMENTO.

ap28-3m

THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD.

DR. MAGGIEL'S

Pills and Salve.

These Life-giving remedies are now, for the first time, given publicly to the world. For over a quarter of a century of private practice the ingredients in these

LIFE-GIVING PILLS!

Have been used with the greatest success. Their mission is not only to prevent disease, but to cure. They search out the various maladies by which the patient is suffering, and re-invigorate the failing system. To the aged and infirm a few doses of these valuable PILLS will prove to be

A VERY FOUNTAIN OF YOUTH,

For in every case they add new life and vitality, and restore the waning energies to their pristine state. To the young and middle-aged, they will prove most invaluable, as a ready, specific, and sterling medicine. Here is a dream realized, that Ponce-de-Leon sought for three hundred years ago, and never found. He looked for a fountain that would restore the old to vigor and make youth ever

AN ETERNAL SPRING!

It was left for this day and hour to realize the dream, and show in one glorious fact, the magic that made it fair.

THESE FAMOUS REMEDIES

Cannot stay the flight of years, but they can force back, and hold aloof, diseases that might triumph over the aged and the young. Let none hesitate then, but seize the favorable opportunity that offers. When taken as prescribed—

FOR BILLIOUS DISORDERS

Nothing can be more productive of cure than these Pills. Their almost magic influence is felt at once; and the usual concomitants of this most distressing disease are removed. These remedies are made from the purest

VEGETABLE COMPOUNDS.

They will not harm the most delicate female, and can be given with good effect in prescribed doses to the youngest babe.

FOR CUTANEOUS DISORDERS

And all eruptions of the skin, the SALVE is most invaluable. It does not heal externally alone, but penetrates with the most searching effects to the very root of the evil!

Dr. Maggiel's Pills

Invariably cure the following diseases:

Asthma,
Bowel Complaints,
Coughs,
Colds,
Chest Diseases,
Costiveness,
Dyspepsia,
Diarrhœa,
Dropsy,
Debility,
Female Complaints, Fever and Ague
Headache,
Indigestion,
Influenza,
Inflammation,
Inward Weakness,
Liver Complaint,
Lowness of Spirits,
Ringworm,
Rheumatism,
Salt Rheum,
Scalds,
Skin Diseases.

NOTICE.—None genuine without the engraved trade-mark around each pot or box, signed by Dr. J. Maggiel, 43 Fulton st., New York, to counterfeit which is felony.

☞ Sold by all respectable Dealers in Medicines throughout the United States—at 25 cents per box or pot. ap14-1y

A CARD.

M. Howard's Hair Restorative,

NO. 315 MONTGOMERY STREET,

SAN FRANCISCO.

THE ABOVE PREPARATION, which has been recently discovered and patented, is purely a Vegetable Extract

The undersigned are fully aware of the many unsatisfactory and useless preparations for restoring hair that have been introduced to the public, and how little confidence is to be placed in any pretensions to restoring the hair to bald heads, but, we are able to state that it not only prevents the Hair from falling out, but absolutely reproduces it, and that we now have good suits of Hair growing where we were entirely bald. Therefore, as a matter of justice to Mr. Howard, and of consolation to bald heads, we tender him this testimonial. Mr H. keeps the article for sale in bottles, with directions for its use, or applies it himself, as may be desired.

HAVING TRIED MR. HOWARD'S PREPARATION,

San Francisco, April 6, 1866.

Frank M. Thayer,	R. A. Redman,
W. S. Davis,	J. O. Rountree,
T. A. Hall,	G. W. Gamble,
A. C. Knox	J. W. Miller,
Bradbury Sauborn,	E. C. McComb,
George Wells,	D. C. Ross,
Joseph Wells,

ap7

FRANKLIN PRINTING OFFICE,

509 CLAY STREET, (near Sansome,)

SAN FRANCISCO,

"The oldest and most complete Book and Job printing establishment in California. All descriptions of work neatly executed at low rates."

ja1-tf FRANK EASTMAN, Proprietor.

J. PEIRCE,

FURNITURE AND

Bedding Warerooms.

NOS. 415, 417, AND 419 CALIFORNIA STREET, NEAR MONTGOMERY.

THIS STOCK OF FURNITURE, etc., was selected with great care, and special attention given to the wants of this market, ENTIRELY AT THE EAST. It is NOT COMPOSED OF REFUSE GOODS, ODDS AND ENDS OF OTHER HOUSES that have lately closed out here, but CONSISTS ENTIRELY OF NEW GOODS, made after the latest patterns and in the most durable manner.

The present Stock is fully TWICE as large as that of any other house here. Parties having any doubts of this, or that the assortment is not superior to any in the city, can easily satisfy themselves by calling.

The stock of Case Goods is larger than ever before.

J. PEIRCE,

Ware-rooms 415, 417 and 419 California street,

mh16-3m SAN FRANCISCO.

B. F. STERETT, 533 Clay St., a few doors below Montgomery, continues to print all kinds of Books, Bills, Circulars, Cards, etc. in superior style, and at reasonable prices.

T. RODGERS JOHNSON,

ODD FELLOWS' HALL, 329 Montgomery street,

mh30 3m San Francisco.

NATHANIEL GRAY,

UNDERTAKER,

CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,

641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB

Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

mar17-3m

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,

PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,

517 CLAY STREET,

Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,

SAN FRANCISCO.

CHARLES F. RIEHN,

OF

Riehn, Hemme & Co.,

ASSAYERS,

GIVES LESSONS IN ASSAYING—ALSO IN MINERalogy and Chemistry, as far as required to become a Practical Assayer.

Montgomery street, corner of Sacramento, under Donohoe, Kelly & Co.'s Bank, San Francisco. mar5 3m

DISTANCES FROM SAN FRANCISCO
To various points:

To Fort Point, 4 miles, by omnibus, four trips a day.
Lone Mountain, 3, street railway.
Seal Rock, 6, cars and omnibus, two trips a day.
Mission Dolores, street railways; Ocean House 8.
San Mateo, 20, railroad.
Crystal Springs, 23, railroad and stage
Half-Moon Bay, 29, do. do.
Redwood city, 30, do.
Mountain View, 38, do.
Santa Clara, 47, do.
San Jose, 50, do., or steamer and stage, 54.
Alviso, 46, steamer, daily.
Almaden mines, 67, steamer and stage; or by railroad and stage, 64.
Santa Cruz, 78, railroad and stage.
Oakland, 8, steamer and railroad, six trips a day.
Alameda, 11, steamer, three trips a day.
San Leandro, 15, steamer and railroad.
Mission San Jose, 34, steamer, railroad and stage.
Warm Springs, 37, do. do.
Benicia, 30, steamer leaves at 4 P. M. daily.
Sacramento, 117, do. do.
Stockton, 117, do. do.
Martinez, 33, do.
Pacheco, 38, steamer and stage.
Diablo Coal Mines, 44, steamer and stage.
Suisun, 50, steamer, or 54 by steamer and stage
Vallejo, 28; Mare Island, 37; Napa city, 50
White Sulphur Springs, 67, stage from Napa.
Geyser Springs, 118, do. do.
Sonoma, 52, steamer, tri-weekly.
Petaluma, 48, steamer, daily.
Healdsburg, 80, stage daily from Petaluma
San Quentin, 12, steamer; Farallone Islands, 20.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,
1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, situated on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

It was built expressly for a Hotel, with all the modern conveniences attached to it.
Gas and water are supplied throughout the House.
Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will findi Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

LARGE READING ROOM

Attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JO N KELLY, Jr.,
my6 3m Proprietor.

THE PACIFIC
INSURANCE COMPANY,
HAVING ADDED
MARINE INSURANCE
TO THEIR BUSINESS, ARE NOW PREPARED TO ISSUE POLICIES ON
Marine, Inland Navigation, and Fire Risks,
ON THE MOST FAVORABLE TERMS.

Office, 436 California street.

J. HUNT, President
A. J. RALSTON, Secretary. my5-3m

MARKET STREET RAILROAD
CHANGE OF TIME TABLE.

ON AND AFTER AUGUST 1, 1865, Trains will start rom the City and the Mission every hour instead of every forty minutes, as heretofore.
Trains from the City will start at the odd hour, commencing at 6:30 A. M. and every hour thereafter until 11:30 P. M. mh25 F. McCOPPIN, Superintendent.

WHO WANTS
Profitable Employment
OR PAYING INVESTMENTS?

PARTIES desirous of getting into OLD-ESTABLISHED BUSINESS CONCERNS, either as Partners or Sole Proprietors in Mercantile, Manufacturing, Trading, or any kind of business in city or country, can do so by applying at my office.
Men desiring profitable situations in business houses, with MONEY TO LOAN on satisfactory security, can secure such appointments.
Partnerships negotiated, where large or small capital is required.
Business Interests sold quickly for cash.
Real Estate bought and sold.
Help furnished for all kinds of employment.
Situations obtained for parties desiring employment.
S. P. WHITMAN,
Property, General Agency, and Business House, 313 Montgomery street, San Francisco. mar17-3m

THE CALIFORNIAN.

TERMS—FIVE DOLLARS PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE

A PAPER FOR THE TIMES

DEVOTED TO LIVE TOPICS,

THE DISSEMINATION OF A PURE LITERATURE, DEVELOPMENT OF HOME TALENT,

AND THE

BEST INTERESTS OF CALIFORNIA.

Published

EVERY SATURDAY MORNING

AT

532 MERCHANT STREET,

BY THE CALIFORNIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY.

A. A. STICKNEY, J. P. BOGARDUS, W. J. BINGHAM, C. H. WEBB.

No effort will be spared to enable THE CALIFORNIAN to appeal to the Public for support, not only as the

BEST JOURNAL ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

But also as being

THE EQUAL OF ANY ON THIS CONTINENT

THE BEST TALENT OF THE STATE

Is employed upon THE CALIFORNIAN.

The voluntary notices bestowed by the press of the Eastern cities have been no less warm and congratulatory than those which we have received at the hands of our cotemporaries of the Pacific Their verdict is unanimously in favor of

THE CALIFORNIAN

and all join in pronouncing their unqualified approval of its unequalled merits.

Its reputation is now fully established. It is not

EXCELLED BY ANY LITERARY JOURNAL

on the Continent.

THE TERMS OF THE CALIFORNIAN are $5 per year, mailed to subscribers, invariably in advance; 50 cents per month served by carriers.

All communications and correspondence must be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN,
No 532 Merchan street,
SAN FRANCISCO.

OPPOSITION STEAMER-DAY,

FRIDAY, JUNE 15, 1866.

GREAT REDUCTION IN RATES,
VIA NICARAGUA!

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN TRANSIT COMPANY will despatch the favorite Steamship

MOSES TAYLOR,

ON FRIDAY, - - - JUNE 15TH,

From Mission street Wharf, at 10 o'clock, A. M., precisely
Connecting at GREYTOWN with the splendid Steamship

SANTIAGO,

2,500 TONS, FOR NEW YORK.

☞ For Passage and Freight, and Insurance on Treasure, at greatly REDUCED RATES, apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,
Up stairs, San Francisco.

NEW BOOK
AND STATIONERY
STORE.

THE UNDERSIGNED DESIRE TO INFORM THE PUBLIC that they have opened a School Book and Stationery

STORE,
At 691 Market, Corner Third,
"NUCLEUS" BUILDING,

With a complete assortment of everything pertaining to a first class establishment.

Having unsurpassed facilities for obtaining all our stock, direct from the Publishers and Manufacturers, on the most favorable terms, we feel confident of giving satisfaction to all who may favor us with their patronage.

In addition to our large stock of the above goods, we shall keep constantly on hand a complete assortment of

BIBLES,
PRAYER BOOKS,
BLANK BOOKS,
PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,
PORTFOLIOS,
WRITING DESKS,
SCRAP BOOKS,
JUVENILE BOOKS,
CHILDREN'S TOY BOOKS,
CARDS, BLOCKS, and GAMES.

Especial attention given to

Ladies' Stationery,

embracing all the varieties of Note, Letter Paper, and Envelopes, all which we stamp with purchaser's INITIALS, in colors or plain.

Wedding and Visiting Cards

engraved, written, or printed in the latest style and at the lowest rates. Monograms of all kinds cut to order.

A liberal discount made to Teachers and the Trade.

TYLER BROS,

No. 632 WASHINGTON STREET,

AND

691 MARKET STREET, CORNER THIRD
my12-1m

ALLEN'S
LUNG BALSAM!

A CERTAIN CURE FOR
COUGHS, COLDS, INFLUENZA, NIGHT SWEATS, BRONCHITIS, SPITTING OF BLOOD, ASTHMA, WHOOPING COUGH, CONSUMPTION,
And all Diseases of the
CHEST AND LUNGS!

This celebrated Cough Remedy effects a speedy cure by producing a free and easy expectoration, heals abscesses of the lungs, prevents unhealthy secretion of the bronchial tubes, and removes from them those accumulations of morbid matter which cause oppression of the breast, difficulty of breathing, etc, soothes irritation of the respiratory organs which produces cough.
PRICE.....ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE.
Sold by all Druggists.
HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Ageuts,
401 Battery corner of Clay,
ap27-3m San Francisco.

DR. HUMPHREYS'
Homœopathic Specifics

Have proved, from the most ample experience, an entire success—simple, prompt, efficient and reliable. They are the only Medicines perfectly adapted to popular use—so simple that mistakes cannot be made in using them; so harmless as to be free from danger, and so efficient as to be always reliable. They have received the highest commendation from all, and will always render satisfaction.

No. 1	cures Fevers, Congestion, Inflammations.	0 25
" 2	cures Worms, Worm Fever, Worm Colic,	25
" 3	cures Crying Colic, or Teething of in-
" 4	cures Diarrhœa of children or adults...	25
	faats.....	25
" 5	cures Dysentery, Griping, Bilious Colic,	25
" 6	cures Cholera Morbus, Nausea, Vomiting,	25
" 7	cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis.....	25
" 8	cures Neuralgia, Toothache, Faceache.	25
" 9	cures Headaches, sick-Headache, Vertigo,	25
" 10	cures Dyspepsia, Billious Stomach.....	25
" 11	cures Suppressed, or Painful Periods..	25
" 13	cures Croup, Cough, difficult Breathing,	25
" 14	cures Salt Rheum, Erysipelas Eruptions,	25
" 15	cures Rheumatism, Rheumatic Pains...	25
" 16	cures Fever and Ague, Chill Fever, Agues	50
" 17	cures Piles, blind or bleeding.....	50
" 18	cures Opthalmia, and Sore or Weak Eyes,	50
" 19	cures Catarrh, acute or chronic, Influenza	50
" 20	cures Whooping-Cough, violent coughs.	50
" 21	cures Asthma, oppressed Breathing.....	50
" 22	cures Ear Discharges, impaired Hearing	50
" 23	cures Scrofula, Enlarged Glands, Swellings	50
" 24	cures General Debility, Physical Weakness.....	50
" 25	cures Dropsy, and scanty Secretions....	50
" 26	cures Sea-Sickness, sickness from Riding,	50
" 27	cures Kidney Disease, Gravel.....	50
" 29	cures Sore Mouth, Canker.....	50
" 31	cures Painful Periods, even with Spasms	50
" 32	cures Sufferings at change of life.....$1.00
" 33	cures Epilepsy, Spasms, St. Vitus' Dance.	1.00
" 34	cures Diphtheria, Ulcerated Sore Throat,	50

FAMILY CASES.

35 vials, morocco case, and book.....$10 00
28 vials, morocco case, and book..... 8 00
20 vials, morocco case, and book..... 6 00
These Remedies, by the case or single box, are sent to any part of the country, by Mail or Express, on receipt of the price.
HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
ap27-3m San Francisco.

A BEAUTIFUL COMPLEXION!

Secret of Beauty!

USE GEO. W. LAIRD'S

BLOOM OF YOUTH,
OR
LIQUID PEARL!

See that the name, GEO. W. LAIRD, is stamped ON THE BOTTLE. No other is Genuine.

The best article in the world for Preserving and Beautifying the Complexion and Skin.

This magnificent Toilet Article is prepared only by GEO. W. LAIRD, 74 Fulton street, New York, formerly 483 Broadway.
Sold by Druggists everywhere.
HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay.
ap27-3m San Francisco.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE - - - - - - - - PROPRIETOR.
C. L. GRAVES - - - - - - - STAGE MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON - - - - - - - TREASURER.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON AND EVENING, JUNE 9, 1866.

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Dress Circle and Orchestra, - - - - - - - $1 00
Parquet, - - - - - - - - - - 50
Upper Circle, - - - - - - - - - - 25

SATURDAY AFTERNOON,

Mr. John McCullough,

SUPPORTED BY THE LEGITIMATE COMPANY, will appear in the comedy of

A WONDER;
Or, A Woman Keeps a Secret!

SATURDAY EVENING:

BENEFIT OF

Messrs. Stackhouse and Nichols.

On which occasion will he played,

DREAMS OF DELUSION
RECITATION OF SHAMUS O'BRIEN,
BY MR. McCULLOUGH.
To conclude with
HIS LAST LEGS!
O'CALLAGHAN.....HARRY COURTAINE.

NEXT WEEK:

EDWIN FORREST
WILL PLAY

BRUTUS, - - - - - - - - MONDAY
MACBETH, - - - - - - - TUESDAY.
BRUTUS, - - - - - - WEDNESDAY.
RICHELIEU, - - - - - - THURSDAY.
RICHARD III., - - - - - - FRIDAY.

Reserved Seats.....$1 50
Dress Circle and Parquet..... 1 00
Upper Circle..... 50

LOW PRICES
IN
Gents' Furnishing Goods,
AT
WARD'S SHIRT STORES,
323 MONTGOMERY STREET,
AND CORNER OF MARKET AND THIRD STREETS,
SAN FRANCISCO.

P. S.—Printed directions for self-measurement for Shirts and Price Lists of Goods sent free by mail.
ap21-3m

SPRING MEDICINE.

PURIFY THE BLOOD
AND Constitution,
WITH
LE DOYEN'S
SARSAPARILLA,
YELLOW DOCK,
IODINE ALTERATIVE.

CRANE & BRIGHAM, Agents,
my19 1m SAN FRANCISCO

NATURE UNVEILED,
AT THE
PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
ja27-tf between California and Pine.

TO HOTEL
AND HOUSEKEEPERS

Meagher, Taaffe & Co.
ARE OFFERING AT
REDUCED PRICES!
A LARGE STOCK OF
SUPERIOR BARNESLEY,
SCOTCH, and IRISH LINEN;
TABLE DAMASKS, SHEETINGS,
SHIRTINGS, TOWELS, TOWELINGS,
NAPKINS, DOYLIES, ETC., ETC.
ALSO,
BLANKETS, QUILTS, FLANNELS,
COTTON SHEETINGS and SHIRTINGS,
LACE and MUSLIN CURTAINS, ETC.
9 Montgomery Street,
LICK HOUSE BLOCK.

WHOLESALE HOUSE,
107 BATTERY, BET. PINE AND CALIFORNIA.

Black Silks!
BONNET'S, BISCHOFF'S, & PONSON'S
Superior Black Silks,
PURCHASED AT THE RECENT GREAT AUCTION SALE, AND WILL BE OFFERED AT A
REDUCTION OF 20 TO 30 PER CENT.
FROM THEIR USUAL PRICES.

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.,
Wholesale House, 107 Battery street,
je9 Between Pine and California streets.

NEW BOOKS, JUST RECEIVED
AT
A. Roman & Co.'s.

Ænone—A Tale of Slave Life in Rome.
The Queen Mother and Rosamond. By Swiabarne.
May and December. By Mrs. Hubbard.
The Gold Brick. By Mrs. Ann H. Stephens.
Leighton Court. By Charles Kingsley.
Only a Woman's Heart. By Ada Clare.
The Toilers of the Sea. By Victor Hugo.
The Adventures of Reuben Davidger.
Citoyenne Jacqueline — A Woman's Lot in the French Revolution. By Sarah Tytler. 12mo.
The Story of Kenneth. By Bayard Taylor.
St. Martin's Summer. By Anne H. M. Brewster.
The Fortune Seeker. By Mrs. Southworth.
Six Months Among the Charities of Europe. By Joha De Liefde
Palfrey's History of New England. 2 vols. 12mo.
Life of Robert Owen. 16mo.
The Song Book. By John Hullah.
The Republic of Plato. Translated by Vaughan & Davis.
St. Martin's Eve. By Mrs. Henry Wood.
Walter Goring. By Annie Thomas.
Cherry and Violet. A Tale of the Great Plague. By the author of May Powell. 16mo.
Geological Sketches. By Professor Agassiz.
The Pheuomena of Plant Life. By L. H. Grindon.
Lucy Arlyn. By J. T. Trowbridge.
The War of the Rebellion. By H S. Foote.
Letters of Life By Mrs. L. H. Sigourney.
Stonewall Jackson. A Military Biography. Philip E. Cooke
Eccentric Personages. By W Russell, L. L. D.
Broken to Harness. A Story of English Dramatic Life. By Yates.
The Lost Tales of Miletas. By Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED BY EVERY STEAMER.

ENGLISH BOOKS IMPORTED DIRECT TO ORDER, WITH PROMPTNESS AND AT MODERATE PRICES.

PUBLIC AND PRIVATE LIBRARIES SUPPLIED.

A. ROMAN & CO.,
417 and 419 Montgomery street.
my19 San Francisco.

WONDERS OF WONDERS!
TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE
Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
ja27-tf between California and Pine.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S
SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

BATHS.
Dr. Bourne's, (Medical,) 10 Post, near Montgomery.

AUCTIONEERS.
Olucy & Co., removed to 418 Montgomery street.

BUSINESS AND PROPERTY AGENCY.
S. P. Whitman, 313 Montgomery st.

BOWLING ALLEYS.
Cosmopolitan, White & Lafferty, Cosmopolitan Hotel.
Wholers & Sturke, Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.)

BOOKS.
A. Gensoul, 511 Montgnmery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street.
I. M. Wentworth & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine st

COLLECTOR.
B. Pulverman, 614 Montgomery—Office hours, 1 to 3 P.M.

CLOTHING.
H M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.
Dell, Cranna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.

COPPER CRUSHER AND SAMPLER.
S. W. Howland, 24 California street, (at Thomas' Mill.)

DRESS TRIMMINGS, WORSTEDS, ETC.
Mrs. Norcross, 5 Montgomery street (Masonic Temple.)

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Dr. A. N. Clark (late Knowles & Clark) removed to 410 Kearny.
Dr. Wm. B. McAllister, 221 Third street.
Whitcomb & Dyer, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.
Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.

DRUGGISTS.
R. H. McDonald & Co., (Wholesale) Sansome, cor. Pine.
Shepardson & Gates, (successors to R. Hall & Co.,) cor. Sansome and Commercial.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.
Cal. Collegiate Institute, Miss M. Lammond, 68 Silver.
Mcl Institute, Miss Florence James, 55 South Park.
Pacific Business College, 751 Market street, above Third.

FURNITURE.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
J. Peirce, 415, 417 and 419 California street.

GROCERS.
N. Baschen, corner Fifth and Minna.
Slosson & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
J J. Miller, corner Sutter and Leavenworth.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market
W. M. Noble & Co., cor Howard and Twelfth streets

HATTER.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street,

HOTELS.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.

INSURANCE.
Bigelow & Brn., N.W. cor. Montgomery and Sacramento.
Mutual Life Ins. Co., H. S. Homans, Agent, 609 Clay.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Agts, 206 Front, cor Cal.
National Ins. Co., N E. cor. Montgomery and California.
Occidental Ins. Co., S.W. cor. Montgom'y and California.
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Roscublatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

MAPS.
Pacific Map Depot, A Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.

MERCHANT TAILORS.
J. H. Hammond removed to 328 Montgomery.

MILLINERS.

PAPER HANGINGS, WINDOW SHADES, ETC.
H. Ward, 132 Third street.

PIANO SCHOOL.
Mr. Gustave A. Scott, at Mcl Institute, 55 South Park.
W. S. Pierce, removed to 534 Market, opposite Second

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
M. Gray, 613 Clay street.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

REAL ESTATE.
Fifteen-dollar lots for sale by H. S. Brown, S.E. corner of Battery and Commercial streets.

RESTAURANTS.
Bivalve, Nolting & Spreen, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Eureka, C. H. Brickwedell & Co., Clay, near Montgom'y
Magnolia, 143 Third street.
Market, by Felix and Gustave Besson, 520 Merchant.
Philadelphia, Jacob Weiss, 308 Montgomery street.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Saulmann's, 506 Montgomery street.

SALOONS.
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N E cor Third and Howard
Razzetti & Co.'s, 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
S Myers, 332 Montgomery street.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street.
Sun Burst, Carolin & McArdle, cor. Second and Market.
Coates & Henderson, 37 Sutter street.

SCALES.
Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scales 334 Montgomery street.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, J. W. J. Pearson, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento

TOYS, ETC.
Feldbush & Co., 207 Montgomery street.
A. Kohler, 620 Washington street.

UPHOLSTERER.
T. McAllister, corner Sutter and Leavenworth.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery

CARPETS.

Removal! Removal!

KENNEDY & BELL
HAVE REMOVED TO
BUSH STREET,
Below Montgomery,
Store lately occupied by the Franco-American Commercial Company.
ap21-3m

VINCENT'S COLD PREVENTIVE.

A Sure Cure
FOR COUGHS, COLDS, BRONCHITIS
DYSPEPSIA,
CONSUMPTION,
NIGHT SWEATS, AND PULMONARY DISEASES.

Read the following:

REMARKABLE CURE.

San Francisco, September 5th, 1865.

I desire to make known the fact that I was afflicted with a very bad cough for fifteen years, and, during this time, used everything which I could hear of without getting the better of my disease, until I tried Dr. D. B. Vincent's Cold Preventative or Cough Mixture, which cured me sound and well.

NEWTON MOORE.

This is to certify that my wife has been troubled with indigestion for nearly eighteen months, and, by using one bottle of Dr. Vincent's medicine, has been completely cured.

San Francisco, April 6th, 1866.

JOHNSON J. THOMAS.

San Francisco, July 17th, 1865.

I hereby certify that, having had a Cough some five months since, which had troubled me for two years, and I was so bad that I was able to do but little labor of any kind, and could not walk fast without putting myself out of breath. I was so far gone that I had chills over me and night sweats, and had what other physicians called disease of the lungs. I had been doctoring a part of the time for the last year, when I saw Dr. D. B. Vincent, and he gave me a small vial of medicine, which relieved me of the chills and night sweats and the cough entirely went away, and I do not take cold so easy, and my health is much better in every respect. My appetite is much better; and I heartily recommend all others who are afflicted with similar complaints to him.

JOHN O'NEILL, National Hotel.

The above named diseases nearly all originate from the same or similar causes, and

THE COLD PREVENTIVE
will cure all of them. It is a sure cure for Dyspepsia. Price, 50 cents per bottle.

D. B. VINCENT, M. D.,
PHYSICIAN AND OCULIST,

Treats all diseases successfully on the Electric system. Particular attention paid to treating all Diseases of the Eyes, Rheumatism, Paralysis, etc. Cures guaranteed, or all moneys refunded—in most cases even where others fail.

☞ OFFICE—No. 103 Kearny street, first floor, where he can be consulted at all hours, unless professionally engaged. All orders from the country promptly attended to. up7

COMMERCIAL EDUCATION.

Pacific Business College,
751 MARKET STREET,
(BETWEEN THIRD AND FOURTH,)
SAN FRANCISCO.

An Institution designed to prepare Young and Middle aged men for an active and successful BUSINESS LIFE. This is the largest, most complete, and thorough Institution of the kind on the coast, and

THE ONLY
Commercial College which is conducted on Actual Business Principles. Its great system of Business Training is endorsed by the Most Eminent Financiers and Business Men of the Nation.

REGULAR BANKS AND BUSINESS OFFICES have been introduced, by which we are enabled to fit our Students in the best possible manner, and shortest possible time, for active Business Life.

Those in pursuit of a
PRACTICAL BUSINESS EDUCATION
should examine the merits of this College. Send for the COLLEGE REVIEW, giving full particulars of the College, besides containing other important and interesting matter. Sent free to all desiring it.

Further particulars can be had by calling at the College, or addressing M. K. LAUDENSLAGER, President fe17 Business College, San Francisco.

FRANKLIN PRINTING OFFICE,
509 CLAY STREET, (near Sansome,)
SAN FRANCISCO,

"The oldest and most complete Book and Job printing establishment in California. All descriptions of work neatly executed at low rates."

ja1-tf FRANK EASTMAN, Proprietor.

The California.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME V., No 4. OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET. | SAN FRANCISCO, JUNE 16, 1866. | TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE. 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

PROSE.

My Suburban Residence.—By the Author of "Neighborhood's I Have Moved From."
The Fenian Movement.
Sleeping with the Judge.—By "Allaquiz."
Sundries.—By "Emstadt."

NEW BOOKS:

Notices of Recent Publications.

AMUSEMENTS:

Theatrical Events, and Announcements.

An Adventure in the Great Pyramid
Health in Great Cities.
Going Ashore.
Sir Ralph's Heriot.
How Kate Discovered America.
The Festival of St. Cecilia: A Musical Romance.—By M. A. E.
The Kingdom of Italy.
A Widow.
Icelandic Admonitions.

POETRY:

Love in Little.—By Ina D. Coolbrith.

[For the Californian.]

LOVE IN LITTLE.

BECAUSE tho rose the Bloom of Blossoms is,
And queenliest in beauty and in grace,
The violet's tender blue we love no less,
Or daisy, glancing up with shy, sweet face.

For all the music which the forest has—
The ocean-waves that crash upon the beach,
Still would we miss the whisper of the grass,
The hum of bees, the brooklet's silver speech.

We would not have the timid wood-thrush mute
Because the bulbul more divinely sings;
Or lose the scarlet of dear Robin's throat
For all the Tropics' flash of golden wings.

So do I think, though weak we be and small,
Yet is there One whose care is none the less,
Who finds, perchance, some grain of worth in all,
Or loves us for our very humbleness.

INA D. COOLBRITH.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

TO A. ROMAN & CO., Nos. 417 and 419 Montgomery street, we are under obligations for a number of books of recent issue, among which we find The Masquerade and Other Poems. By John Godfrey Saxe. Boston: Tickuor & Fields.

This is a very dreary book. It is written by a gentleman who has acquired some reputation as a humorist from his frequent contribution of verses to the newspapers of the East. In such localities they may be tolerable enough; but the author ought not to presume that the collection of such effusions in a volume of two hundred and thirty-seven pages will add anything to his reputation, or ensure an immortality among the genuine wits or humorists of America. We have commenced reading several pieces, anticipating before we finished something to create a smile, but the result has been uniformly an undeveloped pucker—a feeling of incompleteness, as concerning one who tried and couldn't. Several of the pieces in the volume secmed quite humorous when we met them in the newspapers some years ago—a few only some months ago—but it is hard to laugh more than once over the same jokes. A joke well told is always better in prose than in verse, and Mr. Saxe, endeavoring to enshrine news paper wit in the amber of his rythmic measure, ought not to claim any originality for the creations, or applause for almost spoiling what was really quite readable. Thus much for the matter of the verses. The manner is not in any respect his, but is a following—at how great interval?—of men who could claim both wit and genius, such as Tom Hood and Oliver Wendell Holmes. This is true of the bulk of the volume, consisting of the "other poems." That the title is a misnomer, we believe the author, if he ever indulges in a serious thought, would confess, for even he would find it difficult to quote a line of poetry therefrom. The reader can generally see the muscle he has developed, in his efforts to be unmistakably funny. Once or twice, in this volume, he has not tried to be so; and while in these instances he has produced the most pleasing verses in the volume, they seem out of place, and remind us of something else—the matter from one anthor, the manner from another. "Wouldn't You Like to Know" and "To My Love" are prominent in this regard.

In the later portion of the volume are what Mr. Saxe, we think in a facetious vein, calls sonnets, but they are the same dreary trials to be funny that almost make you smile, and could never be recognized as sonnets by gods or men. The noble sonnets of the master bards were written in fourteen lines; so are these—and there the likeness ends.

The volume closes with some epigrams—and they are unlike and superior to the other effusions, in that, while they are written in the same spirit, they relieve one of the torture of long suspense, and hurry the reader to the locality where the author intends the laugh to—but where it does not—come in.

If the volume were considerably better in every respect, it might possibly be good. Its muscular effort might then accomplish the expected smile, and its dreary doggerel approximate the poetic flow. Failing in both, the book is dreary, dismal, dreary to the end.

A Thousand a Year. By Mrs. E. M. Bruce. Boston: Lee & Shepard, Publishers.

This book was written to show the very considerable hardship of a minister with wife and children living on the sum of one thousand dollars a year. It is dedicated "to the noble band of Christian ministers by whose self-sacrificing toil etc., and to their patient wives who toil unceasingly with burdens that are never lifted, by one who sees and would alleviate the trials of their dishcartening life." It's not a particularly amusing book. To smile, from the title-page to finis, would evidently hurt the feelings of the author. It is intended to work the reader into the gloomiest condition of the human heart, and will probably prove successful among the people who are given to ready sympathies. The author would have us believe that the minister's life is the hardest that was ever devised for man. "He is working hard, doing an immense amount of mental labor, but only in quantity does it astonish you." She might add that the quality also does at times. Mrs. Bruce does not like it because, "Whereas the lawyer, the doctor, the farmer, or tradesman who graduated in the same college class with less promise, is making his mark in the world, the clergyman is working on without prominence of any sort, without the applause of men, feeling that it might have been otherwise." Her particular minister "onee had glowing hopes; could remember in the long ago, away back in his young manhood, when he had been ambitious," but "years of toil and varied duties had smothered his aspiration." He finally threw up the sponge, but before he left, "I think our committee learned in that interview some truths of which they had never before dreamed." There is a class of people in every community who think they insult the Deity by taking any but the gloomiest views of life, and therefore dispel, when they can, the twinkle from every eye and smile from every face. To that class we especially recommend this "ower sad tale."

Honor May. Boston: Ticknor & Fields.

A story evidently written by a woman who is an enthusiastic lover of music. She believes she can preface her volume no better than by a quotation from J. T. De Saint-Germain: "* * * La musique, c'est l' expressiou, c'est la voix qui pleure, qui aime, qui gémit, qui glorifie, c'est le cœur qui palpité de joie on qui saigne de douleur; rien n'eu survivra que la pensée; c'est le bien entré la terre d'argile et las espaces infinis, incommensurables. La musique est comme un ressouvenir de la voix divine, et son triomphe sera toujours la louange du Seigneur." We cannot commend the plot or development of the story. In the mind of the authoress, these were plainly of secondary importance. She asks an audience of those, enthusiastic as herself, who love to think, talk, feel, hear and live music. And such readers will appreciate and enjoy the book. To those who have some knowledge of the best music, this will serve as a pleasant remembrance and review of what they love best, and to those who are less informed this volume will give kindly hints, and stimulate their desires for a better knowledge. Those who care less for the divine art may find something in the story, made interesting to a certain degree by the introduction of a "schoolmarm," who fascinates, bewilders, and compel, the heroes and supernumeraries of the piece to fall in love with her.

Citoyenne Jacqueline—A Woman's Lot in the Great French Revolution. By Sarah Tytler, author of Papers for Thoughtful Girls. London and New York: Alexander Strahan.

The elegant appearance of this volume would win readers if no word was spoken in its praise. The rich whiteness of its pages, the clearness of its type, and the simple elegance of its outside, are winning invitations to a more intimate acquaintance with its contents. There is perhaps no period in history better adapted for the exercise of the skill of the novelist than that of the French Revolution. It is calculated to serve as the basis of a thrilling narrative. The authoress of the present volume has skilfully availed herself of the advantages that appertained to this scene in French history, and into the web of her story has woven incidents in the lives of those charaeters best known in the historical narrative. She introduces the persons of Robespierre and Murat, and surely does not forget her, who was bold amid the terrified, Charlotte Corday. She displays the result of a careful and conscientious study of history, and has produced a work of very considerable interest and fascination to the end.

In Trust; or, Dr. Bernard's Household. By Amanda M. Douglass. Boston: Lee & Shepard.

Betsy Jane Ward (Better-Half to Artemus). Hur Book. New York: James O'Kane.

Ecce Homo—A Survey of the Life and Work of Jesus Christ. Boston: Roberts Bros.

Speeches. By the Rt. Hon. Thomas Babington Macaulay, M. P. 2 vols. New York: W. J. Widdleton.

Cerise—A Tale of the Last Century. By G. J. Whyte Melville. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co.

Memoirs of a Good-for-Nothing. From the German of Joseph von Eichendorff. By Charles Godfrey Leland. New York: Leypoldt & Holt.

Poems of Thomas Hood. People's Edition. New York: G. P. Putnam; Hurd & Houghton.

AMUSEMENTS.

MR. FORREST appeared in John Howard Payne's tragedy of Brutus, or The Fall of Tarquin, on Monday and Wednesday evenings; in Macbeth on Tuesday evening; in Richelieu on Thursday evening; and in Virginius last evening. The interest evinced by the public to see Mr. Forrest in his personations of the great characters of the drama seems to be increasing. It is impossible to procure eligible seats without securing them days in advance; and when a new play is announced, the eager public secure seats anywhere, in dress circle or parquette, accepting Capt. Howard's drafts payable at five days—the longest period for which seats can be secured—as fast as they can be issued.

Charles R. Thorne Jr., who has very ably filled the position of leading man at the Opera House for nearly a year past, and has evinced most creditable improvement in his profession, has dissolved his connection with that theatre and with California, and intends leaving for the East on the next steamer. Charles Thorne, like Frank Mayo his predecessor at the Opera House, has grown up as an actor on, and graduates from the Opera House stage. We commend him to the public on the Atlantic side for his sterling qualities as a man and actor; and have no fear that he will bring ill-repute upon his dramatic alma mater in either capacity.

Mr. Walter Leman, a veteran on the stage, a careful and very capable actor, for a long time one of the leading members of the Opera House company, went East yesterday on the Moses Taylor. The vacancies have been filled by Harry Courtaine, and H. D. Thompson of "Michael Feeny" fame.

Mrs. Sedley Brown, whose experiences of California management in her late season at the Metropolitan were very bitter ones, also embarked for Boston, her native city, on the Opposition steamer. Harry Wall and his pretty wife—late Louisa Clarkson—Percy, the precise; and Mrs. Yeamans, good in jig dances, rollicking Irish and utility characters, have also shaken the dust of California off their feet. They departed for New York yesterday.

The performance at the Opera House this afternoon will consist of Taming of the Shrew and Harry Courtaine's speciality, Bob Ticket. In the evening the sterling comedy of The Wonder will be performed.

On Monday and Tuesday evenings Mr. Forrest will personate "Jack Cade."

GOING ASHORE.

"THERE she is, sir; that's she just off the pint there. She's a-coming stem on; and in arf an hour, if she ain't on Bnuk Sands, I'm a Dutchman."

My companion was no native of dam-land, for there was Briton written in every feature of his bronze red face, as he stood by me in Baythorpe shore, in his canvas trousers, heavy fisher's boots, blue Jersey shirt, and tarpaulin hat, tied on with a bit of oakum band, while the flap behind beat about in the tremendous wiud that was raging in our faces.

"Bang!" went the dull smothered report of a heavy gnn, and in the shade of the coming night I just caught sight of a faint flash of light. Where we stood, the spray came rushing in like a heavy storm of rain; while the whistling of the wind, and the thundering in of the huge rollers as they curled over and over upon the sands, tearing it out from among the clays, and scraping it away by tons, made standing in the face of such a storm extremely confusing; and yet hundreds were out npon the shore close nnder the great sand-bank, drenched to the skin with the spray, for the news had spread through the village that a three-master was going ashore.

Going ashore! Simple words to a landsman's ears; but what do they mean? The noble vessel tearing and plunging through the broken water—now down in the trough of the waves, now rising like a cork upon the white crests, and then a shock as she strikes upon the saud, and seems immovable; a shuddering quiver through plank and beam; and then crash, crash, crash—mast after mast gone by the board—snapped like brittle twigs on a dead stem; while huge ropes part like burned twine; then the rising of the apparently immovable vessel, as she is lifted by the waves to fall crashing again upon the sands, parting in the middle; rushiug billows pouring tons upon tons of water over the deck; a wild, wild cry for help; and then the shore strewed with fragments, casks, bodies, as the merciless waves sport with them, tossing them ou to the sands, and then curling over to drag them back. Going ashore; not safety from a wild storm, but death.

"Ah," said the old salt by my side, shonting at me with his hand to his mouth, "did yer hear that gun?"

I nodded.

"There goes another," he continued, stretching out his hand and pointing to where the flash could be seen, while directly after came another dull heavy report. "Can't yer see her now, sir?"

Mine were not sea-going eyes; and it was no easy task to make out a distant object through the blinding storm of spray which beat dead in my face; but I jnst managed to make out a dark mass right out amongst the boiling waves, and I shuddered as I thought of the fate of those on board.

"She must come to it," said the man; she'll come in just there;" and he pointed to a spot amongst the waves where they seemed roughest; "she'll be there in less time than I said; and then, Lord have mercy upon 'em! Amen!"

As he said this, the old man reverently took off his tarpaulin sou'wester, and stood with the storm tearing through the remains of his grizzly hair; bald, rugged, and weather-beaten, the coarseness of his features seemed for the moment subdued—softened by the feeling within his breast—as he stood there no inapt represeutation of a seer of old.

"Is there no chance for them?" I shonted.

The old man shook his head and shrugged his shoulders. "Precious little," he said, "unless them chaps come down with the life-boat; but who'd go out?"

It did look a desperate adventure, indeed, to attempt to launch a boat with such a sea on, and, having no reply, I stood shading my eyes aud gazing ont to sea.

"Bang!"

There was another flash, and another dull, echoless report, and as the veil of spray seemed to clear during a lull in the storm, I could perceive a large three-masted vessel about five hundred yards from the shore; and once, as she heeled over, and showed her deck, I could see that it was crowded with people.

"God help them!" I nnttered.

"Amen!" said the old man; and just then, away to our left, we saw the life-boat carriage coming down at a trot, drawn by two stout horses; while a loud and prolonged "hurray!" welcomed its arrival—as another flash, and its following heavy report, seemed to come from the doomed vessel like a groan of paiu in its honr of sore distress.

"They'll never go ont to her," said the old man, shouting in my ear, for, after the lull, the storm came down with redoubled fury—the wind shrieking and howling past, cutting the crests of the waves off as it came tearing over the hill of waters, and dashing the salt spray in my face till it almost seemed to cut the flesh: while at times the women who had come down were completely held back against the steep sand-bank.

"There! look there!" cried the old man, snddenly seizing my arm. "Catching at straws. Why, there's a boat-load coming ashore. There; don't you see—now a-top o' that breaker?"

I caught sight of a small boat crowded with figures, and there seemed to be a tall wave curl over it, and I saw it no more. "Gone!" said the old man; "I knowed it! Nothing could live in such a storm."

"Let's go to the life-boat, and see if they are going off," said I; but the old man was intently gazing out to sea.

"There; just as I said," he shouted hoarsely, "jnst in the place. She's struck." And then, above the yelling of the storm, we could hear a crash, and a wild shriek, that seems to ring through me now npon a stormy night, when far inland I listen to the howling wind.

"It's now or never!" said the old man, as he ran down towards where the life-boat stood upon its carriage, with a crowd of men and women around, the women hanging on to their hnsbands, and apparently begging that they would not dare the perils before them.

The sea had looked fearful enough from where we had stood before; but here, as close as we dared go to the breakers, it looked perfectly awful, while the attempt to launch a boat seemed absolute madness. It was evident that the men thought so too, though, as we came np, one sturdy fellow shouted: "I m ready, mates, if you're going;" a remark that elicited no response, for every one stood stolidly gazing out towards the doomed vessel.

Just then, in the dull haze seawards, a blue light shone out over the water like a dull star; but still no one moved. All at once, the old man by my side laid hold of my arm, and whispered: "Give me a lift, sir;" and, before I knew hardly what his object was, he had climbed by my help into the boat. "Now, then, you boys," he shouted wildly; "I can't stand this! Stand aside, and let some of the old ones come!"

The spell was broken. Women were hastily thrust aside, and a boat's crew was soon made up, amidst the shrieking and wailing of sweethearts and wives, who ran about the beach wringing their hands.

"Hurray for old Marks!" shouted a voice at my elbow, and the crowd loudly cheered the old man. Then oars were shipped and all made ready, the old sailor seizing the steering-oar as he stood up in his place with a life-belt on and his hat blown off, looking nobler than ever.

"Now, are you all ready?" he shouted.

"No, no," was the cry; and in the hush of expectation, two men rose in the boat, dashed off their life-belts, and, amidst half-muttered groans, leaped out from their places, and ran up the sands to the bank, where they disappeared.

"Two more!" shouted old Marks, and for a few moments, so dread was the peril, not a soul moved; then two stout lads came rushing towards the boat, pursued by an elderly man—a perfect giant.

"Stop them!" he roared. "Yer shan't go, lads."

He came up to them by the boatside as they were climbing in, and endeavored to stop their progress; but in his turn he was seized from behind by a couple of men, and the two newcomers were in half a minute equipped for the dire struggle before them and in their places.

"Let me go!" shrieked the man; but the others clung to him, as the signal was given, the carriage backed down into position, the time accurately chosen, and with a whild "hurrah!" heard above the storm, the lifeboat was launched.

My attention had been so taken up that I had ceased to look upon the man who was struggling to regain his liberty: but just as the boat was leaving its carriage, a bystander was driven violently against me, and the moment after I saw a figure dash across the intervening space, and seize the side of the boat; and then came the roar of the storm and the rush of spray, while for a few minutes the lifeboat was invisible. Then a short distance off she was seen rising upon a wave, and then disappearing again into the dull haze, which, mingled with the coming night, soon shut everything from our gaze but the foaming water.

"Over seventy, sir," shouted a voice in reply to a query. "Old man-o'-war's-man. Been in many a storm; but this here's awful."

Awful it was; for so wild a night had not fallen upon that part of the coast for many years; and as the folk upon the shore gazed in the direction the boat had taken, they shook their heads, and shouted in each other's ears.

There was a long and awful pause, only broken by the shrieking of the wiud, and then came a loud shout: "Here she comes!" and in another minute, obedient to their steersman, the rowers timed their strokes to a second, so that the boat, heavily laden, rode in upon the summit of a giant wave so far that twenty willing hands were at her side, and she was run right up the sands, and fifteen shivering, half-drowned fellow-creatures lifted out and hurried up the shore.

"Now, my lads," cried old Marks, "on to the truck with her, and we're off again."

The boat was soon mounted, and every man at his post, the father of the two lads taking his place by the side of the old cockswaiu; for no amount of persuasion on either sido could effect a change.

There was another cheer, rising above the storm, and again the gallant crew were launched into the surf, that seemed to curl round the boat as though to fill it in an instant. It rose and fell a dark mass amid the white foam for an instant, and then seemed to plunge into a bank of foggy blackness, for night had fallen.

I could not drag myself away from the stirring scene around me, for I seemed held to the spot by a strange fascination. All at once a lurid light shot up, for a quantity of straw had been set on fire, and the flames roared and crackled as dry seaweed and pieces of wood were heaped up to increase the glare, which appeared to gild the crests of the waves, and threw into bold relief the figures on the sands—some gazing out to sea; some watching eagerly the fringe of breakers, ready to rush down and secure anything that might be washed ashore from the wreck.

More straw was heaped upon the fire, and the flames and sparks rushed inland, as they rose with the mighty current of air, and darted across the sand-bank. Out seaward all seemed black darkness, and the eyes strained after the lifeboat were for a while strained in vain.

All at once there was a cry of "Here she comes;" but it was prolonged into a wild wail of despair; for by the light from the fire the boat could be seen broadside on, and close inshore; and then, after tossing about for a moment, she was dashed, bottom upwards, upon the sands.

There was a rush to aid the men struggling in the surf. Some were dragged ashore; some scrambled unaided from the water; while more than one was sucked back by the undertow; but the life-belts they wore kept them afloat; and at last, more or less hurt, the whole crew was ashore—three being carried up to the village insensible.

I now learned that, about half-way to the vessel, the steersman's oar had snapped in two, and the boat fell into the trough of the sea; when, in their efforts to right her, a couple more blades were broken; a wave swept over them and washed two men from their seats; but they regained their places, and then, with the dread of death upon them, the boat became unmanageable in their hands; for in spite of the efforts of the old cockswain, the men appeared panic-stricken, and rowed at random.

The light that glared upon the shore now showed that it was completely strewn with wreck; and I looked with horror upon the various signs which so plainly disclosed the fate of the good ship. Spar, plank, beam, and cask, entangled with rope, were being churned over and over in the sand; and twice I saw something dragged ashore, and carried away, which sent a shudder through my frame.

At last, heart-sick and weary, I turned away, and inquired where the crew of the boat were, and who had suffered; when, to my sorrow, I learned that the only one seriously injured was old Marks, who had so gallantly set the example that evening—an example which had resulted in the saving of fifteen poor creatures from a watery grave.

On entering the village, I soon found where the old man had been conveyed, and a few minutes after I was at the bedside of the sufferer. I found him sensible, but with a change in his countenance that no amount of pain or suffering alone would have placed there. He was quite calm, and smiled as I entered.

"Has she gone to pieces?" he whispered, stopping to wipe the blood away that oozed from his lips.

"I fear so," I replied: "the shore is strewed with wreck."

"I knowed she would," he gasped. "Poor things, poor things! How many did we bring ashore?"

"Fifteen."

"Ah!" he groaned, "not enough, not enough."

"But it was a most gallant act," I said; "and more would have been saved but for the accident. Where are you hurt? It is not serious, I hope?"

"Serious!" he whispered; and then with a sad smile: "No; it ain't serious. I'm the only one hurt; and my time's up long ago—four year and more. So, it ain't serious."

"Where are you hurt?" I said.

"Ribs all crushed," he whispered. "I was under the gunwale of the boat; and it's all over. I could see it in the doctor's looks."

A gush of blood stopped his utterance, and I dared not whisper the comfort I could not feel.

"It's all right, sir," he whispered, after lying with his eyes closed for about half an hour—"it's all right, and an old tar couldn't die better than doin' his duty. I never thought to; but I always felt as I should like to did in harness, as they say, and so I shall; but I wish there had had been more."

"More what?" I said.

"More saved," he whispered. "Yer see I've been afore now in action; and the Almighty only knows how many souls I've cut off; and I should like to feel sure as I'd saved more than I did for—that's all. Perhaps they might go in the scale, to help balance the bad."

"But you did all as a part of your duty."

"Ah!" he whispered, "duty! Yes, sailors should do their duty; and I felt it was mine, to-night, to go. We old men-o'-war's were trained to answer to a call in calm or storm; and when lives were at stake to-night, I felt that I was called, and I hope I did my duty. Will you ask them fifteen to just say a word or two for the old man in their prayers, sir; I mean when I'm gone? I think I should like them to, for I'm an old sailor, and can't boast of my past life."

"Have you no relatives?" I whispered; "no friends that you would like to see?"

"Far away—far away," he said, with a mournful shake of the head; "and some are a-waitin' for me to join their watch. Don't leave me, sir," he said piteously.

I promised I would not; and sat watching for hours listening to the hard breathing of the sufferer, who seemed to sink into a state of stupor, only moaning at intervals as he tossed his head from side to side of the pillow, and muttered a few words broken and half-spoken. The storm gradually sunk, till the wind quite lulled; and about three o'clock I half drew the curtain and looked out upon the sea, which still tossed fearfully; though all above was calm and peaceful—a light cloud just drifting slowly past the pale bright moon.

I stood gazing at the soft blue sky, now so placid and serene, almost wondering that so great a change could have taken place, when I started, for a voice behind me shouted, "Morning watch. Draw the curtain, and let that moon shine in."

I obeyed—turning cold, and trembling as I did so—still looking at the dying sailor, who sat erect in the bed. "Here," he said; and, as I approached the bed, he seized my hand. "Hark! don't you hear that? It's the boatswain piping for me to keep my everlasting watch. Ay, ay, sir! There—hark again! There's the waves a-lashing upon the farther shore. Breakers ahead! breakers ahead! Look out there! The old vessel's struck, and she's going to pieces—the old seventy-four, that's weathered so many a storm, going ashore. Farewell, messmate; one short struggle, one cold plunge, and a hopeful heart—a brave striking out through the harsh breakers! Land, ho! land, ho! on the other side—and it's a land of rest—a land of peace and hope. Now for it! The rush of the dark waters is coming—blinding—deafening—but a bold heart, messmate. God bless you! I'm going ashore."

For some minutes I sat motionless. The old man's eye had lighted up as he gazed straight before him out upon the moonlit heavens. His voice seemed to peal through the silence of the night, till I shivered as he described the wreck then taking place. To the last word, his voice had rung out loud and resonant; then he sank back motionless upon the pillow, stained now with his life-blood; and I passed softly from the room, for I knew that his life-bark was stranded by the sea of Death.

SIR RALPH'S HERIOT.

ASHTON-UNDER-LYNE, or, as it appears in ancient chronicles, Ashton-sub-Lima, is a market town on the north bank of the Tame, Lancashire, about six or seven miles from Manchester. It is well laid out, well built, and thriving. It is admirably adapted, by its situation, both for the purposes of trade and manufacture. It is the centre of a populous neighborhood, has an unlimited supply of coal, and railway communication with all parts of England.

In the "good old times"—that far-off period which so many people talk and read about with pleasure, but to which so few, if any, would like to return—Ashton was the seat of the Ashton, or Assheton family. A Sir John Assheton, in the fifth year of the Sixth Henry, became possessed of the Manor of Assheton on payment of one penny annually. This worthy knight is said to have built the old church, and to have been the first to introduce seats for common people. With a gallantry which adds fresh lustre to his spurs, the number of these seats being limited, they were given exclusively to the women—the tenants' wives and daughters.

Sir John was succeeded by his son Sir Ralph, who earned for himself the unenviable title of the Black Knight. It is supposed that the annual ceremony observed at Ashton on Easter Monday, of "Riding the Black Lad," simply commemorates the popular odium in which Sir Ralph was held; this custom bearing a close resemblance to the "Guy Fawkes" proceeding of November the 5th.

Sir Ralph was feared and hated by his tenantry. He was permitted, by royal letters patent, to execute supreme jurisdiction, and he misused his trust.

One of the most oppressive forms of taxation, originating in the feudal age, but perpetuated long afterwards, was the custom of heriotship. This was neither more nor less than a fine for dying. A certain claim could be, and was, made by the lord of the manor on the property of the deceased tenant, and it fell with great severity on widows in humble circumstances. Death laid low the bread-winner, and the landlord stepped in to take the best part of the scanty store the dead man might have scraped together.

There was, so says tradition, a poor widow near Ashton. Her husband had held his little farm under Sir Ralph Ashton, one of the most rapacious and cruel of men. The character borne by Sir Ralph was worthy of the old doggerel which set forth public opinion with regard to him:

> "O Jesu! for thy mercy's sake,
> And for thy bitter passion,
> Save us from the axe of the Tower,
> And from Sir Ralph of Ashton!"

He had spared neither age nor sex; he had no pity for the sick or the dying; he showed no mercy to the widow and the orphan: wherever his shadow fell, trouble came; wherever his voice was heard, weeping and wailing were not far off. When Sir Ralph heard that his tenant was dead, he sent an imperative order, commanding that the heriot should be paid without delay. Now, the widow had nothing with which she could satisfy his claim except one cow, and the cow was the chief sustenance of her family. The widow had four children to feed—one of them an infant not many weeks old, the eldest an idiot boy, harmless, but useless, strong and active, and about fourteen years old. This poor lad, tenderly beloved of his mother, was to her more trouble than all the rest—not that he would willingly have pained her, but his strange, wild ways perplexed her, and she feared, whenever he was out of her sight, that he would come to harm.

It was a sad scene which the widow's home presented on the Christmas morning of 1484. Sharp, cold weather—weather unusually severe, the country for miles around covered with snow; the rivers and streams bound in icy fetters; the bleak wind sweeping and moaning through the forest and over the waste, as if it were chanting a Lenten dirge rather than singing a Yule carol. Cold outside the miserable home of the poor widow, and colder within, she and her children had taken a little milk and eaten a little porridge, and they sat huddled together over a few red embers on the hearth. The idiot boy was singing softly to himself, and winking his horny eyes at the fire; the other children were all unwittingly making their sorrowful mother still sadder. "Was it not Christmas? then why not have holly like they did last year—eh, mother? Why not have a Christmas fire—we should like Christmas fire, mother? And how long will it be before father comes home, and shall we have Christmas fire to-day, and see the holly, and sing as we sang last Yule-tide?" The cow lowed from her crib, separated only from the family by a slight partition, and the sound the poor beast made only served to deepen the misery of its poor mistress. The Black Knight of Ashton claimed the cow for his heriot, and if he took her there was only death for them.

Suddenly the door, which had been closed, was flung open, and Sir Ralph Ashton looked in—a tall, squarely built man, with sinewy limbs, and a great quantity of dark hair on head, and lips, and cheeks, and chin. His eyes glowed like fire, and there was a scowl on his face that betokened a storm.

Harsh, hard, fierce and cruel were his words. He had himself come to claim his own, and he would have it; the heriot was his, the cow was his; none should deprive him of his rights. Mercy! it was not in his bond. Leniency, delay! nothing was said of either in his feudal charter. Charity, for the sake of Him whose feast they kept that day! Sir Ralph laughed his own harsh laugh, and said he had no time for fooling. So a couple of fellows who had accompanied Sir Ralph drove out the poor beast from the shed, and the knight, with a threat of expelling the family from their miserable hut, turned to depart. It was the idiot who stopped him:

"Beest thou our liege lord?"

"Ay, fool; what hast thy pert tongue to say to that?"

"The liege lord will die, mother—will he die?"

"Hush, boy, hush!" said the widow.

"Nay, let the brat speak out. What of it, boy—what if I should die?"

"Then thy liege lord will claim heriot."

"And who may he be?'

"Old Hornie—Beelzebub!"

"And what heriot should I pay to him?" roared the knight, half angry, half amused.

"Thy soul."

"And thy body shall smart for it, imbecile!"

"Oh, ha' pity, ha' pity—the lad's daft!" and the widow threw herself before the knight, who roughly spurned her with his foot.

"Enough of this. All of you shall suffer for this. There, no whimpering." He strode away across the snow, and never once looked back.

* * * * * * *

There were strange doings that night at Ashton Hall. It was rough weather—snowing hard and freezing hard; but the company was still numerous, for, when the lord of Ashton dispensed his good cheer, woe to those tenants who slighted his hospitality! A huge fire was kindled on the broad hearth, but it gave forth no bright and cheerful light; it sputtered, and could not be made to blaze. The air was damp and chilly; the wassail seemed to have lost its flavor, and the Christmas plants looked shrivelled on the walls. The guests spoke in low whispers, and affected the fire rather than engage in any merry-making sports; the minstrels, in their little oaken gallery, rubbed their benumbed hands, and felt oppressed. There was good cheer; there were mummers in quaint devices of all sorts, hobby-horses, and what not; but there was no mirth.

About six in the afternoon, Sir Ralph came into the hall, and glanced angrily round upon his guests, and his indignation broke out in a storm of reproach. Was his bounty to be churlishly received by his own hinds? Had John the Slater, and Roger the Miller, and Jack the Woodman, and Hobbe o' the Leghes, come there to a feast or a funeral? Were blind man's buff, hot cockles, and bob-apple too poor sport for these gentry? Was not the Christmas pie large enough or good enough for their tastes? By his halidome, it should go hard but he would teach them better manners.

While the angry knight was thus addressing his guests—guests who stood appalled before him—one of the mummers, a little fellow, clad in black, with a mask having horns, and, besides, a long tail with a fluke to it, cautiously crept out of the group, and stealing unperceived behind the angry host, seized him by his cloak, and tripped him on the floor. Sir Ralph had never in his whole life been so humiliated. Every face about him turned white at the spectacle. He regained his feet in an instant, and catching up a stout oaken cudgel, dealt about him with no weak hand. The guests flew before him in dismay, and were chased round and round the hall in the utmost confusion. Some fell, some escaped into the open air; but the black mummer neither fell nor fled. He was, or rather seemed to be, everywhere at once. He was safely in a corner one moment, and Sir Ralph was making sure of him, when out and away was he, dexterously diving and running between the knight's legs, perhaps upsetting him, perhaps, for an instant, leaping on his back—here, there, everywhere, making the hall ring with his shrill laughter.

At last, no more than a dozen of the guests remained, with the exception of those who were badly hurt, and lay groaning on the floor. Sir Ralph paused to take breath, and look about him. There, in the music gallery, with his legs hanging over the front, sat the black mummer, swaying his body to and fro, and laughing as if he was a witness of the drollest affair he had ever seen in his life.

"Pull down the rogue," called out Sir Ralph. "Guard the stair. Some of you seize him. By the Rood, he shall pay for his sport!" The figure leaped from the gallery, and stood face to face with the knight. Sir Ralph raised his cudgel, and aimed a stout blow, but the knave avoided it. Again Sir Ralph strove to strike, with the same result. Then, in a shrill voice, heard distinctly over the hall, the black figure cried—

"The heriot! the heriot! Sir Ralph, I came to tell thee thy liege lord would take his heriot at Easter." And, with these words and a diabolical laugh, the figure vanished.

Sir Ralph hastily quitted the hall. He was troubled. Hurriedly he sent for his priest. What passed between them is unknown. Next morning the widow's cow was returned to her; in the course of the day assistance was sent to her from Sir Ralph's almonry. He became charitable. He was attentive to his religious duties. He forbade any allusion to what had occurred on Christmas night; but, as the year advanced, he was noticed to change in other respects: he became weak, the rigorous fast of Lent told on him, and at Easter he died.

Such is the popular tradition of the Black Knight of Ashton. It is related by various authorities with different embellishments, and its explanation is sometimes supernatural, and occasionally the reverse. Who was the strange visitor—the black mummer, with his quaint antics and dreadful message? The Evil One, say some; a "Boggart," full of mischief, say others; only a few incline to the opinion which to us appears the most probable, namely, that the mummer was no other than the idiot boy—witless enough, but not so "daft" as to be incapable of the concoction and execution of an ingenious trick—mad enough, doubtless, but with "method in his madness."

TRADITIONS OF GIANTS.—The traditions of giants are numerous in Cornwall. The giants of Treerobben dwelt in a castle on a grand wild hill, which rises in view of St. Michael's Mount, and close to the village of Lelant. On the flat rocks inside the castle they sacrificed their victims. In the days of the wars and troubles, when their race was dying out, they buried their treasures in the granite caverns of this hill, where they still remain, guarded by the fairies.

In several parts of Cornwall there still exists huge rocks, said to have been used by the giants when hurling or playing at athletic games. The Titans of Trecrobben and St. Michael's Mount often met to play at "bob-buttons." The throw was generally made from Trecrobben Hill, and the mount was the "bob," on which huge slabs of rocks served for the buttons. Holiburn of the Cairn was a giant, who is said to have married a farmer's daughter. Once, when watching some Cornishmen hurling, he was so pleased at the game made by a young peasant, that in sheer good nature he killed him by patting him on the head. The giant of Trebiggan was a much less benevolent son of Anak. He is said to have dined every day on children, whom he fried on a flat rock outside his cave. His arms were so long, that he would snatch the sailors from the ships passing by the Land's End; and sometimes, after having had his fun, replace them again. Perhaps, after all, the Phœnicians and Greeks who came to Cornwall to buy tin, brought stories of Polyphemus and the Cyclops to England, for Trebiggan and his kinsmen bear many points of resemblance with the giants of the Odyssey.

A QUADRILLE has just become the fashion in Paris whose figures are so intricate that it is named "Trigonometry."

HOW KATE DISCOVERED AMERICA.

"DO you know who discovered America?" said Charlie Fraser to me.

Now, this question was asked after dinner at the club; and, as Charlie is a wit, it was not unfair to suppose that, at such a time, such a question was only intended to lead up to some brilliant joke; so, instead of taking it out of his mouth by making a smart reply (which of course I could have done,) I merely gave a commonplace answer:

"Christopher Columbus, was it not?—or Vasco di Gama, or somebody of that sort?"

"Well, so I always thought till to-day," said Charlie; "but I find that such a belief is only another fallacy to be added to those that are taught in popular geography."

I was rather impatient at this long preface, and felt another and stronger temptation to make a smart answer (honestly, I could have been very smart this time,) but I was determined to go through with the joke, if there was one, so I merely blew three rings of smoke (an accomplishment in which I excel,) and waited.

"Yes," resumed Charlie, "and what is more, I have a document to prove it. Take that home and read it." So saying, he handed me a letter and left me, in order, I fear, to go, according to his custom, to the Arlington, and play five-pound points at whist till the next morning.

I glanced through the letter which was written in a lady's handwriting, crossed and recrossed, at first somewhat languidly, but, as I got on, with increasing interest, until at last I became thoroughly absorbed in it, and was only roused by the waiter coming for the fourth time (after a deal of preliminary scowling) to tell me that the club was about to be closed. The facts the letter disclosed were so remarkable, that I think it only fair to lay it before the public in full, that eminent geographers may have the opportunity of discussing it, and, if necessary, that the government may fit out an expedition for the investigation of the matter, and the verification of the extraordinary geographical discovery therein recorded:

"ON BOARD THE 'IONA,' 6th October, 1865.

"DEAREST CHARLIE: I am sure you have wondered at not receiving a letter from me for so long, but when I tell you the astounding adventures that have befallen us, you will be glad that I am alive—and indeed all of us, though Nelly says she is quite certain that you will dine just as well, and, of course, at one of those dreadful clubs; but, of course, you will give them all up when we are married; and that all men are selfish—but you are not, I am quite certain. You know we have had a great party staying with us at Dun Beg. Two gentlemen came from the North, where they had been shooting, but I do not believe they shot anything, or else why did they not—but I will tell you all in order, because I know you like it, and I am getting quite business-like. One of the gentlemen is a friend of yours, Mr. Felix Fellows, of whom you were so jealous because I danced five times with him at Lady Gore Jowse's—so unreasonable of you! And I am sure it was only because he dances well—though he is very nice; and he can do better things than dance, too, as we found when— But I will tell you that in order. The other was Mr. Tom Ruffler. He talked a great deal, and told us a great many clever things he had done and said himself—though he never did or said anything particularly clever while with us, so that we all agreed that he must have read all his clever things in a book. And he knew everything; and contradicted papa about botany, and wore red neckties and varnished boots; and smoked a pipe—but I think it made him ill, because nobody ever really saw him smoke it; and he asked me if I knew a tobacconist in the village; so I gave him some of those beautiful little cigars you sent me, and I think he liked them, because he smoked seven in one morning.

"But I must not wander from our adventures. You must know that we had been living together in the house for a week without any fresh arrivals, and so we had all got tired of each other. We used to play at croquet, and that made us quite hate each other. Nelly would not speak to Mr. Fellowes because he once croquet'd her down the hill into the river, and would not go and fetch the ball or beg her pardon. And Mr. Ruffler talked a great deal about wanting to 'play at golf'—he called it 'playing at liuks,' and always wanted to know if the golf was not too damp for the ladies to walk on (he meant the turf you know;) but I am certain it was because he thought it a good joke, because he never really did play, and when he did, it was very badly, for he broke two of the clubs and lost a ball. And Jack's-alive is very stupid, if you get knocked down every time and never catch anybody. Missie began photography, and took us in groups in our riding habits; but some of the chemicals got mixed up together, and the pictures only came out once, and then we all had large feet, and nothing but white in our eyes, and Mr. Fellowes's neck was longer than his body, besides Missie making her hands quite black. We had a deal of music, but Mr. Ruffler pretended to despise it. He cannot understand anything but 'Slap Bang' or a hornpipe, and actually laughed at me because I said I adored Mario—he called it Mariolatry. We danced reels every evening, of course; but my darling Viva got in the way one night, and Mr. Fellowes danced the double shuffle on her, so we decided it was too dangerous an amusement. Viva is now the loveliest pug you ever saw; her nose is blacker and more turned up than any I ever saw, and Mr. Fellowes says he could hold her up by her tail without taking the curl out of it; but I would not let him try it. However, after a time we got tired of all these amusements, and to kill time I tried to teach Mr. Ruffler to sing 'Comme a vingt ans,' but he would sing up in his head, and pretended to teach me how to pronounce French, so that failed. As a last resource, we asked papa to have the 'Water Witch' fitted out, and take us for a day's yachting among the islands. And he made a joke, and said it was the water which he did not like; but he promised to take us over to the island of Staffa, which you know is quite close to us here, to pass the day and explore the caves. So on Wednesday week last we all went on board the 'Water Witch,' early in the morning. We were quite a large party. Besides Bunks (who was as obstinate as ever, and even more, as I think,) and the sailors, there were papa, and Missie, and Nelly, and Miss Downie—and, do you know, Mr. Fellowes has made desperate love to her, and calls her Jemima, and we have all settled that they are going to be married. Missie took her photographic apparatus, and of course I took Viva, thinking the sea air would do her good. Just as we were pushing off, we heard somebody crying out, 'Ah, hi! Ah, hi!' and a figure rushed down to the beach. Mr. Ruffler said it was nothing but a head of hair; but it turned out to be Captain Dinochie. Mr. Ruffler said his hair would sink the ship; but papa said it was a wig, and we could throw it overboard in case of danger, so he came on board; but Mr. Ruffler behaved very badly, and pretended to think that his parting was disarranged, and offered to lend him a comb; then he said that as we had taken the captain on board, he was bored, and should take him off (he says that is a joke too, but I can't see it,) and began to pull his whiskers, (though he has not got any, but as if he had,) and to imitate the way the captain says good day.

"So we started to go to Staffa, which is just on the other side of Mull, and papa began to tell us about Dr. Johnson, who, it seems, had been there too, and who must have been a very selfish and disagreeable person. Shortly after starting, we sat down to luncheon, and were jolly, and had Bunks down to drink our healths. We asked him what he would like, and he said he would like some toddy, and should prefer 'to make it inside,' and he drank the whiskey first and then the water; but Mr. Fellowes gave him whiskey the second time too, and Bunks actually never found it out till he had drank it all. Then Mr. Ruffler sang 'Le Postillion de Longjumeau;' but as it was in French, and he sang it very fast, nobody understood it, excepting when he sat astride on a chair and imitated the clacking of a whip, and shouted, 'Houp-la! houp-la!' Nevertheless, we all joined in the chorus.

'Ha! ha! ha! qu'il était beau,
Le Postillion de Longjumeau,' until Bunks came down and asked us not to go on because it would raise the wind. Papa sang a song, too, about Paul Jones, a very good one, except that there was nothing in it but the chorus—

'You have heard of Paul Jones,
He was a rogue and a vagabones,
You have heard of Paul Jones, have you not?'

But he sang it in so many different tones of voice that we thought it was a different Mr. Jones in every verse.

"So all went on delightfully for about an hour, when Bunks came down again, and said he didn't like the look of the weather.

"Why not?' asked papa.

"'Well, there's just a lot of scratches and scrawls, and mares' tails, and mackerels' backs just knocking about, and there's a dirty-looking bank out to the westward.'

"Then papa said we had better go back, and they turned the ship round, but almost directly the sea became very rough, the wind began to blow a hurricane, and the rain came down in torrents. At first we laughed at it, and the captain told us how he had been shipwrecked coming from the Cape of Good Hope, and lived for four years on a desert island, and when they got home all the sailors' wives had married somebody else; upon which Mr. Ruffler said that if ever he married he should go to the Cape and get shipwrecked too, which made me think of you and feel very unwell. (All this time the sea was getting rougher.) Then the ship gave a sudden lurch, and threw a grouse and a jam tart into Nelly's lap, besides upsetting all the whiskey over Miss Downie's dress.

"We all got very much alarmed, though Mr. Ruffle tried to make fun of it, and said he believed Miss Downie had done it on purpose to get double allowance. None of us laughed, and I told him he ought to be ashamed of himself to joke at such a moment. Just then the ship gave another lurch, and poor Mr. Ruffler, who was hurt at what I said, turned very pale, and, casting a reproachful glance at me, said he would go and look at the weather, and went on deck. Then we heard a dreadful crash, and a groan, which turned out to be the captain, who had fallen down among the crockery in the pantry; and when Mr. Fellowes went to him, he would not get up, but said he would lie where he was and die like a soldier. You have no idea what a scene it was. The ship plunging and rolling dreadfully, every timber creaking, the chairs and plates falling about the cabin, and the wind howling through the rigging, so that one could not hear one's self speak. Jemima and Nelly and I became dreadfully ill; and had it not been for Missie, who kept up and cheered us, I am certain we should have died then and there. I cannot tell you how kind Mr. Fellowes was. He never for one moment thought of himself, but ran about all over the ship for us, brought rugs, cloaks, and cushions, put them on the cabin floor for us, and kept the lamp alight. I felt as great an admiration for him that moment as if he had been Mario himself.

"Papa had been on deck from the first, and so had Mr. Ruffler from the time he went to look at the weather. As Mr. Ruffler goes yachting every year, of course, he knows all about it, and I wanted papa to ask him if there was much danger; but papa said he had been looking into the water ever since he had been on deck, was groaning, and would not answer. And that made us more miserable, because we thought it must be very bad indeed. The most dreadful thing was, that papa said we were sailing away from the land because the wind was blowing towards it, and we were on a lee shore. We all prayed him, if he loved us, to turn round and take us home; but he said it could not be done, and so did Bunks.

"All night the hurricane continued. You may imagine that we could not sleep. We knew that we were going away from the land, and expected every moment that we should strike on our beam ends, and so spring aleak in them, and all go to the bottom. Towards morning I fell into a doze, and dreamt I was at the opera. I thought it was the last act of the 'Prophete,' where the palace falls in. I heard the crash, and awoke with a start to learn that our mast had been broken in two by the wind. Captain Dinochie must have been dreaming too, for I heard him say, 'Spare my life—I surrender.'

"All was confusion. The morning had come, but the fog was thicker than ever; besides which the hurricane had increased, and the ship, being quite helpless, was driven before it as if it had been a feather on the water.

"This was the 28th of September. None of us could move, and all day long we lay in the cabin quite unable to stir or even to talk, and expecting every moment to be our last. I thought of you, Charlie, and wondered what you were doing, and whether you were thinking of me at all. How I wished you were with us! I felt that I could have faced death by your side; but Nelly said it would have been no better, and that you would not care about it, though I am sure you would. And then I thought that all was for the best, and I would not have you in danger for worlds; besides, you are a bad sailor. About the middle of the day a great sea broke our boat to pieces. Mr. Ruffler came down to tell us, looking very pale; but we were too miserable to care about it. He said that the wind had changed to the east, that we had been driving due west by the compass ever since we started, and were getting into the broad Atlantic. Papa was very anxious about provisions, and said we had scarcely anything but some bacon on board; but it made us ill to hear it spoken of, and we all agreed that we should not be able to eat anything for a week at least.

"The captain crawled out of the pantry in the afternoon: such a sight! One of the lamps had fallen on him, and he was covered with oil. He was as white as a ghost; his hair was out of curl, hanging down quite limp, and his whiskers were all crushed up into nothing, so that we scarcely knew him. He took no notice of us, but called for somebody to come to him, and Missie actually had to help him across the cabin to the ladder, where he sat all day with his head in his hands. In the evening Mr. Fellowes lit a fire in the men's cabin, and made some hot whiskey and water, which he made us take, and we all felt very grateful and tried to go to sleep.

"For three days we lay in the cabin quite prostrate, without any incident to relieve the horror and monotony of our situation. On the third day we were too weak and ill to care for anything. We had eaten nothing but a biscuit or two, but when we were all, as it were, at the last gasp, Mr. Fellowes found some brandy, and made us drink it by saying it was sherry, which I am certain saved all our lives.

"OCT. 2.—The wind continued, and the fog, too. Mr. Ruffler was very ill-tempered, and said we should soon get to America if we went on at that rate; and he kept saying that he knew from the first that we were going to have bad weather from the eastward, though I am sure he never said so. Miss Downie was very ill indeed, and wrote a last farewell to her family, which Mr. Fellowes put in a bottle and threw overboard. She then kissed us all, and said she should die happy, but in the darkness she kissed the captain, too, by mistake, and that revived her a little; and so the day ended just as the day before did.

"OCT. 3.—This morning Mr. Fellowes insisted upon our going on deck, saying it would do us good, and we dragged ourselves up the ladder. Never shall I forget the sight. The mist was so thick that we could not see so far as the length of the ship. The sea was rolling mountains high, and the immense black waves, curling over with white foam at the top, were rushing after the ship, threatening every minute to sweep over it. The mast was quite gone, having been broken off by jibing over, as Bunks said; but a spar had been put up with a little sail upon it, and was bending almost double with every gust of the wind, which was howling in a most awful manner.

"Bunks was steering in order to keep the ship before the wind. It was too dreadful a sight for us, and we all went down again into the cabin; but I think the air had done us good, for we began to feel dreadfully hungry for the first time. We held a consultation, and found that all the provisions we had on board were a tin of wine biscuits, two jam tarts, part of a grouse pie, a haunch of venison, some bacon (the sailors had eaten most of it,) two patés de foi gras, and some walnuts.

Luckily there was plenty of water, and a large quantity of whiskey belonging to Bunks, besides some champagne and sherry, a dozen of seltzer-water, and a bottle of maraschino. Papa said we must all be put on rations; he then made out a list of all the things, and divided them by twelve, which was the number of the people on board, including Bunks and the crew. I begged hard to have Viva put on the list, but it was of no use, and I resolved to share my food with her to the last biscuit. Then papa ordered all the provisions to be taken up to the pantry to be taken care of. What was our horror to find the venison on the cabin floor, half gnawed away and covered with dust. Everybody said it was Viva who had done it, and Mr. Ruffler wanted to throw her overboard, but I declared that I would follow her, and so her dear life was spared. We then had our rations served out—three wine biscuits, some walnuts, and a small piece of grouse-pie each, with some sherry and water. My pie was nothing but the back of the grouse; I could not eat it, and gave it to Nelly for two walnuts. The storm still continued, and we lay down to sleep, very miserable.

"Oct. 4.—The first thing I saw this morning was Viva, who came out of the pantry licking her lips. Luckily nobody but me saw her. When we came to our morning rations, it was found that all the rest of the grouse-pie was gone. Of course everybody blamed Viva; but it was very unfair, for Captain Dinochio slept in the pantry, and was just as capable of eating it, I am sure. The loss of our pie made us all very low spirited, so we ate all the rest of the bacon to keep our spirits up, and drank all the champagne. After that we began to take a brighter view of things, and Mr. Ruffler said that perhaps some ship might be drifting our way through the edge of the Gulf Stream, and then we might fall in with it.

We put our heads out of the cabin, one after the other, but could see nothing, for the mist was as thick as ever, and the storm which had now lasted six days, not abated in the least; besides the sleet and rain drove right in our faces, and some came down Miss Downie's neck and gave her the most dreadful cold, so that she insisted on having some bottles of seltzer-water made hot to put to her feet. I cried a great deal, and said Nelly, but Missie comforted us so much, and was in such good spirits, that we soon became almost reconciled to our fate. The captain never spoke a word the whole day, and did not come out of the pantry except for his rations. Mr. Ruffler said he was thinking of his hair; but he himself was very disagreeable too, and declared that, if we did not fall in with a ship, he should insist on Viva being killed and cooked, to make up for the venison and grouse; and he offered to cook her himself in the Chinese fashion.

"Oct. 5.—This morning all the provisions left were the two patés de foi gras and the bottle of maraschino. We shared them, but felt very hungry after our meal, and very thirsty, so that we finished all the water out of the tank. Our prospects were now indeed desperate. We had no food, and were still hundreds of miles from land, though Mr. Ruffler said we could not, at the rate we had been scudding, be very far from the coast of Newfoundland. Towards night, however, the mist cleared up somewhat, and the moon came out for a short time. We all went upon deck to see it, and it cheered us.

"Towards morning the sea seemed to go down, and we heard a great commotion on deck, and could distinguish the voice of Mr. Ruffler giving orders. We rushed up the ladder at once, and there beheld land! How shall I describe our emotions? I cried for joy. Nelly looked at the land through the telescope for ten minutes before she would believe it. Miss Downie came up, too, and was so overcome, that, finding herself near Mr. Ruffler, she fainted away in his arms; but he handed her over to Mr. Fellowes, who carried her into the cabin. Then the captain came up, and spoke for the first time. He said the land was exactly like Scotland, and that it made us all laugh very much, because, as Mr. Ruffler said, we had been sailing directly away from Scotland for six days. Mr. Ruffler himself said that it must be some part of Newfoundland, probably Cape Race, where the steamers touch. He said he warn't no navigator much, but he thought he had been there afore. This made us laugh again, for we were in good spirits; but Bunks got very angry, and would not speak any more.

"By this time we had drifted towards the land, and, as we had no boat, Bunks steered the ship as well as he could towards a sandy cove. At last she struck on the sand, but still some distance from dry land, because she draws ten feet of water, and the shore was shelving. Mr. Ruffler volunteered to swim ashore with a rope, and, taking off his boots and coat, dived overboard, very gracefully; but he had forgotten to take enough rope, and he was stopped, suddenly, underneath the water, or, as Bunks said, 'brought up with a round turn.' We thought he would be drowned; but he only said something very dreadful to Bunks, and then, when some more rope was let out, swam to the shore with it.

"A larger rope was then tied on to it, and he pulled that ashore; then another; and a packing case was so arranged as to run along it, by which first Miss Downie, and then all the rest of us were taken ashore. Missie, who always thinks of everything, brought with her some dry clothes for Mr. Ruffler, who dressed in a cave; and we then all started to explore the country. Mr. Fellowes had brought the gun which was given to Mr. Ruffler, in case we might find any game, which, he said, was probable. And we had not gone very far, before a number of strange birds, very like grouse, rose up and flew away. Mr. Ruffler fired twice at them, but missed, and said they were too far off. Then we came to some more, and he missed them too, though they were very near. Papa said it was wasting powder, and took the gun himself, and shot the next bird we saw. We all settled that Mr. Ruffler could not shoot; though he said he had killed a large number of deer in Scotland. We walked on through a pine wood and across some stuff just like the heather in the Highlands, which Mr. Ruffler said always grows in those latitudes—for he told us we were in the same latitude as at home. Suddenly, on arriving at the top of a hill we came to the sea again, and found that we were, in fact, not on the mainland at all, but on an island. All our hopes were overthrown in an instant. We looked at each other in blank despair, and slowly walked down to the shore, with a vague wish to be nearer the mainland. Mr. Ruffler said he was quite certain that the island was not marked upon any chart, and that we should have to report its discovery to the Admiralty; and he resolved to take an observation of its latitude from the highest point. He left us at once to go back to the ship, in order to get a sextant and an almanac and materials for a tent; and we all sat down in silence, looking at the land we could not reach. Mr. Fellowes and Missie got together some dry wood and lit a fire, which cheered us a little; but our joy was of short duration, for Mr. Ruffler came back suddenly, and in an agitated voice, told us that the ship had disappeared. Even Bunks had deserted us; and we were now left perfectly destitute and helpless on a desert island. We held a council. The captain was quite violent, and said it all came of going to sea with a parcel of women. Mr. Ruffler could suggest nothing, except to cook the bird papa had shot. The only persons who seemed to be able to do anything were Missie, Mr. Fellowes, and papa, who made a kind of shelter for us with branches of trees.

"But our deliverance was nearer at hand than we imagined. Papa was looking over the sea, and suddenly started up and turned pale. We followed his eye, and what was our delight to see the smoke of a steamer plainly visible on the horizon. Then came an hour of dreadful excitement—hopes and fears chasing each other and every minute seeming an age. We tied a shawl on a long branch and waved it frantically to and fro. We piled all the wood we could find on our fire. We shouted till we were hoarse, and fired off our last charge of powder to attract attention. At first the steamer held on her course and seemed about to pass the island; but suddenly she stopped, turned, and came straight towards us. After that I remember nothing, till I found myself lying in a comfortable cabin, the furniture of which was marked 'Iona.' The revulsion of joy and gratitude for our miraculous deliverance were almost too much for me. I felt that unless I did something I should go mad; and I resolved to sit down and write an account of our dangers and sufferings to you, dear Charlie, who, I know, are more interested than anybody in everything that concerns me. I have done. I shall send this to England by the first opportunity, and shall count the miles that lie between us, and the moments that pass before I see you once more. Your own loving Kate.

"P. S.—Mr. Ruffler has just come down. He says we have got the yacht in tow; that there was a 'local attraction' which made the compass always point to the west, and that we had been in a circular storm. It is a mercy we came across the Atlantic as we did.

"PP. S.—Mr. Ruffler says that we were not in America at all, but on one of the small Hebrides near Mull, and that this is a steamer which runs from Inverness to Cronan, and that we shall be at Dun Beg this afternoon. I dare say he thinks that a very clever joke, but of course I do not believe it. And he says he shall write a tale about it; so if ever you meet one, don't you believe that either."—London Society.

Cure for Hydrophobia.—Some time ago it was stated that Dr. Buisson, of Lyons, had announced the discovery of a remedy for hydrophobia. In attending a patient in the last stage of canine rabies, the doctor imprudently wiped his hands with a handkerchief impregnated with her saliva. There happened to be a slight abrasion on the index of the left hand, and, confident in his own curative system, the doctor merely washed the part with water. However, he was fully aware of the imprudence he had committed, and gives the following account of the matter afterwards: "Believing that the malady would not declare itself until the fortieth day, having numerous patients to visit, I put off from day to day the application of my remedy—that is to say, vapor baths. The ninth day, being in my cabinet, I felt, all at once, a pain in the throat, and a still greater one in the eyes. My body seemed so light that I felt as if I could jump to a prodigious height, or that, if I threw myself out of the window, I could sustain myself in the air. My hair was so sensitive that I appeared to be able to count each separately without looking at it. Saliva kept continually forming in the mouth. Any movement of air inflicted great pain on me, and I was obliged to avoid the sight of brilliant objects; I had a continual desire to run and bite, not human beings, but animals, and all that was near me. I drank with difficulty, and I remarked that the sight of water distressed me more than the pain in the throat. I believe that by shutting the eyes, any one suffering under hydrophobia can always drink. The fits came on every five minutes, and I then felt the pain start from the index finger, and run up the nerves to the shoulder. In this state, thinking that my course was preservative and not curative, I took a vapor bath, not with the intention of cure, but of suffocating myself.

When the bath was at a heat of 52 deg. centigrade (93 deg. 3 min. 5 sec. Farenheit,) all the symptoms disappeared, as if by magic, and since then I have never felt anything more of them. I have attended more than eighty persons bitten by mad animals, and I have not lost a single case. When a person has been bitten by a mad dog, he must for seven successive days take a vapor bath a la Russe, as it is called, of 57 deg. to 63 deg. This is the preventive remedy. When the disease is declared, it only requires one vapor bath, rapidly increased to 37 deg. centigrade, then slowly to 63 deg.; the patient must confine himself to his chamber until the cure is complete." Dr. Buisson mentions several other curious facts. An American had been bitten by a rattlesnake about eight leagues away from his home; wishing to die in the bosom of his family, he ran the greater part of the way home, and going to bed, perspired profusely, and the wound healed as any simple cut. The bite of the tarantula is cured by the exercise of dancing, the free perspiration dissipating the virus. If a young child be vaccinated and then be made to take a vapor bath, the vaccine does not take.—European Times.

Facts vs. Theories.—"Give me a place to rest my lever on, says Archimedes, "and I will move the world." "Give me pure and unadulterated drugs," says Medicus, of the olden time, "and I will cure disease."

In one sense, both of these learned pundits were the veriest charlatans. They knew there was no place to rest their lever on, either to move the world or cure disease. Mechanism was in a backward state, and the medical profession was but another name for sorcery, and all the adjuncts of magic filters and charms of the "evil eye," etc.

But these latter days have borne unto us something more than even superstition and its crew ever dreamt of in their maddest philosophy. In these days of practical science, what was theory of yesterday is fact to-day, and all the old time notions become as bubbles in the sun, and burst and break with every breath we draw.

Let Archimedes shoulder his lever and we will find a resting place for it to move the world. Let mine ancient Medicus pant and toil no more for the drugs he so sorely needs, for we have them at our hand ever ready to serve them at his beck.

Refined in the laboratory of Dr. Maggiel, the finest materials known in the medical profession are obtainable by any one. His Bilious, Dyspeptic, and Diarrhea Pills stand unrivalled, and his Salve operates with magical effect upon burns, scalds, and all sores and ulcers o the skin.

In fact, we think Maggiel's Pills and Salve are the wonder of this century, and we are happy in the thought that many others of our brethren of the craft agree with us. We would earnestly counsel that all families provide themselves with Dr. Maggiel's Preparations at once, and keep them ready at hand, so as to use them at the most opportune time and as occasion serves.—Valley Sentinel. c14

At this season of the year, when so many of our people are suffering from colds, we call attention to Ayer's Cherry Pectoral as a sure cure not only for coughs and colds, but all affections of the lungs and throat. Having used it in our family for many years, we can speak from personal knowledge of its efficiency. There may be other remedies that are good, but in all our experience this has proved to be by far the best. Its qualities are uniform and wholly reliable. It is pleasant to take, and should be kept at command, by every family, as a protection against a class of complaints which seem harmless in the beginning, but become afflicting and dangerous if neglected.—N. H. Register.

Ladies: The wreck of beauty is sure to follow the use of chalk, alabaster, and other destructive applications. Remember that the most innocent, harmless and fragrant toilet dressing for the complexion and skin—adapted to the most sensitive person, and blending perfectly with nature—is Davidson's Circassian Bloom.

HEALTH IN GREAT CITIES.

A PAMPHET on the alleged deterioration of race, brought about by the growth of large cities, has lately appeared in England from the pen of Dr. Morgan; and, whatever may be thought of his inferences, his facts are interesting and instructive. It appears that in England, at least, while the proportion of marriages to population is in the towns the triple of what it is in the country, country marriages are two and a half times more prolific. Then, again, the death-rate in cities is one-third larger than in the country districts, so that, what with scanty births and numerous deaths, every town in England would speedily be depopulated if a constant stream of population did not flow into it from the country. What makes this fact all the more startling is, that rather more than half the population of England and Wales now live in the great towns, so that to keep them filled up is a drain on the country districts which is felt every year more severely. Dr. Morgan finds in all this proof that the inhabitants of cities are deteriorating physically, and in doing so, of course, lower the type of coming generations. But the fact seems to be that whatever defects may be created by city life, they are not transmitted to such an extent as to exercise a serious influence on posterity—the reason being that feeble city children generally die off, and those who reach maturity are therefore apt to be picked men and women. It is well known that city-bred men are in all countries found to undergo that severest of all tests of physical vigor, military service, even better than country people—a superiority which is by some observers ascribed to the gain in nervous force wrought by city life; and we doubt very much whether the average country maiden could stand the wear and tear of "a season" in any of the great capitals of the world with nearly as much success as those bred in town drawing-rooms. The capacity of a country girl to undergo severe muscular labor, such as walking, riding, or rowing, milking or sweeping, is not necessarily an indication of greater vitality. These occupations are in themselves health-giving, even when followed by fatigue. Vitality, which is, after all, the very basis of health, is best tested by pursuits in themselves unhealthy, and which involve a drain on the nervous power, such as loss of sleep, exposure to excitement, or anxiety, or mental worry.

We are sorry we have no means at hand of ascertaining the comparative growth of city and country population in this country. There is no question, of course, that the latter greatly outstrips the former as yet; but it is equally certain our cities are growing with a rapidity which, in view of the feebleness of our efforts to govern them, and the general ignorance of, or indifference to, the means of keeping them clean and healthy, may be called positively alarming. In other countries there are one or two growing rapidly; we have a dozen or two which promise in a dozen years or so to surpass in size and populousness all others of ancient or modern times. Their growth is stimulated in a variety of ways. One is the easiness of access; another is the prodigious increase of commerce and manufactures, the latter having of late years been forced heavily by the high tariff. We consequently can show several "centres of population" which, being largely created by drift from all quarters of the globe, are not much above those of Europe in intelligence, education, self-respect, or habits of self-control. We are trying to govern them, too, by the machinery which was invented and used by the American population of fifty years ago, those quiet, thrifty, reading farmers, who laid the foundations of American society, who were for two centuries its boast and glory, and are still its salvation, but who are in some parts of the country being rapidly supplanted by swarms of foreign operatives. The legal influences we are able to exert, therefore, on behalf of health and cleanliness are far below those with which European legislators are armed.

That the effect of life in these busy hives upon health and physique will be much what it is in Europe, there can be little question. The same causes are at work in both places; and it seems to be settled that foremost amongst these is bad air—one of the inevitable results of crowding. That the day will come when crowding a great number of men and women together on a small space of ground will not make the air very bad after all, we think very likely; but that day is clearly a long way off. The art of policing great cities in free countries is still in its infancy. Despots alone do it successfully; but our people will hardly ever be disposed to purchase cleanliness by the surrender of their freedom. Such powers as the Board of Health in New York is armed with would hardly be tolerated as a permanency.

In the meantime, there is nothing so much needed as the use of all the influences at our command to diminish the flow of the country population into the towns; or, if this be too difficult, as we fear it is, to induce those whose business lies in them to live out of them. The plain fact of the matter is, that country life is to most Americans at this moment intolerable, and no wonder. In the first place, the means of reaching the country are disgraceful not simply to the railroad companies but to our civilization. We cannot recall to mind at this moment a single line of railroad which the directors seek to make agreeable or convenient to those who have to use it every day. Most people who live in the neighborhood of a great city make their purchases in it, particularly ladies. This is not a luxury; it is a necessity. A place at the station, therefore, to which parcels might be sent to await the arrival of the owner, would be a great convenience to suburban residents. On most suburban lines, however, no parcel will be received unless the owner is there to receive it. This is a small matter, but indicates a good deal. We have so often discussed the condition of the cars that we shall not here return to it. The trains are generally arranged to start or not to start at ingeniously inconvenient hours. The theory on which the time-tables of most suburban lines is apparently drawn up is, that nobody living in the country ever wants to spend an evening in the city, and nobody living in the city wants to spend one in the country; and yet there is perhaps nothing that makes country life so distasteful to all classes, working-men included, as the fact that it cuts them off from those sources of amusement or entertainment, social or other, such as only cities can supply. It must be admitted, in fact, that the social attractions offered by the country are well nigh worthless. People who live in the country, and who have the good sense to try and make the best of it, generally try to persuade themselves and others that they have all the society they want; but in their secret hearts they know they heroically and innocently lie. Under the most favorable circumstances, they rarely see much of their neighbors. The distances are too great, and when they are not, the roads are, during three-fourths of the year, either too muddy or too dusty to make walking agreeable. Harnessing vehicles for the payment of nocturnal visits is not agreeable, if one has to do it one's self; and it is still less agreeable to have to ask a coachman to do it, as coachmen go in these days; so that the great majority stay at home, hoping that people will "drop in in the evening"—a pleasing anticipation in which the mass of men and women who are fond of society continue to indulge in the earlier part of their lives, but which they get over before they reach what novelists call "the grand climacteric."

People rarely do "drop in in the evening" anywhere. One meets with circles now and then in which the custom prevails but they are mostly family circles, or circles long established and bound together by old and valued associations. Amongst the heterogeneous populations of most country "neighborhoods," families stay at home and wait for others, and the general prevalence of this practice of course involves general disappointment.

Then, again, persons brought together by accident in the country are not often congenial. There is no good reason why they should be. Tastes, pursuits, and antecedents may and do differ, and when they do differ conversation is apt to be a bore. And it must be confessed that, except in the case of persons of great powers, great cultivation, or great originality, meeting the same persons very often soon ceases to be amusing or entertaining. Each one very soon gets acquainted with all his neighbor's jokes, his best stories, his favorite personal experiences, and soon learns enough even of the character of his mind to be able to predict with tolerable certainty what he will say on any ordinary subject that comes up. The result is that one very rarely finds country circles rely very long on conversation. They fall back on games or "Shakspearian readings," which are generally very well for a while; but people tire of games, and there is a limit to one's enjoyment of hearing Shakspeare badly read.

The true remedy for all this is to make removal to the country as little of a separation from the city as possible, to enable people to enjoy the pure air and good scenery of the one without losing altogether the pleasures of the other, and this can only be done by thorough railroad reform. There is, in fact, it may be safely said, nothing on which the health of the cities of the United States will hereafter so much depend as this.—Nation.

ICELANDIC ADMONITIONS.—A venerable Icelandic writer, who lived at the close of the twelfth century, gave the following good advice for self-government: "Accustom thyself to a busy and wakeful life, but not so as to injure health by overexertion. Keep aloof from sadness, for sadness is sickness of the soul. Be kind and gay, equable and changeable (that is, of easy manners, and not stiff.) Avoid evil speaking, and give your counsel to him who will accept it. Seek the company of the best men. Keep thy tongue carefully; it may honor—it may also condemn thee. If thou wax angry, speak little, and that little not vehemently. Men would give gold, sometimes, to buy back a passionate word; and I know of nothing that so destroys unity as the exchange of evil language, especially in the moment of strife; and there is no nobler, no higher power than that by which a man can keep his own tongue from cursing, slandering, and other foolish prate. There are other things to be avoided like the Fiend himself—the sensual excesses, gaming, wagers, and other improprieties and vices. These are the roots of many worse evils, and unless great care is taken, will hand thee over to great sin and shame."

THE KINGDOM OF ITALY.—Since the union, in 1860, of the provinces of the new kingdom of Italy, considerable attention has been paid to the collection of Government statistics—a department being attached to the Ministry of Agriculture, Industry and Commerce, aided by Councils, in all the Prefectures of the kingdom. The last census was taken on the night of the 31st of December, 1861, when the population was found to be 21,704,000. At the rate of progress since observed, on the 1st of January in this year it is estimated to be about 22,300,000. The population is mostly agricultural, the largest cities being inferior in numbers of inhabitants to the great cities and commercial towns in England. Florence will, no doubt, rapidly increase as the seat of Government; but at the date of the census it had only 114,000 inhabitants; Naples, 417,000; Turin, 180,000; Milan, 219,000; and Palermo, 186,000. Great activity prevails in extending the lines of railway to attract the traffic of the East to the Italian coasts of the Adriatic. The completion of the Mont Cenis tunnel and a projected Alpine railway over the St. Gothard are expected by the Italians to give them a large share in the transit of light goods and passengers when the Suez Canal is opened. The products of the soil of Italy—oil, wine, rice, cotton, silk—its vast tracks of unexplored mineral grounds, and thousands of square miles of land which only require scientific irrigation to render them the most fertile in Europe—open up a great future for her commercial enterprise, to which, under the new Government, the greatest attention is being given. The most difficult problem at present is the financial condition of Italy. Wishing to, and, perhaps, partly under the necessity of maintaining a large army at heavy cost relative to the present revenue of the country, Italians yet object to the corresponding sacrifices, though at present but lightly taxed as compared with other countries. The public debt is already £176,000,000, and it is advancing at the rate of £8,000,000 to £10,000,000 a year. The only remedy is a large reduction of the army, or a much heavier taxation. It appears probable the Italians will choose the latter, which the increasing wealth of the country and development of its resources will render it easier to bear.

A WIDOW.—Notwithstanding the exhibition of 1867, our annual salon is this year well supplied by our principal artists. Already 5,000 first-rate pictures have been received. The two which seem to attract greatest attention are a landscape called "La Remise de Chevreuils" and "La Femme au Perroquet," both by Courbet. The latter picture represents a woman in a state of nudity playing with a parrot, and has already been purchased for a large sum by M. Nieuwerkerke, director of the Beaux Arts. There is also another picture, a portrait of a lady, and entitled "La Veuve." The lady is dressed in deep mourning, and has in her hands a bouquet of violets. Now, although the catalogue contains only the two words, a widow, opposite the number of the portrait, there is a story connected with it full of poetic terror. The lady is the Countess O——, who, although now only twenty-four years of age, has been twice widowed. She is said to be of humble birth, but when only sixteen years old, her great beauty attracted the attention of the Marquis de D——, who married her. On leaving the church, however, the marquis was assassinated by some obscure rival, and the lady was left a widow with an immense fortune. The marquise retired to a convent, where she remained till her twentieth year. She then made a journey to various parts of Europe, and visited, among other places, St. Petersburg, where one of the most wealthy boyards of Russia placed at her feet his heart, his diamonds, and his millions. The marriage was celebrated in the house of the bridegroom's mother, in a remote part of Russia, some distance from his own estate. The newly married couple left for their new home in a magnificent sleigh. On the way they were attacked by wolves, and the count, in trying to defend his bride, made a false step, fell out of the sleigh into the snow, and was immediately devoured by the wolves. The horses, mad with terror, dashed off with immense speed and did not stop till they arrived at the count's chateau, which was brilliantly illuminated for the reception of the newly married couple. This story, I am assured on good authority, is perfectly authentic.—Cor. N. Y. Nation

PROBST, who murdered the Decring family, has told the story of his butchery with the same nonchalance with which the horrible deed was committed. The matter was a very simple one: he was in want of money, and he thought he could get what he wanted by murdering a former employer. When he found or believed it necessary to despatch also the entire family, he enlarged his determination without flinching, and would have killed them on their way down to breakfast if he had felt sure of succeeding. There is absolutely no trace of mercy or pity in the whole proceeding—hardly any of remorse, if that can be called remorse to which he alluded in saying "Yes" to the question whether he "felt bad" after the murder. One can scarcely imagine more inhuman apathy than was displayed by him in shaving himself with the razor of his chief victim, and then making a meal in the house. Yet, with an incousisteucy which is remarkable, he supplied the horses in the stable with as much hay as he could before leaving the premises. The cunning of the man was as brutal as his action.

AN ADVENTURE IN THE GREAT PYRAMID.

THE state of Coleridge's mind when he wrote his fragments of Kubla Khan must have nearly resembled that of any reasonably excitable person during a first visit to Cairo. Just a degree too vivid to be a natural dream; many degrees too beautiful and wonderful to be an ordinary daylight vision, the rich dim courts, the glorious mosques, the marble fountains, the showers of southern sunlight poured on stately palm-tree and slow-moving camel, and shifting, many-hued crowd—all form together a scene such as no stage in the world may parallel for strangeness and splendor. One day spent in roaming aimlessly through the bazaars, and the gardens, and the mosques of Hassan and the Gama Tayloon, does more to reveal to us what Eastern life means—what is the background of each great Eastern story, the indescribable atmosphere which pervades all Eastern literature—than could be gained by years of study.

At least, I can speak from experience that it was such a revelation to me, and one so immeasurably delightful that, having performed the long journey to Egypt mainly with the thought of the attractions of the ruins of Thebes and Memphis, Karnak and Philæ, I waited patiently for a fortnight within sight of the Pyramids without attempting to visit them, satisfied with the endless interest of the living town. At last the day came when the curiosity of some quarter of a century (since that epoch in a child's life, the reading of Belzoni) could no longer be deferred. I had a concern, as good folks say, to visit Cheops that particular morning, and to Cheops I went, mounted on the inevitable donkey, and accompanied by a choice specimen of that genus of scamp, the Cairene donkey-boy. Unluckily I had overnight ordered my dragoman to wait in Cairo for certain expected mails, and bring them to me in Old Cairo whenever they might arrive; and of course the order involved my loss of his services for the entire day, spent by him, no doubt, with my letters in his pocket, at a coffee-shop. Thus it happened that my little expedition wanted all guidance or assistance—such acquaintances as I possessed in Cairo being otherwise occupied on that particular morning, and not even knowing of my intention.

Arrived at the ferry of the Nile, just above the Isle of Rhoda, it was with considerable satisfaction that I found a party of pleasant English ladies and gentlemen also proceeding to the Pyramids. Their time, however, was limited by the departure of the Overland Mail that day, and of course they could make no delay—as they seemed kindly disposed to do—to keep up with me and my wretched donkey, or rather donkey-boy.

If there be an aggravating incident in this very trying world, it is assuredly that of being mounted on a non-progressive donkey, unarmed with any available whip, stick, spur, or other instrument of cruelty, and wholly at the mercy of a treacherous conductor, who pretends to belabor your beast, and only makes him kick, and keeps you behind your party, when you have every reason in the world to wish to retain your place in it. Only one thing is worse, a mule which carries you through a whole day of weary Alpine climbing, just too far from all your friends to exchange more than a scream at intervals. If there chance on such an excursion to be ten pleasant people of your party, and one unpleasant one, whom you particularly wish neither to follow nor seem to follow, it is inevitably that particular objectionable person whose mule your mule will go after, and press past every one else to get at, and drag your arm out of its socket if you try to turn it back, and finally make you wish that an avalanche would fall and bury you and the demon-brute you have got under you in the abyss forever. On horseback you are a lord (or lady) of creation, with the lower animal subject unto you. On mule-back, or ass-back, you are a bale of goods, borne with contumely at the will of the vilest of beasts—not where you please, but where, when, and how, it pleases.

To return to my expedition to the Pyramids. Very soon the English party were out of sight, and slowly and wearily I was led a zigzag course through fields of young growing corn, and palm-groves, and past the poor mud villages of the Fellah-Arab. Mud, indeed, occupies in Egypt an amazing prominence in every view. Mud hovels, mud fields, where the rank vegetation is only beginning to spring through the deposit of the inundation, mud-dams across a thousand channels and ditches, and finally the vast yellow mud-banks of the mighty Nile. If man were first created in Egypt, it is small marvel that his bodily form should be a "muddy vesture of decay." In the course of my pilgrimage on this particular day my donkey-boy cleverly guided me into a sort of peninsula of mud, out of which there was no exit (short of returning on our steps) save by crossing a stream of some three or four feet deep. As usual in Egypt, two or three brown Arabs arose immediately when wanted, from the break of rushes, and volunteered to carry me across on their shoulders, their backshish, of course, being divided with the ingenious youth who had brought me into the trap. What it costs to the olfactory organs to be carried by Fellah-Arabs, language altogether fails to describe.

At last the troubles of the way were over; the sands of the Desert were reached, and the stupendous cluster of edifices, the three Pyramids of Ghizeh, the Sphinx, the Cyclopean Temple, and the splendid tombs, were before me and around. For miles off, in the clear air of Egypt, where there is literally no aerial perspective, I had been able to distinguish the ranges of stones which constitute the exterior of all the Pyramids, save the small portions of the second and third still covered with their original coating. It was hardly, as Longfellow says—

> "The mighty pyramids of stone,
> That wedge like cleave the desert airs,
> When nearer seen and better known
> Are but gigantic flights of stairs."

Almost as soon as they come within the range of vision they are seen with their seriated edges and the horizontal lines of the deep steps, marked sharply with the intense shadows of the south.

Of all these ruins of Ghizeh—these earliest and mightiest of the records of our race—the one by far the most affecting and impressive, is assuredly the Sphinx. A human face, nay, an intensely human face, a portrait full of individuality even in its solemnity and colossal grandeur—gazes at us with the stony eyes before which have passed Hebrew prophet and Greek philosopher, and Roman conquerer, and Arab khalif. Had Napoleon the Great, told his troops that sixty centuries looked on them through the Sphinx's eyes, he would have used no unmeaning metaphor. Even the very ruin and disgrace of the mighty countenance seems to render it more affecting. Half immeasurably sublime, half pitiful, nay, grotesque, in its desolation, it stands, with its brow calmly upturned to heaven, and what one might almost deem a ruddy flush upon its cheek, but with every feature worn and marred since it has stood there, a stony St. Sebastian, bearing through the ages the shafts and insults of sun and storm.

I must not pause to muse over the Sphinx, nor yet to describe the gradual revelation which comes to the traveller of the enormous magnitude of the Pyramid, as he slowly wades at its foot through the heavy sand, and perceives when he has walked thrice as far as it seemed he need have done, he has but reached the half of the base.

The English party, who had outridden me, were concluding their luncheon as I reached the Pyramid, and after declining their cordial offers to share it, I asked one of the ladies, "Had she visited the interior and Cheops' chamber?" "No. Some of the ladies and gentlemen had done so. The Arabs were a wild set of men, and she did not like to put herself in their power." Deeming the lady's caution must be over-developed, and too intensely interested to make very serious reflections on what I was doing, I engaged the Scheik at the door of the Pyramid to provide me with proper guides so soon as the English party had ridden away.

Five strong Fellah-Arabs volunteered for the service, in spite of my remark that three were enough, and we were soon plunged into the darkness of the first entrance-passage. All the world knows how the Pyramid is constructed; a solid mass of huge stones, all so perfectly fitted that scarcely a penknife might be introduced in any place between them. The passages at the widest, scarcely permit of two persons going abreast, and are for long distances so low as to compel the visitor to stoop almost double. The angle at which these passages slope upwards is also one which, on the slippery, well-worn floor, renders progress difficult as on the ice of an Alpine mountain. But oh! how different from the keen pure air, the wide horizon, the glittering sunlight, of the Alps, this dark, suffocating cavern, where the dust, and lights, and breath of heated men, make an atmosphere scarcely to be breathed, and where the sentiments of awe and horror almost paralyze the pulse. Perhaps my special fancy made me then, as ever since, find a cave, subterranean passage, or tunnel, unreasonably trying to the nerves; but so it was—the awe of the place wellnigh overpowered me.

The Arab guides helped me easily in their well-known way. One or two carried the candles, and all joined in a sort of song at which I could not help laughing, in spite of both awe and lack of breath. It seemed to be a chant of mingled Arabic and English (a language they all spoke after a fashion,) the English words being apparently a continual repetition:

> "Vera goot lady, backshish, backshish; > Vera goot lady, give us backshish," and so on, da capo. Twice we had to rest on our way from sheer exhaustion, and on one occasion, where there is a break in the continuity of the passage, there was an ascent into a hole high up in the wall by no means easy to accomplish.

At last, after what seemed an hour, and I suppose was about fifteen minutes, since we left the sunshine, we stood in Cheops' burial-vault, the centre chamber of the Great Pyramid. As my readers know, it is a small oblong chamber, of course wholly without light or ventilation, with plain stone floor, walls, and roof, and with the huge stone sarcophagus (which once held the mummy of Cheops, but is now perfectly empty) standing at one end. The interest of the spot would alone have repaid a journey from England; but I was left small time to enjoy it. Suddenly I was startled to observe that my guides had stopped their song and changed their obsequious voices, and were all five standing bolt upright against the walls of the vault.

"It is the custom," said one of them, "for whoever comes here to give us backshish."

I reflected in a moment that they had seen me foolishly transfer my purse from the pocket of my riding-skirt to the walking-dress I wore under it, and which I had alone retained on entering the Pyramid.

"Well," I said, as coolly as I was able, "I intend, of course, to give you 'backshish' for your trouble, and if you choose to be paid here instead of at the door, it is all the same to me. I shall give three shillings English (a favorite coin in Cairo,) as I said I only wanted three men."

"Three shillings are not enough. We want backshish!"

"There they are. They are quite enough."

"Not enough! We want backshish!"

I must here confess that things looked rather black. The Fellahs stood like so many statues of Osiris (even at the moment I could not help thinking of it,) with their backs against the wall and their arms crossed on their breasts, as if they held the flagellum and crux ansata. Their leader spoke in a calm, dogged sort of a way, to which they all responded, like echoes.

"Well," I said, "as there are five of you, and I am rather heavy, I will give you one shilling more. There it is. Now, you will get no more." Saying this I gave the man the fourth shilling, and then returned my purse to my pocket.

"This won't do. We want backshish!"

"It must do. You will get no more backshish."

"It won't do. We want backshish!"

Each moment the men's voices grew more resolute, and I must avow that horror seized me at the thought that they had nothing to do but merely to go out and leave me there in the solitude and darkness, and I should go mad from terror.

Not a creature in Cairo even knew where I was gone. I should not be missed or sought for for days, and there I was unarmed, and alone, with these five savages, whose caprice or resentment might make them rush off in a moment, leaving me to despair. Luckily, I knew well it would be fatal to betray any alarm, and so I spoke as lightly as I could, and laughed a little, but uncomfortably.

"Come, come. You will have no more backshish, you know very well; and if you bully me, you will have stick from the English Consul. Come, I've seen enough. Let us go out."

"We want backshish!" said all five of the villains in one loud voice.

It was a crisis, and I believe if I had wavered a moment I might never have got away; but the extremity, of course, aided one's resolution, and I suddenly spoke out, angrily and preremptorily:

"I'll have no more of this. You fellow there, take the light, and go out. You give me your hand. Come along, all of you."

It was a miracle; to my own comprehension, at all events. They one and all suddenly slunk down like so many scolded dogs, and without another syllable did as I ordered them. The slave habit of mind doubtless resumed its usual sway with them the moment that one of free race asserted a claim of command. Any way, it was a simple fact that five Arabs yielded to a single Anglo-Saxon woman, who was herself quite as much surprised as they could be at the phenomenon.

O, how I rejoiced when the square of azure sky appeared at the end of the last passages, and when I at last emerged safe and sane out of the Great Pyramid! Dante, ascending out of the Inferno, "a riveder le stelle," could not have been half so thankful. Away I rode, home to old Cairo on my donkey, and could spare a real laugh under the sunshine, when I found that the wretched old Arab Scheik, with whom I had left my riding-skirt, had quietly devoured my intended luncheon of dates, and then carefully replaced the stones in my pocket!

THE CANARY BIRD.—When I saw it first in its native woods I could scarcely recognize it as the same species as our domestic yellow warbler, so much is the latter altered by domestication and repeated crosses. The native bird is gray on the wings, the belly is green, and the back a very dark gray. It builds on bushy trees or high shrubs, lays from four to six pale-blue eggs, and sometimes hatches six times in a season. I was surprised to find that each flock has a different song. The note is between that of the skylark and nightingale. The natives assert that the bird is very difficult to rear, and generally dies in a couple of years if kept in a cage. R. E. Allison, in the Quarterly Journal of Agriculture.

PARIS EXHIBITION OF 1867.—The summary of the number of exhibitors and the demands for space has just been made up, and shows the following results: The number of proposing exhibitors, exclusive of fine arts, is 2,280; in 1855 the number was 1541. The total net space demanded in the forthcoming exhibition exceeds 305,000 square feet, exclusive of space demanded in the park. The net space at the disposal of the British executive is 93,000 square feet, or considerably less than one-third of the space asked for. In 1855 the net space filled was 65,000 square feet.—London Paper.

NOTICE.

The publication of "The Californian" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

White & Bauer, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for The Californian in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

letters relating to the Business, Editorial or other Departments of the paper should be addressed to the Publishers of The Californian, No. 532 Merchant street, San Francisco.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JUNE 16, 1866.

Full volumes of The Californian, from the commencement, can be obtained at the office, 532 Merchant street. Price, in muslin, $4 per volume; two volumes (one year) bound together, $6. Unbound, per volume, $2 50.

THE FENIAN MOVEMENT.

If we had not but recently passed through the experience of a war, conducted on the grandest scale, and greater in all its extent and its details of battles, suffering and death than the world ever knew before, we might have taken some alarm at the recent development of proceedings of a hostile nature upon the borders of the country lying north of the United States. But the meagre and indefinite accounts that have reached us of Fenian movements, sound like a burlesque of warfare, as the stories told in the beginning of the recent rebellion, and seem almost as if history were repeating itself, and we were now hearing the faintest echoes of those far-receding events. If we did not believe there were some who have entered into this movement in honesty, who recognize the false relation which Ireland is made to bear to the rest of the world, and who are devoting heart and mind and strength to accomplish something great and good for their country, we should be inclined to look at the Fenian organization, its movements and prospects of success, with ridicule, and treat it only as one of those Celtic bulls which that whimsical people had united to perpetrate and were enjoying while all the rest of mankind were convulsed with laughter. As soon, however, as men take weapons into their hands, and in anger cause the shedding of blood, we are constrained to suppress our mirth, and to consider the cause and justification of these acts, and the ultimate end of their continuance.

The right of revolution is not denied to any people. The people of Ireland believe that they are oppressed by the Government of Great Britain, and allege that the wrongs they suffer are not relieved, and do not receive a proper consideration. A portion of the Irish people—but how great does not appear—are conspiring together to redress their wrongs and to dissolve entirely their connection with Great Britain. To aid this object, those of that nation who have immigrated to this country have united in forming Fenian organizations to promote as far as they may the grand object of the people—"to liberate Ireland." The object of these associations appeals powerfully to the patriotic instincts of the Irish race and to the hearts of this impulsive people no cause can be dearer than to set free the country from which they have most of them been driven by oppression. It is a matter which they have always vividly in mind, and any appeal for aid touches strongly their hearts and enlists their most active sympathies.

It is perhaps a pity that the people at home have deemed it necessary to appeal to their kindred and friends who reside upon this countinent for material aid or sympathy, or thought it expedient even to disclose the knowledge of their intended action. While a patriotic cause will find anywhere and always ardent supporters, there are those also who for personal emolument and gain will pretend a most ready sympathy, and whose shrewdness and cunning will place them in easy communication with the heart of the movement and acquire for themselves the places of power and gain. The too frank impulsiveness of the Irish of this country has in this movement long ago betrayed them into the hands of such men, and the result has been charges and counter-charges of fraud, corruption and embezzlement. Each side has had its strong partisans, and the organization seems almost hopelessly divided into factions.

During the progress of the organization, it has been understood that extensive preparations were going on to accomplish the general purpose of "liberating Ireland," and suddenly rumors were afloat that Canada was to be attacked, and that soldiers were already on the march under the lead of veteran officers of the late war, and immediately the telegraph announced the report of an invasion into the neighboring country, with indefinite accounts of the progress of events in that locality. What the invasion of Canada has to do with the liberation of Ireland is beyond the reach of our intelligence. And why should the Irish in America commence hostile movements against the power of Great Britain before the Irish in Ireland? It would seem very much as if the fight had been talked of so long, and the pleasing prospect of walloping an Englishman so vividly portrayed to the Celtic mind, that no inducement could restrain the impulsive wielder of the shillelagh from pitching into the first subject of the Queen that could be found, and therefore with great enthusiasm they have marched into the enemy's country, and rolled up their sleeves, as if for a preliminary rehearsal and exhibition of how easily a naturalized republican can whip a subject and supporter of the oppressor. It does not seem within the bounds of ordinary reason, that the leaders of the movement can expect to make any conquest, or even a permanent lodgment. Indeed, at this period, it does not appear who are the responsible leaders, if there are any.

Mr. James Stephens, who has recently landed in America, has been the recognized leading spirit in Ireland, but he has not been greeted with that enthusiastic welcome, nor has that marked respect been universally paid him, which would certainly have been, if he was to be the recognized leader of all the Irish patriots. His recent address in Jones' Wood shows a man of earnestness of purpose, but is full of regret at the dissensions which he finds in the organization here. The telegraph has announced, since that date, that his counsel has always been opposed to an invasion of Canada. If his counsel had been different, we should certainly have denied to him the qualities requisite to the leader of a revolution, or even that other extraordinary, but useful ingredient of character—common sense.

If, indeed, the organizations in America be really in alliance with those in Ireland, why is the material aid of Irish Americans exhausted by an attack upon Canada? Perhaps the hope is, to overpower the British province, exhaust her resources, and direct the attention and forces of England to rendering assistance here, lest a dependency of the government be lost, so that, under cover of this excitement and anxiety, the patriots of the "old country" may > "Fold their tent like the Arabs,

> And as quietly steal away."

But it is too evident that impulsiveness has rushed on without reason, and passion has been uncontrolled. The leaders of the Fenians have forgotten to study statistics and to measure the strength of an established power with that of a disorganized conspiracy. They have exercised without restraint the republican liberty of freedom of speech, and have been allowed to talk to their hearts' content. They seem never to have thought there was any difference between calling names and throwing stones. Having indulged in the former, they have advanced to the latter. With the latter step they seem not to know that they place a great responsibility upon the government of the United States, and because that government does not care to be drawn into a war with England, and has taken the arms and ammunition away from these ignorant children, they turn about and swear lustily at us for having, as they say, betrayed them. They do not know that we have done them a kindness they cannot appreciate. They cannot see the inevitable result of their folly in invading Canada—certain defeat or annihilation. They have gathered moneys which seem immense to a people who are wealthy with an income of two dollars and a half a day, and believe they have sufficient to wage war. All the Irish in America could not contribute money enough to gather, equip, and maintain an army large enough and through a time long enough to make a conquest of Canada. Do they really expect by such movement to intimidate England? It seems like an attempt to overcome a household by stealing into the backyard, capturing the pigs and poultry, omitting the fact that the controlling power of the establishment is situated near the grand entrance. If the parent is a victim of a disease, why try to cure it by giving a dose of medicine to the son?

The Fenians of America are, in the first place, disorganized and divided; they have no leading mind on whom they can depend for prudent and wise guidance; they have produced no man who has uttered a word that would give him credit for statesmanship; they have no generals who could lead an army, if they had one, against the veterans of England; they have no base of supplies, without which no effective movement could take place; they have no materials of war which would not be exhausted in a single campaign; they have no organized army of sufficient force to conduct a war of the magnitude which their undertaking would require; they have no navy, whose presence would be indispensable in a war with a maritime power like England; they have no money which would not flow from their treasury like water poured upon the ground, under the manipulation of an ignorant cabinet and the extravagant drainage of the hostile movements.

Because they have disregarded the laws of the United States, and have called out the strength of that government to interfere with their proceedings, they will naturally display indignation and rage, but it is not the fault of that government that they are ignorant of the laws. It is not that Americans do not extend their sympathy and wish success to their grand object, but their sympathy and wishes do not extend to the involution in a war with Great Britain. The people undoubtedly wish that Ireland may become free from the yoke of England, from their natural sympathy with the oppressed, their gratitude to the great body of Irish-Americans who have fought for the Union, and the not very cordial feelings which prevail regarding the hypocrisy of England. But if any action is to be effective, it must be nearer the locality of the Ireland which is to be free. If the dog's head is to be cut off, the first movement should scarcely be a pinch in the tail.

Mr. President Johnson is accused of betraying the Fenians. It may take a considerable passage of time before the truth, which is not that, will prevail among them. If it shall not until after the next Presidential election, and Mr. Johnson should happen to be the Democratic candidate, that time-worn party will perhaps weep at the diminished vote which the present interference has occasioned. Meantime we will hope that the second sober thought will come and overcome their anger and impulsiveness. The repentance over this folly will not return to the ignorant and confiding children of the Irish race the hard earned dollars which man-servants and maid-servants have lavished to free their native land, but the remembrance may teach the value of wise counsel, of prudent action, of respect for laws, of union in action, of the debility of a divided house, and may caution them to a better estimate of their own weakness and the strength of an ancient enemy.

[For the Californian.]

SUNDRIES.

The statue of Lincoln, on Fifth street, represents a comfortably-clad individual; but it has been observed that the artist omitted to ornament the Martyr's person with the watch and guard usually deemed indispensable. Is this omission to be attributed to an ungenerous distrust of San Franciscan honesty, or does it but reflect that popular estimate of Lincoln's virtues which placed him among the honored few upon whom no watch was necessary?

The Book of Books teaches us that when we receive a blow upon one cheek we should turn the other also. Our accommodating "zephyrs" spare us the humiliation of turning, as we get blows on both cheeks—to say nothing of straight-up-and-down licks—at one and the same time.

Country airs may be seen and felt here quite as well as beyond the corporate limits, and though any change—even small-change—would be beneficial to some men, no removal to the rural districts need be based upon a desire to observe rustic simplicity and rustic curiosity. For proof: Stop in front of a window on Montgomery street and point out to your friend some work of art which you admire. If, in "not less than three nor more than thirty seconds" you don't draw around you a staring, gaping mob, you may suspect yourself of small-pox, nitro-glycerine, or some other repellent property equally powerful.

The Bulletin of Wednesday evening contains a poem by Herbert C. Dorr, entitled "The Ape and the Statue; A Fable for Critics." The "pome" is strictly classical, and, of course, not intended to crush anybody in this vicinity. If it were, while I shouldn't like to designate the playful little animal referred to, I think it would be safe to pronounce the "statue" simply a Doric column.

The Monterey Gazette mentions "an old lady upwards of a hundred years of age." Equally perspicuous was a more critical sheet nearer home some days ago, when it Chronicled a favorable opinion of Mrs. Sedley Brown as "the lady manageress."

Notwithstanding there is a line of elegant and swift-moving steamers by which the trip from this city to Stockton can be made with comfort and despatch, many persons—among them some who claim to be the especial Friends of Progress—still go in stages... of insanity.

Speaking of vehicles: Giving ho stages to fortune is not a new requirement; but it was left to fortune-seekers of our day to demand Idaho-stages.

The gallant boys in green seem to affect Centres—Slab Centre being the first city they pounced upon in Canada. It was hoped, when they had also captured Pigeon Hill, that they might be able to feather their nest and stay awhile. But though Canada was not entirely taken with or by the bold Fenians, let the liberators be of good cheer: their day will come—and it will not be Friday, either.

I sometimes see it stated that one Congressmen has paired off with another. The operation must be painful when a dull member is brought into use.

A young lady who parts from a dollar as regretfully as though it were a lover, reminds one of a billiard shot which almost counts. If this will not pass for a joke, it may at least, like the damsel in question, be termed a close miss.

Prayers are asked for the author, who is in declining health—a statement which the discriminating Asmodeus of The Californian regards as entirely needless.

Emstadt.

Cham, the caricaturist of the Charivari, in his pictorial review of the week, has a sly hit at the perpetual changes in the Greek Cabinet. A citizen of Athens is having his likeness taken by a photographer. The right focus having been obtained, the artist says, "Do not change your position." "Not change!" replied the other; "then people will not know me; I am a Greek Minister!"

[For the Californian.]

MY SUBURBAN RESIDENCE.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "NEIGHBORHOODS I HAVE MOVED FROM."

I LIVE in the suburbs. My residence, to quote the pleasing fiction of the advertisement, "is within 15 minutes' walk of the City Hall." Why the City Hall should be considered as an eligible terminus of anybody's walk, under any circumstances, I have not been able to determine. Never having walked from my residence to that place, I am unable to verify the assertion, though I may state as a purely abstract and separate proposition, that it takes me the better part of an hour to reach Montgomery street.

My selection of locality was a compromise between my wife's desire to go into the country, and my own predilections for civic habitation. Like most compromises, it ended in retaining the objectionable features of both propositions—I procured the inconveniences of the country without losing the discomforts of the city. I increased my distance from the butcher and green-grocer, without approximating to herds and kitchen-gardens. But I anticipate.

Fresh air was to be the principal thing sought for. That there might be too much of this did not enter into my calculations. The first day I entered my residence, it blew. The second day was windy. The third, fresh, with a strong breeze stirring. On the fourth, it blew; on the fifth, there was a gale, which has continued to the present writing.

That the air is fresh, the above statement sufficiently establishes. That it is bracing, I argue from the fact that I find it impossible to open the shutters on the windward side of the house. That it is healthy, I am also convinced, believing that there is no other force in Nature that could so buffet and ill-use a person without serious injury to him. Let me offer an instance. The path to my door crosses a slight eminence. The unconscious visitor, a little exhausted by the ascent and the general effects of the gentle gales which he has faced in approaching my hospitable mansion, relaxes his efforts, smoothes his brow, and approaches with a fascinating smile. Rash and too confident man! The wind delivers a succession of rapid blows, and he is thrown back. He staggers up again—in the language of the P. R., "smiling and confident." The wind now makes for a vulnerable point, and gets his hat in chancery. All ceremony is now thrown away—the luckless wretch seizes his hat with both hands, and charges madly at the front door. Inch by inch, the wind contests the ground; another struggle, and he stands upon the verandah. On such occasions I make it a point to open the door myself, with a calmness and serenity that shall offer a marked contrast to his feverish and excited air—that shall throw suspicion of inebriety upon him. If he be inclined to timidity and bashfulness, during the rest of the evening he is all too conscious of the disarrangement of his hair and cravat. If he is less sensitive, the result is often more distressing. A valued elderly friend once called upon me after undergoing a two-fold struggle with the wind and a large Newfoundland dog (which I keep for reasons hereinafter stated,) and not only his hat, but his wig, suffered. He spent the evening with me, totally unconscious of the fact that his hair presented the singular spectacle of having been parted diagonally from the right temple to the left ear. When ladies called, my wife preferred to receive them. They were generally hysterical, and often in tears. I remember, one Sunday, to have been startled by what appeared to be the balloon from Hayes Valley drifting rapidly past my conservatory, closely followed by the Newfoundland dog. I rushed to the front door, but was anticipated by my wife. A strange lady appeared at luncheon, but the phenomenon remained otherwise unaccounted for. Egress from my residence was much more easy. My guests seldom "stood upon the order of their going," but went at once; the Newfoundland dog playful harrassing their rear. I was standing one day, with my hand on the open hall door, in serious conversation with the minister of the parish, when the back door was incautiously opened. The watchful breeze seized the opportunity, and charged through the defenceless passage. The front door closed violently in the middle of a sentence, precipitating the reverend gentleman into the garden. The Newfoundland dog, with that sagacity for which his race is so distinguished, at once concluded that a personal collision had taken place between myself and visitor, and flew to my defence. The reverend gentleman never called again.

The Newfoundland dog above alluded to was part of a system of protection which my suburban home required. Robberies were frequent in the neighborhood, and my only fowl fell a victim to the spoiler's art. One night I awoke, and found a man in my room. With singular delicacy and respect for the feelings of others, he had been careful not to awaken any of the sleepers, and retired upon my rising, without waiting for any suggestion. Touched by his delicacy, I forbore giving the alarm until after he had made good his retreat. I then wanted to go after a policeman, but my wife remonstrated, as this would leave the house exposed. Remembering the gentlemanly conduct of the burglar, I suggested the plan of following him and requesting him to give the alarm as he went in town. But this proposition was received with equal disfavor. The next day I procured a dog and a revolver. The former went off—but the latter wouldn't. I then got a new dog and chained him, and a duelling pistol, with a hair-trigger. The result was so far satisfactory that neither could be approached with safety, and for some time I left them out, indifferently, during the night. But the chain one day gave way, and the dog, evidently having no other attachment to the house, took the opportunity to leave. His place was soon filled by the Newfoundland, whose fidelity and sagacity I have just recorded.

Space is one of the desirable features of my suburban residence. I do not know the number of acres the grounds contain except from the inordinate quantity of hose required for irrigating. I perform all day, like some gentle shepherd, upon a-½ inch pipe without any visible result, and have had serious thoughts of contracting with some disbanded fire company for their hose and equipments. It is quite a walk to the wood-house. Every day some new feature of the grounds is discovered. My youngest boy was one day missing for several hours. His head—a peculiarly venerable and striking object—was at last discovered just above the grass, at some distance from the house. On examination he was found comfortably seated in a disused drain, in company with a silver spoon and a dead rat. On being removed from this locality he howled dismally, and refused to be comforted.

The view from my suburban residence is fine. Lone Mountain, with its white obelisks, is a suggestive if not cheering termination of the vista in one direction, while the old receiving vault of Yerba Buena Cemetery limits the view in another. Most of the funerals which take place pass my house. My children, with the charming imitativeness that belongs to youth, have caught the spirit of these passing corteges, and reproduce in the back yard, with creditable skill, the salient features of the lugubrious procession. A doll, from whose features all traces of vitality and expression have been removed, represents the deceased. But unfortunately I have been obliged to promise them more active participation in this ceremony at some future time, and I fear that they look anxiously forward with the glowing impatience of youth to the speedy removal of some of my circle of friends. I am told that the eldest, with the unsophisticated frankness that belongs to his age, made a personal request to that effect to one of my acquaintances. One singular result of the frequency of these funerals is the development of a critical and fastidious taste in such matters on the part of myself and family. If I may so express myself, without irreverence, we seldom turn out for anything less than six carriages. Any number over this is usually breathlessly announced by Bridget as, "Here's another, mum—and a good long one."

With these slight drawbacks, my suburban residence is charming. To the serious poet, and writer of elegaic verses, the aspect of Nature, viewed from my verandah, is suggestive. I myself have experienced moments when the "sad mechanic exercise" of verse would have been of infinite relief. The following stanzas, by a young friend who has been stopping with me for the benefit of his health, addressed to a duck who frequented a small pond in the vicinity of my mansion, may be worthy of perusal, as showing the debilitated condition of his system. I think I have met the idea conveyed in the first verse in some of Hood's prose, but, as my friend assures me that Hood was too conscientious to appropriate anything, I conclude I am mistaken:

LINES TO A WATER FOWL.

(Intra Muros.)

I.

Fowl, that sing'st in yonder pool,
Where the summer winds blow cool,
Are there hydropathic cures
For the ills that man endures?
Know'st thou Priessnitz? What? alack!
Hast no other word but "Quack!"

II.

Cleopatra's barge might pale
To the splendors of thy tail,
Or the stately caraval
Of some "high-pooped admiral."
Never yet left such a wake
E'en the navigator Drake!

III.

Dux thou art, and leader, too,
Heeding not what's "falling due,"
Knowing not of debt or dun—
Thou dost heed no bill but one;
And, though scarce conceivable,
That's a bill Receivable,
Made—that thou thy stars might'st thank—
Payable at the next bank.

A curious expression of critical opinion is this, from Le Monde: "Goethe's Faust has been enormously praised, but its value ought to be reduced enormously. The first part is really nothing but an adventure of a grisette and a student, something like a story of the Latin Quarter—of the old Latin Quarter. Murger, less poetical, is not more immoral, and he has the advantage of being natural and true!"

[For the Californian.]

ALLAQUIZ.

SLEEPING WITH THE JUDGE.

WE are quiet, religious people where I lodge—in short, Methodists.

I was invited to lunch. That was the first indication of a storm. The three years I have been in the house, nothing of the kind has ever before happened.

So I met the Judge over oyster soup and tea. You are expected to see a description of his looks and character in this sentence of his own: "Wall, where I live, at Union City, we arrange things different. We don't go very heavy on the dead langidges. Then, tobacco and cigars is my special bomination."

This, with an indigestion, is the only memory I carried away from the repast.

About a half hour afterwards, an embarrassed tap was heard at my room door. This was only the weak thunder of a more delicate lightning which, in the succeeding moment, flashed on me from the face of my landlady. Quoth she:

"The Judge is a nice man—is he not?"

"Ye-es!"

"Now, wouldn't you just as lief let him sleep with you for the few nights he will be in the city? The fact is we haven't any other place to put him."

Considering my indebtedness in the matter of lunch, how could I refuse?

Well, coming home late that night, I found the Judge fast asleep in my sheets. I climbed in beside him, making the mental resolution that I would, at least, be in the ascendant in my own room. So I exerted my authority in pushing the somnolent dignitary over to a very contracted portion of the bed. I had hardly got through chuckling over this despotic exercise of my rights, when the Judge began snoring vigorously. I waited some time for him to stop, but he did not. I could not sleep. The Judge was manifestly in the ascendant.

I therefore proceeded to kick him gently, then more ferociously; but this evidently hurt me more than it did him, for he still blowed his nasal horn away up in the Alpine heights of Dreamland.

I then placed myself elegantly on the top of the Judge, and, though he could not snore, he slept on, and—I was in the accudant.

I awoke in the morning, to find the order of things reversed—that is, the Judge on the top of me, and again manifestly in the ascendant.

The next day I spent in concocting schemes by which to checkmate the Judge. I came home late that night, and found him fast asleep. I quietly lit all the gas in the room, and, remembering his remark about tobacco, lit my pipe also. Drawing out some newspapers, I commenced reading and smoking.

The better part of the night thus passed, without the least effect on the Judge, while I, really sick with this extraordinary use of strong "nigger-head," bought for the occasion, was forced to go to bed in disgust.

I no sooner struck the bed than the Judge struck up a melancholy snore. This sounded to me like the bugle of my own retreat. It was aggravating.

I arose and put a heavy workstand on the top of the Judge, and a rocking-chair on the top of that. I then fell into a peaceful sleep, for I was now in the ascendant.

In the morning—that is, this morning—the Judge is gone, and so are all my clothes; and I write this in bed, where the mishap has temporarily confined me. Ellen, the hired girl, to whom I have just read the foregoing, says that she herself is now in the ascendant, because she does not have to make up my bed. She, moreover, consoles me with the assurance that the Judge will give me a sound "bating," when he sees this in print. But I am left in doubt, as well as in bed. Will somebody tell me who now really is in the ascendant?

ALLAQUIZ.

A Narrow Escape from a Dreadful Death.—At the Randolph Hotel in Oxford, lately built, two men and a boy employed on the premises, from fun and curiosity, got into a fire-proof plate-closet. Another servant closed the door. It fastened with a spring lock, and the horrified victims found themselves enclosed in an air-tight box, three feet square by six feet high. There was only just standing room. Their cries soon alarmed the establishment, and at last the key was found, but it broke in the lock. The door resisted every effort of sledge hammers. The escape of the prisoners was only effected after more than half an hour, by breaking through the wall with proper mason's tools. The boy had fainted, and one of the men was bleeding at the nose and mouth.—Churchman.

Bishop Butler said: "There is a kind of physiognomy in the titles of books, no less than in the faces of men, by which a skilful observer will as well know what to expect from the one as the other."

UNITED STATES STAMP DUTIES.

AS AMENDED MARCH 3, 1865.

CAREFULLY REVISED AND CORRECTED FOR THE CALIFORNIAN.

PENALTIES.

Penalty for making, signing, or issuing any instrument, document, or paper of any kind whatsoever, without the same being duly stamped, for denoting the duty hereby imposed thereon, $50; and the instrument shall be deemed invalid and of no effect; or for counterfeiting stamps or dies, $1,000, and imprisonment to hard labor not exceeding five years. For making, siguing, issuing, accepting, or paying any bill of exchange, draft, order, or note without stamp, $200. For selling proprietary cosmetics, matches, photographs, etc., without proper stamps, $10. For removing stamps on these articles, $50.

STAMP DUTIES.

Agreement Contract or Appraisement, not otherwise specified, each sheet or piece of paper..$0 05
Assignment of Mortgage, Lease, or Policy of Insurance, same as original instrument. Assignment of Patent Rigbt..... 05
Bank Checks, Drafts or orders, exceeding $10, at sight or on demand..... 02
Bills of Exchange, (inland,) or draft otherwise than at sight or on demand, or promissory note except bank notes for circulation,) or any memorandum, check or receipt, or any evidence of an amount of money payable on demand or at a designated time, for a sum not exceeding $100..... 05
Every additional $100, or fractional part... 05
Bill of Exchange, (foreign,) or letter of credit, drawn in, but payable out of the U. S., if drawn singly, the same rates as inland bills of exchange, or promissory notes.
If drawn in sets of three or more, for each bill of the set, where the sum shall not exceed $100 or its equivalent in any foreign currency in which such bill may be expressed, according to the standard value fixed by U. S. 02
Every additional $100, or fractional part... 02
Bill of Lading, or receipt for any merchandise or effects, to be exported to a foreign port or place..... 10
Bill of Sale, conveying any ship or vessel, or any part thereof, where the consideration does not exceed $500..... 50
For every additional $500, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Bill of Sale of personal property other than ships or vessels..... 05
Bond, indemnifying any person for the payment of money, where the amount recoverable is $1,000 or less..... 50
For every additional $1,000, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Bond for the due performance of the duties of any office..... 1 00
Bond of any other description, except such as may be required in legal proceedings, or used in connection with mortgage deeds, and not otherwise charged in this schedule..... 25
Charter-Party, ship, vessel or steamer, not over 150 tons, $1; 150 to 300 tons, $3; 300 to 600 tons, $5; over 600 tons.....10 00
Certificate of Profits, or any memorandum showing an interest in property, or accumulations of any incorporated company, for a sum not less than $10 nor exceeding $50..... 10
Exceeding $50 and not $1,000..... 25
For every additional $1,000 or fract'al part 25
Certificate of Damage, and all other certificates or documents issued by Port Wardens or Marine Surveyors, or other persons acting as such 25
Certificate of Deposit, not exceeding the sum of $100, 2 cents; exceeding $100..... 05
Certificate of stock in any incorporated comp'y, 25
Certificates, other than specified..... 05
Contract, broker's note or memorandum of sale of goods, stocks, bonds, exchange notes of hand, real estate, or other description of property, issued by any person acting as a broker, for each note or memorandum of sale..... 10
Deed or Conveyance of Real Estate, value not over $500, 50c.; every additional $500, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Entry of Goods at any custom-house, value not over $100, 25c.; over $100 and not over $500, 50c.; over $500.....1 00
For the withdrawal of goods from bonded warehouse..... 50
Gauger's Returns, quarterly, for quantity not over 500 galls. gross, 10c.; over 500 galls. gr. 25
Insurance (Marine, Inland and Fire) policy or renewal, premium not over $10, 10c.; $10 to $50, 25c.; over $50, 50c.; Life policy, under $1,000, 25c.; $1,000 to $5,000, 50c; over $5,000.1 00
Lease of lands or tenements, rent not over $300 per annum, 50c.; each add'l $200 or fraction. 50
Manifest, cargo to foreign port, registered tonnage not over 300 tons, $1; over 300 and not over 600, $3; over 600 tons.....5 00
Measurer's Returns, for quantity not over 1,000 bushels, 10c.; over 1,000 bushels..... 25
Mortgage, Trust deed, or personal bond for payment of money, $100 to $500, 50c.; each additional $500..... 50
Each assignment of mortgage, lease or policy of insurance, or renewal of the same, is subject to same duties as the original.
Medicines or Preparations, Perfumery and Cosmetics—Every package, box, bottle, etc., retailing for 25c. or less..... 01
Each additional 25c. or fractional part thereof, up to $1, 1c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof, over $1..... 02
Playing Cards—Each pack, price not over 18c., 2c.; from 18 to 25c., 4c.; 25 to 50c., 10c.; 50c. to $1, 15c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof..... 05
Photographs, Ambrotypes, Daguerreotypes or Sun Pictures, upon each, retailing for 25c. or less, 2c.; over 25 and not over 50c., 5c.; over 50c. and not over $1, 3c.; each additional $1 or fractional part thereof..... 05
Passage Ticket to foreign port, cost not over $35, 50c.; over $35 and not over $50, $1; every additional $50 or fractional part thereof.....1 00
Power of Attorney to sell or transfer stock, scrip, bonds, or collect dividends or int. thereon 25
To vote for officers of incorporated comp'y or society not religious, charitable or literary, or public cemeteries..... 10
To receive or collect rents..... 25
To sell, convey, rent or lease real estate.....1 00
For any other purpose..... 50
Probate of Will, or letters of administration, estate not over $2,000, $1; each additional $1,000 or fractional part thereof..... 50
Protest of note, bill, acceptance, check or draft, 25
Promissory Note—See Bill of Exchange, inland.
Receipt for payment of money or debt over $20, not being for satisfaction of mortgage, judgment or decree of Court, and receipt for the delivery of property..... 02
Warehouse-for property stored, not over $500 in value, 10c.; $500 to $1,000, 20c.; every additional $1,000..... 10
For any goods held in storage, and not otherwise provided for..... 25
Weigher's Returns, up to 5,000 lbs., 10c.; over 5,000 lbs..... 25
Writs, or original process, for commencing suit in Court of record, and in Court not of record, when amount claimed is $100 or over, except before Justices of the Peace, or in court of no greater jurisdiction as to damages, or in suit commenced by the United States or any State..... 50
Upon every confession of judgment, or cognovit, for $100 or over, except where tax for a writ has been paid..... 50
Writs or process on appeal from Justice's courts and other courts of inferior jurisdiction to courts of record..... 50
Warrant of distress—rent claimed under $100, 25c.; over $100..... 50

GREAT ATTRACTION!

THE FASHIONS ARE ALL THE GO!

Lamott, - - - Hatter,

IS NOW THE MAN! HE IS READY WITH HIS BROADWAY STYLES FOR THE Spring of 1866.

JUST SEE THE DIFFERENCE between his styles and the others in this city. There is style about his Hats that does not appear in others.

FACTS ARE STUBBORN THINGS!

LAMOTT, 227 Russ Block, is bound to be the LEADER of Fashion.

LAMOTT'S SPRING STYLES

show taste. It is a good thing that you have a man among you who is willing to take a stand outside of others, to introduce a style that is new, and not follow in the wake of others that are about one year behind the times.

GO TO HIS STORE FOR A HAT,

No. 220.....Montgomery street,

and get something that is new. mar22-3m

HEUSTON,

HASTINGS

& CO.

The Fashionable Clothiers

OF

SAN FRANCISCO,

Have established a TRUNK DEPOT in the basement of their Store equal to any in New York, and prices 20 per cent. lower than any other House in the city.

mar17-3m

BALD-HEADED GENTLEMEN,

Who frequent the Parquet of Theatres, exciting by their grotesque appearance the merriment of Ladies in the Dress Circle, would profit by using Little & Co.'s Chinese

Vegetable Hair Restorative.

The proprietors of this astonishing remedy for Baldness, confident of its infallibility, agree to refund the purchase money in every instance where its use for three months, according to directions, is unattended with success. Price per jar, $2.50.

Manufactured by Little & Co.; sold by

CHAS. E. HINCKLEY & CO.,

Chemists and Druggists,

Southeast corner of Clay and Kearny streets,

ap21 San Francisco.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S

Through Line to New York.

CARRYING THE U. S. MAIL!

Leave Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.

On the 16th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.

On the 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.

When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 19th connects with French Transatlantic company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamer for Southampton, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America.

Departure of 30th connects with English steamer for Tumaco, the port of the new mines.

STEAMERS FOR JUNE:

The following steamships will be despatched from San Francisco on the date given:

JUNE 18, - - - - - CONSTITUTION,
Captain F. R. Baby.
(Connecting with the NEW YORK, Captain Gray.)

JUNE 30th, - - - - - GOLDEN CITY,
Captain Watkins.
(Connecting with ARIZONA, Captain Maury.)

An experienced Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

Cabin Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Messrs. Wells, Fargo & Co.

The steamer will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock.

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdurff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

BREWSTER & CO.'S

Carriage Manufactory,

372 Broome steet, New York.

We desire to announce to our California friends that we have made extensive arrangements by increasing our works for the coming season, and with a view to

SUPPLYING THE WANTS OF CALIFORNIA,

will manufacture a style of work particularly adapted to city and country use, and in view of the destructive effects of city railroads on all light work, will give

PARTICULAR ATTENTION

to remedying the evil, and guard against it in work shipped to California.

CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, PHAETONS, COUPES, and Vehicles of every description, of our own manufacture, on hand and made to order.

Orders or communications should be addressed to

BREWSTER & CO.,
Of Broome street,

The firm of Brewster & Baldwin not being in any way connected with

BREWSTER & CO.,
Of No. 372, Broome street,

A CARD.

D. WARREN SMITH

Has commenced his business of canvassing the city for subscribers for

MIDDLETON'S OIL PORTRAITS,

the series of which embrace

WASHINGTON AND MARTHA, LINCOLN, WEBSTER, CLAY, DOUGLAS, GRANT, SHERMAN, and JACKSON.

Mr. Smith will call at the business places of our city, and at dwellings at reasonable hours, and exhibit some of the above beautiful Oil Portraits. He hopes to meet with success, as the Pictures are worthy a place in every drawing room in our country. AGENT'S HEADQUARTERS,

JOHN MIDDLETON & SONS,

my26 2m 404 Montgomery street.

THE BANK OF CALIFORNIA,

SAN FRANCISCO, MAY 9, 1866.

NOTICE.

At a meeting of the Stockholders of this Bank, held on the 5th inst., it was resolved to increase the Capital Stock of the corporation to $5,000,000, gold, to take effect on

THE FIRST DAY OF JULY NEXT,

and the President and Cashier were authorized to receive subscriptions for $2,000,000 of said capital stock. Parties desirous of subscribing will make application at the Bank, either personally or by letter, when further details will be given.

D. O. MILLS, President.
W. C. RALSTON, Cashier.

my20 1m

PISCO!

G. & F. MARTELL'S COGNAC;
JAMES HENNESSY'S Cognac;
STEAMBOAT GIN;
OLD TOM GIN;
IRISH WHISKY,
from Bond direct.

For sale by V. SQARZA,

my28 Liedesdorff street, San Francisco.

OCCIDENTAL HOMESTEAD Association,

OFFICE, - - - 305 MONTGOMERY STREET.

CAPITAL STOCK, $33,660.

102 SHARES.....$330 EACH.

THIS ASSOCIATION was formed to enable its members to obtain desirable homestead lots in this city at a cheap and easy rate, paying for the same by regular monthly instalments.

For this purpose they have purchased Blocks 499, 500, and 501, in the Western Addition to this city, bounded by Devisadero, Pine, Broderick and Clay streets.

Subscribers will pay an initiation fee of $5 on each share taken, to form a fund for defraying current expenses, and $11 per month for thirty months, commencing in April, 1866.

The property is within three blocks of the

TURK STREET RAILROAD,

IS NEARLY ALL ON THE GRADE,

and is most desirably located for Homestead purposes.

It is directly east from the lands of the California Association.

The property has been purchased on very reasonable terms, and offers a rare opportunity for investment.

A number of fine houses are in process of erection, and streets are being graded near this property, which will greatly increase its value.

When twelve monthly payments have been made, the property will be divided among the members in the usual manner, and each shareholder will receive a contract for a deed to the lot or lots to which he may be entitled, and have the privilege of taking immediate possession of the same.

The lots average 27 feet in front by 120 feet in depth. The whole amount due upon any lot may be paid at any time, and discount at the rate of one and one-half per cent. per month will be deducted therefrom.

Persons wishing to visit the lands of this Association will take the Turk street cars to Devisadero street, and thence go northerly along Devisadero to Pine street.

Twenty thousand dollars of the capital stock is taken, and the books are open for subscription to the balance at the office of the Secretary, where the Official Map of the Association can be seen, and full particulars obtained.

The Title to this Property is Perfect.

J. S. LUTY, Secretary,
Office, 305 Montgomery street, corner of Pine,
my19 3m Rooms 2 and 6.

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME!

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,

New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17

Have received a Large Stock of

GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING

—AND—

FURNISHING GOODS,

Which they are selling

AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.

jal 624 Clay street, San Francisco.

PACIFIC OCEAN HOUSE,

SANTA CRUZ, CAL.

THIS NEW AND COMMODIOUS HOTEL, built and furnished in accordance with the most modern and improved plans, and with a view to the comfort and convenience of its patrons, is now open for the reception of guests.

To those who have visited Santa Cruz, it is unnecessary to speak of its beauties and its natural advantages over all other places of Summer Resort.

To those who have not, the Proprietor can only say COME AND JUDGE FOR YOURSELVES—giving all who may come the assurance that his earnest endeavors shall be to make the Hotel, in all its appointments, equal to the surroundings of this delightful Sea side Resort.

GEO. T. BROMLEY,

Santa Cruz, April 4, 1866. Proprietor.

GEO. P. KIMBALL & CO.,

Carriage Manufacturers,

CORNER MARKET AND FOURTH STREETS,
San Francisco.

GEORGE P. KIMBALL.....W. H. KNIGHT.

We have always on hand a large assortment of Coaches, Carriages, Buggies, Thoroughbrace Wagons, Express, Grocery, Soda and Butcher Wagons and Lumber Gears.

CARRIAGES AND WAGONS

Of every description made to order and at shortest notice. Particular attention paid to the building of Wide Track Buggies and Wagons with Brakes, for mountain use. Orders from the country promptly attended to.

N. B. Kimball's Patent Goose Neck Trucks on hand.

mar2 3m

FURNITURE
AND BEDDING!

LARGEST STOCK!
LATEST STYLES!
The Best Workmanship,
AND LOWEST PRICES!
AT
Goodwin & Co.'s
FURNITURE WARE-ROOMS,
Nos. 508, 510, 518 and 528 Washington-st.
ja16 SAN FRANCISCO.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,
IMPORTERS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS
IN FINE CLOTHING,
AND
Gent's Furnishing Goods,
TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,
Nos. 200 and 202 Montgomery street,
Corner of Bush, - San Francisco.

JOS. WINTERBURN & CO.

J. WINTERBURN, V. A. TORRAS, W. HOFFSCHNEIDER.
(Successors to W. P. Harrison.)
Printers and Electrotypers,
413 TO 417 CLAY ST., (Below Sansome,)
SAN FRANCISCO.

ALL KINDS OF JOB PRINTING
Neatly and Promptly Executed.

ELECTROTYPING
Done at the shortest notice.
Stamps of all kinds made to order.
Printing in Spanish, French, German and Italian Languages, executed with correctness.
A "Mammoth" and two No. 3 Hand Presses FOR SALE very cheap. fe3 3m

SMOKE
THE PATENT
RUSSIAN CIGARETTES,
MANUFACTURED BY
GIBB & STAHL,
S.W. COR. KEARNY AND SACRAMENTO STREETS,
SAN FRANCISCO.

☞ For sale at all Cigar Stores. ap28 3m

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,
No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,
SAN FRANCISCO.

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Meta Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship-Work o all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.
All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.
Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.
JOHN P. GALLAGHER,
JOSEPH H. WEED.
mar10 3m

MONEY TO LOAN!
MONEY TO LOAN

On City Real Estate, Dwellings, Factories, Shipping and Merchandise, for such time as may be agreed for. Deposits received in small or large sums, at interest, by the CALIFORNIA BUILDING, LOAN AND SAVINGS BANK,
California street, (one door from Sansome street.)
my5 3m THOMAS MOONEY, President.

OCCIDENTAL
INSURANCE COMPANY,
S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

CHRISTOPHER CHRISTIANSEN, President.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary. mh25-tf

GREAT TRIUMPH!!
STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late GREAT INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.
The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."
A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,
M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.
PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York. my25

AYER'S
AGUE CURE,

FOR THE SPEEDY AND Certain Cure of Intermittent Fever, or Chills and Fever, Remittent Fever, Chill Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical Headache or Bilious Headache, and Bilious Fevers; indeed, for the whole class of diseases originating in biliary derangement, caused by the malaria of miasmatic countries.

This remedy has rarely failed to cure the severest cases of Chills and Fever, and it has this great advantage over other Ague medicines, that it subdues the complaint without injury to the patient. It contains no quinine or other deleterious substance, nor does it produce quinism or any injurious effect whatever. Shaking brothers of the army and the West, try it and you will endorse these assertions.
Prepared by J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco,
my26 2m and all Dealers.

DRY GOODS.
BARGAINS
IN
BLACK SILKS! And still a FEW DRESES
LEFT OF THAT BEAUTIFUL AND MUCH-ADMIRED DRESS GOODS,
"SUNBURST!"
S. MOSGROVE,
222 Third street, Colton's Building.
my23-tf

THE ONLY LIVING ASTROLOGER,
PROF. COHEN,
530 California street, San Francisco,

THROUGH HIS NATURAL GIFT, can give correct information on the Past, Present and Future, on any subject that may be required so as to avoid trouble. As evidence of his reputation, he has received over 18,000 consultations during his residence of six years in San Francisco! Consultation fee, $2. By letter, $3. Letter box, 104. It is not necessary to give the age. Office, 530 California street. Hours from 8 A. M. to 11 P. M. mar15 3m

COME AND SEE ME!

DR. JOHN HEALD,
DENTIST,
HAS REMOVED TO THE
CORNER KEARNY AND CALIFORNIA STS,
Where he will be pleased to see all old friends, and plenty of new ones. Every variety of Dental Operations performed in the best manner, and at prices that shall suit all persons. ☞ENTRANCE ON CALIFORNIA SREET.
ap28-3m

AMERICAN HOTEL,
Main street. - - - Petaluma.
mar24 6m EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors.

TO FARMERS, MINERS, LABORERS
And all those wishing to secure themselves a portion of
THE MOST VALUABLE AGRICULTURAL AND MINERAL LANDS OF MEXICO,
With an equal interest in the Profits of the Plantations of
THE MEXICAN SEA ISLAND COTTON COMPANY.

HOMES FOR THE POOR AND COMPETENCY FOR ALL.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The Mexican Sea Island Cotton Company, having reserved from their final Subscription List a Limited Number of Unassessable Shares, (the remaining shares of the Company having been taken up by the stockholders,) hereby offer the same for sale at the original subscription price of Sixteen Dollars each, payable in cash. Every holder of a share will be entitled to a portion of the Company's lands, having the privilege to settle thereon and participate in all the advantages and profits of the enterprise, and special privileges granted to this Company by an Imperial Decree of Maximilian, dated 9th January, 1866, without being subjected to the conditions of regular Government emigrants, this Company setting upon their own lands, secured by private purchase, and held under indisputable Spanish titles.
Shareholders becoming actual settlers will also have the privilege of any employment upon the Company's plantation. Portions of land will be allotted to settlers, to be held by them until a final division makes it their property.
For the purpose of increasing the value of the Company's land, and to create all the comforts of a home and society, it is the intention of the company to form a regular settlement and to lay out a town adjoining their present plantation into building lots, which will likewise be fairly divided between the 8,000 shares which comprise the total number of the company.
A large number of shareholders will settle upon the company's lands after the rainy season in October next. Many of them may then be employed by the company, or by others able to plant for themselves, or in developing the mineral resources of the adjoining mountains, etc., etc.
Men of all trades and professions, desiring to emigrate to Mexico, will have great advantages as shareholders of this company. They will find the lands already purchased for them at a rate equivalent to a free gift, to be held by each shareholder as his property, protected by the best Spanish titles, and the good will of all political parties now contending for the reins of government; the climate the most salubrious, and the land rich and fertile beyond description; every kind of game abounding; the rivers full of fish and with extensive beds of large oysters; altogether, a country where it is easy to procure a livelihood and the comforts of a home with less labor and less capital than in any other part of the world.
The extensive placer diggings, veins of silver, and solid quartz ledges, which are to be found in the immediate vicinity, and acknowledged to be rich and very extensive, can, by the presence of a number of settlers, be profitably developed. Many of these mines are to be found within the limits of the company's grant. The Sierra Madre or Mother Mountain of Mexico, situated only within about twenty miles from the coast, can be reached and developed with much greater facility than the more remote mines in the interior, and will therefore make the company's lands the most desirable to locate upon.
For Maps and Survey, and further information, apply at the office of the MEXICAN SEA ISLAND COTTON CO., Betge's Book Store, Russ House, Montgomery street, between the hours of 11 and 1 o'clock.
☞ All the assessable stock having been taken up by mutual subscription of stockholders, the company will have no more shares to offer after the limited number of unassessable shares have been placed, and shall prefer to sell these to actual settlers—a single share of which will be sufficient to entitle them to a large portion of the lands.

WE, THE UNDERSIGNED shareholders in the Mexican Sea Island Cotton Company, having investigated and satisfied ourselves of the importance of the enterprise, recommend the same to the public. We are convinced that under the management of the present officers of the company, with their efforts to induce industrious parties to locate upon the land, that the enterprise must become very profitable to all parties interested, and most beneficial to actual settlers.
S. R. Kettlewell, Blacksmith, 264 First street.
W. C. Mead & Son, 224 Sansome street.
M. O'Neil, Proprietor New Branch Hotel, 12 Sutter street.
Winall & Clapp, 505 Market street.
R. A. S. Repiton, M. D., 816 Montgomery street.
Wm. Rudolph, Gunsmith, 216 Pacific street.
G. Burkhardt, Jeweller, No. 209 Pacific street.
E. Keil, East India Tea Co., 631 Washington-st.
P. D. O'Regan, People's Bakery, corner Fourth and Jessie streets.
Wm. Meyer, Provision Dealer, 258 Third street.
John Duff, Painter and Paper Hanger, 642 Clay street.
A. E. Mylott, Importer and Dealer in Cigars and Tobacco, 305 Battery street
M. M. Baldwin, Jeweller, 433 Montgomery-st.
S. Baysen, Hatter, No. 346 Kearny street.
Mathew McCloskey, 644 Howard street.
San Francisco, March 20th, 1866. mar24

MR. AND MRS. COGILL
AND SONS,
Teachers of Dancing,
CONGRESS HALL,
On Bush-st., adjoinin Russ House.

SCHOOL—MONDAYS AND WEDNESDAYS. Ladies at 2 P. M. Gentlemen and Ladies at 7 1-2 P. M. Soirees every Friday Evening. Hall to rent. my5 3m

STOCKDALE HOUSE,
Corner Main and Oak streets, Petaluma.
ar24 6m H. STOCKDALE, Proprietor.

SPRING AND SUMMER STYLE
SILK

HAT,
1866,
INTRODUCED - - - - - - - MARCH 3
BY
McGANN & CO.,
FASHIONABLE HATTERS,
No. 654 Washington street,
Two doors below Kearny.

SPRING AND SUMMER STYLES.—Silk, Felt, Beaver, and other HATS for sale at the lowest prices.
CAPS of every description, suitable for all ages, made to order.
McGANN & CO., being experienced and skilled in all the branches of the manufacture of Hats, feel confident of giving entire satisfaction to their patrons. Every description of Hats and Caps made to order.
Remember, McGANN & CO., Practical Hatters, 654 Washington street, two doors below the Plaza.
☞ New Goods by every steamer. mar10

THE NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE INSURANCE CO
OF LONDON AND EDINBURGH.
ESTABLISHED, 1809.

Capital, - - - - - -	$10,000,000
Accumulated Funds, March 6, 1865, - -	11,522,500
Annual Income, - - - -	2,827,290
Deposit in California under State law, -	$75,000

GENERAL AGENCY FOR THE PACIFIC STATES AND TERRITORIES,
No. 422 California street, - - - San Francisco

Insurances effected at the lowest rates on buildings of both Brick and Wood, throughout the State, whether occupied as Stores, Dwellings, or Warehouses, together with their contents.
Also, VESSELS in port, with or without their Cargoes.
Also, QUARTZ MILLS and MACHINERY.
LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN immediately on adjustment.
WM. H. TILLINGHAST, Agent.
my19

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
CREATE A HEALTHY APPETITE!

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa and Constipation.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Invigorate the System and enliven the mind.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Overcome the effects of Drunkenness and Late Hours.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure all Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Are Palatable to the Taste.

They are the
BEST BITTERS IN THE MARKET,
And when once used will always be called for again.

They are made in the most careful manner
From Pure Old Wheat Whisky, Medicated from
Roots and Herbs
Especially adapted for the cure of all Stomachic Diseases and Liver Complaints.
Try Them and You will be Satisfied.
For sale everywhere by Druggists and Liquor Dealers or by
N. B. JACOBS & CO.,
423 Front street,
fe11-6m San Francisco

CALIFORNIA
Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS. CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA.....CAPT W. BROMLEY.
" JULIA.....CAPT E. CONCKLIN.

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.
Steamships AJAX, PACIFIC, ORIZABA, CALIFORNIA, ACTIVE, and SENATOR, leave as advertised, for Honolulu, Portland, Oregon, New Westminster, British Columbia, Victoria, (V. I.,) Santa Barbara, San Pedro, and San Diego.
Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets,
mar23 B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

THE FESTIVAL OF ST. CECILIA.

A MUSICAL ROMANCE.—BY M. A. E.

A SERENE effulgeace bathed the town of Allazoppa with iridescent glory. It was fitting that the Festival of St. Cecilia should be ushered in with the beaatiful melodies of harmonious Natare, swelliug in oae grand, choral psalm. Therefore had the midsummer beea chosen by the inhabitants of Allazoppa for the celebration of the glorious Festival of St. Cecilia.

Allazoppa is a couatry town, exactly in the middle of the State of Maiae. It is a small place, but the heart of its people is great. They love music; hence they are demi-gods, and walk among the sons and daughters of men with star-lit brows.

At the approach of this supernal, egregious, and tropically effulgeat festival, there was bnt one pulse in all Allazoppa; but one heart-throb. Venerable mea and women, with the snows of heaven resting lightly on their heads; youths and maidens with the divine illumination of harmony sparkling ia their moon-orbed eyes; and little childrea with bright heads glinted with the music of the ever-shining spheres, gathered together in the forest, and the white tents and green booths arose to the inspiriting, and ever-swelling crescendo of John Chittenden's violin.

For John was the most demi-god-like among these demi-gods; not being able to do an earthly thing. He could not have stood that test of sensuous intellect, which unmusical barbarians adopt: he did not know enough to go in whea it rained; aad had never been able to lathom the mysteries of the English alphabet. But what was all this to the glorious gift given unto him in the diaphonous texture of his inner soul! Music was to him the great exponent of the universe. His violin was the GREAT ALL, with which he bored into the ceatre of the existence of all created beings with whom he held musical communion, common speech being providentially denied him. Therefore was he selected as the orchestra to cheer their souls duriag the preparatious for the exalted rites of the next two days.

The spirit of nature trembled upoa every string of his violin, and was throwa off into the circumambient air by the silver-glidiag bow. Aad, like the night-winged crow, it uttered no note of music without good canse. It sang like a macon, mewed like a cat, barked like a dog, creaked like a wheelbarrow, aad squeaked like a mouse; and so cherubic were these strains that tents and booths rose like magic into the transpareat, etherial, etherons ether; aud, when night gleamed through the forest, all was complete.

When the morning beams, like the rythmic cadence which first steals in upoa a sense-steeped soul, touched the tree tops with thermal tints, the statue of St. Cecilia was lifted out of Squire Jones's yellow wagoa, and borne by reverent youths to the mossy mouad, where it was placed, aad then crowned with flowers by an octave of rosy-haed maidens.

The statue was carved by David Loper, a glorious impersonation of musical manhood, with his breadth of forehead, and full temples, aad humorous eyes, aud sweet, gentle mouth, and a heart free from every evil taint. For is not every musical soul perfected through the exquisite torture aad godlike pain that thrills the tissue of their brains, and permeates their pores with angelic dolce far niente, until they become lifted above the material and the selfish, and all human beings are so many notes with their quavers and crotchets, to be touched with a skilful hand, dolce piacevolmente, expressivo? And are not all lovers of music patieat, jast, tender, geacrous, genial, truthful, simple, earnest, liberal, temperate, magnanimous, faithful, simple, sublime, innocent, childlike, and yet with intellect as broad and deep as the Universe?

Such was David Loper.

His St. Cecilia was a faithful copy of those in the cartoons of Michael Angelo. She was made of maple wood; her face was round like the full moon; her eyes of devotional blue were apturned to heavea until only the whites were visible (which saved David a world of trouble.) Not being able to carve the hair artistically, his noble instincts taught him it were best to leave her without any, and to put upon her head, in lieu thereof, the red cap of liberty, which appropriate addition was hailed by the loyal citizens of Allazoppa with shouts and cheers of delight. In her left haud she held a guitar, and in her right, David, fired with aa ardent patriotism, had placed the star-spangled banner, immortal emblems, as he well knew, of the flag that waves from the battlements of the Eternal City, where music dwelleth for evermore.

"Naow," said Deacon Elias Root, "we will naite ia 'Old Hundred.'"

This was sung, then "Mead" and "Dundee;" aad then a "Breakfast Hyma," words and music by Musidora. It commeuced thus:

> "Oh, list to the mnsic of knives and forks!
> Hark, hark! away!"

After this bravura they all felt they could eat some breakfast.

After this "music of knives and forks" the Allazoppa Philharmonic, Classico-Musico, Diatonic Club gathered aroaad the mossy mound, aad played all through the following programme:

Sinfonie No. 6, in C major, op. 18.....Beethoven
[The third movement requiring a "Steinway," will not be performed.]
Overture—"Gideone Bando".....Mozart
Concerto for cymbals, No. 5.....Donizetti
1 Allegro. 2 Andante. 3 Finale.
Quartette—"Bonnie Eloise".....Chopin
Waltz—"Mazeppa".....Strauss
Sinfonie, L minor, op. 1,276,842.....Verdi
La, la, la, [Song without words.].....Mendelssohn
Phantasiestuecke on Themes.....Ford
Solo for Triangle.....Schumann
Cavatina—"Dixie".....Meyerbeer
Aria for Accordeon—"Mia propria Maria Anna".....Schubert

So dulcet, so brillante, so cantabile were these harmonies that the birds of Paradise, and robins, and swans, and jays, and nightingales all took wing from the forest trees, and from that day to this no birds are to be found iu that neighborhood save ravens, peacocks, and jackdaws.

The tiger paused in his ferny jungle; the lion lay down ia a juniper bush, and the mole looked out from its lair.

Musidora Breve was affected to tears when David played the "Aria" on his accordeon, and sang, "Aria propriagharia Anna," with that stoccato olfactoriousness for which the Allezoppites were celebrated; she felt she could bear no more, and she stole away from the group of maidens; bat she was not unobserved. David's soul was given to his accordeon, but his heart was Musidora's. Taking his beloved instrument with him he followed her.

I wish the people who iavent names for things (whoever they may be,) would give to writers of musical numbers some better and more distinctive title than Composers. But it saited Musidora. She was a composer. Her melodies were all of that sweetly gentle character which may appropriately be styled "dream music," having the delicious effect of soothing humanity into blessed, mental condition. It was observable that in her musical compositioas the tonics were entirely wanting.

Musidora was a misty, etherial snbstance, a lush essence, and as such, was adored by David Loper, who well knew that she moved in a cycle of transceadental apogee to which he could never wing his flight.

But though he could not hope to keep pace with her musical feet, he could with the fleshly members, and he soon overtook her. She was iu a rapture. Dogwoods, and water-lilies, and cnwslips, and dahlias, and chrysanthemums were pouring their melange of sweets on the summer air, like the fragrance from spice jars when first uncorked.

These children of the divine art walked speechlessly, hand in hand; he with eyes fixed upon her soul-lit counteaance, she, with eyes upturned to the cerulean firmament, was composing aa aria, which should express the essential essence of all the perfumes she was absorbing into the innermost chords of her musical soul. Such words as piano, forte, larghetto escaped her lips occasionally, and showed oa what lofty themes her mind was fixed.

Then to both of them there came a shock as of a mighty earthquake, and they found themselves seated on the grouud under a spreading fig tree. They had walked off a precipice. Great jagged rocks were around them, but they had escaped them all, and far above their heads towered the black rock from which they had fallen. They looked into each other's pellucid eyes, and David solemnly spoke.

"It is the power of music."

Slowly her soul returned to earth, "Haow?" said she.

"It is the power of music! You were composing. Oh, Musi-dory, my angel, my divinity!"

"Oh, my David!" she said, "thus the children of genius are rewarded." And she pressed the end of her little finger to her right temple, and meditated.

"Oh, Musidory, will you not name the day when our lives shall flow iu unison—when we caa make one common chord? O, tell me, will you not be my third, and fifth?"

She looked at him reproachfully. "The interlude is sweet," she said, "and we can make so many appogiaturas."

"Naow, Musidory, du name the day," persisted David.

"To-morrow, at the close of the Festival of St. Cecilia. Blessed is the union she presides over."

David had not anticipated this ready and sweet compliance. "Will she—will she—oh, Masidory, will she pay the rent of Simon Willis's house? and not a cent less thaa a huadred and fifty, for I asked him yesterday."

"We'll speak to him in noble harmonies which will soften his obdurate heart. No language but music will I utter."

"Except to the cook," added David.

She looked at hia with atrabilious eyes of sad reproach. "Forgive me," he cried, "that was a falsetto."

Here the frogs in a aeighboriug marsh barst into full chorus.

"Hark!" he said. "List to the celestial bassos."

"A perfect minor third," said she.

Just thea a godlike form appeared upon the rock above them.

"It is he!" they both shrieked. "It is Harmonicon." He saw them, and, seizing hold of the top of a beech tree, he lightly swung himself to the earth, and, having turned three somersets on the rocks, he calmly stood beside them. He was taller than the heighth of men. His hair was like barnished gold. His eyes were lode-stars. His brow was a crowa imperial.

"My childrea," he said in a voice that was tearfully cheerful, "I heard of your Festival, and have come hither to conduct the orchestra, and to write a great work. I feel that I shall do it, for I am filled with the tremaados of musical afflatus."

He looked at Masidora with a beseechiag love.

"You shall have her!" cried the noble and heroic David. "You need her, and you are great! The money I have spent in furniture and store clothes has gone for nought, for my soul is wedded to her, and, heaceforth, divorced from its proper mate, will give itself only to thee, my precious accordeon."

And he pressed to his heart his beloved iastrument, which heaved a heavy sigh.

Thus it is that music elevates the soal of man, aad renders it capable of mighty deeds of heroism.

Harmonicon sprang up, aad knocked his heels together. Such was his childlike simplicity.

Musidora's sighs mingled with those of the accordeon. She looked tearfully at David, aud then placing her hand in Harmonicon's, she murmured: "I am thine!"

They returned to the company. Harmonicon was greeted with that enthusiastic reverence which musical souls feel in the presence of what is immaterial.

"I'll write an oratorio!" he shouted, and gave three skips.

And all the people said: "Du tell, naow!"

And then they sang: "Kind Words Can Never Die," and separated.

Harmonicoa flew to David's tent—"Thy accordeon, paper and ink!" he cried. Swiftly aud silently David placed them before him, and then left him alone.

At midnight the oratorio was finished—that transcendentally amazing work of art which will endure until time shall be marked no more. Harmonicoa called the musicians together with a blast on the French horn. By sunrise they had all their parts perfectly learned. At aoon the people assembled, and for three hours listened to such harmonies as the youngest among them might never hope to hear again.

For Harmonicoa was Conductor, and his presence, and his living genias inspired the musicians with such fervid zeal, and strength of arms and lungs, that the grand choruses were heard for three hundred miles.

David had the proud position of first accordeon. His soul was filled with ecstatic gorgeousness while the auriferous melodies quivered and quirled around him. His bliss was great, and his music was greater.

At the coaclusion of the oratorio, when all the assembled multitude crowded around the great compnser to congratulate him, David rushed to his tent, overcome with varied emotions. He soon reappeared bearing a bundle, which he cast at the feet of Harmonicon.

"Take them, oh, great-hearted Masician!" he cried. "They are yours."

"What are they, my child?" said the seraphic Harmonicon.

"My store clothes," said the gushing and impressible David. "You have her—take them. I will give you all—my life; all—all, save my accordeon." And he played thereon such a perifocal and lachrymedial andante that all wept. And, in the last supernal wail, he drew out the instrument to such an extent that its heart broke, and with a mighty shriek it fell shattered from his nerveless hand.

"My punishment is just!" he sobbed. "I should have given thee that also. Henceforth there is nothing left for me but the auger and the plane."

And he disappeared.

And Harmonicon and Musidora were married forthwith, and the people of Allazoppa saw them no more.

But the statue still stands in the forest, and though the eyes have fallen out, and the nose has been knocked off, and the cap, aad flag, and guitar are all gone, still it is worthy of a visit from the curious and the devotional student of the glorious art of Music.—Saturday Press.

WHEN one of the old St. James-street clubs wished to get rid of a member, they met, broke up the club, aad immediately reconstructed it without him. A proprietary club in Lincola's-Inn-Fields, wishing to get rid of the notorious Q. P. Clifford, resorted to this expedient. "Very well, gentlemen," was his remark, "you have all retired from the partnership; I am the sole surviving partner, aad the house and furniture belong to me." He proved to be legally right, and it cost them several thousand pounds to buy him out.

SEE the advertisement of John Middleton & Sons' Great Preremptory Real Estate Sale, at Auction, on Monday next.

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.—The prettiest thing, the "sweetest thing," und tbe most of it for the least money. It overcomes the odor of perspiratiou; softens aud adds delicacy to the skiu; is a deligbtful perfume; allays headache aud inflammation, and is a necessary companion in tbe sick room, in the nursery and npon the toilet sideboard. It can bo obned everywhere at one dollar per hottle.

LYON'S MAGNETIC INSECT POWDER is instant death to Fleas, Ticks, Roaches, and everything of the insect species. It is one of the few articles that can be relied upon, and for a mere wo bits we can save the bites and hills of these little pests. None is genuine unless signed by E. Lyon, and hearing the private stamp of Demas Darnes & Co., New York.

S—T—1860—X. DRAKE'S PLANTATION BITTERS.

They purify, strengthen and invigorate.
They create a healthy appetite.
Tbey are an antidote to chauge of water aud diet.
They strengthen the system and enliven the mind.
They prevent miasmatic and intermittent fevers.
Tbey purify the breath mid acidity of the stomach.
They cure Dyspepsia and Constipation.
They cure Liver Complaint and Nervous Headache.

They are the best Bitters in the world. They make the weak strong, and are exhausted nature's great restorer. They are made of pure St. Croix Rum, the celebrated Calisaya Bark, roots and herbs, and are taken with the pleasure of a beverage, without regard to age or time of day. Particularly recommended to delicate persons requiring a gentle stimulant. Sold by all Grocers, Druggists, Hotels and Saloons. Only genuine when Cork is covered by our private U. S. Stamp. Beware of counterfeits and refilled bottles.

P. H. DRAKE & CO., New York.

"In lifting the kettle from the fire I scalded myself very severely—one hand almost to a crisp. The torture was unbearable. * * * The Mexican Mustang Liniment relieved the pain almost immediately. It healed rapidly, and left very little scar.

"CHAS. FOSTER, 420 Broad street, Philada."

This is merely a sample of what the Mustang Liniment will do. It is invaluable in all cases of wounds, swellings, sprains, cuts, bruises, spavius, etc., either upon man or beast.

Beware of counterfeits. None is genuine unless wrapped in fine steel-plate engravings, bearing the signature of G. W. Westbrook, Chemist, and the private stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., New York.

ALL WHO VALUE A BEAUTIFUL HEAD OF HAIR, and its preservation from premature baldness and turning gray, will not fail to use Lyon's Celebrated KATHAIRON. It makes the hair rich, soft, and glossy, eradicates dandruff, and causes the hair to grow with luxuriant beauty. It is sold everywbere. E. THOMAS LYON, Chemist, N. Y.

LYON'S EXTRACT OF PURE JAMAICA GINGER, for Indigestion, Nausea, Heartburn, Sick Headache, Cholera Morbus, &c., where a warming, genial stimulant is required. Its careful preparation and entire purity make it a cheap and reliable article for culinary purposes. Sold everywhere, at 50 cents per bottle. ap7-1y

THE MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK.—In regard to this company the "Wall Street Underwriter" says: "Figures are potent arguments to employ in dealing with the affairs of any Insurance Company. The Twenty-Third Annual Report of 'The Mutual,' made up to the first of February instant, is published in this paper, and the results manifested upon it are well worthy of consideration. In the first instance, as the prime result of the past year's work, the gross assets of 'The Mutual' show an Increase of.....$2,549,871 02

Total increase in premium account is...1,083,565 34
The total income of $3,853,065 80 is an increase of.....1,003,199 24
The full disbursements for 1860, were..1,540,130 63
Number of policies issued Feb. 1865 to Feb. 1866, were 8,600—insuring over double the number of 1864, and over double the amount, viz.....31,394,407 00

All approving comment seems hald in the presence of the truly eloquent figures presented by the 'Mutual Life.' No record of success can be more complete for any financial institution in the world. Wherever Life Insurance has been heard of on the American Continent, the name and prestige of the great 'Mutual' of New York, stand out pre-eminent. Many successful modern companies have grown up to prosperity through the example and influence of the 'Mutual Life.' Its great success, its wealth, and its manifest advantages have been constantly referred to as incontrovertible arguments in favor of Life Insurance." "The Mutual Life" has paid losses on this coast (including dividends,) during the last four years, to the amount of $101,819 02, and among the recent losses to he paid are policies for $5,000 each, of Francis E. Webster and W. L. Haven, who were both killed by the nitro-glycerine explosion at the office of Wells, Fargo & Co., in addition to which amounts, there is to be paid about $1,200 for accrued dividends. S. F. Examiner.

NO FORFEITING.—Heretofore, if a person holding a Life Policy became unfortunate, and could not raise the sum of money required to pay his next premium, his policy was declared forfeited. The BROOKLYN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK has decided to make EVERY POLICY it issues NON-FORFEITABLE, giving a PAID-UP POLICY to the party if unable to continue his payments of premiums. The dividends of the Brooklyn Life Insurance Company are settled annually in cash. This plan is far more acceptable to insurers than at the end of three or five years, as in other companies. The Brooklyn Life Insurance Company allows thirty days grace in the payment of premiums. Its policies are incontestable, and its losses are promptly paid. The Brooklyn Life Insurance Company offers every known plan of Life and Endowment Insurance. Get a pamphlet at the office, 240 Montgomery street, southeast corner of Pine, from Stephen T. King, General Manager, or David B. Arrowsmith, Local Agent.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

BUGGIES AND CARRIAGES.—If you want a trim neat, light, and yet durable style of buggy or carriage, go to Nos. 37 and 39 Webb street, between Sacramento and California, where you will find just such a vehicle as will suit your taste. POLLARD & CARVILL not only deal in these articles, but manufacture them to order, and do repairing, painting, trimming and blacksmithing with dispatch and neatness. Go and see them.—California Leader.

WAGONS.—Every species of wagons that any one can need, made of the best material, well fitted and finished, can be found at the Depot of MILLS & EVANS, 587 Market street, two doors from Second. Light, Express, Milk and Thoroughbrace wagons, also Lumber Gears, Extra Poles and Whiffletrees, with Lead Bars, are kept constantly on hand.—California Leader.

FOR the best finished, fashionable hats, go to McGann & Co.'s, Hatters, 654 Washington street, two doors below the Plaza.

RHEUMATISM.

Throughout this coast a great deal of suffering is experienced from Rheumatism. Weeks and even months of protracted and aggravated misery is endured by the victims of medical inefficiency and ignorance, which could be cured just as speedily as was Mr. Sparrow, whose testimony is given below, and is only the echo of hundreds of other cases. Dr. Bourne cures without medicines, which accounts for his extraordinary success. No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street entrance:

SAN FRANCISCO, September 6, 1861.

Dr. Bourne: Last Winter I was nearly dead, by an attack of inflammatory rheumatism. I suffered the most excruciating pains for about five weeks, without any hope of relief, when a friend, hearing of my illness, called to see me, and assured me that if I would stop "drugging and dosing," and go to you, that you would have me walking about the streets in three days. Sure enough, although I was utterly helpless, and conveyed to your house in a carriage, and carried into it by three stout men, and was by them lifted into the bath, yet, on coming out of the bath I was able to largely assist myself, doing much toward dressing, and without assistance walked from the bath to the carriage. On the fourth day, I discharged my carriage and walked with a friend's aid the entire distance to your house (nearly a mile) and home again, and so on until cured; and I had not taken more than twelve baths when, all pain and swelling having ceased, I felt myself a well man. And now I am happy to do this little service of publicly certifying to the simple truth, leaving it to do its own work among such of my friends and acquaintances as may chance to see this. Your friend, JOSEPH SPARROW.

A SUMMER AND WINTER MEDICINE.

"Great oaks from little acorns grow."

The worst diseases known to the human race spring from causes so small as to almost defy detection. The volumes of scientific lore that fill the tables and shelves of the medical fraternity only go to prove and elaborate these facts.

Then guard yourselves while you may. The smallest pimple on the skin is a tell-tale and indicator of disease. It may fade and die away from the surface of the body, but it will reach the vitals, perhaps, at last, and death be the result and final close. Maggiel's Bilious, Dyspeptic and Diarrhœa Pills cure where all others fail. While for Burns, Scalds, Chilblains, Cuts, and all abrasions of the skin, Maggiel's Salve is infallible. Sold by J. Maggiel, 43 Fulton street, New York, and all Druggists, at 25 cents per box.

WANTED—Agents to sell, by subscription only the most popular work ever written: "GRANT AND SHERMAN; their Campaigns and Generals." By the world-renowned historian, Hon. J. T. Headley, author of Washington and his Generals, Sacred Mountains, etc. Agents are taking as high as thirty subscribers per day, and all agree in pronouncing it the most saleable work they ever took hold of. The people want Headley's illustrated "GRANT AND SHERMAN," etc. For terms and territory, address E. E. SHEAR, No. 8 Montgomery Street, and Box 1,430, San Francisco, California

CONCORD WAGONS AND HARNESS.—The Pacific Concord Carriage Manufactory is prepared to supply the Pacific Coast with Concord wagons and harness made to order. The members comprising this firm have long been in the employ of the celebrated manufacturing house of L. Downing & Son, Concord, New Hampshire; so that parties wishing Concord wagons or harness can obtain just the same quality of article here and save 25 per cent. on their purchase money. We have seen some of their workmanship, and can recommend it to the public Address Belduke & Co., 820 Folsom street, between Fourth and Fifth.—San Francisco Leader.

DAINTY WORK.—About the daintiest work we ever saw were specimens of hair jewelry at the establishment of Mrs. C. Cook, 645 Clay street, between Montgomery and Kearny streets, yesterday. This lady manufactures all sorts of jewelry—watch-chains, earrings, finger rings, breastpins, and various other kinds of ornaments—from human hair. We witnessed the process of manufacture, and it is intricate and ingenious in the highest degree.—S. F. Examiner.

E GOLDSMITH & Co., at No. 646 Sacramento street, three doors below Kearny, have just received some beautiful new style Garibaldis and Zouave Jackets, that for taste and style are particularly worthy of the attention of our lady readers. They have also a fine assortment of Ladies' Furnishing Goods of the choicest description. French corsets for one dollar. A great variety of French toilet and fancy articles, the newest styles of buttons and dress trimmings, may always be found at Goldsmith's, 646 Sacramento street.

STOCKDALE HOUSE,
Corner Main and Oak streets, Petaluma.
ar24 6m H. STOCKDALE, Proprietor.

AMERICAN HOTEL,
Main street. . . . Petaluma.
mar24 6m EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors.

BOWMAN & CO.,
Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware,
mar24 6m Main street, Petaluma.

FRAGRANT SOZODONT FOR THE TEETH

READ the Testimony of a few of the many Eminent Clergymen and their Families of New York city, who, having used the Sozodont for a long time past, are convinced of its excellent and invaluable qualities, and give it their cordial commendation:

Rev. THOMAS DEWITT, Pastor Collegiate Ref. Dutch Church, Lafayette Place.
Rev. J. W. ALEXANDER, D. D., Presbyterian Church, Fifth Avenue.
Rev. J. B. WAKELEY, M. E. City Missionary.
Rev. W. F. MORGAN, D. D., Rector St. Thomas Church, Broadway.
Rev. E. H. CHAPIN, D. D., Pastor Fourth Universalist Church, Broadway.
Rev. SAMUEL COOKE, D.D., Rector St. Bartholomew's Church, Lafayette Place.
Rev. SAMUEL OSGOOD, D.D., Pastor Church of Messiah, Broadway.
Rev. B. M. ADAMS, M. E. Church, Duane street.
Rev. HEMAN BANGS, late Pastor Centenary M. E. Church, Brooklyn.
Rev. W. S. MIKELS, Pastor Baptist Church, Sixteenth street.
Rev. GEO. POTTS, D.D., Pastor Presbyterian Church, University Place.
Rev. E. E. RANKIN, Pastor Presbyterian Church, Forty-second street.
Rev. T. E. VERMILYE, D. D., Pastor of Col. Dutch Reformed, Lafayette Place.

FROM G. F. J. COLBURN, DOCTOR DENTAL SURGERY, NEWARK, N. J.

The Popular Dentrifice known as Van Buskirk's "SOZODONT," besides being a very pleasant addition to the toilet, contains ingredients that, if used according to the directions, will prove of the greatest utility to the health of the mouth and teeth.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS!

Sold by all Druggists and Perfumers.

HALL & RUCKEL,
je2 4m NEW YORK.

NEW BOOKS, JUST RECEIVED AT

A. Roman & Co.'s.

Ænone—A Tale of Slave Life in Rome.
The Queen Mother and Rosamond. By Swinburne.
May and December. By Mrs. Hubbard.
The Gold Brick. By Mrs. Ann H. Stephens.
Leighton Court. By Charles Kingsley.
Only a Woman's Heart. By Ada Clare.
The Toilers of the Sea. By Victor Hugo.
The Adventures of Reuben Davidger.
Citoyenne Jacqueline — A Woman's Lot in the French Revolution. By Sarah Tytler. 12mo.
The Story of Kenneth. By Bayard Taylor.
St. Martin's Summer. By Anne H. M. Brewster.
The Fortune Seeker. By Mrs. Southworth.
Six Months Among the Charities of Europe. By John De Liefde.
Palfrey's History of New England. 2 vols. 12mo.
Life of Robert Owen. 16mo.
The Song Book. By John Hullah.
The Republic of Plato. Translated by Vaughan & Davis.
St. Martin's Eve. By Mrs. Henry Wood.
Walter Goring. By Annie Thomas.
Cherry and Violet. A Tale of the Great Plague. By the author of May Powell. 16mo.
Geological Sketches. By Professor Agassiz.
The Phenomena of Plant Life. By L. H. Grindon.
Lucy Arlyn. By J. T. Trowbridge.
The War of the Rebellion. By H. S. Foote.
Letters of Life. By Mrs. L. H. Sigourney.
Stonewall Jackson. A Military Biography. Philip E. Cooke
Eccentric Personages. By W Russell, L. L. D.
Broken to Harness. A Story of English Dramatic Life. By Yates.
The Lost Tales of Miletus. By Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED BY EVERY STEAMER.

ENGLISH BOOKS IMPORTED DIRECT TO ORDER, WITH PROMPTNESS AND AT MODERATE PRICES.

PUBLIC AND PRIVATE LIBRARIES SUPPLIED.

A. ROMAN & CO.,
417 and 419 Montgomery street,
my19 San Francisco.

BEER AND WINE SALOON.

Faust Cellar.

Southeast corner of Clay and Montgomery streets.

A. L. THIELE.....Proprietor

WESTPHALIA HAMS, RUSSIAN CAVIAR, SARDINES, Anchovies, Swiss and Limburg Cheese, etc.; the finest Brands of Liquors, Wines, Cigars, and Seltzer Water, Wholesale and Retail.

☞ Fishing and Hunting Parties fitted out at the shortest notice. fe24

RATES OF POSTAGE.

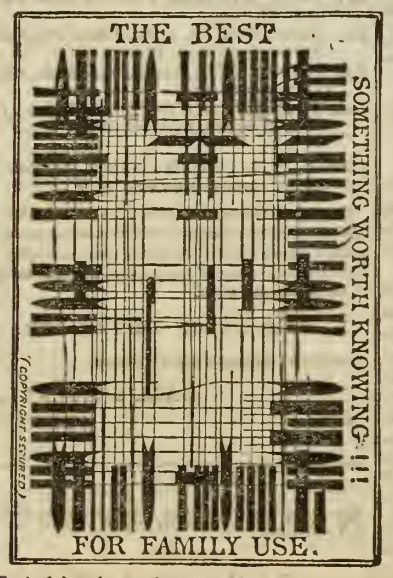
Valuable letters may be registered on application at the office of mailiug, and tbe payment of 20 cents registration fee.

Traasient newspapers, periodicals, blanks, proof-sheets, book manuscripts, pamphlets, and all mail able printed matter, except circulars and books, 2 cents for each and every 4 ounces. Donble these rates are charged for books.

Seeds, cuttiags, roots, etc., 2 cents for each 4 onnces or less quantity.

All packages of mail matter not charged with letter postage must be so arranged tbat the same can be conveniently examined by Postmasters; if not, letter postage will be charged.

Unsealed circulars, to one address, not exceeding tbree in number, 2 cents, and in the same proportion for a greater number.



No package will be forwarded by mail which weighs over 4 pounds.

All postage matter, for delivery within the United States, must be prepaid by stamps (except duly certified letters of soldiers and sailors;) otherwise, double the above rates will be charged on delivery.

Weekly newspapers (one copy only) sent to actual subscribers within tbe county where printed and published, free.

Letters to Cannda and other British North American Provinces, when not over 3,000 miles, 10 cents for each ½ ounce. When over 3,000 miles, 15 cents. Prepayment optional.

Letters to Great Britain or Ireland, 24 cents. Prepayment optioual.

To decipher, lower the top of the paper to an angle of forty-five degrees; theu close one eye, and read at yonr ease.

THE

AWARDED THE HIGHEST PREMIUM

AT THE

State Fair of California,

The only Fair on the Pacific coast at which any two double-thread Machines were exhibited in competition in 1865.

If there is a FLORENCE SEWING MAchine within one thousand miles of this office that is not working well, it will be attended to if I am informed of it, without expense to the owner. SAMUEL HILL,

General Agent,

111 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

THE

FLORENCE

SEWING MACHINE

RECEIVED THE FIRST PREMIUM, A GOLD MEDAL, at the Great Exhibition of the AMERICAN INSTUTE, - - - New York, 1865.

my10-3m

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL

Confectioners,

111 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter.

N. B.—All candies sold hy us are warraated to he manufactured from Stewart's double-refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock aad prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge. fe24-3m

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,

WHOLESALE

DRUGGISTS,

IMPORTERS OF

Drugs, Chemicals, Herbs,

PATENT MEDICINES,

PAINTS, VARNISHES,

ACIDS, DYE STUFFS,

OILS, PERFUMERIES,

TOILET ARTICLES,

BRUSHES.

We are just receiving, direct from Spain, a complete assortment of

CORKS! CORKS! CORKS

which we offer at lower prices than usual

DUSTING, PAINT, VARNISH, SHOE, SCRUB, HAIR AND TOOTH BRUSHES:

We have a splendid stock, which we offer at extremely low prices.

HERBS.

We have received, direct from the Shakers, all kinds of fresh Herbs, and intend to keep every article used of this description.

TILDEN'S SOLID AND FLUID EXTRACTS, PILLS, AND CONCENTRATED PREPARATIONS.

We have on haad, aad shall keep a full assortment of the above celebrated preparations, which we offer to the trade at such prices as will defy competition.

FLAVORING EXTRACTS.

A great variety, not to he equalled in the market as to quality and price.

Parties about purchasing would do well to give us a call and examine prices aud goods before purchasing elsewhere.

PLAIN AND GUM TEETH.

We have the largest assortment of any house on the Pacific coast.

GOLD FOIL.

We are manufacturing Foil which we can recommend to the profession as being a superior article. We also have on hand a full assortment, of all the various makers

VULCANIZERS,

DENTAL CHAIRS AND LATHES,

FILES,

VULCANITE AND GUTTA PERCHA,

FORCEPS,

BURRS, DRILLS AND EXCAVATORS,

MIRRORS, ETC.

We have, besides the above, every article used hy the Dentist, and are daily in receipt of all the new inventions in use.

Dentists will find it to their interest to call and examine our stock and prices before purchasing elsewhere.

R. H. McDonald & Co.,

CORNER SANSOME AND PINE STREETS,

SAN FRANCISCO.

AND

J STREET - - SACRAMENTO.

ap28-3m

THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD.

DR. MAGGIEL'S

Pills and Salve.

These Life-giving remedies are now, for the first time, given publicly to the world. For over a quarter of a century of private practice the ingredients in these

LIFE-GIVING PILLS!

Have been used with the greatest success. Their mission is not only to prevent disease, but to cure. They search out the various maladies by which the patient is suffering, and re-invigorate the failing system. To the aged and infirm a few doses of these valuable PILLS will prove to be

A VERY FOUNTAIN OF YOUTH,

For in every case they add new life and vitality, and restore the waning energies to their pristine state. To the young and middle-aged, they will prove most invaluable, as a ready, specific, and sterling medicine. Here is a dream realized, that Ponce-de-Leon sought for three hundred years ago, and never found. He looked for a fountain that would restore the old to vigor and make youth ever

AN ETERNAL SPRING!

It was left for this day and hour to realize the dream, and show in one glorious fact, the magic that made it fair.

THESE FAMOUS REMEDIES

Cannot stay the flight of years, but they can force back, and hold aloof, diseases that might triumph over the aged and the young. Let none hesitate then, but seize the favorable opportunity that offers. When taken as prescribed—

FOR BILLIOUS DISORDERS

Nothing can be more productive of cure than these Pills. Their almost magic influence is felt at once; and the usual concomitants of this most distressing disease are removed. These remedies are made from the purest

VEGETABLE COMPOUNDS.

They will not harm the most delicate female, and can be given with good effect in prescribed doses to the youngest babe.

FOR CUTANEOUS DISORDERS

And all eruptions of the skin, the SALVE is most invaluable. It does not heal externally alone, but penetrates with the most searching effects to the very root of the evil!

Dr. Maggiel's Pills

Invariably cure the following diseases:

Asthma,
Bowel Complaints,
Coughs,
Colds,
Chest Diseases,
Costiveness,
Dyspepsia,
Diarrhœa,
Dropsy,
Debility,
Female Complaints,
Fever and Ague
Headache,
Indigestion,
Influenza,
Inflammation,
Inward Weakness,
Liver Complaint,
Lowness of Spirits,
Ringworm,
Rheumatism,
Salt Rheum,
Scalds,
Skin Diseases.

NOTICE.—None genuine without the engraved trade-mark around each pot or box, signed by Dr. J. Maggiel, 43 Fulton st., New York, to counterfeit which is felony.

☞ Sold by all respectable Dealers in Medicines throughout the United States—at 25 cents per box or pot. ap14-1y

A CARD.

M. Howard's Hair Restorative,

NO. 315 MONTGOMERY STREET,

SAN FRANCISCO.

THE ABOVE PREPARATION, which has been recently discovered and patented, is purely a Vegetable Extract

The undersigned are fully aware of the many unsatisfactory and useless preparations for restoring hair that have been introduced to the public, and how little confidence is to be placed in any pretensions to restoring the hair to bald heads, but,

HAVING TRIED MR. HOWARD'S PREPARATION, we are able to state that it not only prevents the Hair from falling out, but absolutely reproduces it, and that we now have good suits of Hair growing where we were entirely bald. Therefore, as a matter of justice to Mr. Howard, and of consolation to bald heads, we tender him this testimonial Mr H. keeps the article for sale in bottles, with directions for its use, or applies it himself, as may be desired.

San Francisco, April 6, 1866.

Frank M. Thayer,	R. A. Redman,
W. S Davis,	J. O. Rountree,
T. A. Hall,	G. W. Gamble,
A. C. Knox	J. W. Miller,
Bradbury Sanborn,	E. C. McComb,
George Wells,	D. C. Ross,
Joseph Wells,

ap7

FRANKLIN PRINTING OFFICE,

509 CLAY STREET, (near Sansome,)

SAN FRANCISCO,

"The oldest aad most complete Book and Job printing establishment in California. All descriptions of work neatly executed at low rates."

ja1-tf FRANK EASTMAN, Proprietor.

J. PEIRCE,

FURNITURE AND

Bedding Warerooms.

NOS. 415, 417, AND 419 CALIFORNIA STREET, NEAR MONTGOMERY.

THIS STOCK OF FURNITURE, etc., was selected with great care, and special attention given to the wants of this market, ENTIRELY AT THE EAST. It is NOT COMPOSED OF REFUSE GOODS, ODDS AND ENDS OF OTHER HOUSES that have lately closed out here, but CONSISTS ENTIRELY OF NEW GOODS, made after the latest patterns and in the most durable manner.

The present Stock is fully TWICE as large as that of any other house here. Parties having any doubts of this, or that the assortment is not superior to any in the city, can easily satisfy themselves by calling.

The stock of Case Goods is larger than ever before.

J. PEIRCE,

Ware-rooms 415, 417 and 419 California street,

mh16-3m SAN FRANCISCO.

B. F. STERETT, 533 Clay St., a few doors below Montgomery, continues to print all kinds of Books, Bills, Circulars, Cards, etc. in superior style, and at reasonable prices.

T. RODGERS JOHNSON,

ODD FELLOWS' HALL, 329 Montgomery street,

mh30 3m San Francisco.

NATHANIEL GRAY,

UNDERTAKER,

CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,

641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB

Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

mar17-3m

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,

PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,

517 CLAY STREET,

Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,

SAN FRANCISCO.

SCHOOL FURNITURE.

RANKIN'S PATENT SCHOOL DESK;
Liquid Slating for Blackboard;
ARITHMETICAL FRAME;
Babbitoniaa System of Writing—the Best System know

W. HOLT,

de9 305 Montgomery street, Room No 2.

DISTANCES FROM SAN FRANCISCO
To various points:

To Fort Point, 4 miles, by omnibus, four trips a day.
Lone Mountain, 3, street railway.
Seal Rock, 6, cars and omnibus, two trips a day.
Mission Dolores, street railways; Ocean House 8.
San Mateo, 20, railroad.
Crystal Springs, 23, railroad and stage
Half-Moon Bay, 29, do. do.
Redwood city, 30, do.
Mountain View, 38, do.
Santa Clara, 47, do.
San Jose, 50, do., or steamer and stage, 54.
Alviso, 46, steamer, daily.
Almaden mines, 67, steamer and stage; or by railroad and stage, 64.
Santa Cruz, 78, railroad and stage.
Oakland, 8, steamer and railroad, six trips a day.
Alameda, 11, steamer, three trips a day.
San Leandro, 15, steamer and railroad.
Mission San Jose, 34, steamer, railroad and stage.
Warm Springs, 37, do. do.
Benicia, 30, steamer leaves at 4 P. M. daily.
Sacramento, 117, do. do.
Stockton, 117, do. do.
Martinez, 33, do.
Pacheco, 38, steamer and stage.
Diablo Coal Mines, 44, steamer and stage.
Suisun, 50, steamer, or 54 by steamer and stage
Vallejo, 28; Mare Island, 37; Napa city, 50
White Sulphur Springs, 67, stage from Napa.
Geyser Springs, 118, do. do.
Sonoma, 52, steamer, tri-weekly.
Petaluma, 48, steamer, daily.
Healdsburg, 80, stage daily from Petaluma
San Quentin, 12, steamer; Farallone Islands, 20.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,
1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, situated on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

It was built expressly for a Hotel, with all the modern conveniences attached to it.
Gas and water are supplied throughout the House.
Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

LARGE READING ROOM

Attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr.,
my6-3m Proprietor.

THE PACIFIC
INSURANCE COMPANY,
HAVING ADDED
MARINE INSURANCE
TO THEIR BUSINESS, ARE NOW PREPARED TO ISSUE POLICIES ON
Marine, Inland Navigation, and Fire Risks,
ON THE MOST FAVORABLE TERMS.

Office, 436 California street.

J. HUNT, President
A. J. RALSTON, Secretary. my5-3m

MARKET STREET RAILROAD
CHANGE OF TIME TABLE.

ON AND AFTER AUGUST 1, 1865, Trains will start from the City and the Mission every hour instead of every forty minutes, as heretofore.

Trains from the City will start at the odd hour, commencing at 6:30 A. M. and every hour thereafter until 11:30 P. M. mh25 F. McCOPPIN, Superintendent.

WHO WANTS
Profitable Employment
OR PAYING INVESTMENTS?

PARTIES desirous of getting into OLD-ESTABLISHED BUSINESS CONCERNS, either as Partners or Sole Proprietors in Mercantile, Manufacturing, Trading, or any kind of business in city or country, can do so by applying at my office.
Men desiring profitable situations in business houses, with MONEY TO LOAN on satisfactory security, can secure such appointments.
Partnerships negotiated, where large or small capital is required.
Business Interests sold quickly for cash.
Real Estate bought and sold.
Help furnished for all kinds of employment.
Situations obtained for parties desiring employment.
S. P. WHITMAN,
Property, General Agency, and Business House, 313 Montgomery street, San Francisco. mar17-3m

THE CALIFORNIAN.

TERMS—FIVE DOLLARS PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE

A PAPER FOR THE TIMES

DEVOTED TO LIVE TOPICS,

THE DISSEMINATION OF A PURE LITERATURE, DEVELOPMENT OF HOME TALENT,

AND THE

BEST INTERESTS OF CALIFORNIA.

Published

EVERY SATURDAY MORNING

AT

532 MERCHANT STREET,

BY THE CALIFORNIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY.

A. A. STICKNEY, J. P. BOGARDUS, W. J. BINGHAM, C. H. WEBB

No effort will be spared to enable THE CALIFORNIAN to appeal to the Public for support, not only as the

BEST JOURNAL ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

But also as being

THE EQUAL OF ANY ON THIS CONTINENT

THE BEST TALENT OF THE STATE

Is employed upon THE CALIFORNIAN.

The voluntary notices bestowed by the press of the Eastern cities have been no less warm and congratulatory than those which we have received at the hands of our cotemporaries of the Pacific. Their verdict is unanimously in favor of

THE CALIFORNIAN

and all join in pronouncing their unqualified approval of its unequalled merits.

Its reputation is now fully established. It is not

EXCELLED BY ANY LITERARY JOURNAL

on the Continent.

☞THE TERMS OF THE CALIFORNIAN are $5 per year, mailed to subscribers, invariably in advance; 50 cents per month served by carriers.

All communications and correspondence must be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN,

No 532 Merchant street,

SAN FRANCISCO.

FULL SETS

FROM THE COMMENCEMENT OF THE CALIFORNIAN TO THE CLOSE OF VOL. IV.

Can be procured at the Office. Price, bound in muslin, per volume, $4. Two volumes bound together, $7. Unbound, per volume, $3.

CARRINGTON & CO'S
GENERAL PURCHASING AGENCY,
No. 40 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

IF YOU WANT
Books, Prints, Clothing, Instruments, Music, Tools, Weapons, Sporting Implements, Fancy Stock, Jewelry, Silver or Plated Ware, Wines, Cigars, Fine Groceries, Furniture; in short, any Article, large or small, singly or in quantity, for Ladies' or Gentlemen's use or wear, or for Dealers' Supplies, from a seal-ring to a steam-engine—a Cameo or a Cashmere; lace or leather,
SEND ON YOUR ORDERS.

Orders may be given in French, Spanish or German.

COMMISSION CHARGE, - - - FIVE PER CENT.
Address:
CARRINGTON & CO.,
40 Broadway, N. Y.

VINCENT'S COLD PREVENTIVE.
A Sure Cure
FOR COUGHS, COLDS, BRONCHITIS
DYSPEPSIA,
CONSUMPTION,
NIGHT SWEATS, AND PULMONARY DISEASES.

Read the following:

REMARKABLE CURE.

San Francisco, September 5th, 1865.

I desire to make known the fact that I was afflicted with a very bad cough for fifteen years, and, during this time, used everything which I could hear of without getting the better of my disease, until I tried Dr. D. B. Vincent's Cold Preventative or Cough Mixture, which cured me sound and well.
NEWTON MOORE.

This is to certify that my wife has been troubled with indigestion for nearly eighteen months, and, by using one bottle of Dr. Vincent's medicine, has been completely cured.
San Francisco, April 6th, 1866.
JOHNSON J. THOMAS.

San Francisco, July 17th, 1865.

I hereby certify that, having had a Cough some five months since, which had troubled me for two years, and I was so bad that I was able to do but little labor of any kind, and could not walk fast without putting myself out of breath. I was so far gone that I had chills over me and night sweats, and had what other physicians called disease of the lungs. I had been doctoring a part of the time for the last year, when I saw Dr. D. B. Vincent, and he gave me a small vial of medicine, which relieved me of the chills and night sweats, and the cough entirely went away, and I do not take cold so easy, and my health is much better in every respect. My appetite is much better; and I heartily recommend all others who are afflicted with similar complaints to him.
JOHN O'NEILL, National Hotel.

The above named diseases nearly all originate from the same or similar causes, and
THE COLD PREVENTIVE
will cure all of them. It is a sure cure for Dyspepsia. Price, 50 cents per bottle.

D. B. VINCENT, M. D.,
PHYSICIAN AND OCULIST.
Treats all diseases successfully on the Electric system. Particular attention paid to treating all Diseases of the Eyes, Rheumatism, Paralysis, etc. Cures guaranteed, or all moneys refunded—in most cases even where others fail.
☞ OFFICE—No. 103 Kearny street, first floor, where he can be consulted at all hours, unless professionally engaged. All orders from the country promptly attended to. ap7

FARRAND'S OSCILLATING
Amalgamator.

THIS UNRIVALLED IMPROVEMENT FOR THE REduction and amalgamation of Gold and Silver Ores, is now running daily at No. 206 Commercial street, between Front and Davis.

THIS AMALGAMATOR INVOLVES
NO COMPLICATED MACHINERY
And possesses the following advantages over all others now in use:

1st. It is capable of doing double the amount of work of the ordinary Pans, at a saving of more than one-half the power.
2d. It reduces the pulp finer, thereby producing a better result.
3d. It requires less quicksilver by one-half at a charge, whilst the loss by trituration is comparatively nothing.
4th. As an Amalgamator for gold contained in sulphurets, as also for very fine or flour gold, it has no equal.
5th. This Amalgamator involves no complicated machinery, and is less liable to get out of order than any of the pans.

DESCRIPTION OF FARRAND'S AMALGAMATOR.

In offering this Amalgamator to the public the inventor does not claim any new or scientific method of extracting the precious metals from the ores; he merely claims a new and simple combination of mechanical principles, whereby a great saving of power (full one-half in amount) is effected. The capacity of the machine varies with its size. The smallest, or prospecting size, will reduce 400 lbs. in three hours, and can be easily worked by the power of one man. The largest size will work 1,500 lbs in three hours, or six tons in 24 hours, with an application of a trifle more than one-horse power. This saving of power, as all mill-men are aware, is an important consideration particularly where fuel is scarce. The power so saved in running the Amalgamators may be advantageously employed to an increase of stamps, and thus proportionally increasing the work of the mill. This machine consists of a semi-cylindrical, trough-shaped vessel, in the interior of which is furnished with moveable concave dies, to be replaced when worn out, as in ordinary pans. The mullers are convex, and attached to a substantial rock shaft, by which they are moved back and forward by crank or eccentric motion. The mullers are held to their places by springs of moderate strength, the pressure of which may be easily regulated. The oscillating motion of the mullers serves to keep the pulp in a constant state of agitation, thoroughly mixing it, and passing it under the mullers without resort to any of the various expedients employed in Pans where a circular motion is maintained.

Trials made with this machine in the presence of experts, during the last six months, have been pronounced highly satisfactory. It is peculiarly well adapted to employment by small mining operators in distant localities, as it can readily be taken to pieces and packed upon mules.

A large size machine is constructed without dies or mullers, but simply with arms to act as stirrers, to be used in connection with several of the Amalgamators as a "Separator," as it is found that the peculiar motion given to these arms, in connection with the concave shape of the body of the machine, renders it most effectual for such a purpose.

W. D. FARRAND

ALLEN'S
LUNG BALSAM!

A CERTAIN CURE FOR
COUGHS, COLDS, INFLUENZA, NIGHT SWEATS, BRONCHITIS, SPITTING OF BLOOD, ASTHMA, WHOOPING COUGH, CONSUMPTION,
And all Diseases of the
CHEST AND LUNGS!

This celebrated Cough Remedy effects a speedy cure by producing a free and easy expectoration, heals abscesses of the lungs, prevents unhealthy secretion of the bronchial tubes, and removes from them those accumulations of morbid matter which cause oppression of the breast, difficulty of breathing, etc, soothes irritation of the respiratory organs which produces cough.
PRICE.....ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE.
Sold by all Druggists.
HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
401 Battery corner of Clay,
ap27-3m San Francisco.

DR. HUMPHREYS'
Homœopathic Specifics

Have proved, from the most ample experience, an entire success—simple, prompt, efficient and reliable. They are the only Medicines perfectly adapted to popular use—so simple that mistakes cannot be made in using them; so harmless as to be free from danger, and so efficient as to be always reliable. They have received the highest commendation from all, and will always render satisfaction.

No. 1	cures Fevers, Congestion, Inflammations.	0 25
" 2	cures Worms, Worm Fever, Worm Colic,	25
" 3	cures Crying Colic, or Teething of infants	25
" 4	cures Diarrhœa of children or adults	25
" 5	cures Dysentery, Griping, Bilious Colic,	25
" 6	cures Cholera Morbus, Nausea, Vomiting,	25
" 7	cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis	25
" 8	cures Neuralgia, Toothache, Faceache.	25
" 9	cures Headaches, sick-Headache, Vertigo,	25
" 10	cures Dyspepsia, Bilious Stomach	25
" 11	cures Suppressed, or Painful Periods	25
" 13	cures Croup, Cough, difficult Breathing,	25
" 14	cures Salt Rheum, Erysipelas Eruptions,	25
" 15	cures Rheumatism, Rheumatic Pains	25
" 16	cures Fever and Ague, Chill Fever, Agues	50
" 17	cures Piles, blind or bleeding	50
" 18	cures Opthalmia, and Sore or Weak Eyes,	50
" 19	cures Catarrh, acute or chronic, Influenza	50
" 20	cures Whooping-Cough, violent coughs.	50
" 21	cures Asthma, oppressed Breathing	50
" 22	cures Ear Discharges, impaired Hearing	50
" 23	cures Scrofula, Enlarged Glands, Swellings	50
" 24	cures General Debility, Physical Weakness	50
" 25	cures Drapsy, and scanty Secretions	50
" 26	cures Sea-Sickness, sickness from Riding,	50
" 27	cures Kidney Disease, Gravel	50
" 29	cures Sore Mouth, Canker	50
" 31	cures Painful Periods, even with Spasms	50
" 32	cures Sufferings at change of life	$1.00
" 33	cures Epilepsy, Spasms, St. Vitus' Dance.	1.00
" 34	cures Diphtheria, Ulcerated Sore Throat,	50

FAMILY CASES.

35 vials, morocco case, and book.....$10 00
28 vials, morocco case, and book..... 8 00
20 vials, morocco case, and book..... 6 00

These Remedies, by the case or single box, are sent to any part of the country, by Mail or Express, on receipt of the price.
HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
ap27-3m San Francisco.

A BEAUTIFUL COMPLEXION!
Secret of Beauty!

USE GEO. W. LAIRD'S

See that the name,
GEO. W. LAIRD,
is stamped
ON THE BOTTLE.
No other is Genuine.

BLOOM OF YOUTH,
OR
LIQUID PEARL!
The best article in the world for Preserving and Beautifying the Complexion and Skin.

This magnificent Toilet Article is prepared only by GEO. W. LAIRD, 74 Fulton street, New York, formerly 483 Broadway.
Sold by Druggists everywhere.
HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay.
ap27-3m San Francisco

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE - - - - - - - - - PROPRIETOR.
C. L. GRAVES - - - - - - - STAGE MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON - - - - - - - TREASURER.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON AND EVENING, JUNE 16, 1866.

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Dress Circle and Orchestra, - - - - - - - $1 00
Parquet, - - - - - - - - - - 50
Upper Circle, - - - - - - - - - - 25

SATURDAY AFTERNOON:

HARRY COURTAINE'S SPECIALTY

BOB TICKET.

Also, will be produced the Taming of the Shrew.

SATURDAY EVENING:

Mr. John McCullough,

SUPPORTED BY THE LEGITIMATE COMPANY,

will appear in the comedy of

A WONDER;

Or, A Woman Keeps a Secret!

EDWIN FORREST

WILL PLAY

ON MONDAY AND TUESDAY EVENINGS,

JUNE 18TH AND 19TH,

JACK CADE!

Reserved Seats.....$1 50
Dress Circle and Parquet..... 1 00
Upper Circle..... 50

LOW PRICES

IN

Gents' Furnishing Goods,

AT

WARD'S SHIRT STORES,

323 MONTGOMERY STREET,

AND CORNER OF MARKET AND THIRD STREETS,

SAN FRANCISCO.

P. S.—Printed directions for self-measurement for Shirts and Price Lists of Goods sent free by mail.

ap21-3m

SUMMER MEDICINE.

PURIFY THE BLOOD

AND

Constitution,

WITH

LE DOYEN'S

SARSAPARILLA,

YELLOW DOCK,

IODINE ALTERATIVE.

CRANE & BRIGHAM, Agents,

my19 1m SAN FRANCISCO

NATURE UNVEILED,

AT THE

PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE

Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,

ja27-tf between California and Pine.

JOHN MIDDLETON & SON,

REAL ESTATE, STOCK AND GENERAL

Auctioneers.

Office and Salesroom, 404 Montgomery street, one door from Northeast corner California and Montgomery.

Regular Real Estate Auction Sale Day, MONDAY.

W. W. LAWTON.....NOTARY PUBLIC

Positive and Peremptory Sale

OF

REAL ESTATE

AT AUCTION!

EIGHTY BUILDING LOTS,

ON CREDIT,

To Close a Partnership!

MONDAY, - - - - JUNE 18, 1866,

AT TWELVE O'CLOCK, NOON.

We will Peremptorily Sell, on Easy Terms, to close a Concern, at our Salesroom, on the above date, some of the most beautifully located

Homestead Lots

EVER OFFERED AT AUCTION IN THIS CITY,

LOCATED ON

CORBETT, MISSION,
VALENCIA,
FALCON, WILLOWS, DOLORES,
GUERRERO,
COLUMBIA,
AND EAGLE STREETS,

Being part of

MISSION BLOCKS NOS. 69 and 70,

And all of Horner's Addition Block 19.

These Lots, from their beautiful location, commend themselves to the attention of all parties desirous of purchasing good HOMESTEAD or BUSINESS LOTS.

The MARKET STREET CARS pass immediately in front of some of them, and within a block or two of the farthest away.

All the Lots are level, and about on the grade. Valencia and Corbett streets are graded, and Valencia street is macadamized.

Columbia and Eagle streets are well built up, and Eagle street is macadamized. Block Nineteen, surrounded by these streets, is one of the most beautifully located blocks in all the neighborhood of the Mission.

The lots on Corbett, Valencia, Mission and Willows streets recommend themselves to purchasers.

The property will be found to be fully posted with Diagrams on the premises, showing the Subdivisions.

Maps for distribution will be prepared, and can be had at the Auctioneer's Office.

TERMS—One-Third Cash; balance in One or Two Years, at 10 per cent. per annum interest, secured by Mortgage on the premises.

JOHN MIDDLETON & SONS,

je16 AUCTIONEERS.

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE

Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,

Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,

ja27-tf between California and Pine.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S

SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

BATHS.
Dr. Boarne's, (Medical,) 10 Post, near Montgomery.

AUCTIONEERS.
Olney & Co., removed to 418 Montgomery street.

BUSINESS AND PROPERTY AGENCY.
S. P. Whitman, 313 Montgomery st.

BOWLING ALLEYS.
Cosmopolitan, White & Lafferty, Cosmopolitan Hotel.
Wholers & Starke, Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.)

BOOKS.
A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
Fiach & Co., 133 Montgomery street.
I. M. Wentworth & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine st

COLLECTOR.
B. Pulvermnn, 614 Montgomery—Office hours, 1 to 3 P.M.

CLOTHING.
H M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.
Dell, Crannn & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.

COPPER CRUSHER AND SAMPLER.
S. W. Howland, 24 California street, (at Thomas' Mill.)

DRESS TRIMMINGS, WORSTEDS, ETC.
Mrs. Norcross, 5 Montgomery street (Masonic Temple.)

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Dr. A. N. Clark (late Knowles & Clark) removed to 410 Kearny.
Dr. Wm. B. McAllister, 221 Third street.
Whitcomb & Dyer, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.
Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.

DRUGGISTS.
R. H. McDonald & Co., (Wholesale) Sansome, cor. Pine.
Shepardson & Gates, (successors to R. Hall & Co.,) corner Sansome and Commercial.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.
Cal. Collegiate Institute, Miss M. Lammond, 68 Silver.
Miel Institute, Miss Florence James, 55 South Park.
Pacific Business College, 751 Market street, above Third.

FURNITURE.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
J. Peirce, 415, 417 and 419 California street.

GROCERS.
N. Boschen, corner Fifth and Minna.
Slosson & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
J. J. Miller, corner Sutter and Leavenworth.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market
W. M. Noble & Co., cor Howard and Twelfth streets

HATTER.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street,

HOTELS.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.

INSURANCE.
Bigelow & Bro., N.W. cor. Montgomery and Sacramento.
Mutual Life Ins. Co., H. S. Homans, Agent, 609 Clay.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Ag'ts, 206 Front, cor Cal.
National Ins. Co., N.E. cor. Montgomery and California.
Occidental Ins. Co., S.W. cor. Montgomery and California.
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

MAPS.
Pacific Map Depot, A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.

MERCHANT TAILORS.
J. H. Hammond removed to 328 Montgomery.

MILLINERS.

PAPER HANGINGS, WINDOW SHADES, ETC.
H. Ward, 132 Third street.

PIANO SCHOOL.
Mr. Gustavo A. Scott, at Miel Institute, 55 South Park.
W. S. Pierce, removed to 534 Market, opposite Second

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
M. Gray, 613 Clay street.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

REAL ESTATE.
Fifteen-dollar lots for sale by H. S. Brown, S.E. corner of Battery and Commercial streets.

RESTAURANTS.
Bivalve, Nolting & Spreen, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Eureka, C. H. Brickwedell & Co., Clay, near Montgomery
Magnolia, 143 Third street.
Market, by Felix and Gustave Besson, 520 Merchant.
Philadelphia, Jacob Weiss, 308 Montgomery street.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Saulmann's, 506 Montgomery street.

SALOONS.
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N E cor Third and Howard
Razzetti & Co.'s, 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
S. Myers, 332 Montgomery street.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street.
Sun Burst, Carolin & McArdle, cor. Second and Market.
Coates & Henderson, 37 Sutter street.

SCALES.
Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scales 324 Montgomery street.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, J. W. J. Pearson, 110 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento

TOYS, ETC.
Feldbush & Co., 207 Montgomery street.
A. Kohler, 620 Washington street.

UPHOLSTERER.
T. McAllister, corner Sutter and Leavenworth.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery

CARPETS.

Removal! Removal!

KENNEDY & BELL

HAVE REMOVED TO

BUSH STREET,

Below Montgomery,

Store lately occupied by the Franco-American Commercial Company.

ap21-3m

TO HOTEL

AND

HOUSEKEEPERS

Meagher, Taaffe & Co.

ARE OFFERING AT

REDUCED PRICES!

A LARGE STOCK OF

SUPERIOR BARNESLEY,
SCOTCH, and IRISH LINEN;
TABLE DAMASKS, SHEETINGS,
SHIRTINGS, TOWELS, TOWELINGS,
NAPKINS, DOYLIES, ETC., ETC.

ALSO,

BLANKETS, QUILTS, FLANNELS,
COTTON SHEETINGS and SHIRTINGS,
LACE and MUSLIN CURTAINS, ETC.

9 Montgomery Street,

LICK HOUSE BLOCK.

WHOLESALE HOUSE,
107 BATTERY, BET. PINE AND CALIFORNIA.

Black Silks!

BONNET'S, BISCHOFF'S, & PONSON'S

Superior Black Silks,

PURCHASED AT THE RECENT GREAT AUCTION SALE, AND WILL BE OFFERED AT A

REDUCTION OF 20 TO 30 PER CENT.

FROM THEIR USUAL PRICES.

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.,
Wholesale House, 107 Battery street,
je16 Between Pine and California streets.

HALL'S SARSAPARILLA,

YELLOW DOCK AND IODIDE POTASS,

THE

Best Blood Purifier Known.

Persons that are troubled with Rheumatism, Scrofula, Neuralgia, Morbid Liver, Salt Rheum, Pimples, Boils, or any of the many diseases that originate from Impure Blood, would find it much to their advantage to give this justly celebrated article a trial. One or two bottles are quite sufficient to convince the most skeptical of its merits. It contains neither Spirit, ARSENIC nor MERCURY which cannot be truly said of any other preparation called "Sarsaparilla."

SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,

ap7-3m N. W. cor. Sansome and Commercial streets

The California.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME V., No 5. OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET. | SAN FRANCISCO, JUNE 23, 1866. | TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE. 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

PROSE.

——— ———.—By "Bret," THE CALIFORNIAN'S Condensed Novelist: After W-lk-e C-ll-ns.
Ecce Homo.
Theatrical Events, and Announcements.
Sundries —By "Emstadt."
A Box of Rogues.
Touching Tigers.
The Dangers of Sanity.
Brian Boromha.
A Story of the Trichinæ
The Arbiter of Europe.
Brilliant Horsemanship.
Apologies.
About the Neck.
Colors as Applied to Dress.
A French Suicide.
The Reform Battle.
"Mark Twain" at "The Islands"
The Family Sewing Machine.

POETRY:

Cherries and Grapes.—By Charles Warren Stoddard.

[For the Californian.]

CHERRIES AND GRAPES.

NOT the cherry's nerveless flesh,
However fair, however fresh,
May ever hope my love to win
For Ethiop blood and satin skin.

Their lustre rich, and deep their dyes,
Yet under all that splendor lies
To what I cannot tribute grant—
Their hateful hearts of adamant.

I love the amber globes that hold
That dead-delicious wine of gold.
A thousand torrid suns distill
Such liquors as those flagons fill.

Yet tropic gales with souls of musk
Should steep my grapes in steams of dusk;
An orient Eden nothing lacks
To spice their purple silken sacks.

CHARLES WARREN STODDARD.

THE REFORM BATTLE.

THE London correspondent of the New York Round Table, says:

The great struggle came to a close—or at least to a truce—last night, and the government bill passed to its second reading by a majority of five. But this cannot be regarded as a victory for the government, and it will hardly be so regarded. It may be that Earl Russell will not respect precedent in this matter, but clutch even his small majority; but it is probable that the still fiercer ordeal—the committee—will so tear up his bill with amendments and alterations that he may yet resign the premiership. The debate has increased in power and interest with each step. John Bright—who is felt to be the impersonation of the "Big Black Feet Democracy," and has been assailed or defended or mentioned in every speech of the debate—gave a strong sledge-hammer blow. Mr. Robert Lowe—a strange, albinoish man in looks, and a man of real genius—was as dexterous and brilliant if not so noble as Luria. But last night the great final encounter took place between Disraeli and Gladstone. Disraeli began in a felicitous vein and made some able points. Those, however, which were strongest for his immediate object would probably be least interesting to American readers. One side-dish of his speech may, however, interest you. Alluding to America and Mr. Bright, he said:

"Sir, I am no decrier of American institutions. I approve of American institutions for this reason, that they are adapted to the country. What we should always consider is, whether particular institutions are adapted to the country in which they flourish. The great blot, in my opinion, of the American political system is not essential to it, but is accidental, and arises from the turbulent and demoralized mobs which exist in their cities of the coast. But if you were to introduce these American institutions into England you would not have that which is excellent in the American system, but you would have the degrading, the demoralizing, and the accidental part of it, and our country, instead of being a first-rate kingdom, would become a third-rate republic. I am therefore opposed to the introduction of American principles into this country, and regret that these principles are defended in this House by persons of great influence. I am not one of those who depreciate the talents or the character of the member for Birmingham. I admire his great abilities. I often listen to his eloquence with delight. But I regret that such gifts as he possesses should be exercised—I am sure conscientiously—in favor of principles which, if successful, would, I believe, prove fatal to this country."

Mr. Disraeli declared—and the sentiment has been frequently uttered by leading men during the debate—that in a country where universal suffrage prevailed it was irrational to prohibit women from voting. He said this in reply to Mr. Mill. Lord Cranbourne, by the way, declared last night that Mr. Mill's speech was the ablest that had been uttered during the debate.

When Disraeli sat down, Gladstone arose, but was met with an outrageous and singular interruption which he felt very deeply. Though white with emotion, nothing could exceed the sublime calmness with which he said, "Am I to be permitted to proceed?" He was responded to with one great cheer, which gave the Tories a perception that they had lost ground. Then a perfect stillness reigned. But Gladstone was nettled, and his tone was at the outset a little too harsh. Presently, however, he made a happy hit, which so pleased the house that its good humor was reflected in himself. In criticising the speech of Mr. Lowe, he said:

"With regard to his speech, when I think of the power it displayed, I own I am lost in admiration, although I myself was the subject of a fair share of its thrusts and cuts. But when I come to think what was the end and upshot of that speech—when I saw the right honorable gentleman exaggerating more and more his fears and apprehensions for the future, and coloring more and more highly the phantom visions which he raised—then, I say, my admiration was lost in grief and astonishment. I am reminded of the story which was written for the princess Palatine. The story was of a young prince to whose christening all the fairies came. Each bestowed some talent upon the child, but the fairy which had not been invited came soon afterwards and said, 'Yes, I find the baby has been presented with all the talents but one, and that is the talent of knowing how to use them.'"

After this Gladstone gathered in force and expression with every instant. One retort was given with splendid power. Disraeli had brought forward, very foolishly, an anti-reform resolution proposed by Gladstone in 1831, when an undergraduate at an Oxford debating society. The House received it with some contempt, and Disraeli felt that he had blundered. Gladstone said:

"The right honorable gentleman, secure in the recollection of his own consistency, has taunted me with the errors of my boyhood. The right honorable gentleman, when he addressed the member for Westminster, showed his magnanimity when he declared that he would not attack the philosopher for what he wrote forty years ago. But when he caught one who, thirty-six years ago, when just emerged from boyhood, and still an undergraduate at Oxford, expressed opinions adverse to the reform bill of which he has long and bitterly repented, then he could not resist the temptation—he, a parliamentary leader of twenty years' standing, is so ignorant of the House of Commons, that he thought he had a parliamentary advantage in representing me as an opponent of the reform bill of 1832. As he has so exhibited me, let me exhibit myself. I deeply regret it. I was bred under the shadow of the name of Canning. Every influence connected with that great name governed the politics of my youth. With Canning I rejoiced in the removal of disabilities, and in the character he gave to our policy abroad. With Canning I rejoiced in the opening he made to freedom of commercial intercourse with foreign nations. With Canning, and under the shadow of that name, and under that of the still greater name of Mr. Burke, I grant that my youthful mind and imagination were impressed just as the mature mind of the right honorable gentleman is now impressed. There is this difference, however, between us—that having these opinions, it seems I moved the debating society at Oxford to express them clearly, plainly, in downright, forcible English, while the right honorable gentleman is obliged to skulk under the cover of this amendment."

Long and almost tumultuous cheers followed this, and the House felt—and had reason to feel—proud of its leader.

But in his peroration Gladstone went still higher. Nothing could exceed the grandeur and impressiveness of some of his appeals. Here was one:

"Let us consider the enormous though silent changes that are going forward amongst the laboring population. Let us try to raise our views above the fears, the suspicions, the jealousies, the attacks, and the recriminations of the hour. Let us look onwards to the time of our children and our children's children. Let us ask whether there shall or shall not be a steady movement on the part of the laboring classes—a movement onwards and upwards. The progress of the working classes is like all great moral processes. It is unobservable in its details, but it is solid and unassailable. It is like those movements in the earth which science tells us are even now going forward in certain portions of the globe. The sailor sails over them, or the traveller treads the ground if they be on land. He does not see them. He is not conscious of them, but science tells us that these changes are taking place with silent and resistless force. Science tells us in these spots things are not as they were, and this is precisely what is going on with respect to the laboring classes. We know the self denial exhibited by those men in respect of the American war. Could any one believe that a reflection so still, so firm, and so energetic could have planted itself in the mind of the population without its becoming a known, a patent, and notorious fact to the whole country? And yet, when the day of trial came, we had manifested that sympathy with the people of the North—that subtle sympathy on their part with the people of the North—that determination that, be their sufferings what they might, no word should proceed from them to damage the cause which they believed to be just. Here was on one side a magnificent moral spectacle; on the other side it was a remarkable lesson. It was a lesson to us—it was a lesson to us all—to teach us this: that in those minds, by a process of quiet instillation, opinions and sentiments gradually form themselves, of which we remain for a long time unaware, which at last, when they make their appearance, we find to be matured, solid, and irresistible."

I cannot forbear to give his closing words—words that will remain burnt in on the memories of all who were present—words that will become historical:

"This bill is in a state of crisis and peril, and the government along with it. We stand or fall by it, as was declared by my noble friend. We stand with it now—we may fall with it a short time hence; but, if we fall, we shall rise with it hereafter. We cannot measure with precision the forces that are to be raised in the coming struggle. Perhaps the great division of to-night is not the last act of the struggle. You may succeed on some point; you may drive us from our seats; you may bury the bill we introduced; but for its epitaph we will write on the grave-stone this line with perfect confidence:

'Exonare aliquis nostris ex ossibus ultor.'

You cannot fight against the future; time is on our side. The great social forces are against you. They are arrayed, they are marshalled, on our side. The banner which we carry, although perhaps it may at this moment droop over our sinking heads, yet it will soar again and float in the eye of heaven, and will be borne in the firm hands of the united people of these three kingdoms not perhaps to an easy, but a certain and not distant future."

Amid the immense cheering which announced that the debate had closed thus grandly, the members passed out for the division.

FORTY YEARS OLD.—The lady who has been described as the most graceful and charming woman in Europe was forty years old on the fifth of last month. She is not only distinguished for her personal attractions, but she sits on the loftiest throne in the world, and is the reigning queen of another world whose limit is as boundless as civilization. This lady, of course, is the Empress Eugenie of France. With all her power she is powerless in the grasp of Time. Years accumulate, leaving on her handsome countenance their ineffacable mark, and queen as she is, she cannot wipe one from the score. By a caprice of taste she can set the female world in a flutter, but she cannot possess herself of the youth of the humblest of her worshippers. Poor Empress! Less fortunate than her obscure sisters, she cannot even practice a little harmless deception in the matter of age. The world knew when she was born, and, having been kind enough to remember the event, is now too cruel to forget. It is a question whether it is worth while to be a queen at such a penalty. In point of fact, forty years is not a great age. A maiden of forty might properly be called an ancient maiden, but a monarch at forty is young. Daniel Webster was forty when he made his celebrated speech in reply to Hayne, yet nearly all the greatness of his life came after. We question, however, if the Empress will find consolation in the study of history. Hers was the reign of beauty, the most imperious but evanescent reign that mortal can aspire to. The real life of a beauty is generally compressed into ten fleeting years. After that, the Deluge.

TOUCHING TIGERS.

MANY years ago—so many, that names of persons and of some places concerned, have passed from my memory—official duties led me to a small village in Rengrapeer, one of the remotest and wildest divisions of that wild country, the Kolehan, on the southwest frontier. The hamlet consisted of some five or six cottages in a cleared space of as many acres, surrounded by forest. A brook, whence the women of the village procured water, ran by the bottom of a slope, about two hundred yards from the houses; and (a usual feature in Kole villages) a few large slabs of slaty rock fixed in the ground marked where "the rude forefathers of the hamlet sleep." Near one of those I observed a pole erected, on which grinned the skull of a tiger, with the bones of one of its arms dismembered half-way up. I turned to the villagers near me for an explanation, and heard this:

The daughter of the Moonda, or head man of the place, was affianced, in the rude native fashion, to one of the young men of the village, and their nuptials were to come off in a few days. One evening the girl with some of her female companions went, as was their daily wont, to the brook already mentioned, to bathe and fetch water for the household.

They had been absent but a quarter of an hour, when the startling voice of a tiger, and the piercing shrieks of the women, suddenly broke the silence of the hour, and before the roused villagers could snatch their arms, the girls came flying back with horror in their faces, and in a few words announced the dreadful fact that a tiger had carried off one of their party. It was the Moonda's daughter. Her stout-hearted kinsmen rushed, but with hopeless hearts, to the rescue. Foremost among these was her intended husband, and close by his side his sworn brother, allied to him by a ceremony, common amongst this people, of tasting each other's blood, and swearing to stand by each other in after life, come weal, come woe. While the rest were following with skill and caution the bloody traces of the monster and his prey, these two, dashing on through the dense jungle, soon came upon the object of their search. In a small open space (which I afterwards visited) the tiger was crouched over the dead body of the girl, which it had already begun to devour. The approach of the hunters roused him, and he stood over the carcass, growling defiance at the two men.

In a moment an arrow from the bereaved lover's bow pierced the tiger's chest. It struck deep and true, but not so as (in sporting phrase) to stop the dreadful beast, who, from a distance of some thirty paces, came down, with his peculiar whirlwind rush, on his assailant. The young man had just time to draw his "kappee," or battle-axe, from his girdle, when the tiger seized him by the left wrist. The man, leaning well back to gain room for the swing of the axe, drove it with all the collected strength of rage and despair in the tiger's forearm, severing the massive bone, and leaving the blade buried in the muscles. Next moment his head was crushed within the monster's jaws, and he fell dead upon the ground, while the tiger, tamed by the loss of blood, turned round and began to limp away. All occurred so rapidly, that the surviving comrade had not shot a shaft, but now, maddened, he run to the retreating brute, and sent arrow after arrow up to the feather into its side and neck until it rolled over, dying, within a few yards of the ill-fated young couple. The tiger still breathed as the rest of the party came up. They struck off its head, dissevered the muscle by which the left forearm still adhered to the shoulder; with these spoils, and the mangled bodies of the poor victims borne on litters, they returned, a melancholy procession, to the village. The above minute details I had from the chief actor himself, a stalwart young fellow. The event had occurred not more than a month or five weeks before, and the sun-dried strips of flesh still adhered to the ghastly trophy on the pole. I wished to have brought the bones away, but they gave some comfort to the poor old Moonda's heart. They reminded him that his daughter had not died unavenged, and I left them there.

Another instance that became known to me of heroism among the Koles, is of a more homely sort. In another part of Rengrapeer, a clearing was made in the forest by an old man, his wife, her sister, and a grown-up daughter. No other human being lived within miles of their solitary hut, and the head of the family had to go frequently, and always alone, to a distant village for the necessaries of life. His first season's ploughing was stopped by a tiger killing one of the only pair of bullocks he possessed, and he was obliged to sell the other to buy rice for the rest of the year. Before the next rains, he managed to procure another pair of oxen, and patiently recommenced the tillage of his little clearing. But his unwelcome neighbor again robbed him of a bullock, and once more put an end to his operations. This was too much to bear, and with singular hardihood the old man determined to rid himself of his enemy or die of him. The bullock lay dead within a few paces of a patch of grass which intervened between the clearing and the forest; and the man, thoroughly conversant with the habits of the tiger, knew well that in this grass the beast would lie until the cool of evening summoned him to sup upon the carcass. He proceeded without further ado into the house, armed his household, the three women aforesaid, with a bamboo each, placed them in line along the edge of the grass, posted himself by a circuitous route on the opposite side of the cover where it skirted the jungle, and, having given some preconcerted signal to his auxiliaries, waited, bow in hand and arrow on string, for his dangerous enemy. The three women, nothing daunted, began beating the ground in a business-like manner. They shrieked and yelled, and advanced steadily into the cover; it was not extensive; before long the tiger came sneaking out towards the man, who, well concealed behind a tree, let him pass so as to obtain a clear broadside view, and then let fly an arrow into the centre of his neck. Fortune favored the bold, and the brute fell dead.

So little did the veteran think of this exploit, that I should probably have heard nothing about it, had he not come to my office attended by his family and the mankee, or head of his circle, with the tiger's skin, to claim the reward (ten rupees a head) given by government for the destruction of this animal; a reward, which, shabby as it is, was not to be despised by the poor settler. He was a short, wiry man, some fifty or sixty years of age, with a dogged, determined look, and spoke of killing the tiger and making his old wife and sister-in-law beat him up, in such a matter-of-fact way that we were all in shouts of laughter, though filled with admiration for the stout old boy and his hard-favored amazons.

There was great luck in such an easy conquest, but it is not, even within my own knowledge, a solitary instance of so large an animal being killed at once by so apparently inadequate a weapon. A very big tiger was once brought into head-quarter station of the Kole country—Chybasa—which had been killed with one shot by a mere stripling, some sixteen or seventeen years old, who seemed much more engaged in admiring the flowers in front of my house, than interested in the recital of his prowess, made to me by his comrades and the head man of the village.

Those who have engaged in tiger-shooting excursions, either on foot or on elephants, know full well how many shots the brute sometimes takes. And such instances of quick work as the two above cited may surprise the most experienced sportsman.

I have already observed that where population is exceedingly scarce, the tiger loses much of his skulking, hiding disposition, and attacks his prey in the open. In 1837, or '38, a lad herding cattle in the village lands of Koorsee, near Chaibasa, was pursued over a meadow, and through the herd, and was killed by a tiger, who had begun to eat him when scared away by the villagers. I saw the body; it lay in the midst of an open field, at least two hundred yards from any cover. It was disembowelled, and with the chest torn open; but the face was as that of one who lies in a pleasant sleep.

The enormous forearm of the tiger has often attracted attention. We have seen a cat pat a dead mouse, or the face of a dog which was teasing her, and it is easy to understand what a tremendous blow a tiger could give in the same manner; but I believe it to be a mistake to suppose that he strikes down his prey with his paw. He strikes in self-defence when fighting, but not when seizing his victim.

I have seen many carcasses of deer, cattle, buffaloes, and horses, which had been killed by tigers, and they all had the same appearance: four deep holes at the back of the neck (two of them on each side of the cervical vertebræ,) made by the animal's incisor teeth; no other mark. Of course, if the tiger had begun to feed on the body, it was extensively lacerated. And if (as sometimes in the case of a buffalo) the prey had struggled much, and had succeeded in dragging the tiger a few yards, the chest and forelegs would bear the impression of the claws and the tremendous grip, but these, as far as my experience goes, were exceptional cases.

It is evident that the tiger, in seizing his prey, rushes on to its back, grips the neck with his jaws as with a vice, and, with his arms confining the animal's struggles, lies there upon his victim until it is suffocated. With a human being I know not how the case is. A tiger has been seen to seize and carry off a man by the neck, or the arm, or thigh, indifferently. In the well-known cases of Major Colnett and Captain Fenwick, they were both seized by the thigh, and carried off, it is said, on the animal's back. More recently, a Captain Hill, superintendent of police in Burma, was gripped by the neck, and there held until the arrival of his people rescued him from his awful position. In 1846, in Maubhoom, near Midnapore, I was out after a tiger, on foot, and having wounded him severely, was searching for him in the jungle with a number of beaters.

Three times we came upon him, and each time he broke cover by charging through the mob of us Once, he struck a man on the chest, knocking him over, and scratching him severely. Next time he seized one of the beaters in his jaws, by the thigh, giving him a rapid shake and passing on. But these are all cases in which the animal was acting in self-defence, or in retaliation. What I have said above refers to its usual mode of capturing its food.

The averment in our "natural history" books, that the tiger disdains to touch carrion, is quite untrue. The same rhetoric is indulged in regarding the eagle, and is equally erroneous. The lion also, the "king of beasts," is, I believe, as little scrupulous as any other cat, in this particular. I have described how the tiger captures and kills his prey. When dead, if the body lie convenient to his covert, he lets it remain; if it be too far out in the open, it is dragged farther in towards the jungle, and there left until towards dawn. Sometimes the body is disembowelled after being removed a little way, and is then drawn away to some hidden spot. A leopard has been seen to disembowel a goat, holding it by the throat, lying on its back underneath the body, and ripping it open by repeated kicks with its hind claws. Probably the tiger operates by the same method. He appears to prefer a rump-steak, or a round, to any other portion. These are almost always the first part eaten, then the ribs, rarely the forequarters, and never, within my knowledge, the head.

The following little anecdote, while it illustrates this, affords a pretty good specimen of the tiger's caution, of the silence of his approach, and of his immense strength. In the cold weather of 1838, near the same village of Koorsee where the herd-boy had been killed, I was one day shown the body of a cow, which a tiger had just struck down. It lay close to some rather thin jungle, near a ridge of low rocks: a few larger trees, such as mangoes, were interspersed in the brushwood, and the ground was covered with dead dried-up leaves: so crisp, that it seemed impossible for an insect even to pass over them without being heard. It was then about noon, and I determined to sit up for the tiger, who, we knew, would come again at nightfall, or before next morning, to devour the carcass. A charpaie, or small native bedstead, was speedily procured from the village, and lashed across the fork of a mango-tree, within a few paces of which lay the cow. Before sunset I and my companion (our doctor) were escorted to the spot by a body of armed Koles. I disembarrassed myself of a huge sola, or pith hat, which I placed on the ground near the tree, and in it I deposited a pair of unwieldy dragoon's pistols (it was before the days of "repeaters,") which I thought would be useless in our elevated position. I also took off, and left at the foot of the tree, a pair of thick shooting-shoes, and then, with the help of my village friends, gained the charpaie, and sat myself down by the worthy doctor. Between us were four double barrels and ammunition. When we were fairly in our post, our escort silently withdrew to a hovel on the skirts of the village, just within hail.

The moon, near its full, was rising, and the night calm. A deep shadow rested under the trees, save where, through gaps in the foliage, the silver rays stole in. A solemn silence reigned around, scarce broken by the whispering rustle of the leaves as at intervals the night air sighed fitfully. Those who have sat motionless and patient, far into the night, with such an object in view, can understand the oppressive feeling that steals over one in the stony stillness, with ear and eye stretched to catch every sound, or detect the slightest movement. Immovable as statues we sat, without a whisper. Creature-comforts we had none; for cheroots and brandy-and-water were "Banned and barred, forbidden fare,"

it being supposed that a tiger cannot abide tobacco Loins, and backbones, and necks, and legs, grew stiffer and stiffer, and ached wearily: but still we sat. The night passed slowly on, the moon climbed higher and higher over our heads, and at last shone upon the dead cow below; but not a sound fell on the ear. Tired nature began to murmur against the penance; first a few remarks were whisperingly ventured: "I don't think he's coming." "I think he heard those fellows and is off." "He can't be here, or we should have heard him," etc. Gradually such feeble suggestions gave way to positive assertions, delivered in a tolerably audible tone, and at last I openly declared I would wait no longer, and descended to the ground.

My first act was to get my shoes, and, while putting them on, and chatting without further constraint, I remarked that it would be as well to call our guides. Forthwith, uplifting my voice, I shouted out the name of the Moonda. Hardly had the word passed my lips, when an abrupt startling roar from a thicket within a few paces of me petrified us with amazement. Never had I felt so wretchedly helpless. Standing unarmed at the foot of the tree, I had one shoe on, and was about to put on the other. While expecting every instant to be my last, I felt sure that an attempt to climb back to my perch would be the signal for the tiger to seize me. To remain standing there was equally disagreeable. My pistols came to my recollection. They were lying in my hat, but the hat lay somewhat in the direction of the thicket. It was a trying moment; but in another moment I found myself striding towards the hat, one shoe on and the other off, and hardly conscious of what I did. I remember grasping the pistols, cocking them, and with the barrels levelled towards the bush, which I steadily faced, shuffling sideways to the tree. The feel of the trusty weapons in my hand was comforting, as was the sight of the doctor, who, with both barrels of his gun cocked, and pointing at the bush, leant forward on the charpaie, covering my retreat.

At length I reached the tree on the side farthest from the thicket, and went up it like a lamplighter, pistol in hand although, on our first arrival, I had required the assistance of other people's arms and shoulders. "Thank God!" exclaimed the doctor, as soon as I was seated by him. "You are up. I thought you were a dead man." And so saying, he fired into the bush, just as our escort came up with lighted torches; and we returned to our tent in the village.

Scarcely had the sun risen on the morrow, when a Kole ran in to tell us that the cow had been removed. The doctor was obliged to return to the station, but I repaired at once to the spot of our night's vigil. The cow was gone, and a broad trail showed which way she had been dragged. At about a hundred yards from our mango tree, and near the foot of the rocks before described, lay the stomach and entrails, and a pool of blood. Farther on, was the spot where the tiger had been rolling. The marks were plain, with some of his hair lying where the ground had been pressed down. On a ledge on the summit of a perpendicular scarped rock about four feet high, lay the carcass of the cow, partly eaten away. The tiger must have jumped on the ledge with the cow in his mouth; there were no other means of ascent. The prodigious power of the animal may be conceived from such a feat. After gazing for a while on the spectacle, some of the most experienced Koles present assured me that the tiger, after gorging on so much beef, could not possibly be far off, and they volunteered at once to beat him up and drive him towards me.

I accordingly selected a commanding spot, and sent the men a detour of some three hundred yards in front of me, whence they commenced beating in my direction. In a few minutes the tiger was roused, and passed my station at a distance of about sixty yards, in a lumping, heavy canter, with his tail in the air. I took deliberate aim a little in front of his chest, and fired. The ball cut a twig, and must have deflected from its first direction, for the tiger passed on without taking the slightest notice of my salute, and in another instant was lost in the jugle, leaving me to return to camp intensely mortified.

Tigers are shot in considerable numbers every year in India by trap bows and arrows set in their haunts by the "Bughmars," or professional tigers. The instrument has been often described.

Mongolian nations, such as Burmese, Karéns, Shans, Malays, and the Dyaks of Borneo, instead of planting a bow which shoots off a poisoned arrow on pushing against a string, fix a little above the ground a strong elastic horizontal bamboo, at right angles to the free end of which is fixed a jagged and barbed wooden dagger, smeared with poison. The bamboo is then bent back, and is so secured in that position that pressure upon a string placed across the tiger's path loosens the catch, and the bamboo, striking the animal about the shoulder, buries the dagger deep in his body, where, being barbed, it remains. The victim generally dies in a few hours. Travellers are warned of the position of these traps by a bamboo cross or frame stuck up by the path, on either side of the trap, so that people approaching in either direction are put on the alert, and avoid danger by making a short détour. It is a curious fact that the Shan Karéns, in the Tenaserim provinces, and the Dyaks of Borneo, make use of precisely the same expedient to kill the tiger and to warn the passenger.

I cannot call to mind having met in any book with an accurate description of the tiger's cries. The snarling and growling of the animal when "stirred up with a long pole" is familiar to all who have visted a menagerie, and appears to be the only noise the creature makes when in a state of captivity; but in his native forest, in the long nights of the cold season, when the woods on the hill seem to lie sleeping in the moonlight, the tiger striding along his lonely path, and seeking his fierce mate, mews like an old tom-cat—or rather like a hundred old tom-cats in a chorus.

It is a loud and harsh and grating miau—a sound of dread echoing aloug the dreary jungle, making the sentry pause as he paces on his post by the slumbering camp, and the solitary settler turn in his cot, and thank the gods his little ones are safe within. It is seldom heard more than twice or thrice.

When the tiger is on the lookout for food (usually of an evening,) he lies silent and motionless in some dense covert close to water where animals resort to drink, and when one of these approaches near enough, he bounds out on his prey in perfect silence; or, with an abrupt sonorous grunt, terribly startling, which appears to paralyze the victim, and deprive it of all power to fly or resist.

The old fable or legend of the "lion's provider," founded on some base of truth, applies to the tiger, who is believed by many nations of India to be guided to his prey by the jackal. All who have resided in, or travelled about, the wild and jungly parts of Bengal, where the main forests border on civilization, will remember hearing at night a peculiar wailing cry, passing slowly along in the distance. It sounds like the syllables "pee-all" or "see-all" uttered in a doleful scream, and it proceeds from the "solitary jackal," whose Bengali name, "Shiál," is probably derived from the cry. This "solitary" jackal is not a separate species, but the ordinary jackal of the plains; individuals of which at times depart from their gregarious habits, wander along at night in the vicinity of jungle, and, according to the inhabitants of such regions, give notice of the vicinity of the tiger by his weird cry, and attract him to follow them to some carcass, which has been discovered by the jackal's keener sense of smell. In the hot, sultry nights of March and April, people in these jungle villages often sleep out of doors, on their small, low charpaies or bedsteads, and should the cry of the shiál be heard approaching, all hurry indoors, or assemble in a central spot, armed with such weapons as they can muster.

THE DANGERS OF SANITY.

THE Irish town of Poplin (I dare not give the place its real name) was never deficient in blackguards; but, a few years ago, it boasted a very black sheep who was called Shaun Magee. The crimes attributed to Shaun were simply innumerable. If he had hitherto escaped the gallows, it was through no particular watchfulness on his own part; for Shaun took no pains to conceal his misdeeds, but rather that he was a true gregarious Irishman, and that all his evil escapades took place when he was associated with a dozen or two of congenial spirits. It is to be feared, however, that much of the evil notoriety acquired by Shaun was due to one special failing he had, a leaning towards heresy; and that the good people of Poplin, horrified at the notion, immediately came to the conclusion that if Shaun had not been hanged for a dozen capital offences, it was not his fault, but the fault of the English Government.

Suddenly, however, Shaun was attacked by his conscience. He repented him of his crimes; and privately repaired to a worthy priest, called Father Mahoney, at whose confessional Shaun revealed the numerous errors he had committed. The good father rejoiced over the returning sinner, and welcomed to the bosom of the church one who had gone very far astray. Shaun grew in the fervor of piety, until he became one of the Father's pet pupils; though all this time he had spoken to no one of his conversion. Perhaps he was afraid he should bring disfavor upon the character of the good priest who had received him, and may have resolved to postpone the disclosures of his repentance until the flavor of his past offences should have somewhat disappeared.

Now, it happened that Father Mahoney, amongst his other duties, was accustomed to conduct mass in the chapel attached to the lunatic asylum of Poplin; and, one forenoon, as he was rapidly on his way towards this chapel, he met Shaun Magee.

Shaun humbly took off his cap, as in duty bound, and was about to pass the Father, when the latter stopped him.

"I'm in great perplexity, Shaun," said the Father.

"Indade, your rivirence," said Shaun, with manifest concencern, "and axing your pardon, your rivirence, is't anything now I could do for yez?"

"Well, to tell you the truth, I've got no one to serve mass at the chapel. Mr. O'Halloran has taken suddenly unwell, and I'm clean bothered to get some one in his place. Do you think you could serve mass, Shaun?"

"Sure I could, your rivirence; weren't we all tached to sarve mass? And if I went wrong, sure it's your rivirence could give me a bit of a hint."

"Come along, then, Shaun; I'm glad I've met ye, for indeed it's a great favor you're doing me."

"And saving your presence, it's no favor at all!" cried Shaun. "Ah, your rivirence, isn't it glad a poor boy is to do you a good turn for what yiz do to every won?"

So Father Mahoney and his pupil were speedily in the chapel; and though Shaun did at first feel somewhat embarrassed in the white surplice, he soon forgot his bashfulness in his anxiety to help the Father. The service proceeded in the usual way; and, if Shaun did make one or two little mistakes, he said to himself, "Sure it's not a bit of harm it'll do the poor crayturs; there's norra one o' them knows the difference."

"I'm obliged to ye, Shaun," said the Father, when it was all over, "and I will say you remembered the service well. But what made ye grin like a sucking-pig?"

"Well, your rivirence, I was just thinking that some of the poor crayturs might have seen me face before, and wouldn't it be the divvle's own wonder—I ax pardon, your rivirence—for them to see Shaun Magee serving mass?"

"Why, Shaun?"

"Well, you see, your rivirence, they've told some daycent stories about me in my time, and—"

"Never mind, Shaun. It's a hard thing if a poor boy is always to be brow-batcd about what he's done years before."

"Thank ye, your rivirence."

"Good day to ye, Shaun."

"Good day, your rivirence," said Shann, with an humbe obeisance; and they parted.

Now, it further happened that in this lunatic asylum there had been confined for many years a gentleman of some consequence in Poplin. He had never been very insane; but his friends had come to the conclusion that the best thing to cure him of his gentle hallucinations was to place him under the care of the doctors in the asylum. Recently reports had been daily growing in his favor, until came the final intelligence that the doctors considered him perfectly sane.

His relatives (whether rejoicing at the intelligence or not, history is not in a position to chronicle) resolved to meet in the lunatic asylum, and there judge for themselves as to the certainty of their friend's recovery. The day appointed for this meeting was that succeeding the day on h Shaun whic Magee had served mass.

The relatives of the hitherto insane man, therefore, were assembled in a room within the asylum; and to this commission of enquiry came the gentleman himself. He was affectionately received by his friends, and sat down to converse with them, they narrowly watching for any symptom of his previous ailment. Everything progressed satisfactorily. His remarks were quite up to the intelligence of the auditors; and in no respect were bizarre or ludicrous.

"By the way," said he, "do you know who was at mass yesterday?"

"Father Mahoney, was it not?"

"And who served him, do ye think?"

They protested their ignorance.

"Shaun Magee," said he.

"Shaun Magee serving mass?"

"Yes."

The friends of the unhappy man looked towards each other, with apparent horror, perhaps with inward satisfaction.

"Sure you're mistaken, Mr. Jewry," said one; "don't yiz know that Shaun Magee, begging your pardon, is one of the biggest blackguards in Poplin, an idle, dhrunken, swearing vagabond?"

"He served mass here yesterday," said Mr. Jewry, firmly.

"The divvle's as mad as a March hare," said one, in a whisper; "be me sowl, it's not a safe thing at all to be nare him."

"Oh, it's joking ye are, Mr. Jewry," said another; "ye're making fun av us, ye divvle!"

"Dade, I'm not then," said Mr. Jewry, "for I saw him with my own eyes."

The friends withdrew; and Mr. Jewry was ignominiously ordered back to his ordinary duties and restrictions. Protesting, vowing, swearing, was of no avail; nay, they rather the more convinced every one of the poor man's hopeless madness.

"Shaun Magee!" cries one of the relatives as they went their way homeward.

"He'll never be a sane man in this world, except be the blessing of God and the Holy Virgin."

And so it was that poor Mr. Jewry was thrust back into his confinement. Several weeks passed by, and no one thought any more of the matter. Every one knew that Mr. Jewry was still a lunatic, and pitied him, and envied his relatives. But one day one of these relations, passing down the street, met Shaun Magee.

"Good day to ye, Shaun."

"The top o' the morning to ye, Phelim."

"By the holy piper, Shaun, I've got sumthin to tell yiz. Sure yiz must know Pat Jewry, that made a rare bag o' goold wi' his owld rags and bones?"

"Av coorse I know the gintleman."

"He's a fair straight lunatic, Shaun."

"And what av that, Phelim?"

"We thought the poor boy had beeu cured, and all of us thought of taking him out; and sure it's not for a year ye would be guessing to tell what he said to us. He said that Shaun Magee had been serving holy mass in the chapel."

"Faith, then, Phelim, he made no big blunder."

"What do yiz mane, Shaun?"

"I mane that mesilf, Shaun Magee, did, by the grace of God and the help of his rivirence, sarve mass in that same chapel. That's what I mane, Phelim Jewry."

"Och, Mother of Moses! it's ruined we are, every mother's son of us! Jump up, Shaun, on this kyar, and let's fly with the blessed news."

And they did fly. Round to the houses of all poor Tom's relatives they went with this true narrative; and speedily a fresh commission of inquiry was instituted, and the unhappy victim set at liberty. The historian has further but to chronicle that there was a grand dinner to celebrate the liberation, at which the former lunatic generously proposed the health and continued happiness of Mr. Shaun Magee.

At a recent ball in Berlin, given in honor of the seventeenth birthday of the daughter of one of the noblest families, a mysterious figure—a monk masked—entered the saloon precisely at midnight, and disappeared after having presented the young lady with a basket of flowers. On examining the contents, an ebony coffin was found, inlaid with silver, containing a bridal wreath, an arrow piercing a lily, and a paper on which was written, "A greeting from the land of shadows." The young countess did not lose her presence of mind, but continued dancing, and betrayed no emotion whatever.

ABOUT THE NECK.

WE believe it is Mr. Charles Reade who says that, if a gentleman wishes to assume the character of a blackguard at short notice, his first move should be to discard the shirt-collar, and wrap his throat in a thick, wispy cravat of sombre hue. Allowing for some exaggeration, this may be generally true, and so is the converse of the proposition; for, if a man has ruffian written upon his features, no arrangement of shirt-collar that we have yet seen can convert him to the semblance of a gentleman. The human neck has had a great many vicissitudes in its time; in making which remark we mean no reference to the halter, the bowstring, or the guillotine. It is to the comparatively innocuous shirt-collar that our attention, for the moment, is directed. Socially, as well as commercially, the subject is one that has attained no small importance, and it has its influence upon art, as well.

Ever so long ago—as we gather from old portraits—it was considered the proper thing to do something for the face by encircling the neck with fine linen or lace, or any kind of fabric, no matter what, provided only that it were white. Ruffs at one time, and thick white cravats at another; but always the lily in hue. Early in the present century came the voluminous cravats, with shirt-collars high enough and hard enough to saw a man's ears off if he only shook his head at them. Then the influence of the stiff, black, military stock began to exert itself. The shirt-collar had no chance with that purgatorial device. It went clean out, for awhile; and, Mr. Reade to the contrary, gentlemen were not necessarily mistaken for blackguards because their heads and bodies were connected by a black link instead of a white one. There are portraits of George IV. in which that monarch is represented with his royal throttle tightly buckled into a black stock, over which his royal jowl flaps in a way that would have been utterly destructive of linen "fixings." The reader will please recollect that George IV. was called the "first gentleman in Europe." There were freaks in shirt-collars about this period. Byron had his broad, open, turn-down; but it was looked upon as eccentric, and did not come into very general fashion. The first half of the century was pretty well advanced ere common sense "took up the running," and it is hardly twenty years since people became satisfied that necks were easiest in once-round ties and shirt-collars of moderate dimensions. Presently this idea came to be intensified, and people took to wearing dog-collars instead of shirt-collars, with shoe-strings about their necks for ties. Fancy the contrast between a necktie of this period and one of Beau-Brummell's twice-round cravats! The turn-down collar soon appeared as a rival to the all-round, and the two, with modifications, divide the honor between them at the present time.

More than ever, now it seems to be necessary that the neck must be encircled with white. This can hardly be because white is emblematic of purity, for no class of men are more particular about their collars than the flashy characters who infest Broadway by day and make their turtle and champagne by fleecing their fellow-creatures at night. When extravagance walks the street, economy is generally round the corner.

The necessity for a constant supply of clean, white neck gear entails an additional expense in the item of blanchissage, and out of this has arisen that most successful of modern deceptions—the paper shirt-collar. We are told that there is nothing new under the sun, and so of paper shirt-collars. The present writer recalls how, years ago, it was the custom at an ancient university in a distant land to wear, on certain occasions, white "bands," such as those worn by clergymen of various religious denominations. The student who did not mount his bands on these occasions—at chapel, for instance, or at quarterly examinations—was liable to a fine. Sometimes it happened that accident—a difference of opinion between a student and his washerwoman, for example—precluded the display of the requisite "rag," an imitation of which was speedily manufactured on the spur of the moment, however, by means of a sheet of letter-paper and a pair of scissors. The present writer, himself, has more than once produced an article of the kind that defied detection, and he respectfully submits that the grand idea of the existing paper shirt-collar was "there."

Probably there never was a more becoming fashion for neck wear than the ordinary turn-down collar so much worn for the last few years. The cost of it was immaterial, so long as it combined comfort with compactness. There seems to be some danger now, however, of running the idea "into the ground," the new style of thing called the "Shakspeare" collar having a decided tendency to the grotesque. It is one of the inconveniences of fashion that a style is liable to be discarded just as soon as wearers have begun to appreciate the advantages of it.

Enamelled steel has been used for collars, as being a still more economical material than paper, but the many disadvantages attending it will prevent it from ever coming into very general use. A late well-known professor was convinced that the frequency of paralysis at the present day might be attributed to the use of steel pens, a theory which, if correct ought certainly to hasten the extinction of the steel collar.

That the ladies should come in for a share of these remarks "about the neck" might naturally be expected. As regards the feminine branch of the subject, however, we have little to say, because a lady is not considered to be fully dressed if she wears anything upon her neck, unless, indeed, it be the barbaric string of beads. Yet, when she condescends to go in undress, nothing can be more becoming to her than the coquettish turn-down collar of the masculine mode, with a "sweet thing in ribbons" for a tie.—Round Table.

APOLOGIES.

AN apology has a very different meaning now-a-days from what it used to bear. Once it signified a defence of what was thought to be right; now it is a confession of something that cannot be defended. When Socrates delivered his famous Apology before the Athenian judges, we must not suppose that he was begging their pardon for having preached the truth and taught men their own shallowness, and exposed many deep rooted prejudices. On the contrary, he explained why he thought it right and patriotic and pious to do so, and he was ready to abide the consequences of what he had done. We must attach the same meaning to those thousand and one "Apologies" for Christianity which have appeared at various epochs of Church history, ancient and modern. And such an explanation would seem not altogether to be superfluous when royal lips have been heard to complain that it was very strange that so many "apologies for the Bible" should be considered necessary. The apologist is always a defendant, but in one sense he pleads not guilty, and in the other guilty. As it is never particularly pleasant to cry "Peccavi," it is never agreeable to have to make an apology. Yet there is the undignified apology and the apology dignified. The most abject form occasionally appears in the advertisement columns of the daily papers, where we may read that—"I, Uriah Heep, do hereby acknowledge that the expressions used by me respecting Mr. Teazle are entirely false, and dictated by malicious feeling, and I unreservedly retract them, and offer the most ample APOLOGY; Mr. Teazle consenting to take no further proceedings against me."

After having been reduced to this we should think it would be impossible to walk about the streets, excepting on all fours with one's tail between one's legs. But, on the other hand, the best and the bravest of men know how true manliness and true dignity require a frank apology to be made for an injury done to another. An act of rudeness, a mistake, a sudden outburst of temper—we all know how such things may occur again and again, and how far a graceful apology may go towards making it all right once more But then there seems no room for an apology left after the committal of a mean ungenerous act. It is inadmissable; it only aggravates the circumstances. We know of no form of apology to be used after swindling widows and orphans, nor one that will set you straight again with yourself and the world after you have broken some one's heart by selfish flirtation. These are things for which silent contrition is more appropriate than anything in the way of apology.

The apology conventional is on our lips from morning to night. If we have to contradict a friend, if we are almost tripped up by a lady's skirts, if we want to reach something on the table, if we speak to a stranger by mistake, if we meet some one in the street and begin to execute a grand pas d'irresolution, because neither has the presence of mind to resolve on which side to pass—quite mechanically we say, "I beg your pardon." And fancy our consternation if on every occasion we were taken at our word and were assured of unconditional forgiveness. Every one has in his lifetime encountered suddenly in some doorway a housemaid armed with broom or bucket, and when he stopped short with the unconscious "I beg your pardon," he has been astounded and altogether unmanned by hearing her say, "Granted, sir!" The absurdity is patent at once. You have been taken at your word, and were as unprepared for it as Don Magnifico would be if, when he told you with splendid Spanish courtesy that all his valuables were yours, you should thank him warmly and begin to pack them up.

There are some folks whose whole life is one long apology, though in a different sense to Father Newman's "Apologia pro Vita Sua." They seem to deprecate their own existence. They never feel anything but de trop. The very expression of their eyes entreats you to bear with them, the movements of their hands and the gait which they assume in walking are mute appeals to your generosity. And in the majority of circumstances this by no means betokens real humility. It is only a morbid exhibition of self-consciousness, which in another shape makes shy people so abrupt and brusque in their manners. If such folk are a pain and grief to themselves, they also should have the satisfaction of knowing that they are an intolerable nuisance to their friends. But the greatest and most inexcusable nuisance is the man who elaborately apologizes to you for the entertainment which he sets before you. It is the true mark of a snob to do this. He regrets that he has no salmon to give you. "Positively, my dear sir, there wasn't a bit of fish in the market!" He begs your pardon for every glass of wine you drink—you are Mæcenas dining with Horace. You must forget the choice Cæcuban which it is implied you drink every day, and graciously sip the "vile Sabinum." But your host is most likely fishing for compliments about his wine all the while. Then he apologizes for the people whom he has asked to meet you, a still lower depth of snobbery. And possibly his wife may take up the song after dinner, and whisper to you that you musn't look at the milk, which, of course, is very different to what your beautiful Aldernys give; and if you stay the night at her house, there will as likely as not be another apology because the servants come in at half-past ten to family prayers, and a final act of self-abasement when you take your chamber candle either because your room is small or your bed is short, or because some other peg may be found on which to hang another apology. Miserable will be the hours spent in that house!

It may seem cynical to say so, but when once one's suspicions have been aroused, it is impossible not to see in every apology of this kind a sort of feeler thrown out to catch a casual compliment. Why do young ladies say that their hair is so untidy, or their fingers so out of practice, or their boots so immensely big for them, when it is plain to the meanest observer that those lovely bands of gold never looked smoother, and those taper fingers were never more accurately nimble in the most intricate passage, and that those kid boots fit without a wrinkle? "O you Queens, you Queens!" as Mr. Ruskin says, you are quite innocent of little ruses like this? And you, dear lords of the creation, do you know of no small tricks of the kind? Does the singer never apologize for his hoarseness when he knows that he sang his song remarkably well? Does the cricketer never loudly lament his want of practice when his brilliant innings has contained a drive for five, and a ant for four, and three square leg hits for three a-piece? Does the rider in in Rotten-row never seem to deprecate the restiveness of his dancing hack:

"While his left heel insidiously applied
Provokes the caper that he seems to chide?"

Yes, it is hard for an apology to be always beyond suspicion; sometimes it is difficult for them to be entirely and unswervingly true. But this point of social morality belongs to that branch of casuistry which measures the sinfulness of the conventional regret with which one declines a very distasteful tea party; and to settle one point we should have to settle all, and to explain how we are the "obedient servant" of our most casual acquaintance or of our greatest enemy, and to provide a salve for tender consciences on the vexed question of "not at home." But we must not digress from apologies into casuistry, though the connection between them is really so close. We must only repeat the warning that apologies are dangerous things. They may reunite or hopelessly dissever friendships; they may be the natural act of atonement of some honest heart, or the mean subterfuge of the most abject. They may be the most suspicious things in the world, and they may again be as far above suspicion as Cæsar's wife. And the wording of them is a question of no small importance, for an unhappily expressed phrase may turn an apology into a fresh offence. Nor is a simple retraction of words always satisfactory. The Greek poet who was struck with blindness for defaming Helen was restored on writing his "Palinodia," in which he gave the lie direct to everything which he had said about her before; but our younger readers, who are fresh from Maryatt's novels, will remember that when the midshipman had said the first lieutenant was "not fit to carry guts to a bear," that officer was not satisfied by the simple form of apology, "I beg your pardon, sir, you are fit."

EGYPTIAN WEDDING.—Lady Duff-Gordon, in a letter from Egypt, has this picturesque description: "I went, a few days ago, to the wedding of the handsome Sheykh Hassan, the Aoab'deh, who married the butcher's pretty little daughter. The group of women and girls, lighted up by the lantern which little Ahmad carried for me, was the most striking thing I have seen. The bride, a lovely girl of ten or eleven, all in scarlet; a tall, dark slave of Hassan's, blazing with gold and silver necklaces and bracelets, with long twisted locks of coal-black hair, and glittering eyes and teeth; the wonderful wrinkled old women, and the pretty, wondering, yet fearless children, composed a picture beyond description. The mother brought the bride up to me, and unveiled her, and asked me to let her kiss my hand and look at her. I said all the usual 'Bismillah, Mashallahs,' and, after a time went to the men, who were eating—all but Hassan, who sat apart. He begged me to sit by him, and whispered anxious inquiries about his 'Arooseh's' looks. After a time, he went to visit her, and returned in half an hour, very shy, and covering his face with his hand, and kissed the hands of the chief guests. Then we all departed, and the girl was taken to look at the Nile, and then to her husband's house."

IT is stated by the New York Evening Post that within the past two years upwards of one million dollars have been paid in New York city alone for the works of foreign and native artists. This was done, too, whilst the country was struggling under the infliction of a great war.

THE ARBITER OF EUROPE.

FOUR leaders of European politics, in our generation, have been worthy of the name of great statesmen—Napoleon, Bismark, Cavour, Palmerston. Many others, like Leopold of Belgium, fall no further down than a second (and in many regards a more honorable) rank. On the world's great stage Napoleon III. stands the foremost figure. That it is not solely the accident of position or circumstance which has given him this prominence is evident from the fact that others have received the same advantages, or greater, without becoming such as he; and, besides, Louis Napoleon made his position, and forced the moves in the game of circumstance. If the whole theatre of spectators fixes its eyes on this actor, it is he that has drawn their gaze by his skillful play. Perhaps the most surprising feature of the present German quarrel is the posture of France with regard to it—let us rather say, the position of Napoleon, since that is the position of France. From the moment it broke out all eyes turned to France. It was taken for granted that she would play a principal role in it. This conviction came from historic experience, which had established a general theory or rule, rather than from particular necessity. What has France to do with this affair between Germans? The situation is simple: two robbers, Austria and Prussia, confederated to garrote Denmark, a peaceful citizen; they did so in broad noon—so audaciously as to stupefy most bystanders, who were too selfish, dull, or cowardly to pluck the grasp of the cut-purse from the unoffending throat, or the greedy fist from the pockets. These pockets, being turned inside out, let fall the Duchies of Schleswig-Holstein, with which the thieves made off; and now they quarrel about sharing the booty. What has France to do in this vile business? Whatever she can do her great ruler will take care to have her do. So surely as war shall be waged between Austria and Prussia, France will "assist" with her watchful presence. But will France take part with Prussia?

It is a question which has been puzzling the speculation of Europe ever since the dispute arose. And whoever reads carefully the foreign news-files as they come by each steamer must have been struck with the fact that the open words and the actions of Prussia and Austria, the prime personages of this drama, have not been more narrowly watched, more anxiously discussed, than the possible intents of France, which, to ordinary observation, ought to be mere spectator. In this strange duel the principals are hardly so important as the seconds. Speculation is always rife as to what Napoleon will do, and what side he will espouse, as if that were the solution of the whole problem. The diplomatic messages which pass busily to and fro between Mensdorff and Bismark do not attract more attention than the idle Parisian rumors of Napoleon's designs. What trifle can be gathered from some unguarded or ambiguous utterance of an official supposed to enjoy Napoleon's confidence to a limited extent is seized and instantly blown to monstrous proportions—so eagerly do men watch the imperial throne of France. When Marshal Niel, a very excellent soldier, was only reported to be in Paris incognito, and to have had several interviews with the Emperor, both Paris and London resounded with the rumor of menacing warlike preparations on the part of France. The midnuncs recalled how the same soldier went to Turin to demand the hand of Princess Clotilde for Prince Napoleon, and that shortly afterward the Italian war commenced, and that he must have been conferring with Piedmont on the situation. They had, in vision, a corps of observation, under Marshal Niel, already on the Rhine; and what is most to the point, this latter speculation seemed so probable that, in spite of all want of foundation, nobody questioned the report or thought it questionable. Nobody even seemed to doubt the right or the propriety of the move. At the very same time we hear that the Duke of Saxe-Coburg (who has a pet theory of the alliance of all lower Germany by the progress of liberalism) is "said to have passed a day in secret converse" with Napoleon, and besought him to pretermit the designs which the world attributed to him. Even more, it was urged and argued with a show of possibility, at the very outbreak of all difficulties, that Bismark was in league with Napoleon; was his ally, if not his cat's-paw; was stirring up the muddy pool of German politics at Napoleon's bidding, induced, of course, by the Emperor's promises. The slate, it was said, was made up at Compiegne, some time since, and Napoleon was at the bottom of the whole scheme.

Prussia is not the only power about which a possible alliance with Napoleon is talked of. Austria is a candidate, according to some observers, for his friendship. The chances are carefully weighed for and against this theory. If France sides with Prussia, the latter will give her surely a slice of territory in payment—some chaldrons of coal out of Sarrelouis, at all events, says the masked pamphleteer whom we have already quoted. But, say the Austrian party, if France takes part with the Kaiser, she may conquer more than she could have by gift—she may go the Rhine if she wills. Yes, responds Berlin, but the Austrians are unpopular in France, and. Great as he is, the Emperor must not too often oppose the public opinion, as that Mexican business shows, and so on. Europe, continental and insular, hangs upon the decision of the arbiter of its fate. Whether the war will break out, seems now hardly possible; whether Napoleon will himself beat the bush, or will suffer Austria and Prussia to beat it, while he stands by to catch the birds, remains to be seen. But, if war be waged, into whatever scale Napoleon flings his sword the other one will kick the beam.—Round Table.

BRILLIANT HORSEMANSHIP.

WE have had a brilliant exhibition of horsemanship. A horse fair has been held in the Palace of Industry. The Government ordered the twelve best riders of the cavalry school, at Saumur, to come up to let the Emperor see their equestrian skill, to give our amateurs of horses some notion of the perfection to which horsemanship may be carried, and to crown the horse fair with a brilliant show which should attract all Paris. It did attract eight thousand people.

The display was made under the glass roof of the Palace of Industry, which may be made for the hour the best riding-school in the world. A stand gaily ornamented with flags and crimson velvet, and gold, was erected for the Emperor and suite, and, in the gallery opposite, the band of the Guide's Regiment was stationed to vary the proceedings and fill the intervals between the exercises with music. Worse wadding may be found.

The moment the Emperor appeared he was greeted with a peal of music, if that monotonous flourish of trumpets which heralds crowned heads may be called music. The exercises commenced by parading before the imperial stand the horses which had received prizes. They were shown to every advantage by being put through their various gaits. These exercises lasted half an hour.

When the nave was cleared of these horses, a series of horses cantered in from a recess of the Palace, coming in single file towards the imperial stand. They formed a line, the riders took off their cocked hats which they held level with the saddle at arm's length. They wore the full dress uniform of the Cavalry school, which is a cocked hat, straight-breasted coat (or rather jacket) buttoned close up to the throat, white buckskin breeches fitting close to the skin and reaching only to the knee, and boots which cover the knee. They remain in this attitude—looking like so many statues—before the Emperor until the trumpets sound the signal for the exercises to begin. Off they go in a gentle canter. Remember they have no whip. All the exercises are performed by the bridle and the knee. After they have cantered thirty yards they begin to describe spirals, next circles, now the horses step first with the left forefoot, then with the right forefoot, presently they are all together, now separated, now backing, now moving sideways, then in apparently inextricable confusion, again in perfect order. It reminded one of the apparent confusion of a ball-room when dancers cross, mix, mingle, turn, advance, each pursuing his proper course and sure to find himself in his own position when the figure changes or the dance ends.

At the close of these various exercises, which occupied some fifteen or twenty minutes (which were the average length of all the equestrian exercises) and which had led the horsemen to the extremity of the nave, they turned and all twelve abreast came down with their utmost speed in the direction of the Emperor's stand. It seemed at one time as if they must run over his Majesty: but when they reached it, as the horses' heads were in a hair's-breath of it, the riders reined them in; they were instantly transformed to the rigidity of statues. The riders took off the cocked hats as they had done in giving their first salute to the Emperor, and upon the trumpet's signal wheeled all together and cantered off.

Here let me say, while there were only twelve horsemen, thirty-six horses were sent up from Saumur. The first twelve horses which appeared were thorough-bred riding horses in the highest keep, with plaited mane, and ears adorned with gaudy ribbons. After they withdrew men placed fences in the nave, and as soon as the fences were made the same dozen riders re-appeared, mounted on the second series of horses—brawny hunters. They did not go the Emperor's stand to salute him. They trotted stoutly into the nave and began leaping over the fences, first in single file, then by twos, and so on up to four; again they leaped by threes, and so on down to one, when they changed suddenly to four, then back again to one; presently to two, and so on. These changes under any circumstances would be no easy feat; made during leaping they would be difficult. Judge what skill was required when they were made (as they were in this instance) at constantly increasing speed.

The trumpets announced the close of these exercises, and the hunters withdrew. When they re-appeared they were on the last dozen of the thirty-six horses. These horses were selected from the most vicious horses to be found in the market. They are kept as a sort of practical board of examiners to search the young men's knowledge for horsemanship, and at the same time teach them the art of keeping a seat on the horse's back whatever the reluctance of the horse might be to have his ribs bestrode. You know some horses have unconquerable prejudices on this subject. These horses could not be said to come into the nave: they bounced, bounded, leaped in, neighing, snorting, rearing, plunging, pitching, kicking, shying, rearing-and-kicking in such rapid alternation they seemed to do both together, darting first on one side and then on another, in fine applying every conceivable solution to the problem before them: Horse, unseat your rider.

The steeds continued to study this equation for some twenty minutes. I assure you it was a singular and interesting sight to observe the animal struggling with the intellect on his back and nerves, muscles, bones and sinews, impotent, strong as they were, when opposed to brain. The riders kept their left hand on their hip and the right holding the reins, and seemed, nay were, as firmly seated as if they were mounted on ambling nags trained for children's pastimes. After it had become evident the horse would not be the victor the riders showed themselves to be thorough masters of the animals beneath them and made the horse walk, chafing the bit and pawing the ground as he went, until all the twelve stood in front of the imperial stand; then they reared on their hind legs, the riders slowly uncovered themselves and held their hats at arm's length for one or two minutes, when the clangor of the trumpets announced the end of the exercises. The horses ceased to rear, wheeled to the right, and out they went bouncing, bounding, neighing, snorting, plunging, pitching, kicking, shying, as they had done when they entered.—"Spiridion," in the Boston Evening Gazette.

COLORS AS APPLIED TO DRESS.—Few people give themselves the trouble to understand the rules of color. They consider them as belonging to an abstruse science. The principles, which are supposed to be too much wrapped in mystery to be worth the trouble of acquiring by any but professional persons, are those comprehended in the laws of contrast of color and contrast of tone.

First, as regards contrast of color. There are three primary colors—red, blue, and yellow. From these every other color is formed, and each has its perfect harmony in its contrasting or complimentary color. The complimentary of each color is formed by the union of the other two, (and is therefore called the secondary,) that is, green, being the mixture of blue and yellow is complimentary to red; violet, being formed of red and blue, is complimentary to yellow; and orange, a compound of red and yellow, to blue.

Each of these colors, when placed near its complimentary, intensifies its effect. Green causes red to appear redder, blue adds a brighter tint to orange, and yellow enhances the color of violet. In other words, every color looks its purest and best when it is beside its complimentary.

By means of the simple law of contrast, therefore, we have the power of imparting any tint that we choose to the complexion, and of rendering our costume agreeable to the eye by the harmony produced by properly contrasted colors: and we may learn to avoid increasing the undesirable tints of a sallow complexion by the juxtaposition of blue or violet, or rendering a florid complexion still more highly-colored by contrasting it with green. On the other hand, ladies with golden hair and clear complexions will see that they should wear blue in preference to any other color, harmonizing agreeably as it does, with the former, without exercising any ill-effect on the latter; while those upon whom nature has bestowed dark hair and a rosy complexion should consider green as their especial color.

Very dark people may wear extremely light brown, gray, or slate color with impunity, but those who have fair complexions and light brown hair should only venture upon pure and light tones of the three primaries, bearing in mind that wherever there is agreeable contrast there is agreeable harmony.

MUST HAVE HER APPLAUSE.—Formerly, it was the rule at Naples, that when an actress was about to make her début, she waited and solicited the honor of the King's presence on her first appearance. In compliance with this rule, Madame Malibran went to his majesty and said, hesitatingly: "Sire, if it be agreeable to your majesty, I have come to request that your majesty will be graciously pleased not to appear at the theatre to-morrow evening." The king, not a little astonished, demanded the reason of a request so singular. "May it please your majesty, I have heard that it is the etiquette in Naples not to applaud in the presence of royalty; that is to say, unless you graciously set the example." The king, perceiving that she was embarrassed, desired her to speak out. "Sire, as you are good enough to command me to speak, I will. The fact is, I am so much in the habit of being applauded the instant that I appear on the stage, that I am sure, if I were received in silence, I couldn't sing a note." "Very well," said his majesty, "I will set the example. Fear not; you shall be abundantly applauded." Madame Malibran returned home highly satisfied by having thus secured powerful protection. In the evening, just before she made her appearance on the stage, she got between the side scenes, where she might be seen from the royal box, and, having caught the eye of the king, reminded him of his promise by clapping her hands. His majesty, pleased with her freedom and originality failed not to be as good as his word, and the whole house loudly responded to the signal.

A BOX OF ROGUES.

WHEN the criminal, Pierre Granger, escorted by four gendarmes, was placed in the dock of the court of assize, there was a general stir amongst the crowd which had assembled from every quarter to be present at his trial.

Pierre Granger was not an ordinary culprit—not one of those poor wretches whom the court, as a matter of form, furnishes with an advocate, judges in the presence of a heedless auditory, and sends to oblivion in the convict prisons of the State. He had figured at Augtil in the columns of the newspapers; and while M. Lépervier had undertaken his defence, M. Lourangain, the attorney-general, was to conduct the prosecution. Now, at the time of which I write, these two men stood at the head of their profession. Whenever it was known that they were to be pitted against each other in any cause, crowds immediately flocked to enjoy their eloquent sentences, sonorous periods, and phrases as round and as polished as so many billiard-balls. It was a perfect riot of tropes and figures, a delicious confusion of periphrases and metaphors. All the figures of rhetoric defiled before the charmed auditory, and sported, jested, and struggled with each other, like Virgil's playful shepherds. There was a luxury of epithets, passing even that of the Abbé Delille. Every individual substantive was as regularly followed by its attendant adjective, as the great lady of the last century by her train-bearing page. In this pompous diction a man became a mortal, a horse a courser, the moon was styled pale Dian. My father and my mother were never called so, but invariably "the authors of my being;" a dream was a vision, a glass a crystal vase, a knife a sword, a car a chariot, and a breeze became a whirlwind: all of which, no doubt, tended to produce a style of exceeding sublimity and beauty.

Pierre Granger was a clumsily built fellow, five feet ten in height, thirty-eight years old, with foxy hair, a high color, and small cunning grey eyes. He was accused of having strangled his wife, cut up the body into pieces, and then, in order to conceal his crime, set fire to the house, wherein his three children perished. Such an accumulation of horrors had shed quite a romantic halo round their perpetrator. Ladies of rank and fashion flocked to the gaol to look at him; and his autograph was in wonderful request, as soon as it became known that Madame Césarine Langelot, the lioness of the district, possessed some words of his writing in her album, placed between a ballad by a professor of rhetoric and a problem by the engineer-in-chief of the department: neither gentlemen, to say the truth, being much flattered by such close juxtaposition with the interesting pet-prisoner. When Pierre Granger, with his lowering brow and air of stolid cunning, was placed in the dock, the names of twelve jurors were drawn by lot, and the president demanded of the counsel on either side, whether they wished to exercise their right of challenge. Both declined offering any objection to twelve such honorable names; but the attorney-general added, that he would require the drawing of a supplementary juror. It was done, and on the paper appeared the name of Major Vernor. At the sound, a slight murmur was heard amongst the spectators, while MM. Louraugain and Lepervier exchanged a rapid glance which seemed to say: "Will not you challenge him?" But neither of them did so; an officer conducted Major Vernor into his appointed place, and amid profound silence the indictment was read. Major Vernor had lived in the town during the last two years. Every one gave him the military title, yet none could tell when, or where, or whom he had served. He seemed to have neither family nor friends; and when any of his acquaintances ventured to sound him on the subject, he always replied in a manner by no means calculated to encourage curiosity. "Do I trouble my head about your affairs?" he would say. "Your shabby old town suits me well enough as a residence, but if you don't think I have a right to live in it, I shall be most happy to convince you of the fact at daybreak to-morrow with gun, sword, or pistol." Major Vernor was precisely the very man to keep his word; the few persons who had entered his lodgings reported that his bedroom resembled an armory, so fully was it furnished with all sorts of murderous weapons. Notwithstanding this, he seemed a very respectable sort of man, regular in his habits, punctual in his payments, and fond of smoking excellent cigars, sent him, he used to say, by a friend in Havana. He was tall, very thin, bald, and always dressed in black; his moustaches curled to a point; and he invariably wore his hat cocked over his right ear. In the evenings he used to frequent the public reading-rooms of the town, but he never played at any game, or conversed with the company, remaining absorbed in his newspaper until the clock struck ten, when he lit his cigar, twisted his moustaches, and with a stiff, silent bow, took his departure. It sometimes happened that one of the company, bolder than the others, said, "Good night, major!" Then the major would stop, fix his gray eye on the speaker, and reply, "Good night, monsieur!" but in so rude and angry a tone that the words sounded more like a malediction than a polite salutation. It was remarked that whoever thus ventured to address the major, was, during the remainder of the evening, the victim of some strange ill-luck. He regularly lost at play, was sure to knock his elbow through a handsome lamp or vase, or in some way to get entangled in a misadventure. So firmly were the good townsfolk persuaded that the major possessed an evil eye, that their common expression, when any one met with a misfortune, was: "He must have said 'good night' to the major."

This mysterious character dined every day at the ordinary of the Crown Hotel, and although habitually silent, seemed usually contented with the fare. One day, however, after having eaten some bread soup, he cast his eye along the table, frowned, and calling the host, said: "How comes it that the dinner to-day is entirely meagre?"

"Monsieur, no doubt, forgets that this is Good Friday."

"Send me up two mutton chops."

"Impossible, major—there is not an ounce of meat to be had at any butcher's in the town."

"Let me have some fowl."

"That is not to be had, either."

"What a set of fools!" exclaimed the major, striking his clenched hand on the table with such force that the bottles reeled and rocked just as if all the wine in their bodies had got into their heads. Then he called the waiter and said, "Baptiste, go to my lodging, and bring me the inlaid carbine which hangs over my pillow."

The poor host trembled, and grew very pale when Baptiste returned with a double-barrelled gun, beautifully inlaid with silver. The major coolly examined the locks, put on fresh caps, cocked both barrels, and walked out, followed at a respectful distance by the guests and inmates of the hotel. Not far off stood an old ivy-mantled church, whose angular projections were haunted by many ravens. Two large ones flew out of a turret just as the major came up and took aim for a double shot. Down tumbled both the unclean birds at his feet.

"Sacré bleu!" said he, picking them up. "I'm regularly sold—they're quite lean."

He returned to the hotel, and, according to his express orders, one moiety of his ill-omened booty was dressed in a savory stew, and the other simply roasted. Of both dishes he partook so heartily that not a vestige of either remained, and he declared that he had never eaten more relishing food. From that day the major became an object of uneasiness to some, of terror to others, of curiosity to all. Whenever he appeared on public promenade, every one avoided him; at the theatre, his box was generally occupied by himself alone; and each old woman that met him in the street invariably stopped to cross herself. Major Vernor was never known to enter a church, or accept an invitation; at first he used to receive a good many of these, and the perfumed billets served him to light his cigars.

Such, then, was the thirteenth juror drawn in the cause of Pierre Granger, and it may easily be understood why the audience were moved at hearing the name of Major Vernor. The paper of accusation, notwithstanding it was drawn up by the attorney-general with a force and particularity of description which horrified the ladies present, was read amid profound silence, broken only by the snoring of the prisoner, who had coolly settled himself to sleep. The gendarmes tried to rouse him from his slumber, but they merely succeeded in making him now and then half open his dull, brutish eyes. When the clerk had ceased to read, Pierre Granger was with difficulty awakened, and the president proceed to question him. The interrogatory revealed, in all its horror, the thoroughly stupid fiendishness of the wretch. He had killed his wife, he said, because they couldn't agree; he had set his house on fire because it was a cold night, and he wanted to make a good blaze to warm himself: as to his children, they were dirty, squalling little things—no loss to him or to any one else. It would be tedious to pursue all the details of this disgusting trial. M. Louraugain and M. Lépervier both made marvellously eloquent speeches, but the latter deserved peculiar credit, having so very bad a cause to sustain. Although he well knew that his client was as thorough a scoundrel as ever breathed, and that his condemnation would be a blessing to society, yet he pleaded his cause with all a lawyer's conscientiousness. When he got to the peroration, he managed to squeeze from his eyes a few rare tears, the last and most precious, I imagine, which he carefully reserved for an especially solemn occasion—just as some families preserve a few bottles of fine old wine, to be drunk at the marriage of a daughter or the coming of age of a son. At length the case closed, and the president was going to sum up; but, as the heat in court was excessive, and every one stood in need of refreshment, leave was given to the jury to retire for half an hour, and the hall was cleared for the same space of time, in order that it might undergo a thorough ventilation. During this interval, while twelve of the jurors were cooling themselves with ices and sherbet, the thirteenth lighted a cigar, and, reclining in an arm-chair, smoked away with the gravity of a Turk.

"What a capital cigar!" sighed one of the jurors, as he watched with an envious eye, the odoriferous little clouds escaping from the smoker's lips.

"Would you like to try one?" asked the major, politely offering his cigar-case.

"If it would not trespass too much on your kindness."

"By no means. You are heartily welcome." The juror took a cigar, and lighted it at that of his obliging neighbor. "Well, how do you like it?" asked the major.

"Delicious! It has an uncommonly pleasant aroma. From whence are you supplied?"

"From Havana." Several jurors now approached, casting longing eyes at Major Vernor's cigar-case.

"Gentlemen," said he,—"I am really grieved that I have not a single cigar left to offer, having just given the last to our worthy friend. To-morrow, however, I hope to have a fresh supply, and shall then ask you to do me the honor of accepting some."

At that moment, an official came in to announce that the court had resumed its sitting; the jury hastened to their box, and the president began his charge. Scarcely had he commenced, however, when the juror who had smoked the cigar rose and in a trembling voice begged permission to retire, as he felt very ill. Indeed, while in the act of speaking, he fell backwards and lay senseless on the floor. The president, of course, directed that he should be carefully conveyed to his home, and desired Major Vernor to take his place. Six strokes sounded from the old clock of the town hall as the jury retired to deliberate on their verdict in the case of Pierre Granger. Eleven gentlemen exclaimed, with one voice, that the wretched assassin's guilt was perfectly clear, and that they could not hesitate for a moment as to their decision. Major Vernor, however, stood up, placed his back against the door, and regarding his colleagues with a peculiarly sinister expression, said slowly:

"I shall acquit Pierre Granger, and you shall all do the same!"

"Sir," replied the foreman in a severe tone, "you are answerable to your conscience for your own actions, but I do not see what right you have to offer us a gratuitous insult."

"Am I then so unfortunate as to offend you?" asked the major, meekly.

"Certainly, in supposing us capable of breaking the solemn oath which we have taken, to do impartial justice. I am a man of honor—"

"Bah!" interrupted the major, "are you quite sure of that?"

A general murmur of indignation arose.

"Do you know, sir, that such a question is a fresh insult?"

"You are quite mistaken," said Major Vernor. "What I said was drawn forth by a feeling of the solemn responsibility which rests with us. Before I can resolve to make a dead body of a living moving being, I must feel satisfied that both you and I are less guilty than Pierre Granger, which, after all, is not so certain."

An ominous silence ensued: the major's words seemed to strike home to every breast, and at length one of the jurors said: "You seem, sir, to regard the question from a philosophical point of view."

"Just so, Monsieur Cerneau."

"You know me, then," said the juror in a trembling voice.

"Not very intimately, my dear sir, but just sufficiently to appreciate your fondness for discounting bills at what your enemies might call usurious interest. I think it was about four years ago that an honest poor man, the father of a large family, blew out his brains, in despair, at being refused by you a short renewal, which he had implored on his knees."

Without replying, M. Cerneau retired to the farthest corner of the room, and wiped off large drops of sweat which started from his brow.

"What does this mean?" inquired another juror, impatiently. "Have we come hither to act a scene from the Memoirs of the Devil?"

"I don't know that work," replied the major, "but may I advise you, Monsieur de Bardine, to calm your nerves?"

"Sir, you are impertinent, and I shall certainly do myself the pleasure to chastise you."

"As how?"

"With my sword. I shall do you the honor to meet you to-morrow."

"An honor which, being a man of sense, I must beg to decline. You don't kill your adversaries, Monsieur de Bardine; you murder them. Have you forgotten your duel with Monsieur de Lillar, which took place, I am told, without witnesses? While he was off his guard, you treacherously struck him through the heart. The prospect of a similar catastrophe is by no means enticing."

With an instinctive movement M. de Bardine's neighbors drew off."

"I admire such virtuous indignation," sneered the major. "It especially becomes you, Monsieur Darien—"

"What infamy are you going to cast in my teeth?" exclaimed the gentleman addressed.

"Oh, very little—a mere trifle—simply, that while Monsieur de Bardine kills his friends, you only dishonor yours. Monsieur Simon, whose house, table and purse are yours, has a pretty wife—"

"Major," cried another juror, "you're a villain!"

"Pardon me, my dear Monsieur Calfat, let us call things by their proper names. The only villain amongst us, I believe is the man who himself set fire to his house, six months after having insured it at treble its value in four offices, whose directors were foolish enough to pay the money without making sufficient inquiry."

A stifled groan escaped from M. Calfat's lips as he covered his face with his hands. "Who are you that you thus dare to constitute yourself our judge?" asked another, looking fiercely at Vernor.

"Who am I, Monieur Peron? simply one who can appreciate your very rare dexterity in holding court-cards in your hand, and making the dice turn up as you please."

M. Peron gave an involuntary start, and thenceforward held his peace. The scene, aided by the darkness of approaching night, had now assumed a terrific aspect. The voice of the major rang in the ears of eleven pale, trembling men, with a cold metallic distinctness, as if each word inflicted a blow.

At length Vernor burst into a strange sharp hissing laugh. "Well, my honorable colleagues," he exclaimed, "does this poor Pierre Granger still appear to you unworthy of the slightest pity? I grant you, he has committed a fault, and a fault which you would not have committed in his place. He has not had your cleverness in masking his turpitude with a show of virtue—that was his real crime. Now, if after having killed his wife, he had paid handsomely for masses to be said for her repose—if he had purchased a burial-ground, and caused to be raised to her memory a beautiful square white marble monument, with a flowery epitaph on it in gold letters—why, then we should all have shed tears of sympathy, and eulogized Pierre Granger as the model of a tender husband. Don't you agree with me, Monsieur Norbec?"

M. Norbec started as if he had received an electric shock. "It is false!" he murmured. "I did not poison Eliza; she died of pulmonary consumption."

"True," said the major; "you remind me of a circumstance which I had nearly forgotten. Madame Norbec, who possessed a large fortune in her own right, died without issue five months after she had made you her sole legatee."

Then the major was silent. They were now in total darkness. Suddenly came the sharp click of a pistol, and the obscurity was for a moment brightened by a flash, but there was no report—the weapon had missed fire. The major burst into a long and loud fit of laughter. "Charming! delightful! Ah, my dear sir," he exclaimed, addressing the foreman, "you were the only honest man of the party; and see how, to oblige me, you have made an attempt on my person which places you on an honorable level with Pierre Granger!" Then, having rung the bell, he called for candles, and when they were brought, he said, "Come, gentlemen, I suppose you don't want to sleep here; let us make haste and finish our business."

Ten minutes afterwards the foreman handed in the issue paper—a verdict of not guilty—and Pierre Granger was discharged amid the hisses and execrations of the crowd, who indeed were prevented only by a strong military force from assaulting both judge and jury. Major Vernor coolly walked up to the dock, and passing his arm under that of Pierre Granger, went out with him through a side door.

From that hour neither the one nor the other was ever seen again in the country. That night there was a terrific thunder-storm; the ripe harvest was beaten down by hail-stones as large as pigeons' eggs, and a flash of lightning striking the steeple of the old ivy-covered church tore down its gilded cross.

* * * * * * *

This strange story was related to me one day last year by a convict in the infirmary of the prison at Toulon. I have given it verbatim from his lips; and as I was leaving the building the sergeant who accompanied me said: "So, sir, you have been listening to the wonderful rodomontades of Number 19,788?"

"What do you mean? This history—"

"Is false from beginning to end. Number 19,788 is an atrocious criminal, who was sent to the galleys for life, and who during the last few months has given evident proofs of mental aberration. His monamania consists chiefly in telling stories to prove that all judges and jurors are rogues and villains. He was himself found guilty, by a most respectable and upright jury, of robbing and trying to murder Major Vernor. He is now about to be placed in a lunatic asylum, so that you will probably be the last visitor who will hear his curious inventions."

"And who is Major Vernor?"

"A brave old half-pay officer, who has lived at Toulon beloved and respected during the last twelve years. You will probably see him to-day, smoking his Havana cigar, after the table d'hote dinner at the Crown Hotel."—Cornhill Magazine.

A MONUMENT in honor of Columbus has been erected at Salamanca, Spain. It is placed in a lofty elevation near the grounds of the University. The monument is a large pedestal, resting on a broad base and arch, and above a beautiful eagle and globe. The height of the whole is one hundred and six metres. It is constructed entirely of a dark and regular color.

BRIAN BOROMHA.

BRIAN BOROMHA, the great Irish chieftain, of whom so much has been sung and written, and who, to some minds, is granted a fairy existence only, will be seen, by the following described interview between him and other sovereigns to have been a man "with flesh and blood quite natural."

It was in the fourth year of the reign of Congal, the present monarch, that Brian, son of Kenneidi, assumed the sovereignty of Munster. And, in the second year after his assumption thereof, he challenged Maelmuaidh, son of Brann, King of the Ui Eachaeh, to meet him in battle, at Belach Lechta, (Baitagh Loghta,) in order that he might wreak vengeance for his brother Mathgamain, son of Kenneidi, who had been treacherously murdered by the people of Maelmuaidh. Maelmuaidh thereupon mustered a great army, composed as well of strangers as of Irish; for he had with him a body of one thousand five hundred of the Lochlannaigh, together with a large force of the Gaels likewise. He was, nevertheless, routed at Balach Lechta, by Brian and the Dal-g-Cais, by whom a countless multitude of his followers were slaughtered; and those of them that were not killed became the captives of Brian. After this Domnall O'Faelain, King of the Desi, aided by the Lochlannaigh, proclaimed war against Brian, and the greater part of Munster was ravaged by him and his foreign allies. However, they were soon overtaken by Briau, who gave them battle at Fan Conrach, where the King of the Desi and his foreigners were completely vanquished. Brian then pursued their routed host to Port Largi, where he slew Domnall O'Faelain himself. He next made captives of the greater part of the inhabitants of that city, which he plundered and then burned.

Upon his return home from Gilla Comgaill, he called around him an assembly of the Clann Colmain, and made known to them the reply of Aedh O'Neill and the Kinel Eogain; and when his tribesmen had heard it, they came to the resolution of having Maelsechlainn set out at once, at his own risk, and visit Brian unconditionally at his camp at Temhair, where the latter had now been staying for one month, during which time his army had been supported by the men of Meath. Maelsechlainn, therefore, went to Temhair, escorted by twelve score of horsemen. Thus accompanied, he arrived upon the green of Temhair, and proceeded at once to the residence of Brian without either surety or safeguard. He there acquainted his rival with all his proceedings from beginning to end. He said that he would have given him battle, had he been in a position to fight; but as he was not in such a position, that he had now come to give hostages and to submit. When Brian had heard him, he said: "As thou hast come thus to my dwelling, without surety or safeguard from me, I now grant thee a further respite of one year, during which time I shall demand neither homage nor hostage at thy hands. And, in the meantime, I shall pay a personal visit to those northern folk, both Aedh O'Neill and Eocridh, son of Ardgal, King of Ulidia, in order that I may learn what kind of answer they will make to me. And then should they give me battle, thou mayest help them against me, if thou wilt." But here Maelsechlainn declared that he would not fight against him after any such manner. However, he told Brian that he would not advise him to march northward just then; and said that it was now better for him to return to his own home until another time. "For," said he, "it is enough that thou hast received my submission, as the result of thy present expedition." They finally agreed upon this, and the Dal-g-Cais were well pleased thereat, for they had almost consumed all their provisions for the campaign. Then, as he was about to march homeward, Brian presented twelve score of steeds to Maelsechlainn, together with a large quantity of gold and silver, which was to be distributed among his people.

Afterward, when one year had passed by, Brian called together a general muster of the whole force of Loth Mogha, both Gallic and Gaelic. There came thither to the Lochlannaigh of Ath-cliath, Port-Largi, Loch Carman, and Corcanh, together with those that dwelt in Ui Eachach Mumhan, Corca Laighe, and Ui Kennoselaigh. With this host Brian marched to Athluain, where the nobles of Connaught gave him hostages as pledges of their submission to him as their Ard-righ. He sent an embassy thence to Maelsechlainn, requesting of him to send his hostages thither likewise. Upon receiving this message, Maelsechlainn came and delivered up his hostages and made his submission in person. Thereupon, Brian mustered the full strength of the men of Munster, Connaught, Leinster, and Meath, and therewith marched to Dun Delgain, where he received the hostages and submission of all Ulidia.

It was thus that Brian Boromha acquired the sovereignty of Ireland. He did not acquire it by treason, as some will have it, but by the bravery and hardihood of his deeds of arms, and by his chivalrous valor.

THE Bay of Fundy was explored by Champlain in 1604 and named by him "Baye François," and so appeared on the French maps. On Bowles' English map, published at London, 1715, it is called "Fondi Bay."

A STORY OF THE TRICHINA.—The awful calamity which has been devastating Hedersleben and its vicinity, brings to light the following strange occurrence, which happened in Germany many years ago:

In the year 1845, several clergymen and other official persons met at Jessen, a little town in the district of Merseburg, for the purpose of inspecting the schools. Seven members of the commission took their luncheon at the house of a wine merchant named Gese. The fare consisted of cheese, sausage, raw ham, and white wine. A Mr. Stoukert came rather later, and ate nothing, but drank a glass of wine. A few days afterward all the seven who had taken luncheon became very seriously ill, and four of them died. The symptoms were violent diarrhœa, red spots on the skin, swelling of the whole body, accompanied by great pain, sleeplessness, and delirium. The doctors were completely puzzled, and could come to no other conclusion than that the food had been poisoned, which seemed to be more than probable, as Mr. Stoukert remained perfectly well. Suspicion naturally fell on the wine merchant, Gese. Two of the bodies were disinterred and chemically examined, but no trace of poison was discovered. The popular belief, however, that there had been foul play was so strong that Gese was from that time a ruined man. Nobody would have any further intercourse with him, and he found himself compelled to emigrate with his family to America, where he is supposed to have died in great indigence.

In the year 1863 the teacher, Oehme—one of the three who had recovered from the imagined poisoning—came to Berlin for the purpose of having an operation performed on his neck. As soon as Mr. Langendack, the celebrated surgeon, had laid bare the upper layer of muscle, he observed a very large number of small white spots. They were examined by the microscope and found to be dead trichinæs. Here, then, was the solution of the fatal mystery which had occasioned the utter ruin of an innocent man, and might very easily have cost him his life as well as his good name.

ANCIENT MANNERS AND CUSTOMS.—In Queen Elizabeth's reign there is a report for the year 1580, in which it is stated that "the maids of honor desired to have their chambers ceiled, and the partition that is of boards to be made higher, for that the servants looked over." And about the same time it is said that certain young noblemen and gentlemen were guilty of similar indecorous behavior, being fond of peeping over these boards, to the great annoyance of the ladies when at their toilet, whereat her Majesty was highly displeased, and severely reproved them. Moreover, it seems that the chamber for the squires of the body was "ruinous and cold," and required to be "ceiled overhead and boarded underfoot;" and that some part of the Castle was so much out of repair that the rain beat in! It is not more curious than instructive to note the state of things in Scotland about the same period. There was even a greater lack of personal comfort among the nobility in that country than in England. The late Earl of Buchan, in his Antiquarian Researches, gives the following rare piece of information, which at least shows linen to have been a scarce commodity in the days of James VI. In the archives of the Mar family, under a section dedicated to antique costume, it is stated that "the Royal charge (James) continuing under the nurture of his governante, the Dowager Countess of Mar (as towards his mouth and ordering of his person,) had, in the dead of night, been seized with a colic. The ladies of honor were all summoned from their warm beds to attend his heeniss; when, as was remarked, none of the ladies had any shifts, except the auld Countess of Mar, her ladyship being tender (sickly)."—Builder.

COSTLY CARESSES.—The following story is told of an English lord who went to a sale of fancy articles at the Ministry of War, for the benefit of the poor. The nobleman first asked the lady at the stall, what was the price of a beautiful cigar-case. "Two hundred francs," was the reply. "'Tis nothing; I take it," said the lord. "And this jewel case?" "Eight hundred francs." "Nothing," again said the lord, handing a note of 1,000f. "Do you wish for anything else?" said the lady. "Ah!" replied he, "what I wish for is not to be compared with any of these articles, but fix a price." "What do you wish?" "To kiss your fair hand." The lady blushed, reflected, and replied—"Three thousand francs." The lord gracefully kissed the proffered hand, given with some hesitation—but what will not charitable ladies do for the poor? "I want something else," said the lord—"a lock of your hair." "That will be 6,000f." "That is nothing," again said the lord, on receiving the lock of hair which the lady cut off for him. "Six and three are nine," said the noble lord, and, handing 9,000f. to the lady, his lordship departed pleased with his bargains. This narrative may or may not be true. It is related as authentic, and we happen to know that at the Anti-Corn Law League bazaar, held some years ago at Covent Garden Theatre, a gentleman offered £20 to a lady, who is now, and was then the wife of a member of Parliament holding a high office, to be allowed to kiss her cheek. The offer was accepted, and the amount agreed upon was paid upon the spot.—Court Journal.

NOTICE.

The publication of "The Californian" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

White & Bauer, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for The Californian in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

letters relating to the Business, Editorial or other Departments of the paper should be addressed to the Publishers of The Californian, No. 532 Merchant street, San Francisco.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch, at reasonable rates.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JUNE 23, 1866.

Full volumes of The Californian, from the commencement, can be obtained at the office, 532 Merchant street. Price, in muslin, $4 per volume; two volumes (one year) bound together, $6. Unbound, per volume, $2 50.

ECCE HOMO.*

We regret that our space will not allow us to discuss more freely the contents of this work, and to examine how successfully the author has accomplished his purpose "to trace the biography of Jesus from point to point, and accept those conclusions about him, not which church doctors or even apostles have sealed with their authority, but which the facts themselves, critically weighed, appear to warrant."

Coming as the volume does after the issue of the startling and—to many minds dangerous—volume, Vie de Jesus, of M. Ernest Renan, it would seem that it were written with a purpose behind that which is announced, and that the author has taken an opportunity to counteract whatever influence might have been exerted by that work. But the reader of the volume who is expecting thrusts at his scepticism is forewarned. The writer's postulates are patent before he has announced them, and the conclusions at which his examination will arrive are plainly seen as soon as the first steps are taken. The author offers himself as the friend of "those who feel dissatisfied with the current conceptions of Christ," and who "cannot rest content without a definite opinion," and graciously steps forward "to do what to persons not so dissatisfied it seems audacious and perilous to do."

But, for the perfect accomplishment of this purpose, the author does not set out with what might be called the freshness of ignorance regarding Jesus, and freedom from bias regarding his personality and efficiency. In the examination the author's earlier education is always plainly visible; he relies entirely upon the one book for the facts relating to Jesus, and does not betray by any allusion familiarity with any critical writings; he has already formed his theories, and only writes for the sake of making his peculiar statement of them; he comes to the work so thoroughly prejudiced that he can make no disinterested inquiry; he follows the old train of orthodox thought, combats no old idea; occasionally, by sophistical pretense, almost adopting a scepticism, but immediately faintly subsiding into the old trains of thought, belief and prejudice. He is guilty of false assumptions and unreasonable deductions, of forced interpretations of Jesus' acts and life; is often not content to take the obvious meaning of the sacred text which any reader may easily comprehend, refuses to accept his language in metaphor, but insists upon a literal translation that loses the spirit and force of the original; to establish his own position sets up opposing men of straw, excites discussion in the thoughtful mind that is inclined to differ, and lays himself open to scholarly criticism. His judgment of any acts of Jesus is always and only consistent with the old belief, and he is enthusiastic in his gratitude that these acts always conformed to the character as depicted to us by the "apostles and doctors"

The volume is issued anonymously. It has been received with a very considerable degree of favor both in England and America, and some critics have gone so far as to speak of it as one of the most remarkable books of the age. Speculations as to its authorship have to a great extent settled upon no less a person than the Right Hon. Wm. E. Gladstone as the writer, but we believe that a critical examination of the volume will place the responsibility elsewhere, and possibly much to the relief of that gentleman. It does not in any manner appear whether it was written by a layman or clergyman, except that the topics discussed therein would naturally draw liberally upon one's facility of quotation from the Bible, and this volume is fortunately free from that oppressive superfluity of texts which usually clothe priestly thought as if necessary to the completion of the sacred garb.

* Ecce Homo. A survey of the Life and Work of Jesus Christ. Boston: Roberts Brothers. San Francisco: Roman & Co.

W. E. Looms, corner of Sansome and Washington streets, has placed on our table, The Galaxy for June, The New York Medical Journal for May and June, and Hollaway's Musical Monthly (Philadelphia) for June.

(Copyright secured.)

"BRET'S" "CALIFORNIAN" CONDENSED NOVELS.

BY W-LK-E C-LL-NS.

PROLOGUE.

The following advertisement appeared in the Times of the 17th of June, 1845:

Wanted.—A few young men for a light genteel employment. Address J. W., P. O.

In the same paper o. same date, in another column:

To Let.—That commodious and elegant family mansion No 27 Limehouse Road, Pultneyville, will be rented low to a respectable tenant if applied for immediately, the family being about to remove to the Continent.

Under the local intelligence in another column:

Missing.—An unknown elderly gentleman a week ago left his lodgings in the Kent Road, since which nothing has been heard of him. He left no trace of his identity except a portmanteau containing a couple of shirts marked "209, WARD."

To find the connection between the mysterious disappearance of the elderly gentleman and the anonymous communication; the relevancy of both these incidents to the letting of a commodious family mansion; and the dead secret involved in the three occurrences, is the task of the writer of this history.

A slim young man with spectacles, a large hat, drab gaiters, and note-book, sat late that night with a copy of the Times before him, and a pencil which he rattled nervously between his teeth in the coffee-room of the "Blue Dragon."

CHAPTER I.

MARY JONES' NARRATIVE.

I am upper housemaid to the family that live at No. 27 Limehouse Road, Pultneyville. I have been requested by Mr. Wilky Collings, which I takes the liberty of here stating is a gentleman born and bred, and has some consideration for the feelings of servants and is not above rewarding them for their trouble which is more than yon can say for some who asks questions and gets short answers enough, gracious knows, to tell what I know about them. I have been requested to tell my story in my own langwidge, though why, being no schollard, mind cannot conceive. I think my master is a brute. Do not know that he has ever attempted to poison my missus—which is too good for him, and how she ever came to marry him, heart only can tell—but believe him to be capable of any such batrosity. Have heard him swear dreadful because of not having his shaving water at 9 o'clock precisely. Do not know whether he ever forged a will or tried to get my missus' property although, not having confidence in the man should not be surprised if he had done so. Believe that there was always something mysterious in his conduct. Remember distinctly how the family left home to go abroad. Was putting up my back hair, last Saturday morning, when I heard a ring. Says cook, "That's missus' bell, and mind you hurry or the master 'ill know why." Says I, "Humbly thanking you mem, but taking advice of them as is compotent to give it, I'll take my time." Found missus dressing herself and master growling as usual. Says missus, quite calm and easy like, "Mary, we begin to pack to-day." "What for, mem," says I, taken aback. "What's that hussy asking?" says master from the bed clothes quite savage like. "For the Continent—Italy," says missus—"can you go Mary?" Her voice was quite gentle and saintlike, but I knew the struggle it cost and says I, "With you mem to India's torrid clime, if required, but with African Gorillas," says I, looking towards the bed, "never." "Leave the room" says master starting up and catching of his bootjack. "Why Charles?" says missus, "how you talk," affecting surprise. "Do go Mary," says she, slipping a half-crown into my hand. I left the room scorning to take notice of the odious wretch's conduct.

Cannot say whether my master and missus were ever legally married. What with the dreadful state of morals now-a-days and them stories in the circulating libraries, innocent girls don't know into what society they might be obliged to take situations. Never saw missus' marriage certificate, though I have quite accidental-like looked in her desk when open, and would have seen it. Do not know of any lovers missus might have had. Believe she had a liking for John Thomas, footman, for she was always spiteful-like—poor lady—when we were together—though there was nothing between us, as Cook well knows, and dare not deny, and missus needn't have been jealous. Have never seen arsenic or Prussian acid in any of the private drawers—but have seen paregoric and camphor. One of my master's friends was a Count Moscow, a Russian papist—which I detested.

CHAPTER II.

THE SLIM YOUNG MAN'S STORY.

I am by profession a reporter, and writer for the press. I live at Pultneyville. I have always had a passion for the marvellous, and have been distinguished for my facility in tracing out mysteries, and solving enigmatical occurrences. On the night of the 17th June, 1845, I left my office and walked homeward. The night was bright and starlight. I was revolving in my mind the words of a singular item I had just read in the Times. I had reached the darkest portion of the road, and found myself mechanically repeating: "An elderly gentleman a week ago left his lodgings on the Kent road," when, suddenly, I heard a step behind me.

I turned quickly, with an expression of horror in my face, and by the light of the newly risen moon beheld an elderly gentleman, with green cotton umbrella, approaching me. His hair, which was snow-white, was parted over a broad, open forehead. The expression of his face, which was slightly flushed, was that of amiability verging almost upon imbecility. There was a strange, enquiring look about the widely-opened, mild blue eye—a look that might have been intensified to insanity, or modified to idiocy. As he passed me, he paused and partly turned his face, with a gesture of enquiry. I see him still, his white locks blowing in the evening breeze, his hat a little on the back of his head, and his figure painted in relief against the dark blue sky.

Suddenly he turned his mild eye full upon me. A weak, irresolute smile played about his thin lips. In a voice which had something of the tremulousness of age and the self-satisfied chuckle of imbecility in it, he asked, pointing to the rising moon, "Why?—Hush!"

He had dodged behind me, and appeared to be looking anxiously down the road. I could feel his aged frame shaking with terror as he laid his thin hands on my shoulders and faced me in the direction of the supposed danger.

"Hush! did you not hear them coming?"

I listened; there was no sound but the soughing of the roadside trees in the evening wind. I endeavored to reassure him, with such success that in a few moments the old weak smile appeared on his benevolent face.

"Why?—" But the look of interrogation was succeeded by a hopeless blankness.

"Why!" I repeated with assuring accents.

"Why," he said, a gleam of intelligence suddenly flickering over his face, "is yonder moon, as she sails in the blue empyrean, casting a flood of light o'er hill and dale, like— Why," he repeated, with a feeble smile, "is yonder moon, as she sails in the blue empyrean—" He hesitated—stammered—and gazed at me hopelessly, with the tears dripping from his moist and widely-opened eyes.

I took his hand kindly in my own. "Casting a shadow o'er hill and dale," I repeated quietly, leading him up the subject, "like— Come, now."

"Ah!" he said, pressing my hand tremulously, "you know it?"

"I do. Why is it like—the—eh—the commodious mansion on the Limehouse Road?"

A blank stare only followed. He shook his head sadly.

"Like the young men wanted for a light, genteel employment?"

He wagged his feeble old head cunningly.

"Or, Mr. Ward," I said with bold confidence, "like the mysterious disappearance from the Kent Road."

The moment was full of suspense. He did not seem to hear me. Suddenly he turned.

"Ha!"

I darted forward. But he had vanished in the darkness.

CHAPTER III.

NO. 27 LIMEHOUSE ROAD.

It was a hot midsummer evening. Limehouse Road was deserted save by dust and a few rattling butchers' carts, and the bell of the muffin and crumpet man. A commodious mansion which stood on the right of the road as you enter Pultneyville surrounded by stately poplars and a high fence surmounted by a chevaux de frisé of broken glass, looked to the passing and footsore pedestrian like the genius of seclusion and solitude. A bill announcing in the usual terms that the house was to let hung from the bell at the servants' entrance.

As the shades of evening closed, and the long shadows of the poplars stretched across the road, a man carrying a small kettle stopped and gazed, first at the bill and then at the house. When he had reached the corner of the fence, he again stopped and looked cautiously up and down the road. Apparently satisfied with the result of his scrutiny, he deliberately sat himself down in the dark shadow of the fence, and at once busied himself in some employment, so well concealed as to be invisible to the gaze of passers by. At the end of an hour he retired cautiously.

But not altogether unseen. A slim young man, with spectacles and note-book, stepped from behind a tree as the retreating figure of the intruder was lost in the twilight, and transferred from the fence to his note book the freshly stencilled inscription—"S—T—1860—X."

CHAPTER IV.

COUNT MOSCOW'S NARRATIVE.

I am a foreigner. Observe? To be a foreigner in England is to be mysterious, suspicious intriguing. M. Collins has requested the history of my complicity with certain occurrences. It is nothing—bah—absolutely nothing.

I write with ease and fluency. Why should I not write? Tra la la! I am what you English call corpulent. Ha, ha! I am a pupil of Macchiavelli. I find it much better to dissemble.

lieve everything, and to approach my subject and wishes circuitously, than in a direct manuer. You have observed that playful animal, the cat. Call it, and it does not come to you directly, but rubs itself against all the furniture in the room, and reaches you fiually—and scratches. Ah, ha! scratches! I am of the feline species. People call me a villain—bah!

I know the family, living No. 27 Limehouse Road. I respect the gentleman—a fine, burly specimen of your Englishman—and Madame, charming, ravishing, delightful. When it became known to me that they designed to let their delightful residence, and visit foreign shores, I at ouce called upon them. I kissed the hand of madame. I embraced the great Englishman. Madame blushed slightly. The great Englishman shook my hand like a mastiff.

I began in that dexterous, insinuating manner, of which I am truly proud. I thought madame was ill. Ah—no. A change, then, was all that was required. I sat down at the piano and sang. In a few minutes madame retired. I was alone with my friend.

Seizing his hand, I began with every demonstration of courteous sympathy. I do not repeat my words, for my intentiou was conveyed more in accent, emphasis, and manner, than speech. I hinted to him that he had another wife living. I suggested that this was balanced—ha!—by his wife's lover. That, possibly, he wished to fly—hence the letting of his delightful mansion. That he regularly and systematically beat his wife in the English manuer, and that she repeatedly deceived him. I talked of hope, of consolation, of remedy. I carelessly produced a bottle of strychuine and a small vial of stramonium from my pocket, and enlarged on the efficiency of drugs. His face, which had gradually become convulsed, suddenly became fixed with a frightful expression. He started to his feet, and roared: "You d—d Frenchman!"

I instantly changed my tactics, and endeavored to embrace him. He kicked me twice, violently. I begged permission to kiss madame's hand. He replied by throwing me down stairs.

I am in bed with my head bound up, and beefsteaks upon my eyes, but still confident and buoyant. I have not lost faith in Macchiavelli. Tra, la, la! as they sing in the opera. I kiss everybody's hands.

CHAPTER V.

DR. DIGGS' STATEMENT.

My name is David Diggs. I am a surgeon living at No. 9 Tottenham Court. On the 15th of June, 1854, I was called to see an elderly gentleman lodging on the Kent Road. Found him highly excited, with strong febrile symptoms, pulse 120, increasing. Repeated incoherently what I judged to be the popular form of a conundrum. On closer examination found acute hydrocephalus and both lobes of the brain rapidly filling with water. In consultation with an eminent phrenologist, it was further discovered that all the organs were more or less obliterated except that of Comparison. Hence the patient was enabled to only distinguish the most common points of resemblance between objects, without drawing upon other faculties such as Ideality or Language for assistance. Later in the day found him sinking—being evidently unable to carry the most ordinary conundrum to a successful issue. Exhibited Tinct. Val., Ext. Opii., and Camphor, and prescribed quiet and emollients. On the 17th the patient was missing.

CHAPTER LAST.

STATEMENT OF THE PUBLISHER.

On the 18th June. Mr. Wilkie Collius left a roll of manuscript with us for publication, without title or direction, since which time he has not been heard from. In spite of the care of the proof-readers, and valuable literary assistance, it is feared that the continuity of the story has been destroyed by some accidental misplacing of chapters during its progress. How and what chapters are so misplaced, the publisher leaves to an indulgent public to discover.

"False" Hair.—Among other novelties in false hair, partial chignons are sold; that is, a frizzed pad with artificial hair dressed over one half, the other preserved for the natural production. These are intended for persons who, having a little hair, are proud of it, but wish, while wearing it, to increase its apparent size. Entire false chignons are intended for those more completely destitute of hirsute growth. As few things look worse than scanty hair, and as hair is really a means of keeping the head warm, and a more beautiful ornament than any manufactured substance, we do not think that those who seek by purchase to supply the deficiency or decay of nature should be censured. Though, perhaps, a natural abundance may be a sign of vigor, youth, and beauty, the possessors of such may be thankful for the not altogether common privilege, and can afford to be generous in spirit towards "purchasers," especially if they could but realize the trouble, patience, skill, and money, necessary for the substitution. The only wonder is that any persons can be found to part with long locks.—Boudoir.

[For the Californian.]

SUNDRIES.

CRITICISM, in incapable hands, is something more than an evil—it is a bore: and people hereabout generally admit that they have been penetrated. Though firmly resolved to incur no liability in this regard, there is just one habit—a writing habit—which I think has been worn long enough and should be cast off. Many editors invariably speak of persons not known to them as "one" Jones, "one" Smith, "one" Brown, etc. This signifies that the itemist deems the "one" referred to an obscure individual—he don't know him. It is very cheap contempt, at best; anybody can indulge in it, and generally it can be returned in kind. I remember during the political campaign which resulted in the victory for Pierce, a speaker who was somewhat distinguished locally—having been postmaster at a cross-roads office and "squire" of his precinct—closed a speech with the annihilating sentence: "One Franklin Pierce is the opposing candidate. I confess, fellow citizens, I don't know one Franklin Pierce." "No," retorted the speaker who followed, "and it's just barely possible 'one' Franklin Pierce doesn't know the gentleman."

"Making arrangements to get the telegraph" is the usual accompaniment—generally only a vocal one—of projects for starting newspapers in this city. If the papers we have could get despatches a little oftener it would be a favor to the community. My Fenian friends have been shabbily treated ever since the last battle was telegraphed—a good part of the time the line has either been down or occupied with "private business." Thus the grievance presents itself to outsiders. However, part of this sympathy may have been wasted—the private business may have been Fenian business: who knows? The Fenian army is scattered but not conquered—privates are wanted, and "private" is the word from this time forth. Telling your enemy just when, where and how you are going to attack him may be open, frank, etc., but it will hardly tend to reduce insurance charges on your life.

—Which suggests another item to be charged to Sundries: Since my "early piety" days quite a change has been made in the tactics of the moral reform army. Then, their tracts were usually headed, "Is Your Soul Saved?" or, "Have You Found the One Thing Needful?" Those now thrust under my door or which meet me in my daily walk, have a more material flavor—thus: "You May Die To-Morrow! Are You Insured?" "Why will You Trifle with Your Life, when a Trifle will Save It?"

Our people are indebted to Boston for many things. During the past year she has sent us a professor of the manly art of self-defence and has also—perhaps with a view to keeping the "Professor" employed—tossed us her biggest Stone. The boulder—if it's not a bolder, where can you find one?—alighted on the heads of our Sabbath-breaking editors, and will doubtless roll around, in due time, and give other offenders a crushing visitation. As to keeping the "one day in seven" holy, no man can reasonably refuse, and it's not half so great a cross as it was when it was not considered altogether "evangelical" to cushion the seats and give the backs of the pews a comfortable incline.

Now that we have a poplar forest of immense proportions in our midst, dealers in redwood will not have it all their own way, though competition will, of course, give an impetus to the building interest and gradually reassure holders. One very good house has already "gone up."

Surgeons and writers are not unlike in one respect—both require subjects, and both at times resort to improper means to procure them. They differ in this, however, that while the former never place themselves nor their professional associates under the knife, many of the latter appear to think that they and their fellow-sufferers the only "subjects" worth dissecting.

A lady in this city startled a friend, recently, by telling him that during his absence she had been shot. "Where? how?" he inquired anxiously. "Here," she replied, "bloodshot!" "Ah," he responded, "I am glad to be assured it is all in your eye." They still survive.

What has become of the Woman in Pants? The last newspaper mention of her was that she had been fined by Judge Rix, but was determined to assert her rights before a higher tribunal. "The People" had gained their suit for the time, but she would not consent permanently to relinquish hers.

Several of the incorporators of the proposed evening paper will be recognized as ardent advocates of the cold-water cause. Let's hope they may not find themselves "in hot water" before a twelvemonth newspaper experience has been added to their possessions. Most publishers find that, after all, success is to be found only "in a horn."

The Gold Brick, by Mrs. Ann S. Stevens, is, according to the Round Table, "the best selling book of the year." I haven't read the story, and cannot weep over this depraved-taste exhibit, as the journal named regards it. Perhaps it's the title that makes the book so taking. My copy was taken before it had time to feel loansome. While we undoubtedly devote too much time to "trashy" literature, we can't feed altogether on solids, and a gold brick seems to dissolve more easily than anything else having the semblance of solidity.

Emstadt.

"MARK TWAIN" AT "THE ISLANDS."

THE last-published letter of "Mark Twain" (in the Union of the 21st inst.,) is mainly devoted to a description of the Ministry and to scenes in the Legislature, which want of space compels us to omit. The following paragraphs are more characteristically Twainish. In reference to the King, "Mark" has formed a better opinion of his Majesty, upon further acquaintance. It will be remembered that he discovered his Royal Highness as he approached the wharf, his royal legs hanging over the water, and his air that of a man who "didn't care two cents whether school kept or not:"

THE MILLENNIUM AT HAND.

I have found at least one startling peculiarity about this Hawaiian Legislature. They do not accuse its members of being stained with bribery and corruption. It is a new and pleasant sensation to me. Some people ascribe this singular purity to innate virtue, while others less charitable say the members are not offered bribes because they are such leaky vessels that they would be sure to let it out. Doubtless, in some cases one theory is correct, and the other correct in other cases. I hope it is somehow that way; at any rate, I haven't time to discuss it.

LEGISLATIVE ETIQUETTE.

Legislative etiquette is of a low grade everywhere, I believe. I find no exception to the rule here. All hands smoke during the session, from the highest down to the pock-marked messenger. Cow county members—or perhaps I should say taro-patch members—lay the sides of their faces on the desks, encircle them with their arms and go to sleep for a few moments at a time. I know they must put their feet on the desks sometimes, but I could not catch them at it. I saw them eating crackers and cheese, though, and freely excused them for it, because they hold long, fatiguing sessions—from 11 to 4 o'clock, without intermission. I am grieved to say that their etiquette is a shade superior to that of the early Washoe Legislatures. "Horse Williams" was a member of one of them, and he used to always prop his vast feet upon his desk and get behind them and eat a raw turnip during prayer by the Chaplain.

A CORRECTION.

Some people in California have an idea that the King of the Sandwich Islands is a man who spends his time idling about the town of Honolulu with individuals of questionable respectability, and drinking habitually and to excess. This impression is wrong. Before he ascended the throne he was "faster" than was well for him or for his good name, but, like the hero of Agincourt, he renounced his bad habits and discarded his Falstaffs when he became King, and since that time has conducted himself as becomes his high position. He attends closely to his business, makes no display, does not go about much, and in manners and habits is a thorough gentleman. He only appears in the streets when his affairs require it, and then he goes well mounted or in his carriage, and decently and properly attended.

And while upon this subject, I will remark that His Majesty's income is amply sufficient for the modest state he indulges in. The Legislature appropriates $16,000 a year to his use, and his estates (called the "Royal domain") yield him $20,000 a year besides. The present palace is to be pulled down, and a new one erected. The Legislature has just made an appropriation of $40,000 to begin the work and carry it on for the next two years. There was nothing said about what it is ultimately to cost—wherefore I surmise that it is the design of the Government to build a palace well worthy of the name.

Mr. M. D. Conway, the London correspondent of the Round Table, speaks thus of the mercantile cant, too often heard, in reference to the compensations of authorship: "I thought as I paced along this square of a very foolish remark made by one of your Boston contemporaries lately, in disparagement of your noble efforts to rescue from literary sharks the fruits of honest, laborious thought and culture everywhere by a just copywright law. 'The best writers,' said the journal to which I refer, 'will always be poorly paid in money—they work for nobler objects.' This is sickening cant. The best writers have again and again been reduced to become the most wretched sycophants in order to live; intellectual independence has been sapped a thousand times because of the need of some patronage from the rich or from the world. It is necessary that the author shall write for nobler objects than money; and for that very reason he should not be chained down for evermore to the writing for money. Just in the proportion that authors have been well paid in this world have they written well. In Carlyle's preface to his edition of Emerson, in this country, he partly attributed Emerson's independence to his being above want."

DISTANCES FROM SAN FRANCISCO
To various points:

To Fort Point, 4 miles, hy omnibus, four trips a day.
Lone Mountain, 3, street railway.
Seal Rock, 6, cars and omnibus, two trips a day.
Mission Dolores, street railways; Ocean House 8.
San Mateo, 20, railroad.
Crystal Springs, 23, railroad and stage
Half-Moon Bay, 29, do. do.
Redwood city, 30, do.
Mountain View, 38, do.
Santa Clara, 47, do.
San Jose, 50, do., or steamer and stage, 54.
Alviso, 46, steamer, daily.
Almaden mines, 67, steamer and stage; or hy railroad and stage, 64.
Santa Cruz, 78, railroad and stage.
Oakland, 8, steamer and railroad, six trips a day.
Alameda, 11, steamer, three trips a day.
San Leandro, 15, steamer and railroad.
Mission San Jose, 34, steamer, railroad and stage.
Warm Springs, 37, do. do.
Benicia, 30, steamer leaves at 4 P. M. daily.
Sacramento, 117, do. do.
Stockton, 117, do. do.
Martinez, 33, do.
Pacheco, 38, steamer and stage.
Diablo Coal Mines, 44, steamer and stage.
Suisun, 50, steamer, or 54 by steamer and stage
Vallejo, 28; Mare Island, 37; Napa city, 50
White Sulphur Springs, 67, stage from Napa.
Geyser Springs, 118, do. do.
Sonoma, 52, steamer, tri-weekly.
Petaluma, 48, steamer, daily.
Healdshurg, 80, stage daily from Petaluma
San Quentin, 12, steamer; Farallone Islands, 20.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,
1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrous and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegaut Brick Fireproof Hotel, situatod on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

It was built expressly for a Hotel, with all the modern conveniences attached to it.
Gas and water are supplied throughout the House.
Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will findi Hotel all the comforts of a homo. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

LARGE READING ROOM

Attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will he in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and haggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr.,
my6-3m Proprietor.

THE PACIFIC
INSURANCE COMPANY,
HAVING ADDED
MARINE INSURANCE
TO THEIR BUSINESS, ARE NOW PREPARED TO ISSUE POLICIES ON
Marine, Inland Navigation, and Fire Risks,
ON THE MOST FAVORABLE TERMS.

Office, 436 California street.

J. HUNT, President
A. J. RALSTON, Secretary. my5-3m

WHO WANTS
Profitable Employment
OR PAYING INVESTMENTS?

PARTIES desirous of getting into OLD-ESTABLISHED BUSINESS CONCERNS, either as Partners or Sole Proprietors in Mercantile, Manufacturing, Trading, or any kind of business in city or country, can do so by applying at my office.
Men desiring profitable situations in business houses, with MONEY TO LOAN on satisfactory security, can secure such appointments.
Partnerships negotiated, where large or small capital is required.
Business Interests sold quickly for cash.
Real Estate bought and sold.
Help furnished for all kinds of employment.
Situations obtained for parties desiring employment.
S. P. WHITMAN,
Property, General Agency, and Business House, 313 Montgomery street, San Francisco. mar17

BEER AND WINE SALOON.

Faust Cellar.

Southeast corner of Clay and Montgomery streets.

A. L. THIELE.....Proprietor

WESTPHALIA HAMS, RUSSIAN CAVIAR, SARDINES, Anchovies, Swiss and Limburg Cheese, etc.; the finest Brands of Liquors, Wines, Cigars, and Seltzer Water, Wholesale and Retail.
☞ Fishing and Hunting Parties fitted out at the shortest notice. fe24

THE CALIFORNIAN.

TERMS—FIVE DOLLARS PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE

A PAPER FOR THE TIMES

DEVOTED TO LIVE TOPICS,

THE DISSEMINATION OF A PURE LITERATURE, DEVELOPMENT OF HOME TALENT,

AND THE

BEST INTERESTS OF CALIFORNIA.

Published

EVERY SATURDAY MORNING

AT

532 MERCHANT STREET,

BY THE CALIFORNIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY.

A. A. STICKNEY, J. F. BOGARDUS, W. J. BINGHAM, C. H. WEBB

No effort will be spared to enable THE CALIFORNIAN to appeal to the Public for support, not only as the

BEST JOURNAL ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

But also as being

THE EQUAL OF ANY ON THIS CONTINENT

THE BEST TALENT OF THE STATE

Is employed upon THE CALIFORNIAN.

The voluntary notices bestowed hy the press of the Eastern cities have heen no less warm and congratulatory than those which we have received at the hands of our cotemporaries of the Pacili Their verdict is unanimously in favor of

THE CALIFORNIAN

and all join in pronouncing their unqualified approval of its unequalled merits.

Its reputation is now fully established. It is not

EXCELLED BY ANY LITERARY JOURNAL

on the Continent.

☞ THE TERMS OF THE CALIFORNIAN are $5 per year, mailed to subscribers, invariably in advance; 50 cents per month served by carriers.

All communications and correspondence must be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN,

No 532 Merchau street,

SAN FRANCISCO.

FULL SETS

FROM THE COMMENCEMENT OF THE CALIFORNIAN TO THE CLOSE OF VOL. IV.

Can be procured at the Office. Price, bound in muslin, per volume, $4. Two volumes bound together, $7. Unbound, per volume, $3.

CARRINGTON & CO'S
GENERAL PURCHASING AGENCY,
No. 40 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

IF YOU WANT
Books, Prints, Clothing, Instruments, Music, Tools, Weapons, Sporting Implements, Fancy Stock, Jewelry, Silver or Plated Ware, Wines, Cigars, Fine Groceries, Furniture; in short, any Article, large or small, singly or in quantity, for Ladies' or Gentlemen's use or wear, or for Dealers' Supplies, from a seal-ring to a steam-engine—a Cameo or a Cashmere; lace or leatner,
SEND ON YOUR ORDERS.
Orders may be given in French, Spanish or German.
COMMISSION CHARGE, - - - FIVE PER CENT.
Address:
CARRINGTON & CO.,
40 Broadway, N. Y

VINCENT'S COLD PREVENTIVE.

A Sure Cure
FOR COUGHS, COLDS, BRONCHITIS
DYSPEPSIA,
CONSUMPTION,
NIGHT SWEATS, AND PULMONARY DISEASES.

Read the following:

REMARKABLE CURE.
San Francisco, September 5th, 1865.
I desire to make known the fact that I was afflicted with a very bad cough for fifteen years, and, during this time, used everything which I could hear of without getting the better of my disease, until I tried Dr. D. B. Vincent's Cold Preventative or Cough Mixture, which cured me sound and well.
NEWTON MOORE.

This is to certify that my wife has been troubled with indigestion for nearly eighteen months, and, by using one bottle of Dr. Vincent's medicine, has been completely cured.
San Francisco, April 6th, 1866.
JOHNSON J. THOMAS.

San Francisco, July 17th, 1865.
I hereby certify that, having had a Cough some five months since, which had troubled me for two years, and I was so bad that I was able to do but little labor of any kind, and could not walk fast without putting myself out of breath. I was so far gone that I had chills over me and night sweats, and had what other physicians called disease of the lungs. I had been doctoring a part of the time for the last year, when I saw Dr. D. B. Vincent, and he gave me a small vial of medicine, which relieved me of the chills and night sweats and the cough entirely went away, and I do not take cold so easy, and my health is much better in every respect. My appetite is much better; and I heartily recommend all others who are afflicted with similar complaints to him.
JOHN O'NEILL, National Hotel.

The above named diseases nearly all originate from the same or similar causes, and
THE COLD PREVENTIVE
will cure all of them. It is a sure cure for Dyspepsia. Price, 50 cents per bottle.

D. B. VINCENT, M. D.,
PHYSICIAN AND OCULIST
Treats all diseases successfully on the Electric system. Particular attention paid to treating all Diseases of the Eyes, Rheumatism, Paralysis, etc. Cures guaranteed, or all moneys refunded—in most cases even where others fail.
☞ OFFICE—No. 103 Kearny street, first floor, where he can be consulted at all hours, unless professionally engaged. All orders from the country promptly attended to. ap7

FARRAND'S OSCILLATING
Amalgamator.

THIS UNRIVALLED IMPROVEMENT FOR THE REduction and amalgamation of Gold and Silver Ores, is now running daily at No. 206 Commercial street, between Front and Davis.

THIS AMALGAMATOR INVOLVES
NO COMPLICATED MACHINERY
And possesses the following advantages over all others now in use:

1st. It is capable of doing double the amount of work of the ordinary Pans, at a saving of more than one-half the power.
2d. It reduces the pulp finer, thereby producing a better result.
3d. It requires less quicksilver by one-half at a charge, whilst the loss by trituration is comparatively nothing.
4th. As an Amalgamator for gold contained in sulphurets, as also for very fine or flour gold, it has no equal.
5th. This Amalgamator involves no complicated machinery, and is less liable to get out of order than any of the pans.

DESCRIPTION OF FARRAND'S AMALGAMATOR.
In offering this Amalgamator to the public the inventor does not claim any new or scientific method of extracting the precious metals from the ores; he merely claims a new and simple combination of mechanical principles, whereby a great saving of power (full one-half in amount) is effected. The capacity of the machine varies with its size. The smallest, or prospecting size, will reduce 400 lbs. in three hours, and can be easily worked by the power of one man. The largest size will work 1,500 lbs in three hours, or six tons in 24 hours, with an application of a trifle more than one-horse power. This saving of power, as all mill-men are aware, is an important considerationparticularly where fuel is scarce. The power so saved in running the Amalgamators may be advantageously employed to an increase of stamps, and thus proportionally increasing the work of the mill. This machine consists of a semi-cylindrical, trough-shaped vessel, in the interior of which is furnished with moveable concave dies, to be replaced when worn out, as in ordinary pans. The mullers are convex, and attached to a substantial rock shaft, by which they are moved back and forward by crank or eccentric motion. The mullers are held to their places by springs of moderate strength, the pressure of which may be easily regulated. The oscillating motion of the mullers serves to keep the pulp in a constant state of agitation, thoroughly mixing it, and passing it under the mullers without resort to any of the various expedients employed in Pans where a circular motion is maintained.
Trials made with this machine in the presence of experts, during the last six months, have been pronounced highly satisfactory. It is peculiarly well adapted to employment by small mining operators in distant localities, as it can readily be taken to pieces and packed upon mules.
A large size machine is constructed without dies or mullers, but simply with arms to act as stirrers, to be used in connection with several of the Amalgamators as a "Separator," as it is found that the peculiar motion given to these arms, in connection with the concave shape of the body of the machine, renders it most effectual for such a purpose.
W. D. FARRAND

ALLEN'S
LUNG BALSAM!

A CERTAIN CURE FOR
COUGHS, COLDS, INFLUENZA, NIGHT SWEATS, BRONCHITIS, SPITTING OF BLOOD, ASTHMA, WHOOPING COUGH, CONSUMPTION,
And all Diseases of the
CHEST AND LUNGS!

This celebrated Cough Remedy effects a speedy cure hy producing a free and easy expectoration, heals abscesses of the lungs, prevents unhealthy secretion of the bronchial tubes, and removes from them those accumulations of morbid matter which cause oppression of the breast, difficulty of breathing, etc, soothes irritation of the respiratory organs which produces cough
PRICE.....ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE.
Sold by all Druggists.
HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
401 Battery corner of Clay,
ap27-3m San Francisco.

DR. HUMPHREYS'
Homœopathic Specifics

Have proved, from the most ample experience, an entire success—simple, prompt, efficient and reliable. They are the only Medicines perfectly adapted to popular use—so simple that mistakes cannot be made in using them; so harmless as to be free from danger, and so efficient as to be always reliable. They have received the highest commendation from all, and will always render satisfaction.

No. 1	cures Fevers, Congestion, Inflammations	0 25
" 2	cures Worms, Worm Fever, Worm Colic,	25
" 3	cures Crying Colic, or Teething of in-
" 4	cures Diarrhœa of children or adults... fants	25 25
" 5	cures Dysentery, Griping, Bilious Colic,	25
" 6	cures Cholera Morbus, Nausea, Vomiting,	25
" 7	cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis.....	25
" 8	cures Neuralgia, Toothache, Faceache.	25
" 9	cures Headaches, sick-Headache, Vertigo,	25
" 10	cures Dyspepsia, Bilious Stomach.....	25
" 11	cures Suppressed, or Painful Periods..	25
" 13	cures Croup, Cough, difficult Breathing,	25
" 14	cures Salt Rheum, Erysipelas Eruptions,	25
" 15	cures Rheumatism, Rheumatic Pains...	25
" 16	cures Fever and Ague, Chill Fever, Agues	50
" 17	cures Piles, blind or bleeding.....	50
" 18	cures Opthalmia, and Sore or Weak Eyes,	50
" 19	cures Catarrh, acute or chronic, Influenza	50
" 20	cures Whooping-Cough, violent coughs.	50
" 21	cures Asthma, oppressed Breathing....	50
" 22	cures Ear Discharges, impaired Hearing	50
" 23	cures Scrofula, Enlarged Glands, Swellings	50
" 24	cures General Debility, Physical Weakness	50
" 25	cures Dropsy, and scanty Secretions....	50
" 26	cures Sea-Sickness, sickness from Riding,	50
" 27	cures Kidney Disease, Gravel.....	50
" 29	cures Sore Mouth, Canker.....?....	50
" 31	cures Painful Periods, even with Spasms	50
" 32	cures Sufferings at change of life.....$1.00
" 33	cures Epilepsy, Spasms, St. Vitus' Dance.	1.00
" 34	cures Diphtheria, Ulcerated Sore Throat,	50

FAMILY CASES.

35 vials, morocco case, and book.....$10 00
28 vials, morocco case, and book..... 8 00
20 vials, morocco case, and book..... 6 00

These Remedies, by the case or single box, are sent to any part of the country, by Mail or Express, on receipt of the price.
HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
ap27-3m San Francisco.

A BEAUTIFUL COMPLEXION!

Secret of Beauty!

USE GEO. W. LAIRD'S

BLOOM OF YOUTH,
OR LIQUID PEARL!

See that the name,
GEO. W. LAIRD,
is stamped
ON THE BOTTLE.
No other is Genuine.

The best article in the world for Preserving and Beautifying the Complexion and Skin.

This magnificent Toilet Article is prepared only by GEO. W. LAIRD, 74 Fulton street, New York, formerly 483 Broadway.
Sold by Druggists everywhere.
HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay.
ap27-3m San Francisco

RATES OF POSTAGE.

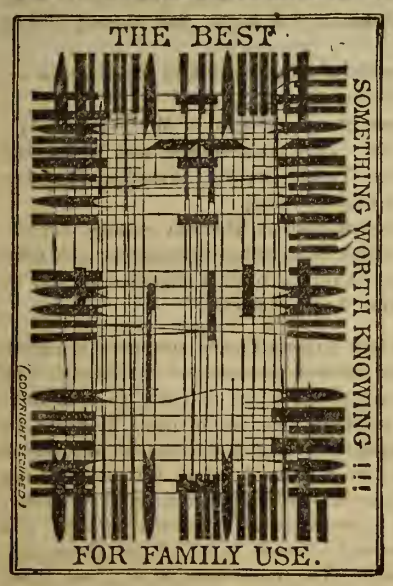
Valuable letters may be registered on application at the office of mailing, and the payment of 20 cents registration fee.

Transient newspapers, periodicals, blanks, proof-sheets, book manuscripts, pamphlets, and all mail able printed matter, except circulars and books, 2 cents for each and every 4 ounces. Double these rates are charged for books.

Seeds, cuttings, roots, etc., 2 cents for each 4 ounces or less quantity.

All packages of mail matter not charged with letter postage must be so arranged that the same can be conveniently examined by Postmasters; if not, letter postage will be charged.

Unsealed circulars, to one address, not exceeding three in number, 2 cents, and in the same pruportion for a greater number.



No package will be forwarded by mail which weighs over 4 pounds.

All postage matter, for delivery within the United States, must be prepaid by stamps (except duly certified letters of soldiers and sailors;) otherwise, double the above rates will be charged on delivery.

Weekly newspapers (one copy only) sent to actual subscribers within the county where printed and published, free.

Letters to Canada and other British North American Provinces, when not over 3,000 miles, 10 cents for each ½ ounce. When over 3,000 miles, 15 cents. Prepayment optional.

Letters to Great Britain or Ireland, 24 cents. Prepayment optional.

To decipher, lower the top of the paper to an angle of forty-five degrees; then close one eye, and read at your ease.

THE

AWARDED THE HIGHEST PREMIUM
AT THE
State Fair of California,
The only Fair on the Pacific coast at which any two double-thread Machines were exhibited in competition in 1865.

If there is a FLORENCE SEWING MAchine within one thousand miles of this office that is not working well, it will be attended to if I am informed of it, without expense to the owner. SAMUEL HILL,
General Agent,
111 Moutgomery street, San Fraucisco.

THE

FLORENCE

SEWING MACHINE
RECEIVED THE FIRST PREMIUM, A GOLD MEDAL, at the Great Exhibition of the AMERICAN INSTUTE, - - - New York, 1865.
my10-3m

CANTY & WAGNER,
(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL
Confectioners,
111 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter.

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double-refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivred oto any part of the city free of charge. my24-3m

J. PEIRCE,
FURNITURE AND
Bedding Warerooms.

NOS. 415, 417, AND 419 CALIFORNIA STREET,
NEAR MONTGOMERY.

THIS STOCK OF FURNITURE, etc., was selected with great care, and special attention given to the wants of this market, ENTIRELY AT THE EAST. It is NOT COMPOSED OF REFUSE GOODS, ODDS AND ENDS OF OTHER HOUSES that have lately closed out here, but CONSISTS ENTIRELY OF NEW GOODS, made after the latest patterns and in the most durable manner.

The present Stock is fully TWICE as large as that of any other house here. Parties having any doubts of this, or that the assortment is not superior to any in the city, can easily satisfy themselves by calling.

The stock of Case Goods is larger than ever before.

J. PEIRCE,
Ware-rooms 415, 417 and 419 California street,
mb16-3m SAN FRANCISCO.

B. F. STERETT, 533 Clay St., a few doors below Montgomery, continues to print all kinds of Books, Bills, Circulars, Cards, etc. in superior style, and at reasonable prices.

T. RODGERS JOHNSON,

ODD FELLOWS' HALL, 329 Montgomery street,
mh30 3m San Francisco.

NATHANIEL GRAY,
UNDERTAKER,
CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,
641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB
Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.
mar17-3m

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,
PRINTERS,
And Blank Book Manufacturers,
517 CLAY STREET,
Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

SCHOOL FURNITURE.

RANKIN'S PATENT SCHOOL DESK;
Liquid Slating for Blackboard;
ARITHMETICAL FRAME;
Babbitonian System of Writing—the Best System know

W. HOLT,
de9 805 Montgomery street, Room No 2.

THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD.

DR. MAGGIEL'S
Pills and Salve.

These Life-giving remedies are now, for the first time, given publicly to the world. For over a quarter of a century of private practice the ingredients in these

LIFE-GIVING PILLS!

Have been used with the greatest success. Their mission is not only to prevent disease, but to cure. They search out the various maladies by which the patient is suffering, and re-invigorate the failing system. To the aged and infirm a few doses of these valuable PILLS will prove to be

A VERY FOUNTAIN OF YOUTH,

For in every case they add new life and vitality, and restore the waning energies to their pristine state. To the young and middle-aged, they will prove most invaluable, as a ready, specific, and sterling medicine. Here is a dream realized, that Ponce-de-Leon sought for three hundred years ago, and never found. He looked for a fountain that would restore the old to vigor and make youth ever

AN ETERNAL SPRING!

It was left for this day and hour to realize the dream, and show in one glorious fact, the magic that made it fair.

THESE FAMOUS REMEDIES

Cannot stay the flight of years, but they can force back, and hold aloof, diseases that might triumph over the aged and the young. Let none hesitate then, but seize the favorable opportunity that offers. When taken as prescribed—

FOR BILLIOUS DISORDERS

Nothing can be more productive of cure than these Pills. Their almost magic influence is felt at once; and the usual concomitants of this most distressing disease are removed. These remedies are made from the purest

VEGETABLE COMPOUNDS.

They will not harm the most delicate female, and can be given with good effect in prescribed doses to the youngest babe.

FOR CUTANEOUS DISORDERS

And all eruptions of the skin, the SALVE is most invaluable. It does not heal externally alone, but penetrates with the most searching effects to the very root of the evil!

Dr. Maggiel's Pills

Invariably cure the following diseases:

Asthma,
Bowel Complaints,
Coughs,
Colds,
Chest Diseases,
Costiveness,
Dyspepsia,
Diarrhœa,
Dropsy,
Debility,
Female Complaints, Fever and Ague
Headache,
Indigestion,
Influenza,
Inflammation,
Inward Weakness,
Liver Complaint,
Lowness of Spirits,
Ringworm,
Rheumatism,
Salt Rheum,
Scalds,
Skin Diseases.

NOTICE.—None genuine without the engraved trade-mark around each pot or box, signed by Dr. J. Maggiel, 43 Fulton st., New York, to counterfeit which is felony.

☞ Sold by all respectable Dealers in Medicines throughout the United States—at 25 cents per box or pot. ap14-1y

A CARD.

M. Howard's Hair Restorative,
NO. 315 MONTGOMERY STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO.

THE ABOVE PREPARATION, which has been recently discovered and patented, is purely a Vegetable Extract.

The undersigned are fully aware of the many unsatisfactory and useless preparations for restoring hair that have been introduced to the public, and how little confidence is to be placed in any pretensions to restoring the hair to bald heads, but, we are able to state that it not only prevents the Hair from falling out, but absolutely reproduces it, and that we now have good suits of Hair growing where we were entirely bald. Therefore, as a matter of justice to Mr. Howard, and of consolation to bald heads, we tender him this testimonial Mr H keeps the article for sale in bottles, with directions for its use, or applies it himself, as may be desired.

HAVING TRIED MR. HOWARD'S PREPARATION,

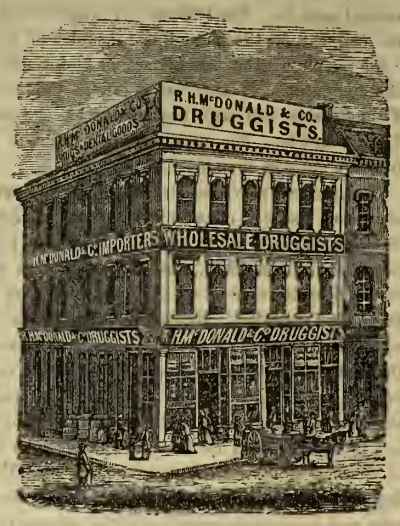
San Francisco, April 6, 1866.



Frank M. Thayer,	R. A. Redman,
W. S Davis,	J. O. Rountree,
T. A. Hall,	G. W. Gamble,
A. C. Knox,	J. W. Miller,
Bradbury Sanborn,	E. C. McComb,
George Wells,	D. C. Ross,
Josepb Wells,	ap7

FRANKLIN PRINTING OFFICE,
509 CLAY STREET, (near Sansome,)
SAN FRANCISCO,

"The oldest and most complete Book and Job printing establishment in California. All descriptions of work neatly executed at low rates."

ja1-tf FRANK EASTMAN, Proprietor.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
WHOLESALE
DRUGGISTS,

IMPORTERS OF

Drugs, Chemicals, Herbs,

PATENT MEDICINES,

PAINTS, VARNISHES,

ACIDS, DYE STUFFS,

OILS, PERFUMERIES,

TOILET ARTICLES,

BRUSHES.

We are just receiving, direct from Spain, a complete assortment of

CORKS! CORKS! CORKS

which we offer at lower prices than usual

DUSTING, PAINT, VARNISH, SHOE, SCRUB, HAIR AND TOOTH BRUSHES:

We have a splendid stock, which we offer at extremely low prices.

HERBS.

We have received, direct from the Shakers, all kinds of fresh Herbs, and intend to keep every article used of this description.

TILDEN'S SOLID AND FLUID EXTRACTS, PILLS, AND CONCENTRATED PREPARATIONS.

We have on hand, and shall keep a full assortment of the above celebrated preparations, which we offer to the trade at such prices as will defy competition.

FLAVORING EXTRACTS.

A great variety, not to be equalled in the market as to quality and price.

Parties about purchasing would do well to give us a call and examine prices and goods before purchasing elsewhere.

PLAIN AND GUM TEETH.

We have the largest assortment of any house on the Pacific coast.

GOLD FOIL.

We are manufacturing Foil which we can recommend to the profession as being a superior article. We also have on hand a full assortment, of all the various makers

VULCANIZERS,

DENTAL CHAIRS AND LATHES

FILES,

VULCANITE AND GUTTA PERCHA,

FORCEPS,

BURRS, DRILLS AND EXCAVATORS,

MIRRORS, ETC.!

We have, besides the above, every article used by the Dentist, and are daily in receipt of all the new inventions in use.

Dentists will find it to their interest to call and examine our stock and prices before purchasing elsewhere.

R. H. McDonald & Co.,
CORNER SANSOME AND PINE STREETS,
SAN FRANCISCO.
AND
J STREET SACRAMENTO.
ap28-3m

A FRENCH SUICIDE.

THE most extraordinary suit perhaps ever preferred before the tribunals, is about to be transferred from the courts of Naples to those of Paris. The subject of litigation is the last will and testament made by a certain M. Couvreaux, a Frenchman, by which a considerable sum was bequeathed to "the people of the hotel" at Castellamare, in which he committed suicide. The tribunals of Naples have decided against the bequest, on the plea of the insanity of the testator; but "the people of the hotel," acting under advice, have denied the competence of the Italian law to judge the validity of a Frenchman's will, and have brought the affair before the French courts. The circumstances brought to light by the trial are curious enough.

M. Couvreaux, whose fortune seems to have been considerable, was the son of a silk merchant in Lyons, who, having married his cook, while the subject of the present investigation was still a child, placed him at his death under the sole and entire control of the promoted cook until he had attained his majority. Hence arose in the nervous disposition and sensitive mind of the youth, neglected and ill-treated by the mother-in-law, a deeply-rooted aversion to women and terror of all physical suffering. His father's example had warned him of the danger of yielding to the influence of the fair sex, and he was resolved not to trust himself even to the possibility of yielding to temptation. Like Charles XII. of Sweden, he deemed it wiser to fly than to combat when danger from bright eyes was to be anticipated; and the stories told of his needless alarm when by chance he met any of the serving women on the stairs of the hotel, and of their equally needless alarm at beholding the terror they occasioned, have furnished the joyous prospos of Naples for the last three years with amusement.

For nine months M. Couvreaux had been entirely occupied with the study of every work ever written on the guillotine. Several books were found in his apartment treating of the manner of death of those who have suffered by this instrument. The question of pain was one which occupied his attention most of all; and, as he possessed some talent for drawing, a vast collection of sketches of heads in every position as falling beneath the axe, with the various contractions of nerve created by the different directions given to the edge, or the degree of rapidity with which the knife was made to descend upon the neck of the victim. The result of the inquiry must have been favorable to this mode of exit from the world, for, henceforth shutting himself up in his own room, he devoted his whole time to the construction of a guillotine for his own private use and gratification—a self acting instrument, effective, easy, and sure in its operation. As success began to crown his experiment, his labors became eager and more unceasing. He seldom left his room but for the purchase of the materials necessary for his great work. The knife was tried on living fowls and rabbits, to the great amazement of the inmates of the hotel, who had ended in proclaiming the unhappy man a "strago," or sorcerer of the deepest dye. None passed the door of his room without making the sign of the cross and muttering a prayer, in the full conviction that the most deadly incantations were being pursued night and day by the "strago," who had power to blight with all sorts of curses those who dared to thwart him or oppose his wishes. The master of the hotel alone, who had found his money quite as profitable as that of others, denied these charges, and sent in his bills without the smallest fear of the magic power of his guest. When the instrument at which he had worked with the greatest steadfastness was completed, he set it up in the doorway between the two rooms he occupied The axe had been duly sharpened, and balanced with sixty kilogrammes of lead, to insure its swift descent.

With a Frenchman's taste he then proceeded to the ornamental part of the design. He enclosed the grim machine beneath crimson velvet hangings, then placed a table covered with black cloth under the axe, and built steps below the whole to enable him to ascend; and, as there is always something of the grotesque mingled with the Frenchman's vagaries, he took the precaution of placing a soft white pillow by the table, so that his head might fall easily and lie with picturesque grace when severed from the body. When every preparation was thus completed, he sat down to the piano and played with great sentiment and feeling a hymn to the Virgin, of his own composition. It was heard by those promenading on the quay below. There must have been something peculiar in the sound, for the people stopped to listen, and the landlord, who was lolling against the door-post, said to the people gathered: "The performer is my French lodger. He plays well enough, does he not? Well, whenever he dies it will be in the skin of the greatest madman this earth ever bore." When the strain was concluded the listeners dispersed, and ran to see the performance of Punch, a little further on; but Couvreaux, in the costume of white flannel he had ordered for the occasion, mounted the steps of his tiny scaffold, and, lying quietly down with his eyes raised so as to behold the descent of the knife, let go the pulley and launched himself into the spirit world, from which no man has ever returned. The next morning the body was discovered by the waiter, and great was the consternation of the inhabitants of Castellamare when this new means of self-destruction became revealed. As may be supposed, the hotel was visited by the whole population, until the brothers of the Pieta came to convey the corpse away. By a strange coincidence it was observed that the head had fallen exactly in the position marked as easiest of all by the hand of M. Convreaux beneath one of the sketches in the album of guillotined heads he had left behind. His will, written in a clear bold hand, was laid upon the table. After disposing of his fortune among his relations in a completely rational and natural manner, he bequeaths some few thousand francs to "the people of the hotel," and it is this sum which has become the subject of dispute through the miserable cupidity of the family.

THE FAMILY SEWING MACHINE.

BY JENNIE JUNE.

TO understand the value of the Sewing Machine, and the happy changes which it has effected in the social and family relations, one must be familiar with the quiet house holds, scattered throughout the East and West, the North and South, of this great and thriving country.

Everywhere in the interior domestic, assistance of any kind is so difficult to be obtained, that it is scarcely looked for, and every good housewife relies upon her own exertions, not only to keep her house in order, her larder well supplied with the essential luxuries of home-made bread, cake, and pies, but her own, the children's and frequently her husband's wardrobe furnished with all the useful, if not the ornamental articles of dress.

This necessity provided an immense amount of work for one pair of hands to perform—the female head of the house, the hard-tasked wife and mother, found not a moment for relaxation. The drudgery of the kitchen was succeeded by that of the work-basket, whose pile of shirts and small garments seemed never to decrease. Not a moment of time could be afforded for the gratification of any simple fancy, even in ornamental needlework, all, to the last moment, and far into Saturday night, was exhausted in the necessities of the plainest work upon little aprons, frocks, and drawers, and the inevitable weekly collection of family mending.

In a large number of these households, the case is now widely different; the Sewing Machine, generally the GROVER & BAKER, occupies an honored place in the family sitting-room, and accomplishes more and better than the most skillful seamstress. It is in a sense, which only those can appreciate who have known what it is to sew all the household garments by hand, the family friend. It is looked upon with eyes of real affection.

The interior of a country house, at this season of the year, is as pleasant as can be imagined; and it is made so, in a great degree, by the presence of the Sewing Machine. An hour's work in the afternoon, upon a bright, rapid, wonder-working GROVER & BAKER, will accomplish more than could be done by a weary hand working almost into midnight. It will not only finish the dozen shirts in "less than no time," but it will tuck drawers and chemises, ruffle night gowns, stitch trousers, quilt linings and coverlids, and all this, and much more, with such strength, beauty, and precision, as would throw the neatest hand-work into the shade.

A Sewing Machine needs only to be purchased once in a lifetime; it is therefore of the greatest importance to get the best; the one which, all things considered, is most perfectly adapted to meet the requirements.

This we sincerely believe, and the opinion is corroborated by the highest authorities in the community, is the GROVER & BAKER Machine, making the celebrated "GROVER & BAKER" stitch, the only stitch, as far as we know, sufficiently elastic to be adapted to all kinds of family sewing.

The peculiar qualities of the GROVER & BAKER Machine, are strength, beauty, elasticity, and versatility, or adaptation to any kind of work. It compasses the whole range of family sewing completely, and without any of the vexatious delays in rewinding, fastening, and finishing, which are common to other machines, and which occupy so much time, and waste so much material. It makes a beautiful, smooth, elastic seam upon cloth or cambric, which gives when it is washed or stretched without breaking, and in which every stitch is so firmly locked, that the seam can be cut off between every half dozen stitches without impairing its strength.

The single objection urged sometimes by competitors is, that the GROVER & BAKER Machine uses up a great deal of thread. The GROVER & BAKER Machine does not waste thread; there is no breaking and fastening of stitches, no threads dangling at the end of each seam; the machine fastens each end off, itself, and the thread used is all employed to strengthen the seam and render it elastic.

The GROVER & BAKER stitch is the only one that can be properly used upon bias seams, and is therefore adapted to an immense variety of garments containing such seams, and also seams which are subjected to much stretching and wear. In addition to the fact that no rewinding and no fastening is required, a great deal of time, and temper too, is saved to the operator, by the simplicity, regularity, and ease of the various movements, the adjustment without change of tension to different kinds of work, and the method by which it is thrown from the machine, without delay or embarrassment, and also in such way as to enable the operator to maintain a pleasant and graceful position.

For dressmakers, the GROVER & BAKER is the only suitable machine; it is the only one that will accomplish satisfactorily, and with an immense saving of time, all the plain sewing, stitching, and quilting, which they have to accomplish.

For the heads of families it is equally valuable. It will do everything. It is simple, reliable, perfect in its operation, easy to be understood, not easy to get out of order, and gives such thorough satisfaction, as to leave no room for complaint.—N. Y. Sunday Times.

AMUSEMENTS.

AT the Opera House on Monday and Tuesday evenings, Jack Cade was performed. This being one of Mr. Forrest's specialities—a character written for him, and adapted especially to his style of acting—it was personated with great impressiveness, and drew immense audiences. On Wednesday Damon was played and on Thursday Lear. Both characters (as rendered by Mr. Forrest) being favorite parts with the public, the attendance was large. Last evening Othello was performed.

The dashing comedy of Ruy Blas will be the attraction for this afternoon and evening.

Next week closes the engagement of Mr. Forrest. The plays announced are: Jack Cade, Monday and Wednesday evenings; Virginius, Tuesday evening; Richelieu, Thursday evening: Macbeth, Friday evening.

Richelieu will be performed on Thursday evening, in compliance with the wishes of suburban Oaklanders, who have heard of Forrest, and have chartered a steamer especially to witness his rendering of that character.

MUSICAL.—The Italian Opera Troupe, announced to appear at the Metropolitan Theatre, consisting of the Bianchis and imported talent, will probably not be ready to open their season before the middle or latter part of July. However, we are likely to have a season of English Opera at the Academy of Music before that time, if favorable winds will but waft the good ship Japan, now fully due from Melbourne, to our shores. This combination is known as the "Howson Troupe," and last played a successful season at the Royal Haymarket Theatre in Melbourne. The troupe consists of Frank Howson, Conductor; F. A. Howson, Baritone; H. Herberti, Tenor; Miss Emma Howson, Soprano; Miss Clelia Howson, Contralto; and two other members for utility parts. The male members of the troupe are said to have average professional abilities, and the young ladies are the reputed possessors of excellent musical qualifications, blooming youth, and charming beauty. How-soon they'll be here, ask of the "winged winds." They come under an engagement to Mr. Maguire; and the coming of this troupe undoubtedly gave origin to the current street report, that the old Lyster Troupe were on their way here.

A MUSICAL CITY. — The New Orleans Picayune says: "Throughout the season, whenever there was a suitable hall to be obtained, we have had a well-filled concert; and now, late as it is, we have several more on the tapis. Besides these, we have an organized Harmonic Society, where there is practice every week, as there is at all our numerous churches. New Orleans may, therefore, well claim to be the musical city of the Union; and whether it be native, or German, or Italian, or French, or Spanish, every new piece, if it have merit, is immediately obtained and brought out."

THE FOURTH, we learn, will be celebrated in this city with unusual display. Everything is working harmoniously, and most of the societies and associations, as well as the military organizations, have signified their intention to turn out in full force, with a zeal and fervor worthy of the glorious occasion.

PROGRESS REPORT.—The officers of the California Building and Savings Bank, California street, made report to their Board of Directors, at their last sitting in which are the following items:

1866—April.	Deposits received and instalments of loans,	$133,300 75
May.	Deposits received and instalments of loans,	134 116 85
		$267,417 60

Over a quarter of a million of dollars in two months!

Loans on mortgages made in the same period	$33,902 54
Invested in S. F. gold bearing bonds, same period	50,000 00

This speaks well for an institution that was begun five years ago upon a capital of one thousand dollars, gathered in twenty-dollar pieces, from about thirty original members.—Morning Call.

NO LADY OF FASHION thinks of going to a party or making a morning call without first adorning and beautifying her complexion and skin with that elegant, innocent and fragrant, toilet article—Davidson's Circassian Bloom. Sold by all Druggists.

SCHOOL BOOKS.—Those living in the southern portions of the city are reminded that at Tyler Brothers' School-Book Store, in the new brick block, corner of Market and Third streets, they can obtain everything in the way of school-books and stationery at the lowest prices.

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.—The prettiest thing, the "sweetest thing," and the most of it for the least money. It overcomes the odor of perspiration; softens and adds delicacy to the skin; is a delightful perfume; allays headache und inflammation, and is a necessary companion in the sick room, in the nnrsery and upon the toilet sideboard. It can be obned everywhere at one dollar per hottle.

LYON'S MAONETIC INSECT POWDER is instant death to Fleas, Ticks, Roaches, and everything of the insect species. It is one of the few articles that can he relied upon, and for a mere two hits we can save the bites and hills of these little pests. Noue is genuiue unless signed hy E. Lyon, and hearing the private stamp of Demas Darues & Co., New York.

S—T—1860—X. DRAKE'S PLANTATION BITTERS.

Tbey purify, strengthen and invigorate.
They create a healthy uppetite.
They are au autidote to change of water and diet.
They strengtheu the system and enliven the mind.
They prevent miasmutic and intermitteut fevers.
They purify the breatb and acidity of the stomach.
They cure Dyspepsia and Constipution.
They cure Liver Complaint and Nervous Headache.

They are the best Bitters in the world. They make the weak strong, and are exbausted nature's great restorer. They are made of pure St. Croix Rum, the celebrated Calisaya Bark, roots and herbs, and ure taken with the pleasure of a heverage, without regard to age or time of day. Particularly recommeuded to delicate persous requiring a gentle stimulant. Sold hy all Grocers, Druggists, Hotels and Saloons. Only genuine when Cork is covered by our privute U. S. Stamp. Beware of counterfeits and refilled hottles.

P. H. DRAKE & CO., New York.

"In lifting the kettle from the fire I scalded myself very severely—one hand almost to a crisp. The torture was nnbearahle. * * * The Mexican Mustang Liniment relieved the pain almost immediately. It healed rapidly, and left very little scar.

"CHAS. FOSTER, 420 Broad street, Philada."

This is merely a sample of what the Mustang Liniment will do. It is invaluable in all cuses of wounds, swellings, sprains, cnts, bruises, spavius, etc., either npon man or beast.

Beware of counterfeits. Noue is genuine unless wrapped in fine steel-plate eugravings, hearing the signature of G. W. Westbrook, Chemist, and the private stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., New York.

ALL WHO VALUE A BEAUTIFUL HEAD OF HAIR, and its preservatiou from premature baldness and turning gray, will not fail to use Lyon's Celebruted KATHAIRON. It makes the hair rich, soft, and glossy, eradicates dandruff, and causes the bair to grow with luxuriant beauty. It is sold everywhere. E. THOMAS LYON, Chemist, N. Y.

LYON'S EXTRACT OF PURE JAMAICA GINGER, for Indigestion. Nausea, Heartburn, Sick Headache, Cholera Morbus, &c., where a warming, genial stimulant is required. Its careful preparation and entire purity make it a eheup and reliable article for culinary purposes. Sold everywhere, at 50 cents per bottle. ap7-1y

THE MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK.—In regard to this company the "Wall Street Underwriter" says: "Figures are potent arguments to employ in dealing with the affairs of any Insurance Company. The Twenty-Third Annual Report of 'The Mntual,' made up to the first of February instant, is published in this paper, and the resnlts manifested upon it are well worthy of consideration. In the first instance, as the prime result of the past year's work, the gross assets of 'The Mutual' show an

Increase of	$2,549,871 02
Total increase in premium account is	1,083,565 34
The total iucome of $3,853,065 80 is an increase of	1,003,199 24
The full dishursements for 1860, were	1,540,130 62
Number of policies issued Feh. 1865 to Feh. 1866, were 8,600—insuring over double the number of 1864, and over douhle the amount, viz	31,394,407 00

All approving comment seems hald in the presence of the truly eloquent figures presented hy the 'Mutual Life.' No record of success can he more complete for any financial institution in the world. Wherever Life Insurance has heen heard of on the American Continent, tbe name and prestige of the great 'Mutual' of New York, stand out pre-eminent. Many successful modern companies have grown up to prosperity through the example and influence of the 'Mutual Life.' Its great success, its wealth, and its manifest advantages have been constantly referred to as incontrovertible arguments in favor of Life Insurance." "The Mutual Life" bas paid losses on this coast (includiug dividends,) during the last four years, to the amount of $101,819 02, and among the recent losses to he paid are policies for $5,000 each, of Francis E. Webster and W. L. Haven, who were hoth killed by the nitro-glycerine explosion at the office of Wells, Fargo & Co., in addition to which amounts, there is to he paid uhout $1,200 for accrued dividends. S. F. Examiner.

NO FORFEITING.—Heretofore, if a person holding a Life Policy hecame unfortunate, and could not raise the sum of money required to pay his next premium, his policy was declared forfeited. The BROOKLYN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK has decided to make EVERY POLICY it issues NON-FORFEITABLE, giving a PAID-UP POLICY to the party if unable to continue his payments of premiums. The dividends of tbe Brooklyn Life Insurance Company are settled annually in cash. This plan is far more acceptable to insurers than at the end of three or five years, as in other companies. The Brooklyn Life Insurance Company allows thirty days grace in the payment of premiums. Its policies are incontestable, and its losses are promptly paid. The Brooklyn Life Insurance Company offers every known plan of Life and Endowment Insurance. Get u pamphlet at the office, 240 Montgomery street, southeast corner of Pine, from Stephen T. King, General Manager, or David B. Arrowsmith, Local Agent.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is hut the signal of skill, und follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are persoually acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years nnder chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, hut without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to unnounce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not hy defamation of others, to estahlisb his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of bis own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manuer that must be gratifying to ull his patients. He examines, hears, advises, aud recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject ut pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge uuless be effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, aud no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to cousult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obcdience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

BUGGIES AND CARRIAGES.—If you want a trim neat, light, and yet durable style of huggy or car riage, go to Nos. 37 and 39 Webh street, betweeu Sacramento and California, where you will find just sucb a vehicle as will suit your taste. POLLARD & CARVILL not only deal in these articles, but manufacture them to order, aud do repairing, painting, triuming and blacksmithing with dispatch and neutness. Go and see them.—California Leader.

E GOLDSMITH & Co., at No. 646 Sacramento street, three doors below Kearny, have just received some heautiful new style Gar'haldis and Zouave Jackets, that for taste and style are particularly worthy of tbe attention of our lady readers. Tbey have also a fine assortment of Ladies' Furnisbing Goods of the choicest description. French corsets for one dollar. A great variety of French toilet and fancy articles, the newest styles of buttons and dress trimmiugs, may always be found at Goldsmith's, 646 Sacramento street.

RHEUMATISM.

Throughout this coast a great deal of suffering is experienced from Rheumatism. Weeks and even months of protracted and aggravated misery is endured by the victims of medical inefficiency and ignorance, which could he cured just as speedily as was Mr. Sparrow, whose testimony is given below, and is only the echo of hundreds of other cases. Dr. Bourue cures without medicines, which accounts for his extraordinary success. No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street entrance:

SAN FRANCISCO, September 6, 1861.

Dr. Bourne: Last Winter I was nearly dead, by an attack of inflammatory rheumatism. I suffered the most excruciating pains for about five weeks, without uny hope of relief, when a friend, heuring of my illness, called to see me, and assured me that if I would stop "drugging and dosing," and go to you, that you would have me walking about the streets in tbree days. Sure enough, although I was utterly helpless, and conveyed to your house in a carriage, and carried into it by three stout men, and was hy them lifted into the hath, yet, on coming out of the hath I was able to largely assist myself, doing much toward dressing, and witbout assistance walked from the bath to the carriage. On the fourth day, I discharged my carriage and walked with a frieud's aid the entire distance to your house (nearly a mile) and home again, and so on until cured; and I had not taken more than twelve haths when, all paiu and swelling having ceased, I felt myself a well man. And now I am happy to do tbis little service of publicly certifying to the simple truth, leaving it to do its own work among such of my friends and acquaintances as may chance to see tbis. Your friend, JOSEPH SPARROW.

A SUMMER AND WINTER MEDICINE.

"Great oaks from little acorns grow."

The worst diseases knowu to the human race spring from causes so small as to almost defy detection. The volumes of scientific lore that fill the tables and shelves of the medical fraternity only go to prove and elaborate these facts.

Theu guard yourselves while you may. Tbe smallest pimple on tbe skin is a tell-tale and indicator of disease. It may fade and die away from the surface of the body, but it will reach the vitals, perhaps, at last, aud death be the result and final close. Maggiel's Bilious, Dyspeptic and Diarrhœa Pills cure where all others fail. While for Burns, Scalds, Chilblains, Cuts, and all abrasions of the skin, Maggiel's Salve is infallible. Sold by J. Maggiel, 43 Fulton street, New York, and all Druggists, at 25 cents per box.

WANTED—Agents to sell, hy subscription only the most popular work ever written: "GRANT AND SHERMAN; tbeir Campaigns and Generals." By the world-renowned historiau, Hon. J. T. Headley, author of Washington and his Generals, Sacred Mountains, etc. Agents are taking as high as thirty subscribers per day, and all agree in pronouncing it the most saleable work they ever took hold of. The people want Headley's illustrated "GRANT AND SHERMAN," etc. For terms and territory, address E. E. SHEAR, No. 8 Montgomery Street, and Box 1,430, San Francisco, California

CONCORD WAGONS AND HARNESS.—The Pacific Concord Carriage Manufactory is prepared to supply the Pacific Coast with Concord wagons and harness made to order. The members comprising this firm have long heen in the employ of the celebrated manufacturing house of L. Downing & Son, Concord, New Humpshire; so that parties wishing Concord wagons or harness can ohtain just the same quality of article here and save 25 per cent. on their purchase money. We have seen some of their workmanship, and can recommend it to the public Address Belduke & Co., 820 Folsom street, between Fourth and Fifth.—San Francisco Leader.

DAINTY WORK.—Abont the daintiest work we ever saw were specimens of bair jewelry at the establishment of Mrs. C. Cook, 645 Clay street, between Montgomery and Kearny streets, yesterday. This lady manufactures all sorts of jewelry—watch-chains, earrings, finger rings, breastpins, and various other kiuds of ornaments—from human hair. We wit uessed tbe process of manufacture, and it is intricate and iugenious in the highest degree.—S. F. Exam iner.

WAGONS.—Every species of wagons that any one can need, made of the best material, well fitted aud finished, can be found at the Depot of MILLS & EVANS, 587 Market street, two doors from Second. Light, Express, Milk and Thoroughbrace wagons, also Lumber Gears, Extra Poles and Whiffletrees, with Lead Bars, are kept constantly on hand.—California Leader.

FOR the best finished, fashionable hats, go to McGann & Co.'s, Hutters, 654 Washington street, two doors below the Plaza.

FRAGRANT SOZODONT FOR THE TEETH

READ the Testimony of a few of the many Eminent Clergymen and their Families of New York city, who, having used the Sozodont for a long time past, are convinced of its excellent and invaluable qualities, and give it their cordial commendation:

Rev. THOMAS DEWITT, Pastor Collegiate Ref. Dutch Church, Lafayette Place.
Rev. J. W. ALEXANDER, D. D., Presbyterian Church, Fifth Avenue.
Rev. J. B. WAKELEY, M. E. City Missionary.
Rev. W. F. MORGAN, D. D., Rector St. Thomas Church, Broadway.
Rev. E. H. CHAPIN. D. D., Pastor Fourth Universaiist Church, Broadway.
Rev. SAMUEL COOKE, D.D., Rector St. Bartholomew's Church, Lafayette Place.
Rev. SAMUEL OSGOOD, D.D., Pastor Church of Messiah, Broadway.
Rev. B. M. ADAMS, M. E. Church, Duane street.
Rev. HEMAN BANGS, late Pastor Centenary M. E. Church, Brooklyn.
Rev. W. S. MIKELS, Pastor Baptist Church, Sixteenth street.
Rev. GEO. POTTS, D.D., Pastor Presbyterian Church, University Place.
Rev. E. E. RANKIN, Pastor Presbyterian Church, Forty-second street.
Rev. T. E. VERMILYE, D. D., Pastor of Col. Dutch Reformed, Lafayette Place.

FROM G. F. J. COLBURN, DOCTOR DENTAL SURGERY, NEWARK, N. J.

The Popular Dentrifice known as Van Buskirk's "SOZODONT," besides being a very pleasant addition to the toilet, contains ingredients that, if used according to the directions, will prove of the greatest utility to the health of the mouth and teeth.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS!

Sold by all Druggists and Perfumers.

HALL & RUCKEL,
je24-4m NEW YORK.

HALL'S SARSAPARILLA,
YELLOW DOCK AND IODIDE POTASS,
THE
Best Blood Purifier Known.

Persons that are troubled with Rheumatism, Scrofula, Neuralgia, Morbid Liver, Salt Rheum, Pimples, Boils, or any of the many diseases that originate from Impure Blood, would find it much to their advantage to give this justly celebrated article a trial. One or two bottles are quite sufficient to convince the most skeptical of its merits. It contains neither Spirit, ARSENIC nor MERCURY which cannot be truly said of any other prepation called "Sarsaparilla."

SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,
ap7-3m N. W. cor. Sansome and Commercial-streets

OPPOSITION STEAMER-DAY,

SATURDAY, JULY 14, 1866.

GREAT REDUCTION IN RATES,
VIA NICARAGUA!

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN TRANSIT COMPANY will despatch the favorite Steamship

AMERICA,

ON SATURDAY, - - JULY 14TH,
From Mission street Wharf, at 10 o'clock, A. M., precisely
Connecting at GREYTOWN with the splendid Steamship
SANTIAGO,
2,500 TONS, FOR NEW YORK.

☞ For Passage and Freight, and Insurance on Treasure, at greatly REDUCED RATES, apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,
Up stairs, San Francisco.

BEER AND WINE SALOON.

Faust Cellar.

Southeast corner of Clay and Montgomery streets.

A. L. THIELE.....Proprietor

WESTPHALIA HAMS, RUSSIAN CAVIAR, SARDINES, Anchovies, Swiss and Limburg Cheese, etc.; the finest Brands of Liquors, Wines, Cigars, and Seltzer Water, Wholesale and Retail.

☞ Fishing and Hunting Parties fitted out at the shortest notice. fe24

SPRING AND SUMMER STYLE

SILK  HAT,

1866,

INTRODUCED - - - - - - - MARCH 3

BY

McGANN & CO.,

FASHIONABLE HATTERS,

No. 654 Washington street,

Two doors below Kearny.

SPRING AND SUMMER STYLES.—Silk, Felt, Beaver, and other HATS for sale at the lowest prices.

CAPS of every description, suitable for all ages, made to order.

McGANN & CO., being experienced and skilled in all the branches of the manufacture of Hats, feel confident of giving entire satisfaction to their patrons. Every description of Hats and Caps made to order.

Remember, McGANN & CO., Practical Hatters, 654 Washington street, two doors below the Plaza.

☞ New Goods by every steamer. marl0

THE NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE INSURANCE CO

OF LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

ESTABLISHED, 1809.

Capital, - - - - - -	$10,000,000
Accumulated Funds, March 6, 1865, - -	11,522,500
Annual Income, - - - -	2,827,290
Deposit in California under State law, -	$75,000

GENERAL AGENCY FOR THE PACIFIC STATES AND TERRITORIES,

Cor. Sansome and California streets, San Francisco

Insurances effected at the lowest rates on buildings of both Brick and Wood, throughout the State, whether occupied as Stores, Dwellings, or Warehouses, together with their contents.

Also, VESSELS in port, with or without their Cargoes.

Also, QUARTZ MILLS and MACHINERY.

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN immediately on adjustment.

WM. H. TILLINGHAST, Agent.
my19

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS

CREATE A HEALTHY APPETITE!

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa and Constipation.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Invigorats the System and enliven the mind.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Overcome the effects of Drunkenness and Late Hours.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure all Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Are Palatable to the Taste.

They are the

BEST BITTERS IN THE MARKET,

And when once used will always be called for again.

They are made in the most careful manner

From Pure Old Wheat Whisky, Medicated from

Roots and Herbs

Especially adapted for the cure of all Stomachic Diseases and Liver Complaints.

Try Them and You will be Satisfied.

For sale everywhere by Druggists and Liquor Dealers or by

N. B. JACOBS & CO.,
423 Front street,
my11-6m San Francisco

CALIFORNIA
Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS. CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA....CAPT W. BROMLEY.
" JULIA.....CAPT E. CONCKLIN.

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.

Steamships PACIFIC, ORIZABA, CALIFORNIA, ACTIVE, and SENATOR, leave as advertised, for Portland, Oregon, New Westminster, British Columbia, Victoria, (V. I.,) Santa Barbara, San Pedro, and San Diego.

Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.

mar23 B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

TO FARMERS, MINERS, LABORERS,

And all those wishing to secure themselves a portion of

THE MOST VALUABLE AGRICULTURAL AND MINERAL LANDS OF MEXICO,

With an equal interest in the Profits of the Plantations of

THE MEXICAN SEA ISLAND COTTON COMPANY.

HOMES FOR THE POOR AND COMPETENCY FOR ALL.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The Mexican Sea Island Cotton Company, having reserved from their final Subscription List a Limited Number of Unassessable Shares, (the remaining shares of the Company having been taken up by the stockholders,) hereby offer the same for sale at the original subscription price of Sixteen Dollars each, payable in cash. Every holder of a share will be entitled to a portion of the Company's lands, having the privilege to settle thereon and participate in all the advantages and profits of the enterprise, and special privileges granted to this Company by an Imperial Decree of Maximilian, dated 9th January, 1866, without being subjected to the conditions of regular Government emigrants, this Company settling upon their own lands, secured by private purchase, and held under indisputable Spanish titles.

Shareholders becoming actual settlers will also have the privilege of any employment upon the Company's plantation. Portions of land will be allotted to settlers, to be held by them until a final division makes it their property.

For the purpose of increasing the value of the Company's land, and to create all the comforts of a home and society, it is the intention of the company to form a regular settlement and to lay out a town adjoining their present plantation into building lots, which will likewise be fairly divided between the 8,000 shares which comprise the total number of the company.

A large number of shareholders will settle upon the company's lands after the rainy season in October next. Many of them may then be employed by the company, or by others able to plant for themselves, or in developing the mineral resources of the adjoining mountains, etc., etc.

Men of all trades and professions, desiring to emigrate to Mexico, will have great advantages as shareholders of this company. They will find the lands already purchased for them at a rate equivalent to a free gift, to be held by each shareholder as his property, protected by the best Spanish titles, and the good will of all political parties now contending for the reins of government; the climate the most salubrious, and the land rich and fertile beyond description; every kind of game abounding; the rivers full of fish and with extensive beds of large oysters; altogether, a country where it is easy to procure a livelihood and the comforts of a home with less labor and less capital than in any other part of the world.

The extensive placer diggings, veins of silver, and solid quartz ledges, which are to be found in the immediate vicinity, and acknowledged to be rich and very extensive, can, by the presence of a number of settlers, be profitably developed. Many of these mines are to be found within the limits of the company's grant. The Sierra Madre or Mother Mountain of Mexico, situated only within about twenty miles from the coast, can be reached and developed with much greater facility than the more remote mines in the interior, and will therefore make the company's lands the most desirable to locate upon.

For Maps and Survey, and further information, apply at the office of the MEXICAN SEA ISLAND COTTON CO., Betge's Book Store, Russ House, Montgomery street, between the hours of 11 and 1 o'clock.

☞ All the assessable stock having been taken up by mutual subscription of stockholders, the company will have no more shares to offer after the limited number of unassessable shares have been placed, and shall prefer to sell these to actual settlers—a single share of which will be sufficient to entitle them to a large portion of the lands.

WE, THE UNDERSIGNED shareholders in the Mexican Sea Island Cotton Company, having investigated and satisfied ourselves of the importance of the enterprise, recommend the same to the public. We are convinced that under the management of the present officers of the company, with their efforts to induce industrious parties to locate upon the land, that the enterprise must become very profitable to all parties interested, and most beneficial to actual settlers.

S. R. Kettlewell, Blacksmith, 264 First street.
W. C. Mead & Son, 224 Sansome street.
M. O'Neil, Proprietor New Branch Hotel, 12 Sutter street.
Winall & Clapp, 505 Market street.
R. A. S. Repiton, M. D., 816 Montgomery street.
Wm. Rudolph, Gunsmith, 216 Pacific street.
G. Burkhardt, Jeweller, No. 209 Pacific street.
E. Keil, East India Tea Co., 631 Washington-st.
P. D. O'Regan, People's Bakery, corner Fourth and Jessie streets.
Wm. Meyer, Provision Dealer, 258 Third street.
John Duff, Painter and Paper Hanger, 642 Clay street.
A. E. Mylott, Importer and Dealer in Cigars and Tobacco, 305 Battery street
M. M. Baldwin, Jeweller, 433 Montgomery-st.
S. Baysen, Hatter, No. 346 Kearny street.
Mathew McCloskey, 644 Howard street.

San Francisco, March 20th, 1866. mar24

MR. AND MRS. COGILL
AND SONS,
Teachers of Dancing,

CONGRESS HALL,

On Bash-st., adjoinin Russ House.

SCHOOL—MONDAYS AND WEDNESDAYS. Ladies at 2 P. M. Gentlemen and Ladies at 7 1-2 P. M. Soirees every Friday Evening. Hall to rent. my5-3m

BOWMAN & CO.,
Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware.
mar24-6m Main street, Petaluma.

OCCIDENTAL
INSURANCE COMPANY,

S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

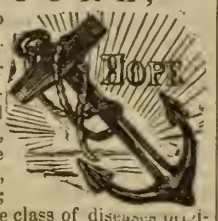
THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

CHRISTOPHER CHRISTIANSEN, President.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary. mh25-tf

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.



The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York. my25

AYER'S
AGUE CURE,

FOR THE SPEEDY AND Certain Cure of Intermittent Fever, or Chills and Fever, Remittent Fever, Chill Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical Headache or Bilious Headache, and Bilious Fevers; indeed, for the whole class of diseases originating in biliary derangement, caused by the malaria of miasmatic countries.

This remedy has rarely failed to cure the severest cases of Chills and Fever, and it has this great advantage over other Agus medicines, that it subdues the complaint without injury to the patient. It contains no quinine or other deleterious substance, nor does it produce quinism or any injurious effect whatever. Shaking brothers of the army and the West, try it and you will endorse these assertions.

Prepared by J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by

CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco,
my26-2m and all Dealers.

DRY GOODS.

BARGAINS

IN

BLACK SILKS! And still a FEW DRESES LEFT OF THAT BEAUTIFUL AND MUCH-ADMIRED DRESS GOODS,

"SUNBURST!"

S. MOSGROVE,
222 Third street, Colton's Building.
je 1-tf

THE ONLY LIVING ASTROLOGER,

PROF. COHEN,

530 California street, San Francisco,

THROUGH HIS NATURAL GIFT, can give correct information on the Past, Present and Future, on any subject that may be required so as to avoid trouble. As evidence of his reputation, he has received over 18,000 consultations during his residence of six years in San Francisco! Consultation fee, $2. By letter, $3. Letter box, 104. It is not necessary to give the age. Office, 530 California street. Hours from 8 A. M. to 11 P. M. mar15 3m

COME AND SEE ME!

DR. JOHN HEALD,

DENTIST,

HAS REMOVED TO THE
CORNER KEARNY AND CALIFORNIA STS,

Where he will be pleased to see all old friends, and plenty of new ones. Every variety of Dental Operations performed in the best manner, and at prices that shall suit all persons. ☞ENTRANCE ON CALIFORNIA SREET. ap28-3m

AMERICAN HOTEL,
Main street. - - - Petaluma.
mar24-6m EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors.

FURNITURE
AND BEDDING!

LARGEST STOCK!

LATEST STYLES!

The Best Workmanship,

AND

LOWEST PRICES!

AT

Goodwin & Co.'s

FURNITURE WARE-ROOMS,

Nos. 508, 510, 518 and 528 Washington-st.

ja16 SAN FRANCISCO.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,
IMPORTERS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS
IN FINE CLOTHING,
AND
Gent's Furnishing Goods,
TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,
Nos. 200 and 202 Montgomery street,
Corner of Bush, - - San Francisco.

JOS. WINTERBURN & CO.

J. WINTERBURN, V. A. TORRAS, W. HOFFSCHNEIDER.
(Successors to W. P. Harrison.)

Printers and Electrotypers,

413 TO 417 CLAY ST., (Below Sansome.)
SAN FRANCISCO.

ALL KINDS OF JOB PRINTING
Neatly and Promptly Executed.

ELECTROTYPING
Done at the shortest notice.

Stamps of all kinds made to order.

Printing in Spanish, French, German and Italian Languages, executed with correctness.

A "Mammoth" and two No. 8 Hand Presses FOR SALE very cheap. my3-3m

SMOKE
THE PATENT
RUSSIAN CIGARETTES,
MANUFACTURED BY
GIBB & STAHL,

S.W. COR. KEARNY AND SACRAMENTO STREETS,
SAN FRANCISCO.

☞ For sale at all Cigar Stores. ap28 3m

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,

No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,

SAN FRANCISCO.

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Metal Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship-Work of all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.

All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.

Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.

JOHN P. GALLAGHER,
JOSEPH H. WEED.
je10 3m

MONEY TO LOAN!

MONEY TO LOAN

On City Real Estate, Dwellings, Factories, Shipping and Merchandise, for such time as may be agreed for. Deposits received in small or large sums, at interest, by the CALIFORNIA BUILDING, LOAN AND SAVINGS BANK,

53 California street, (one door from Sansome street.)
my THOMAS MOONEY, President.

UNITED STATES STAMP DUTIES.

As Amended March 3, 1865.

CAREFULLY REVISED AND CORRECTED FOR THE CALIFORNIAN.

PENALTIES.

Penalty for making, signing, or issuing any instrument, document, or paper of any kind whatsoever, without the same being duly stamped, for denoting the duty hereby imposed thereon, $50; and the instrument shall be deemed invalid and of no effect; or for counterfeiting stamps or dies, $1,000, and imprisonment to hard labor not exceeding five years. For making, signing, issuing, accepting, or paying any bill of exchange, draft, order, or note without stamp, $200. For selling proprietary cosmetics, matches, photographs, etc., without proper stamps, $10. For removing stamps on these articles, $50.

STAMP DUTIES.

Agreement Contract or Appraisement, not otherwise specified, each sheet or piece of paper..$0 05
Assignment of Mortgage, Lease, or Policy of Insurance, same as original instrument. Assignment of Patent Right..... 05
Bank Checks, Drafts or orders, exceeding $10, at sight or on demand..... 02
Bills of Exchange, (inland,) or draft otherwise than at sight or on demand, or promissory note except bank notes for circulation,) or any memorandum, check or receipt, or any evidence of an amount of money payable on demand or at a designated time, for a sum not exceeding $100..... 05
Every additional $100, or fractional part... 05
Bill of Exchange, (foreign,) or letter of credit, drawn in, but payable out of the U. S., if drawn singly, the same rates as inland bills of exchange, or promissory notes.
If drawn in sets of three or more, for each bill of the set, where the sum shall not exceed $100 or its equivalent in any foreign currency in which such bill may be expressed, according to the standard value fixed by U. S. 02
Every additional $100, or fractional part... 02
Bill of Lading, or receipt for any merchandise or effects, to be exported to a foreign port or place..... 10
Bill of Sale, conveying any ship or vessel, or any part thereof, where the considerationdoes not exceed $500..... 50
For every additional $500, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Bill of Sale of personal property other than ships or vessels..... 05
Bond, indemnifying any person for the payment of money, where the amount recoverable is $1,000 or less..... 50
For every additional $1,000, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Bond for the due performance of the duties of any office..... 1 00
Bond of any other description, except such as may be required in legal proceedings, or used in connection with mortgage deeds, and not otherwise charged in this schedule..... 25
Charter-Party, ship, vessel or steamer, not over 150 tons, $1; 150 to 300 tons, $3; 300 to 600 tons, $5; over 600 tons.....10 00
Certificate of Profits, or any memorandum showing an interest in property, or accumulations of any incorporated company, for a sum not less than $10 nor exceeding $50..... 10
Exceeding $50 and not $1,000..... 25
For every additional $1,000 or fract'al part 25
Certificate of Damage, and all other certificates or documents issued by Port Wardens or Marine Surveyors, or other persons acting as such 25
Certificate of Deposit, not exceeding the sum of $100, 2 cents; exceeding $100..... 05
Certificate of stock in any incorporated comp'y, 25
Certificates, other than specified..... 05
Contract, broker's note or memorandum of sale of goods, stocks, bonds, exchnage notes of hand, real estate, or other description of property, issued by any person acting as a broker, for each note or memorandum of sale..... 10
Deed or Conveyance of Real Estate, value not over $500, 50c.; every additional $500, or fructional part thereof..... 50
Entry of Goods at any custom-house, value not over $100, 25c.; over $100 and not over $500, 50c.; over $500.....1 00
For the withdruwal of goods from bonded warehouse..... 50
Ganger's Returns, quarterly, for quantity not over 500 galls. gross, 10c.; over 500 galls. gr. 25
Insurance (Marine, Inland and Fire) policy or renewal, premium not over $10, 10c.; $10 to $50, 25c.; over $50, 50c.; Life policy, under $1,000, 25c.; $1,000 to $5,000, 50c; over $5,000.1 00
Lease of lands or tenements, rent not over $300 per annum, 50c.; each ndd'l $200 or fraction. 50
Manifest, cargo to foreign port, registered tonnage not over 300 tons, $1; over 300 and not over 600, $3; over 600 tons.....5 00
Measurer's Returns, for quantity not over 1,000 husbels, 10c.; over 1,000 bushels..... 25
Mortgage, Trust deed, or personal bond for payment of money, $100 to $500, 50c.; each additional $500..... 50
Each assignment of mortgage, lease or policy of insurance, or renewal of the same, is subject to same duties as the original.
Medicines or Preparations, Perfumery and Cosmetics—Every package, box, bottle, etc., retailing for 25c. or less..... 01
Each additional 25c. or fractional part thereof, up to $1, 1c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof, over $1..... 02
Playing Cards—Each puck, price not over 18c., 2c.; from 18 to 25c., 4c.; 25 to 50c., 10c.; 50c. to $1, 15c.; each additional 50c. or fructional part thereof..... 05
Photographs, Ambrotypes, Daguerreotypes or Sun Pictures, upon each, retailing for 25c. or less, 2c.; over 25 and not over 50c., 5c.; over 50c. and not over $1, 3c.; each additional $1 or fractional part thereof..... 05
Passage Ticket to foreign port, cost not over $35, 50c.; over $35 and not over $50, $1; every additional $50 or fractional part thereof.....1 00
Power of Attorney to sell or transfer stock, scrip, bonds, or collect dividends or int. thereon 25
To vote for officers of incorporated comp'y or society not religious, charitable or literary, or public cemeteries..... 10
To receive or collect rents..... 25
To sell, convey, rent or lease real estate.....1 00
For any other purpose..... 50

Probate of Will, or letters of administration, estate not over $2,000, $1; each additional $1,000 or fractional part thereof..... 50
Protest of note, bill, acceptance, check or draft, 25
Promissory Note—See Bill of Exchange, inland.
Receipt for payment of money or debt over $20, not being for satisfaction of mortgage, judgment or decree of Court, and receipt for the delivery of property..... 02
Warehouse, for property stored, not over $500 in value, 10c.; $500 to $1,000, 20c.; every additional $1,000..... 10
For any goods held in storage, and not otherwise provided for..... 25
Weigher's Returns, up to 5,000 lbs., 10c.; over 5,000 lbs..... 25
Writs, or original process, for commencing suit in Court of record, and in Court not of record, when amount claimed is $100 or over, except before Justices of the Peace, or in court of no greater jurisdiction as to damages, or in suit commenced by the United States or any State..... 50
Upon every confession of judgment, or cognovit, for $100 or over, except where tax for a writ has been paid..... 50
Writs or process on appeal from Justice's courts and other courts of inferior jurisdiction to courts of record..... 50
Warrant of distress—rent claimed under $100, 25c.; over $100..... 50

BRITISH PERIODICALS.

The London Quarterly Review (Conservative.)
The Edinburgh Review (Whig.)
The Westminster Review (Radical.)
The North British Review (Free Church.)
Blackwood's Edinburgh Magazine (Tory.)

The interest of these Periodicals to American readers is rather increased than diminished by the articles they contain on our late Civil War, and though sometimes tinged with prejudice, they may still, considering their great ability, and the different stand-points from which they are written, be read and studied with advantage by the people of this country, of every creed and party.

TERMS FOR 1866.

For any one of the Reviews, per annum.....$4
For any two of the Reviews, per annum..... 7
For any three of the Reviews, per annum.....10
For all four of the Reviews, per annum.....12
For Blackwood's Magazine, per annum..... 4
For Blackwood and one Review, per annum.... 7
Blackwood and any two of the Reviews, per an..10
Blackwood and three of the Reviews, per annum.13
Blackwood and the four Reviews, per annum....15

CLUBS.

A discount of twenty per cent. will be allowed to clubs of four or more persons. Thus, four copies of Blackwood, or of one Review, will be sent to one address for $12 80. Four copies of the four Reviews and Blackwood, for $48, and so on.

POSTAGE.

When sent by mail, the Postage to any part of the Union will be but Twenty-four Cents a year for Blackwood, and but Eight Cents a year for each of the Reviews

REDUCED PRICES FOR PREVIOUS YEARS.

Subscribers may obtain the Reprints immediately preceding 1866, as follows, viz:

Blackwood from September, 1864, to December, 1865, inclusive, at the rate of $2 50 a year.

The North British from January, 1865, to December, 1865, inclusive; the Edinburgh and the Westminster from April, 1864, to December, 1865, inclusive, and the London Quarterly for the year 1865, at the rate of $1 50 a year for each or any Review.

A few copies yet remain of all the Four Reviews for 1863 at $4 a set, or $1 50 for any one.

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., Publishers,
38 Walker street, New York.

GREAT ATTRACTION!

Lamott, - - - Hatter,

IS NOW THE MAN! HE IS READY WITH HIS BROADWAY STYLES FOR THE
Spring of 1866.

JUST SEE THE DIFFERENCE between his styles and the others in this city. There is style about his Hats that does not appear in others.

FACTS ARE STUBBORN THINGS!

LAMOTT, 227 Russ Block, is bound to be the LEADER of Fashions.

LAMOTT'S SPRING STYLES

show taste. It is a good thing that you have a man among you who is willing to take a stand outside of others, to introduce a style that is new, and not follow in the wake of others that are about one year behind the times.

GO TO HIS STORE FOR A HAT,
No. 220.....Montgomery street,
and get something that is new. je22-3m

PISCO!

G. & F. MARTELL'S COGNAC;
JAMES HENNESSY'S Cognac;
STEAMBOAT GIN;
OLD TOM GIN;
IRISH WHISKY,
from Bond direct.

For sale by V. SQARZA, my28 Liedsadorff street, San Francisco.

OCCIDENTAL HOMESTEAD Association,

OFFICE, - - - 305 MONTGOMERY STREET.

Capital Stock, $33,660.

102 SHARES.....$330 EACH.

This Association was formed to enable its members to obtain desirable homestead lots in this city at a cheap and easy rate, paying for the same by regular monthly instalments.

For this purpose they have purchased Blocks 409, 500, and 501, in the Western Addition to this city, bounded by Devisadero, Pine, Broderick and Clay streets.

Subscribers will pay an initiation fee of $5 on each share taken, to form a fund for defraying current expenses, and $11 per month for thirty months, commencing in April, 1866.

The property is within three blocks of the
TURK STREET RAILROAD,
IS NEARLY ALL ON THE GRADE,
and is most desirably located for Homestead purposes.

It is directly east from the lands of the California Association.

The property has been purchased on very reasonable terms, and offers a rare opportunity for investment.

A number of fine houses are in process of erection, and streets are being graded near this property, which will greatly increase its value.

When twelve monthly payments have been made, the property will be divided among the members in the usual manner, and each shareholder will receive a contract for a deed to the lot or lots to which he may be entitled, and have the privilege of taking immediate possession of the same.

The lots average 27 feet in front by 120 feet in depth. The whole amount due upon any lot may be paid at any time, and discount at the rate of one and one-half per cent. per month will be deducted therefrom.

Persons wishing to visit the lands of this Association will take the Turk street cars to Devisadero street, and thence go northerly along Devisadero to Pine street.

Twenty thousand dollars of the capital stock is taken, and the books are open for subscription to the balance at the office of the Secretary, where the Official Map of the Association can be seen, and full particulars obtained.

The Title to this Property is Perfect.

J. S. LUTY, Secretary,
Office, 305 Montgomery street, corner of Pine,
my19-3m Rooms 2 and 6.

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME!

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17
Have received a Large Stock of GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING
—AND—
FURNISHING GOODS,
Which they are selling
AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.
ja1 624 Clay street, San Francisco.

PACIFIC OCEAN HOUSE,

SANTA CRUZ, CAL.

THIS NEW AND COMMODIOUS HOTEL, built and furnished in accordance with the most modern and improved plans, and with a view to the comfort and convenience of its patrons, is now open for the reception of guests.

To those who have visited Santa Cruz, it is unnecessary to speak of its beauties and its natural advantages over all other places of Summer Resort.

To those who have not, the Proprietor can only say COME AND JUDGE FOR YOURSELVES—giving all who may come the assurance that his earnest endeavors shall be to make the Hotel, in all its appointments, equal to the surroundings of this delightful Sea side Resort.

GEO. T. BROMLEY,
Santa Cruz, April 4, 1866. Proprietor.

BALD-HEADED GENTLEMEN,

Who frequent the Parquet of Theatres, exciting by their grotesque appearance the merriment of Ladies in the Dress Circle, would profit by using Little & Co.'s Chinese

Vegetable Hair Restorative.

The proprietors of this astonishing remedy for Baldness, confident of its infallibility, agree to refund the purchase money in every instance where its use for three months, according to directions, is unattended with success. Price per jar, $2.50.

Manufactured by Little & Co.; sold by
CHAS. E. HINCKLEY & CO.,
Chemists and Druggists,
Southeast corner of Clay and Kearny streets,
ap21 San Francisco.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S Through Line to New York.

CARRYING THE U. S. MAIL!

Leave Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.

On the 16th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.

On the 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.

When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 19th connects with French Transatlantic company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamer for Southampton, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America.

Departure of 30th connects with English steamer for Tumaco, the port of the new mines.

STEAMERS FOR JUNE:

The following steamships will be despatched from San Francisco on the date given:

JUNE 30th, - - - - - GOLDEN CITY,
Captain Watkins.
(Connecting with ARIZONA, Captain Maury.)

An experienced Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

Cabin Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Messrs. Wells, Fargo & Co.

The steamer will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock.

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

BREWSTER & CO.'S Carriage Manufactory,

372 Broome steet, New York.

We desire to announce to our California friends that we have made extensive arrangements by increasing our works for the coming season, and with a view to

SUPPLYING THE
WANTS OF CALIFORNIA,

will manufacture a style of work particularly adapted to city and country use, and in view of the destructive effects of city railroads on all light work, will give

PARTICULAR ATTENTION

to remedying the evil, and guard against it in work shipped to California.

CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, PHAETONS, COUPES, and Vehicles of every description, of our own manufacture, on hand and made to order.

Orders or communications should be addressed to
BREWSTER & CO.,
Of Broome street,

The firm of Brewster & Baldwin not being in any way connected with

BREWSTER & CO.,
Of No. 372, Broome street,

A CARD.

D. WARREN SMITH

Has commenced his business of canvassing the city for subscribers for

MIDDLETON'S OIL PORTRAITS,
the series of which embrace
WASHINGTON AND MARTHA, LINCOLN,
WEBSTER, CLAY, DOUGLAS, GRANT,
SHERMAN, and JACKSON.

Mr. Smith will call at the business places of our city, and at dwellings at reasonable hours, and exhibit some of the above beautiful Oil Portraits. He hopes to meet with success, as the Pictures are worthy a place in every drawing-room in our country. AGENT'S HEADQUARTERS,

JOHN MIDDLETON & SONS,
my26-2m 404 Montgomery street.

THE BANK OF CALIFORNIA,

SAN FRANCISCO, May 9, 1866.

NOTICE.

At a meeting of the Stockholders of this Bank, held on the 5th inst., it was resolved to increase the Capital Stock of the corporation to $5,000,000, gold, to take effect on

THE FIRST DAY OF JULY NEXT,

and the President and Cashier were authorized to receive subscriptions for $2,000,000 of said capital stock. Parties desirous of subscribing will make application at the Bank, either personally or by letter, when further details will be given.

D. O. MILLS, President.
my20-1m W. C. RALSTON, Cashier.

MARKET STREET RAILROAD

CHANGE OF TIME TABLE.

ON AND AFTER AUGUST 1, 1865, Trains will start from the City and the Mission every hour; instead of every forty minutes, as heretofore.

Trains from the City will start at the odd hour, commencing at 6:30 A. M. and every hour thereafter until 11:30 P. M.

mb25 F. McCOPPIN, Superintendent.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE - - - - - - - - PROPRIETOR.
C. L. GRAVES - - - - - - - STAGE MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON - - - - - - TREASURER.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON AND EVENING, JUNE 23, 1866.

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Dress Circle and Orchestra, - - - - - - - $1 00
Parquet, - - - - - - - - - - 50
Upper Circle, - - - - - - - - - - 25

Mr. John McCullough,

SUPPORTED BY THE OPERA HOUSE COMPANY, will appear in the comedy of

RUY BLAS!

THE NEXT WEEK WILL BE THE

LAST WEEK OF

EDWIN FORREST,

WHO WILL PERSONATE

JACK CADE, - - - - - - - MONDAY
VIRGINIUS, - - - - - - - TUESDAY
JACK CADE, - - - - - - WEDNESDAY
RICHELIEU, - - - - - - THURSDAY.
MACBETH, - - - - - - - - FRIDAY

Reserved Seats.....$1 50
Dress Circle and Parqnet..... 1 00
Upper Circle..... 50

LOW PRICES

IN

Gents' Furnishing Goods,

AT

WARD'S SHIRT STORES,

323 MONTGOMERY STREET,

AND CORNER OF MARKET AND THIRD STREETS,

SAN FRANCISCO.

P. S.—Printed directions for self-measurement for Shirts and Price Lists of Goods sent free by mail.
ap21-3m

SUMMER MEDICINE.

PURIFY THE BLOOD

AND

Constitution,

WITH

LE DOYEN'S

SARSAPARILLA,

YELLOW DOCK,

IODINE ALTERATIVE.

CRANE & BRIGHAM, Agents,
my19 1m SAN FRANCISCO

FOURTH OF JULY, 1866.

NOTICE.

THE UNDERSIGNED having been appointed Grand Marshal of the Ceremonies for the coming Anniversary of the Independence of the United States, hereby respectfully invites the different Military, Fireman and Civic Societies in this city to participate in the celebration, and requests the officers of the same to send immediate notice of acceptance to the office of the Marshal, Nos. 25 and 26 Montgomery Block.

The proposed celebration is intended to be one of the grandest ever held in San Francisco, and, in view of the peculiar circumstances attending the present Anniversary, it is hoped that a full representation of the above-mentioned societies will assist in giving honor to the day.

As peace has again visited our Nation it is especialy appropriate that the whole people should unite in publicly showing their gratitude and joy on the occasion referred to; and a demonstration such as intended to be made will go far toward showing the patriotism which still endears the memory of the Birthday of America.

je23 2t WILLIAM G. BADGER, Grand Marshal.

GENTLEMEN'S FURNISHING GOODS!

Meagher, Taaffe & Co.

WILL THIS DAY OFFER,

At a Reduction of 25 per ct.,

200 dozen Super Merino Shirts and Drawers,
100 dozen Super Lamb's Wool Shirts and Drawers;
100 dozen Silk Shirts and Drawers;
100 dozen Cotton Flannel Snirts and Drawers;
75 dozen French Linen Shirts;
200 dozen Cotton Half-Hose;
150 dozen Merino Half-Hose.

ALSO,

POCKET HANDKERCHIEFS, NECK-TIES, COLLARS, ALEXANDRES'S BEST KID GLOVES, ETC.

9 Montgomery Street,

LICK HOUSE BLOCK.

Wholesale House, 107 Battery street,
je23 Between Pine and California streets.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

BATHS.
Dr. Bourne's, (Medical,) 10 Post, near Montgomery.

AUCTIONEERS.
Olney & Co., removed to 418 Montgomery street.

BUSINESS AND PROPERTY AGENCY.
S. P. Whitman, 313 Montgumery st.

BOWLING ALLEYS.
Cosmopolitan, White & Lafferty, Cosmopolitan Hotel.
Wholers & Steil, Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.)

BOOKS.
A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street.
I. M. Wentworth & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine st

HATTER.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street,

HOTELS.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.

INSURANCE.
Bigelow & Brn., N.W. cor. Montgomery and Sacramento.
Mutual Life Ins. Co., H. S. Homans, Agent, 609 Clay.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Ag'ts, 206 Front, cor Cal.
National Ins. Co., N.E. cor. Montgomery and California.
Occidental Ins. Co., S.W. cor. Montgom'y and California.
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

LIVERY AND SALE STABLE.
Philip Morshead, removed to Howard, near Fifth.

MAPS.
Pacific Map Depot, A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.

MERCHANT TAILORS.
J. H. Hammond removed to 328 Montgomery.

MILLINERS.

PAPER HANGINGS, WINDOW SHADES, ETC.
H. Ward, 132 Third street.

PIANO SCHOOL.
Mr. Gustave A. Scott, at Miel Institute, 55 South Park.
W. S. Pierce, removed to 534 Market, opposite Second

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
M. Gray, 613 Clay street.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

REAL ESTATE.
Fifteen-dollar lots for sale by H. S. Brown, S.E. corner of Battery and Commercial streets.

RESTAURANTS.
Bivalve, Nolting & Speon, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Eureka, C. H. Brickwedell & Co., Clay, near Montgom'y
Magnolia, 143 Third street.
Market, by Felix and Gustave Besson, 520 Merchant.
Philadelphia, Jacob Weiss, 308 Montgomery street.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Saulnann's, 506 Montgomery street.

SALOONS.
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N E cor Third and Howard
Razzetti & Co.'s, 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
S Myers, 332 Montgomery street.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street.
Sun Burst, Carolin & McArdle, cor. Second and Market.
Coates & Henderson, 37 Sutter street.

SCALES.
Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scales 324 Montgomery street.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, R. ' . Brown, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento

TOYS, ETC.
Feldbush & Co., 207 Montgomery street.
A. Kobler, 620 Washington street.

UPHOLSTERER.
T. McAllister, corner Sutter and Leavenworth.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery

CARPETS.

Removal! Removal!

KENNEDY & BELL

HAVE REMOVED TO

BUSH STREET,

Below Montgomery,

Store lately occupied by the Franco-American Commercial Company.

ap21-3m

HEUSTON,

HASTINGS

& CO.

The Fashionable Clothiers

OF

SAN FRANCISCO,

Are now engaged in enlarging their already extensive European connections, and are offering the LARGEST, FINEST, AND MOST COMPLETE

STOCK OF

CUSTOM-MADE CLOTHING,

GENTS' FURNISHING GOODS,

TRUNKS, BAGS, VALISES, ETC.,

ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

AT REDUCED PRICES.

je17-3m

TYLER BROTHERS,

NO. 632 WASHINGTON STREET,

AND 691 MARKET STREET, - - - - CORNER THIRD,

SAN FRANCISCO,

IMPORTERS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN

SCHOOL BOOKS,

STATIONERY,

PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,

BLANK BOOKS,

PORTFOLIOS,

JUVENILE BOOKS,

FANCY ARTICLES,

CHILDRENS' PICTURE BOOKS, Etc.

Especial attention given to

LADIES' STATIONERY,

Which we stamp with

INITIALS,

In COLORS or PLAIN.

WEDDING AND VISITING CARDS

ENGRAVED, WRITTEN, OR PRINTED.

je23

BOWMAN & CO.,
Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware,
mar24 6m Main street, Petaluma.

RING'S VEGETABLE AMBROSIA

IS THE MIRACLE OF THE AGE!

Gray-headed People have their locks restored by it to the dark, lustrous, silken tresses of youth, and are happy!

Young People, with light, faded or red Hair, have these unfashionable colors changed to a beautiful auburn, and rejoice!

People whose heads are covered with Dandruff and Humors, use it, and have clean coats and clear and healthy scalps!

Bald-Headed Veterans have their remaining locks tightened, and the bare spots covered with a luxuriant growth of Hair, and dance for joy!

Young Gentlemen use it because it is richly perfumed!

Young Ladies use it because it keeps their Hair in place!

Everybody must and will use it, because it is the cleanest and best article in the market!

For Sale by Druggists generally.

For sale, wholesale and retail, by
JOHN F. SNOW,
Sole Agent for the Pacific Coast, 24 Post street,
je23 San Francisco.

A. ROMAN & CO.,

417 AND 419 MONTGMERY STREET,

BOOK-SELLERS, PUBLISHERS,

AND IMPORTERS,

Offer for sale the following list of

PARLOR GAMES,

AT WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

The Garison Game, two styles;
The Magic Wheel, four kinds;
The Game of Authors, different kinds;
Noted People and Places;
The Old Curiosity Shop, Extant Authors;
Tipsy Philosophers; Peggy;
Anybody and Everybody, Somebody and Nobody;
Originations of Shakspeare;
Fun for Winter Evenings; Game of Letters;
The Game of Events;
The Showman; The Commanders of our Forces;
The Game of Familiar Quotations;
Protean Cards, or the Box of 100 Games;
The Game of Great Truths;
The Game of Courtship and Marriage;
The Shakspearian Game;
The Game of Battlefields of our Fathers;
The Game of Young Peddlers;
The Langhable Game of Red, White and Blue;
The Game of School in an Uproar;
The Game of Old Pampheczle;
The Game of Comical Dominoes;
The Game of Gipsy Fortune Teller;
The Game of Squail, two styles;
Colton's Series of Dissected Maps, viz.:
The World, North America, South America, Africa, Asia, Europe.

We are receiving by Every Steamer,

All the New Publications

OF THE DAY.

Our stock of Books in every branch of

LITERATURE

is very complete, which we offer at the lowest rates.

PUBLIC AND PRIVATE LIBRARIES SUPPLIED, ON FAVORABLE TERMS.

A. ROMAN & CO.,
417 and 419 Montgomery street.
je19 San Francisco.

NATURE UNVEILED,

AT THE

PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE

Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
ja27-tj between California and Pine.

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE

Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,

Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
ja27-tf between California and Pine.

The Californian.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME V., No 6. OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, JUNE 30, 1866.

TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE. 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

Inigoings.—By "Inigo."
Generalities.—By "Podgers."
The "Monadnock."
Book Notices.
Theatrical Events, and Announcements.
Editorial Paragraphs.
Note from "Emstadt."
Farmer Hope's Troubles.
From San Francisco to New York. By "Inigo."
Scarlet Recollections.
An American Woman in Europe.
Jefferson Davis' Bill of Fare.
The Russian Peasant Made a Noble.
House Moths.
A Malay Tradition.
Literary Notes.

GENERALITIES.

SUNDAY opened perspiringly—it was warm—and the pursuit of a view from the top of Telegraph Hill was attended with some mopping of the forehead, and reminiscenees of Doctor Bourne's Baths, where Mrs. Pilkington was not suffocated.

Foreign climes may be worth a visit, but a climb up Telegraph Hill, one of the still warm mornings, answers all purposes. You can get warm enough to remind you of India, and there are the India Warehouses at your feet to help out the hallucination; and, as for a view, I don't believe you can find a prettier one in any country. If this don't suit, go down the coast until you reach Russian Hill, and wind yourself up Jobson's spiral elevator—when you reach the top, you are ready to offer yourself as a cork-screw, and probably are thirsty enough to wish for a bottle to try yourself on. Almost everybody on the staff of THE CALIFORNIAN went to church, certainly. Some wicked people went into the country, and the San José Railroad carried down several hundred seekers after fresh air—although, for that matter, all one has to do is to open his mouth any hour after noon, and, if he don't get his fill of air and dust together, it is because he don't open it wide enough. There is a slight difference, however, between the air in the country, laden, as it is, with the refreshing odors of new-mown hay and sweet fern and the spicy gales of Araby, from the vicinity of the Mission and Butcherville. No wonder the eloquence of the Rev. Doctor Stone, the fervor of Mr. Wadsworth, the earnestness of Mr. Wyatt, fail to bring all the people within the sanctuary of a Sunday. They have no reason, however, to complain; their churches are full to overflowing.

THE chance of seeing a woman killed or drowned was a great attraction out at the Cliff House—Mademoiselle Celeste having announced that she would walk the waters on a wire suspended from the balcony of the Cliff House to the rocks where the sea lions are wont to sport and gambol (they can't have heard of the law against gambling.) THE CALIFORNIAN, being at church, did not of course witness the feat, but those who did say she accomplished it without falling off on to the jagged rocks and being killed, and from thence rolling into the surf and being drowned, much to the disappointment of those who went down to witness a catastrophe.

There has been a good deal of wire-pulling, and some remarkable acrobatic performances, by our real estate men on both the slack and taut rope, but they have contrived to preserve their equilibrium and not split upon the rocks—their performances being over the sand hills; and their profits have been much greater than those of the sylphlike Celeste, without the risk. No charge was made in this case—and the lions of the town and those of the sea, on the rocks, were alike complimentary guests. What must have been the wonder of the assembled family of sea lions that morning, as they basked in the sunshine, and from their sleepy eyes beheld the crowd of people on the cliffs opposite; and, when the maiden, all forlorn, launched herself out upon the frail foothold, and progressed towards their brine-dashed lodgings, what an interchange of conjectures there must have been! Fancy the horror of the old king lion, as he saw her approaching, to have his dominions invaded by a crinolined mortal in that uncelestial manner—and the jealousy of the lioness to perceive that she was making all the advances! They say the lions stood it for a time, but finally, at a signal from the old king, and with roars, they plunged into the surf—not the first instance of kings being made to get up and dust by a woman. Hereafter, let that old sea lion be known as Joseph. He probably takes a Mormon view of matrimony, doubtless has a harem quite equal to any elder potentate, and should not therefore object to another wife being sealed to him, nor let one more make it a case of harem scare 'em.

—

MONDAY opened like one of Capt. Cropper's oysters with a fresh smell of salt atmosphere, suggestive of cool sea-weeds and that refreshing odor of surf on a smooth beach. The wind was from Contra Costa and was consequently pure, but whether from Alameda, Oakland, or coastwise we can't say. The honors are open to appropriation, but the zephyrs certainly were not from the region of Brannan's "Suburban Homes for the People," out Missionwards. By the way, that is a brilliant idea to thus provide people homesteads in the country. Only think of the delights of a home within horse-railroad distance of the cramped up city; to go home of an evening and find your little yellow-tailed dog standing at the gate trying to get a wag out of his narrative which involves spasms on account of the tightness of the kink; to see, inside the enclosure, your pig, the children, the chickens, all living in a harmonious state of dry-dustiveness, and all these country delights reduced to a scale within the meanest comprehension. "Suburban Homes for the People;" all the advantages of a country residence, and convenient to the city, and all got out of 25 by 80! Who wouldn't go two miles into the country to obtain a house with such extensive farming privileges?—25 by 80! What a field for an agricultural genius! no pent-up Utica, etc.

—

TUESDAY—Hot again, and all the female world rejoicing in the opportunity to spread their gossamers and furs. It takes a real hot morning to bring out all the largest fur capes. A lady has just passed in a muslin dress and panting under a large sable cape. Poor thing! she is a victim to that cape; she has it and must wear it.

What jolly hats are these the girls are now wearing—reversed wash-basins, or more decidedly Chinese. In China the Mandarins wear them with a little nob on top, and one, two, or three tails hanging down, according to rank. The girls look decidedly nobby without the nob, but they don't omit the tails. Won't somebody translate these streamers? They must have a meaning. The language of ribbons might be made interesting and profitable. Let them designate the state of affairs clearly, so that all who run may read and not make any miss-takes.

THE Alta has an article on Roman-Turkish Baths. It suggests that the Romans probably took the idea from the Greeks. Shouldn't wonder, for the Greeks generally look as if they had lost it. This hot weather should make business for the Sanitariums, for one has an uncompromising desire to take a plunge under every passing sprinkling-cart.

S. F. TAYAC up before the Police Court for selling short on a liquor transaction—charged with selling two gallons and delivering only one and three-quarters—for which, if it is of the usual quality sold around town, the complainant out to be thankful, and not make a fuss about it—for the less he got the better he was off. Defendant, probably, taking the measure of the man, concluded he would not hold two gallons, and, believing in measure for measure, gave him all he could stow below decks. (Acquitted.)

MR. SCHROUBSTADTER, the tenor, undertook to play the role of "Mazeppa" on a wild horse at Oakland, and rolled off. The horse did not mind his time, and ignored the Adagio movement., Mr. S. took the so low part, and came to a dead rest upon the sand. Result: a few strains not in the overture.

THE Masonic fraternity held a picnic at the People's Park, St. John's Day, and found a Lodge in that brief wilderness. Some chicken salad, and some cold water they took down in black bottles, did not pay any freight back. The People's Park is a dry and thirsty spot, and people who go down there seem generally well aware of the fact, which gives rise to a conundrum: When do the Chinese form a large part of the travel on these pienies? When demijohns go down. (There will be no extra charge for THE CALIFORNIAN this week on account of this goak.)

THE ladies are looking for the man who calls their hoops the hinder-pest. Some fellow makes a great fuss about the indecency of the present fashion in crinoline, whereupon somebody asks if that chap can't stand it, if the ladies can; that is what might be termed a "settler."

W. C. ANNANS, of New York, (we knew him in old times as a merchant here) has commenced suit against the "Star of Hope." What a shame! Has hope told a flattering tale, and then gone short of it? Who will commence the persecution against "the light of other days?" The Star of Hope, we would mention en passant, is a ship. We hope both will win—which relieves us from the charge of partiality.

AN advertisement in the Alta of yesterday says that the female Blondin, Celeste, will, at the Cliff House, Sunday morning, perform "the most terrific feet ever attempted by any woman in the world." Go and see the feet!

Catastrophe.—A young lady, blinded by the dust, and confused by the gyrations of her crinoline, at that windy corner of Bush and Montgomery streets, yesterday, put her foot in it (her hoop,) and fell as gracefully as circumstances would permit. She recovered herself just in time to deprive the editorial staff of THE CALIFORNIAN, and a compounder of potent potions opposite, of the pleasure of restoring her equilibrium. She requested us not to put her in the paper, and we wouldn't have done it, but her case just fills the space so nicely.

PODGERS.

AMUSEMENTS.

THE Forrest season of six weeks, the most successful one ever played at the Opera House, closed with last night's performance of Macbeth. The attendance during the last week was better than that which greeted the opening week of the season. After a respite, and a trip to the Springs, Mr. Forrest will give us another season, in which he will appear in some favorite characters held in reserve for his farewell engagement. On Monday evening, Miss Kate Denin makes her appearance in Camille. Miss Denin played an engagement in this city some twelve years back, accompanied by her sister, and gave evidence of considerable talent, though then a mere girl. If report may be credited, the girl has grown into a tall and comely woman, and has become an actress of refinement and culture, whose "Camille" and other characterizations have a merit worthy of even greater celebrity than they possess. Miss Denin will be supported by Mr. John Wilson, a most familiar name, but not to be confounded with that of our John Wilson, of the Heavenly and Terrestrial Circus and Hippodrome, now in Australia. The present John Wilson comes to us with fair recommendations for histrionic ability, but puts in no claim to being a hippocentaur.

Romeo and Juliet will constitute the bill for to-day's matinée. This evening, the most worthy "Howards No. 3" will take their benefit, and present Ruy Blas and Cool as a Cucumber for the entertainment.

—

THE Howson Opera Troupe will open in La Sonnambula in English, at the Academy of Music, on Monday next The members who formed the very efficient chorus of the last Italian Opera Troupe have been engaged for the Howson Troupe, and are already holding rehearsals.

JUMP'S last subject for caricature, now adorning the show-windows, is Dr. Jordan's Anatomical Museum. Jump appears to be unintimidated by either the newspaper corps, earthquakes, legislative assemblies, or scientific institutions. They all become subjects of his talent for the grotesque and the ludicrous. We expect that when the rider of the pale horse comes along to harpoon Jump, he will afford an opportunity for the artist's farewell caricature, to be published for the benefit of the Jumps he leaves behind.

SCARLET RECOLLECTIONS.

I.

I MUST go back some fifteen years or more, before the days of volunteers and Enfield rifles, Armstrong guns and iron-plated frigates, learned ensigns and competitive examinations, back to the "good old time" when a little interest at the Horse Guards and £450 at your banker's were all the requisites for a commission in her Majesty's service.

How well I remember that eventful evening, when our red-faced butler, with an air of greater stateliness than usual, presented before my longing eyes the official-looking envelope, inscribed with the magic letters, "O. H. M. S." "Hurrah! I'm gazetted! Three cheers for everybody! The Two-Hundredth Royal Slashers! Headquarters at Athlone! To join on the first of February. I do believe I shall go mad!" Ah well, I was only a boy, remember. Scarcely six months before, I had sat in a round jacket on a hard form at school, and now I was an officer, with a glorious jumble before my mind's eye of scarlet, gold, sword jingling, sentry saluting, band playing, ladies admiring, men envying; mess dinners, garrison balls, picnics, and the like, not to speak of prospective castles in the air, beginning with daring feats in battle, and ending with a general's commission and K. C. B. I have the extract from that week's Gazette before me now:

"Two-Hundreth Royal Slashers.—Alfred Tombs, gentleman, to be Ensign, by purchase, vice William Henry Thompson, promoted."

Congratulations and rejoicings; much strutting about the streets of Chickenborough (our market town;) a great amount of visiting, and sundry parties given in honor of my new position; a grand winding up in the shape of a ball at home, whereat I appeared in uniform for the first time, was duly flattered, fancied myself killing, came to utter grief in returning thanks at supper, and drank far too much champagne. All this passed away like a dream. My outfit and all needful preparations were completed amidst a whirl of delightful excitement; leave-takings hurried through, and farewells uttered with a heart already in barracks at Athlone; and then—yes, and then—"Malbrook s'en va-t-en guerre," I left the paternal roof, a young bear with all my troubles before me.

I am not going to inflict upon the reader a detailed account of the next few months. I "joined," went through the mysteries of the goose-step, turned out of bed for early recruit drill in a tight shell-jacket, learnt to take up my proper position at parade, mastered the "manual" and "platoon." Why should I go on? Are not all my male readers volunteers? And as to the ladies, they will gladly take everything for granted. Suffice it, the sergeant-major reported me fit for duty in about the usual time; I fell into the ordinary routine, experienced the dreary horrors of the guard-room, sat in judgment on disorderly privates at court-martial, went the usual tours of inspection through the men's rooms, and, in short, fulfilled all the arduous duties of a subaltern in her Majesty's Two-Hundreth Royal Slashers.

It is curious to notice what changes even so short a period as fifteen years may bring about. We wore epaulets, heavy with gold bullion; tight-fitting, long-tailed coatee, with white shoulder-belt; a shako, compared to which the present military headpiece is light as a feather; and—note carefully—not a vestige of moustache! As to the men, the tyranny of stock and pipeclay was ten times worse than at present, the knapsack twice as heavy, and Brown Bess—ponderous, uncertain Brown Bess—the weapon of the day. In numbers, again, our regiment aptly illustrated the short-sighted policy which dwarfed and cut down the army, until the Crimean campaign roused the military spirit of the nation. Numbering ten companies of nominally one hundred men each, we could scarcely muster more than six hundred and fifty, of all ranks on parade. Few companies had more than sixty men.

Each regiment has a certain character and standing in military circles. Ours had a peculiar reputation. It was noted as being the slowest for promotion in the whole army, and yet one of the most comfortable, pleasant, and wealthy corps in the service. The roll of field officers and captains had not changed for years, and the senior ensign had seen seven years' service. In fact, there was not a "youngster" in the regiment except the two junior ensigns—Lobley and your humble servant. Lobley was only my senior by a few months, and our two Gazettes, following one on the heels of the other, had been a ten days' wonder in every mess-room from Hythe to Galway. Such a thing as a couple of vacancies in the Two Hundredth was a perfect miracle. I need hardly say that the regiment prided itself upon its character for exclusiveness. Our mess was noted for its excellent cuisine and wines, its hospitality and late hours. "None of your mutton and Marsala concerns, sir, ours," was the boast of Jones, the messman; and he was right—it wasn't.

Moreover, curiously enough, what would irretrievably have damaged the character of most regiments only added to the brilliancy of ours. Nearly half our officers were married. The colonel, both majors, five captains, two brace of lieutenants, the paymaster and surgeon, were all Benedicts. None of them, of course, ever attended mess, except on state occasions; but then they all had money (or their wives had, which, of course, was the same thing,) kept open house, gave carpet-hops and whist-parties, to which we bachelors dropped in after mess, had pretty daughters or sisters-in-law, and caused the Two-Hundredth to be perfectly independent of foreign aid for picnic or party, to be well furnished with ladies for every species of amusement, and able to bid defiance to the dullest and most inhospitable quarters. Even what we lost in numbers round the mess-table was amply atoned for in the hearty good fellowship of the old campaigners who were left; "and, besides," as Hallett, our senior captain remarked, "there is all the more room for outsiders." We had generally a full complement of guests; and many a jolly Irish squire could tell tales of nights spent with her Majesty's Royal Slashers. No wonder that we two young cubs, Lobley and myself, thought there never was such a regiment, such a mess, and—entre nous—such Admirable Crichtons as ourselves.

II.

"The Crow's Nest, Athlone, Thursday, 16th.

"Dr. and Mrs. Crab request the pleasure of Mr. Tomb's company after mess this evening, to a friendly cup of tea."

So ran a letter which was put into my hands a little before mess one evening. Dr. Crab was our regimental surgeon—a veteran of twenty-five years' standing. He had been on leave ever since I joined, and had only returned a few days' previously. I had not even seen him as yet, and, if I might judge by report, he never invited any one to his quarters, except a few intimate old cronies. A very eccentric fellow in every way, and his wife a regular dragon.

I sat down next to Lobley at mess, and showed him the letter.

"Why, my dear fellow, I've just had an invite, too," was his rejoinder; and he pulled out a note to match.

"Ah," I observed, "I see it now. It's a general affair for the whole mess. The old boy has turned civil and wants to show us a little attention."

"Queer, though, that he should ask us, ain't it?" said Lobley.

"We've never been introduced, you know."

"And with such short notice, too," I added.

"Hollo! what's the matter there?" asked Fullarton, a lieutenant who sat opposite. "Are you two youngsters comparing love letters, or what?"

We told him.

"An invite from old Crabby! Hear it, every one! Lobley and Tombs are going to the doctor's this evening."

There was a general exclamation. All sorts of questions followed, and the notes were handed round the table. It appeared, on inquiry, that no one else was asked. It was very queer.

"I don't think I shall go," I said at last. "I don't know him."

"Nor I either," chimed in Lobley. "I had far rather stay here. It's such a bore dressing."

"Nonsense, lads!" exclaimed Captain Ross. "Dr. Crab is eccentric in all he does. We don't often have new-comers in the Slashers, and he wants to be a bit civil to both of you. It is quite an unusual piece of politeness for him."

"You know," said Hallet, very gravely, "he is one of our seniors, and you might as decently refuse to go to the colonel's. You'll get into hot water with the authorities if you decline."

"Moreover," laughed Fullarton, "you must remember, my infants, that this worshipful community consider it highly desirable that their youthful members should seize every opportunity of improving their minds and morals, and Mrs. Crab's society will do much towards both. Now, don't be angry, Tombs! It's for your good, I assure you."

The long and short of it was we put ourselves into dress-coats, and drove off in an inside car to the Crow's Nest. It was a glorious summer evening, and the mess-room windows were blocked up with grinning faces as we departed.

"Confound those fellows, how full of fun they are!" said Lobley, discontentedly.

"I half expect there's a joke in it somewhere!" I growled. "Anyhow, we won't stop long, if we can help it."

Dr. Crab lived nearly half a mile from barracks.

The Crow's Nest was a tumble-down, desolate structure, near the Shannon. A gaunt female answered our knock. "What is it ye want?" was her salutation as we stepped in.

"Dr. Crab is at home, of course?" I said.

"Sure an' he is. What then?" said the female, indignantly. "You're mighty free and easy, at all events," as we threw our caps on the hall table. "I'm thinking it's officers ye are from the barracks?"

"We are come to spend the evening with Dr. Crab," said Lobley, in a pompous tone. "Announce Ensigns Tombs and Lobley, will you?"

A horrible doubt seized me. There were no signs of guests being expected; the hall was but dimly lighted, and not over-tidy. At the same instant a gruff voice cried out, "What's the matter there, Bridget? What are you keeping the door open for?"

"Here's the masther, and maybe ye'll speak to him yourselves," said Bridget; and she took herself off without more ado.

There was another request from the gruff voice to know what was the matter, then anything but a proper exclamation, and finally a door was thrown open, and we were confronted by Dr. Crab. Never shall I forget the figure he presented. Extremely short, extremely stout, extremely red in the face, with his perfectly bald head surrounded by a ring of white hair, which stood up all round like a sort of ruff, while a pair of immense white whiskers covered his cheeks to such an extent, that nothing but a narrow passage was left for nose and chin; fierce little eyes, an old withered dressing-gown loosely wrapped round his body, finishing off with carpet slippers below. This was our host, and a pretty trio we made, staring at one another in stupid amazement.

"I think there is some mistake, sir," I faltered.

"I rather think there is, young gentleman," said the little man. "Dr. Crab, Two-Hundredth Royal Slashers, very much at your service."

"We—we received an invitation to spend the evening with you—at least, I mean to say, we thought so," stammered Lobley, who had turned very red.

"I have your note, sir, in my pocket—that is to say, the one which I supposed to come from you," I added, handing him the document with a polite bow, for he looked anything but amiable.

The little man took and looked at it, tore it deliberately in two, threw the fragments on the floor, and burst out into a fit of fury which made me wish myself safe on the other side of the hall door. He stamped and raved, hurled maledictions on the heads of all the mess, individually and collectively; vowed he'd have every one of them up before a court-martial, he'd call them out, he'd leave the service, he'd buy the biggest horsewhip in Athlone, and take it down to barracks the next morning; pending which time, he shook the crazy old house to its very foundations, kicked both the carpet slippers off, and shouted until he was nearly black in the face.

I had been vainly trying to get in a word of apology, but really the doctor was so violent, I began to fear we had to do with a raging lunatic. The only thing left for us seemed to be to cut and run. I looked at Lobley; he was already trying to pull back the door-latch. Alas! Dr. Crab was too quick for us.

"Stop that!" he roared. "Look here, young gentlemen; this is, no doubt, a very pleasant joke, but it's my turn now, and"—with an oath—"I'll make use of it. Be good enough to give me your names, and we'll see what Colonel Cox says to this to-morrow. A pretty state of things, to be bearded in my own house by a couple of impudent young scamps—ugh!"

"Upon my honor," Lobley was beginning, when the little savage cut him short with another forcible exclamation.

I do not know whether it was the evident absurdity of trying to pacify him, or the coarseness of his language which disgusted me, or what; but I recovered my self-possession all at once, and with a calmness which I have often wondered at since, though my heart was beating like a sledge-hammer, I said, "I tell you what, sir, it's quite enough to have been hoaxed and made a fool of, without being sworn at like a black. What you will do to-morrow I don't know and don't care. Come, Lobley, let us give this gentleman our cards and be off."

He glared at me in speechless astonishment. I handed the two cards for his acceptance. He took them, stared at us as we caught up our forage caps and made for the door, but seemed utterly dumfoundered. We opened the door—still not a word.

"Good evening, Dr. Crab," I said, as I stood in the doorway; "accept our apologies for having entered your house. You may be perfectly certain we shan't repeat the offence." And I shut the door after me, glad, if the truth must be known, that we were out of it.

But we were not. The door flew open again. With nothing on his feet but a pair of blue stockings, his dressing-gown flying behind him, no hat, and his red face smoking again with perspiration, the little man came rushing down the steps, and laid hold of me.

"Here, stop! Don't be a fool! I was too hasty—you're a trump! Come back! It is all right now. Come into the house, and let's be calm!" He jerked out the words at intervals, between a series of wheezy pantings for breath. And by the time he had finished, what with being taken by surprise, and strenuously pulled, I was inside the door again.

He got us both in; pushed, dragged, and talked us into a comfortable lighted room; made us sit down, and then fell back exhausted into an easy-chair. I would not have given a farthing for his sanity.

"Oof!" he snorted, as soon as he could speak, "that was a breather, and no mistake! Now, gentlemen, listen a moment. I am a passionate old dog; but I've gone too far. I'm sorry. I apologize. I might have known that you were simply humbugged by a set of fellows who ought to have known better However, I see it all now; you've been hoaxed, and that's the long and short of it. Now look here! take your choice. Saddle the high horse, stand on your dignity, walk out as you did just now, and go back in a rage to the barracks, to find yourselves a standing joke to the mess for many a day; or stop where you are. I don't care much for youngsters, as a general rule, but I like you"—turning towards me—"for your pluck, and I dare say your friend will improve on acquaintance. I can give you a good glass of grog, or capital claret, if you prefer it, and a real Havana if you smoke; although you're both far too young to do anything of the sort. You shall stay with me till such time as Hallet and the rest have done waiting for your return to be grinned at. Then to-morrow you shall tell as many lies as you like about the pleasant evening old Crabby gave you, and forget altogether how he lost his temper. Eh? What do you say?"

What did we say? Why, of course we were inexpressibly delighted. Our eccentric host grunted his satisfaction, and set about his hospitable preparations. Suddenly he paused, and looked curiously at our costumes.

"Studs, dress-coat, and general get-up," he soliloquized, in a way that brought the color to our faces. "I tell you what, young uns, you're better suited for the drawing-room than this den of mine here. Now I'll tell you what I'll do. I'll just put on a coat and take you up stairs to Mrs. Crab. You've had as much wine as is good for you, I'll be bound, at mess; and I've got the nicest girl to show you between this and Galway. A niece of mine, brought over on a visit. Not going to let the Slashers get about her. No, no! far too good for them; but I'll make an exception with you. Besides," he added, with a peculiar grin, "Mrs. C. will be wondering what all the row's been about."

III.

"Mrs. Crab, Mr. Tombs. Mrs. Crab, Mr. — what's your name? Mr. Lobley. We've been having a little discussion, Mrs. Crab—nothing to speak of. This, gentlemen, is Miss Crab, come to kill half Athlone—eh, Maggie?"

"Uncle, how can you be so absurd?"

"Crab, for shame of yourself!"

The first ejaculation came from the young lady, the second from the old one. Seniores priores, let us sketch Mrs. Crab first.

Extremes meet, they say. Whatever good reasons Dr. Crab had for choosing his spouse, he certainly must have had an eye to contrast. He was little, stout, red-faced, snub-nosed, small-eyed, large-mouthed, loud-voiced, and blunt in the extreme. Mrs. Crab stood six feet in her stockings, was all angles and bones, had a face as yellow as a guinea (the effect of many years spent in Jamaica,) large hooked nose, over-hanging mouth, with the two front teeth unpleasantly prominent, wore spectacles, and talked in a shrill hissing tone, which set all your teeth on edge in an instant. The doctor was careless in dress, in manner, and everything else. Mrs. C. was all primness, propriety, stiffness, regularity, and decorum rolled into one body. Finally the doctor partook of all the good things of this life—solid and liquid—especially the latter, in utter disregard of gout or dyspepsia; while his lady was martyr to a perpetual liver-complaint, and starved herself in everything except a certain quack medicine—Professor Totley's pills—which she took herself, and distributed among her friends unsparingly, to the great horror of her worthy husband.

A great deal of all this, of course, I found out afterwards. All that I was conscious of at the time was a gaunt spectre of a woman, taller in reality than myself, and looking from her enormous length of dress a very giantess, who rose up from her seat like a many-jointed telescope, and acknowledged our bows with a stiff little jerk of her head, and a glance at her husband which said as plainly as possible, "Whatever have you brought these youths here for?"

But the other lady! My dear reader, I am approaching the most critical part of my narrative. Here is the heroine to be exhibited for your inspection, and really I cannot do her anything like justice. Looking back, the impression left upon my mind is that of a brown, saucy-looking brunette, with irregular features, curling hair clustering over a somewhat low forehead, large dark eyes, nez retroussé (I like disguising our blunt English phrase,) tolerable-sized mouth, and small elegant figure. "In fact, a very ordinary, commonplace girl altogether, eh, Mr. Tombs?"

Not at all, my dear reader; she was really one of the most charming creatures I have ever come across, irresistibly so. There was a piquant, saucy, boyish look about that face; a pleasant, merry, unembarrassed, yet perfectly ladylike grace in all her words and actions, which told immensely with the male sex. Your first idea was, "What a glorious boy that girl would make!" your second, "She's the jolliest girl I ever came across;" and then you got thoroughly bewitched, and went home to dream of her. Where the charm was hidden, whether in the hair that never would lie straight, or the laughing eyes that were always bewildering you with their brightness, or the little nose which violated every rule of classical beauty, or the pouting red lips which were seldom closed for two seconds together, or the dimpled chin, or where, you couldn't for the life of you tell. But one thing was certain, it lay somewhere, and that was all about it.

"Tea, Mrs. C.," said the doctor. "I told these young gentlemen how much better it was for them than guzzling all the evening. We'll go down to grog and smoke at ten. Never you say again, Miss Magpie, that I don't bring the red-coats to see you. Here are a couple. Talk away: but don't make too much noise: I want a nap." And thereupon he lay back in an easy-chair, threw a silk handkerchief over his head, and almost immediately favored us to a little snoring.

Six months in the Slashers had done a good deal for me, but still I was not over and above used to ladies' society. I glanced at Lobley; he was staring fixedly at a porcelain figure on the mantel-piece, and trying, apparently, to tear off one of his waistcoat buttons. Mrs C. made the tea in solemn silence. As to the young lady, I did not dare to look at her. There was a frightful pause, broken only by the doctor's snores. Suddenly a hearty burst of laughter rang through the room. "Margaret, my dear!" said Mrs. Crab, reprovingly.

"O, I really couldn't help it. It was so ridiculous, so like a Quakers' meeting! Come, Mr. Tombs, my uncle told us to talk. Can't you say something?"

There was something so comic in the face with which she spoke, that I could not help laughing with her. Somehow or other, my shyness all vanished. In five minutes we were the best friends in the world. Once loosened, my tongue went on wheels. I told her all my first impressions of the Two-Hundredth, described my brother officers, went through a good deal of innocent scandal, told a few mess-tales second-hand, and found myself prattling as only an ensign, not quite eighteen, can prattle, when totally at his ease. It seemed to amuse the young lady immensely. Meanwhile Mrs. Crab never spoke, except to check our merriment when it seemed likely to interrupt the veteran's snores, and Lobley fidgeted in his chair, and pretended to be engaged in a volume of Views Up the Rhine. I am ashamed to own it, but I rather exulted over him, and felt not a little proud of playing first fiddle to such an extent. He certainly looked anything but comfortable.

We got from barrack life back to an earlier date. I began describing Chickenborough, and my home there. Mrs. Crab pricked up her ears. "Are you the eldest son, Mr. Tombs?" she asked, turning her spectacles full upon me.

"Eldest and only one," I said.

"Sisters?"

"O yes—three."

"Large house?"

I described the house and grounds, not without an instinctive notion that she had no right to question me. If it had been the young lady it would have been very different. Mrs. Crab seemed quite altered. She multiplied her questions, until I had gone pretty fairly through all our domestic arrangements. Miss Crabb looked annoyed. Her aunt's face brightened considerably, and she asked me quite cordially to have another cup of tea.

"And where do you come from, Mr. Lobley?" said the giantess, turning round to my brother sub.

"Thank goodness," I thought, "there's somebody else in for it now."

Lobley had become thoroughly sulky. He replied very shortly—so grumpily, indeed, that I thought Mrs. C. would be offended. But she was not. I never saw any one so eager for domestic details. Lobley had no more chance with her than I had. In five minutes she had pumped out of him that he was the third son out of six; father an officer on half-pay, living in Germany; mother dead; he himself sent into the army by a rich uncle; with sundry other details fairly dragged out of him, to the evident increase of his ill-humor.

I began to think it was too bad, the catechizing had grown insufferable. Miss Maggie's face expressed the same feeling. Suddenly, with a jerk of her arm, intentional I believe, over went the round table at her elbow, with a teacup and a work-box on it. There was a crash, and up started the doctor, in time to hear Mrs. Crab's angry rebuke. He stretched himself and arose.

"There, that's enough. Pick up the pieces; why—bless me—it's after ten! Talked enough, Mag, eh? And how are the youngsters?" turning to Lobley and myself. "One of you looks bored. Mrs. C.'s had him in hand, I'll be bound. The other's so-so; he's been in your care, Miss Mag. Well, come, let's move down stairs, and have something hot. Ladies, time for you to go to bed."

"Before you go, Mr. Tombs," said the giantess, addressing me with a smiling face, very different from the one with which she had listened to poor Lobley's confession, "you must accept a little present, not ornamental, but useful. I always give one to my friends [a strong emphasis on the word,] and you must promise to use it—"

"Yes, put it behind the fire, or poison his worst enemy with it. What do you say so a dose of pills, Tombs, eh?" growled the doctor.

"Mr. Tombs is too sensible to be prejudiced by misrepresentations," said Mrs. Crab, producing, sure enough, a pill-box from her pocket. "Two taken every night at bedtime—"

"Will kill you in a week," interrupted her spouse.

I was beginning to see Mrs. Crab's weak points. "Thank you, ma'am," I struck in. "I will certainly try them."

Dr. Crab favored me with a stare. "Whew!" he whistled, "you're a deep one, or I'm much mistaken. Well, are we ready now? Isn't Mr. Lobley to have a box?"

"O thank you, I hate physic," said my friend, incautiously. Mrs. Crab glared at him vindictively through her spectacles. We said good night to the ladies. Miss Crab gave us a pleasant smile at parting. As to Mrs. C., she was barely civil to Lobley. The two elder brothers, added to the rejection of Totley's pills, had evidently settled him, once and forever in her estimation.

It was midnight before we left the Crow's Nest. Dr. Crab proved a most entertaining host. In his own peculiar gruff style, he jerked out anecdote after anecdote from the experience of a military life of twenty-five years spent in every quarter of the globe. The whiskey was excellent, the cigars ditto; although I am afraid we were very incompetent critics. Time passed away only too quickly. We rose as the clock struck twelve.

"Yes, yes," said our host; "I won't press you to stay. Late enough. Don't like to see lads out later than this. Glad to have seen you. Remember another time, and don't take an angry man at his word. You shall come to see me again. No small honor that, I can tell you; for I'm not over fond of company. What's more, you shall come and see Mag. You're too young for much mischief yet. Never mind Mrs. Crab and her pills. Take care of the step. There—good night;" and he slammed the door behind us.

"What a jolly ending to a bad beginning!" I exclaimed as we walked back. "Capital old chap when you come to know him. And what a stunning girl!"

"Humph," said Lobley, "the girl's all well enough; so was the grog; but if ever I met such a creature as that yellow old woman—"

We came to the barrack gates before he had finished.

IV.

The undress uniform of the Royal Slashers at this period consisted of a tight shell-jacket (scarlet, with yellow facings,) fitting closely to the body, with a row of gold buttons down the front, and decorated on the shoulders with what I can best describe as two baker's twists covered with gold thread; a forage cap with the regimental number in front; trousers of the lightest, washed-out, faded-looking blue; together with white pipeclayed sword-belt, buckled round the waist, completed a costume which, though suitable enough for a well-made man, was highly ridiculous when displayed on a lanky ensign or a fat old major.

Attired after this fashion, I walked towards the mess-room to breakfast the next morning, with head slightly aching from the effects of the doctor's whiskey. It only wanted half an hour to parade, and at least a dozen fellows were standing at the door, or leaning out of the mess-room windows, enjoying the bright sunshine, and watching the lively bustle going on, as the men came trooping out of their various quarters. A regular roar greeted me as I came up. "Well, Tombs, what sort of an evening?" "Was old Crabby glad to see you?" "How about the dragon?" "Who was kicked out first, you or Lobley?" "Did the old boy have a fit?" "Has he sent his love to the mess?" These are a few of the questions which were asked in a volley, interspersed with shouts of laughter which brought every officer within hearing to the spot.

"Why didn't you come back?" said Fullarton, taking advantage of a slight lull. "We waited for you till nearly twelve; and, by the same token, I lost a bottle of claret to Saunders, on your being home in half an hour."

"Couldn't face us, eh?" grinned Hallett.

"It must have been an affecting scene—Damon and Pythias bearding old Crab," roared Fullarton. I may remark that Lobley and I had a score of nicknames—Siamese Twins, Hob and Nob, Damon and Pythias, etc.

"Well, but come, Tombs; tell us all about it, and we'll promise not to laugh," said Ross; "that is if we can help it. Let us have the whole history."

"Upon my word," I said, striving hard to put on a face of bewilderment, "I don't know what you all mean. I can only say we spent a very pleasant evening, and didn't leave until this morning."

"O come, come! that's too good," interrupted Fullarton. "Why, man alive, you know well enough that Dr. Crab never invited you at all. Your humble servant wrote the letters, and that's the long and short of it!"

"Then Dr. Crab takes a joke very kindly," I said, coolly. "He gave us a hearty welcome—tea up stairs, whiskey and cigars below—and kept us till midnight." They stared. I spoke so seriously that they were evidently nonplussed.

"Wonders will never cease," observed Hallett, shrugging his shoulders; "I would have laid a hundred to one that Crab would have horsewhipped you. He's the crankiest spitfire in the service. You're not trying on a little humbug, youngster, now, are you?"

"Humbug or not, Captain Hallett," I said in an injured tone, "I have not enjoyed an evening so much for a long time. Lobley may speak for himself."

"Well, there's a mystery somewhere," said Hallett. "Just fancy, sir," he continued, addressing the senior major who walked up at that moment; "our two youngsters spent the evening with the doctor yesterday, and, more extraordinary still, enjoyed themselves!"

"With Dr. Crab? Bless me!" said the major. "Why, Mr. Tombs, you will be able to tell us something of the new beauty. All the ladies are raving about a girl who has been seen about with Mrs. C., a regular out-and-outer, so far as I can gather."

"Ah, that explains the pleasant evening," observed Fullarton. "Why, Tombs, you are a slyer rogue than I thought!"

I told the major I had certainly been introduced to the young lady—thought her very pleasing, good-looking, and so on—good talker, and plenty of fun about her.

"Well, you're a lucky dog, that's all I can say," replied the major. "She has been in Athlone a week, and you're the first person I have heard of as having been introduced to her. Mr. Tombs has stolen a march upon you all, gentlemen."

"I consider that you are under deep obligations to me, Tombs, my boy, for sending you last night to the doctor's; besides having cost me a bottle of claret," observed Fullarton, as I rushed into the mess-room to snatch a few mouthfuls before parade.

It was a fearfully hot morning. The perspiration rolled off my face as we marched and wheeled, and formed hollow square, and wore out time, boots, and patience together, on the scorching gravel of the barrack square. It was over at last. The welcome dismissal was given. The major and adjutant walked off to the orderly-room; officers, panting and flushed, went to the mess-room for pale ale; the men retreated to their quarters; the nursery-maids and miscellaneous public, who had clustered about the gates, dispersed: and in a few seconds the square was nearly deserted. As to myself, I took refuge from the heat in my own room; quickly threw off my tight uniform and odious stock; put on the lightest summer suit I possessed, and lay cooling for half an hour in my easy chair. There was a sharp knock at the door, and in walked no less a person than Dr. Crab.

I cannot say that uniform improved his appearance. What with his face and dress together, there was so much red about him, that the bushy white whiskers were quite a relief. He gave a sort of amiable growl as he sat down.

"Humph! Don't know what's come over me. First subaltern I've been to see for years. Taken a fancy to you somehow. Glad you stuck up to me last night. Ugh! haven't you got an easy chair?"

"Take this one, sir," I exclaimed, springing up.

"Ah! thank you; there! Not bad quarters there! Too good for a sub. Humph! Pictures, smoking-caps, dressing-case, cigar-box, dressing'gown, scent-bottle, and I don't know what," looking round my neat apartment. "Far too much foolery. Ought to be ready to march at a minute's notice. Shouldn't smoke; far too young, humph!"

"Your cigars were very good last night, doctor."

"Shouldn't have given them to you, very wrong; nor grog either. By the way, I feel thirsty now. May as well have some lunch. Come along, and we'll have some together in the mess-room. Where's the other fellow—Lobley—eh?"

I said I had not seen him all the morning.

"Ah, grog too much for him; seedy; headache and soda-water," grunted the doctor as we turned out.

Our entrance into the mess-room produced no small sensation. It appeared that the doctor had not set foot in it since his return from a six months' leave, nor was he at the best of times very fond of favoring it with his presence. Quite a group surrounded him with real or pretended congratulations on his reappearance. He took it all very coolly.

"There, there! that will do. I'm sure you've all been lost without me. Ah, Hallett! stouter than ever, I see. I always told you how it would be. Apoplexy, my dear fellow, apoplexy! Give these youngsters a step, some day, as sure as fate."

"Confound him!" growled the senior captain, "I'd back my life against his any day." But I saw he did not much like the allusion.

"I saw Sir Edward the other day, in town," went on the doctor, addressing Maxwell, the younger brother of this same Sir Edward, with whom he was at deadly feud. "Remarkably well he looked, to be sure. No chance of the title passing yet awhile. They talk of his getting married shortly. By the way, speaking of marriage, didn't I see Miss Thompson's wedding in the papers, the other day, at Dublin? I always thought—ah! I beg pardon, Delany, I had forgotten you were here. Never mind, plenty more fish in the sea, you know, humph!"

"Better not fish at all than catch a Tartar, doctor," said Fullarton, with a mischievous smile, covering Delany's retreat.

"Mrs. Crab is very well, thank you," cried the imperturbable little man, at once appropriating the allusion. "Where did you pick up that spavined old hack I saw you driving yesterday?"

"Spavined old hack! Confound it all," said Fullarton, starting up. "I gave Morrison a cool hundred for him, two months ago."

"Ah! exactly. Should have thought he was one of Morrison's, from the look of him. Heard the other day that a fifteen-year-old-screw, which had been in every regiment in the garrison, regular roarer, had been palmed off on a greenhorn from somewhere or other. It can't be the same, of course," continued the doctor, as Fullarton walked off angrily.

"There. Tombs, my boy, we can have lunch, I think, now that the coast is clear."

Clear enough, in all conscience. The doctor had utterly routed his opponents with his caustic tongue. We were left in peace. His victory added considerably to my companion's good temper. "Fetch Mr. Lobley," he said, as he concluded a hearty attack on the cold meat and pickles. "I was told to bring you both. Ladies want a sail. All go together, eh?"

I had intended joining Fullarton and one or two others on a rabbit-shooting expedition. The thought of another chat with Miss Maggie decided the question.

"You're mad, Tombs!" exclaimed Fullarton, angrily, when I told him. "Old Crabstick's only making game of you—taking you up out of spite to us for our joke upon him. It's this girl, I suppose, you're thinking of. Well, Crab knows she's pretty safe with such boys as you and Lobley."

"At all events," I said, rather nettled, "the doctor had the best of it just now, hadn't he?"

"He fights his battles," said Fullarton, sharply, "with the same weapon as that with which Samson smote the Philistines—the jawbone of an ass."

v.

I DATE a succession of very pleasant days from my introduction to Dr. Crab. It soon became known throughout the barracks and Athlone generally, that the doctor had broken through his usual caution, and come out in a new character altogether—patron of myself, and in a somewhat less degree of Lobley also. Not only did that first boating expedition come off with great success, but many others after it. Rides, excursions on foot, visits to the neighboring towns, little social picnics, etc., etc., followed one another in quick succession. True to his declared determination, we were the only Slashers whom the doctor admitted to the society of his niece, save and except the colonel and paymaster, who had been old cronies of his through years of home and foreign service. As both Colonel Cox and Captain Seaton had wives, we formed a tolerable party together. There was a Miss Cox, a moderately pretty girl of eighteen, very thick with Miss Maggie, besides some smaller fry who were occasionally admitted to our expeditions.

"Some men achieve greatness, and some have greatness thrust upon them." Much did the mess wonder at the singular good luck of its two junior members. We had hitherto been rather treated as—what indeed we were—little better than a couple of school-boys; but now seldom a day came but we were at the colonel's, who rarely encouraged visitors save on special and state occasions; or, more usually still, at the Crow's Nest, which, though heretofore regarded rather as a dragon's den, was now vainly besieged by military and civil, male and female, alike desirous of knowing the beautiful Miss Margaret Crab. The doctor was inexorable. Cards, of course, were politely returned, but invitations as politely declined. A large picnic given by the mess could not tempt him, nor was Mrs. Crab to be won over, although specially invited. Miss Maggie herself seemed quite to acquiesce.

"I don't really care to know any one else, Mr. Tombs," she said one day, when I questioned her on the subject. "Uncle and aunt, Colonel and Mrs. Cox, the Seatons, dear Mary"—that was Miss Cox—and, though last not least, Mr. Lobley and yourself, are quite enough for all practical purposes. I've got over my school-girl admiration of a red coat"—she wasn't more than my own age, I'm certain—"and would far rather have such a cosey little party as we had last night at the colonel's than any amount of violent dissipation. Besides—but you are too young to understand what I was going to say." Fancy that to a six months' old ensign in the Slashers! "Well, don't look cross, and I'll tell you. You know if there really was anything going on which I should like to be at, I could easily coax uncle and the dear old colonel into taking me, and meanwhile—"

"Meanwhile, your ladyship's acquaintance is the more sought after because people can't get it," I interrupted.

"Your penetration does you credit, sir. You are improving, I must say. If you could but produce a pair of nice whiskers I might fancy you quite a man."

"Confound—"

"There, don't use naughty words. I'm going into the garden, and you may come with me if you like."

In sober earnest nothing could have been more fortunate for me in every way than the intimate familiarity into which I was admitted at the surgeon's and colonel's. With all his eccentricities Dr. Crab was, at the bottom, a most kindly-hearted, sensible man, and his friendship, when he chose to bestow it, was real and valuable, especially to an impulsive youngster like myself. To a much greater degree might this be said of the colonel. A thorough gentleman and soldier, of splendid family, noted as one of the crack commanding officers of his day, possessing the utmost esteem of all his officers and perfectly adored by the men, no wonder I felt proud of being noticed by him. With an ample fortune, a nice house on the banks of the Shannon, a kind, ladylike wife, and a family of well-educated, merry children of all ages, from the pretty Mary of eighteen down to a bright-eyed young toddler of five, I was only too glad to avail myself of their kindness. I was still boy enough to join in the youngsters' games. Many a romp did we all—Mary Cox and Maggie Crab included—have on the smooth lawn which sloped gently down to the waters of the finest river in Ireland, while the seniors sat at the open dining-room windows and applauded. Nay, more than once did Dr. Crab put down his meerschaum, and forcibly dragging the colonel and Captain Seaton with him, enter vigorously into a game of blind-man's-buff, or tick, until as the victimized colonel remarked, a day in the tropics was nothing to it. Lobley of course joined in these diversions, though to a less extent. There was a mutual coolness between him and Mrs. Crab, that worthy dame having a decided antipathy to younger sons, while Lobley himself had as great a dislike to Professor Totley's pills, not having the discretion—or, shall we say, hypocrisy—of your humble servant, who pocketed every pill-box that was offered him, and quietly threw it away as soon as convenient.

Moreover, my brother sub was hardly of my childish state of mind, and having had the starch taken out of his shirt-collar and his nose injured against a tree while playing blind-man's-buff on a certain occasion, when Miss Maggie contrived that he should continue blindfold for nearly half an hour, he had declared that he didn't care for so much romping. However, he was quite considered as one of our little party, or, as Fullarton expressed it, one of the partners in the firm of Cox, Crab, and Co.

Of course we had to run the gauntlet of plenty of senseless jokes from the mess. Crab in all shapes and forms—curried, grilled, and cold—was ordered for our special edification. On one occasion, on entering my room late at night, I found half a dozen living specimens crawling sideways about the floor; on another, the sharp claws and cold body of the same marine delicacy—boiled, however, this time—caused me to jump out of bed in no little consternation. Lobley fared no better. We were dignified with the title of the Infant Crabs; had the pleasure of seeing a meaning smile pass round the table as we rose before the decanters had gone twice round, and of hearing the doctor, his wife, and niece made the subject of a hundred pointed remarks, which, however ridiculous to look back upon now, were sufficiently galling at the time. However, it was only harmless chaff after all. I had sense enough even then to understand that the pleasant social evenings at the colonel's, the quiet rubbers at Captain Seaton's, and little suppers at the Crow's Nest, with the accompaniment of an innocent flirtation with the fair Maggie, were far preferable, as well as more profitable to mind and body, than sitting over cards and claret in the mess-room till the small hours. However, whether I thought so then or not, I certainly do now.

LITERARY NOTES.

MR. WHITTIER may congratulate himself on the success of his little idyl, Snow-Bound, of which twenty thousand copies have been printed.

MR. BAYARD TAYLOR and Mr. George Boker are about to make an overland journey to California.

M. SAINTE-BEUVE has given his opinion in reference to the authenticity of the famous Marie Antoinette letters, and it is not in favor of their genuineness.

M. VICTOR HUGO was not offered one hundred thousand dollars, as was at first reported, for the use of his Toilers of the Sea as a feuilleton in Le Soliel, but one hundred thousand francs, which was still a princely price. He is said to have lately received fifty thousand dollars from his publisher on account of past sales.

MR. THOMAS CARLYLE, to whom the American rebellion was only a smoky chimney burning itself out, was wiser in his day, as regards American stock, than many of his countrymen, even those who wished us well, for he not only declined to sell his securities, though often advised to do so, but added to them the interest which came to him from those he already possessed. So says a gossiping correspondent, and we dare say truly; for, with all Carlyle's railery against the money-getting propensities of the time, he is still at heart a canny Scotchman, living frugally and laying up his means.

MR. J. PAYNE COLLIER has recently published two more parts of his specimens of Old English Literature, a reprint of Hubbard's Ceyx and Alcione, and Vernard's Apology for his Life, the earliest prose autobiography in the language, written for his dramatic entertainment called England's Joy (1602.) The History of Sir Plasidus, the early Christian martyr, written in verse, will be the next part of the series. Mr. Collier is also about to bring out his exact reprint of The Phœnix Nest, originally published in 1593.

MR. DION L. BOUCICAULT has written a new play for Mr. Joseph Jefferson called The Parish Clerk.

[Round Table.

FARMER HOPE'S TROUBLE.

FARMER HOPE sat brooding over the kitchen fire; a few rays from the covered embers glanced out at him now and then, blinked, winked, and went to their ashen sleep again. When they did so, the farmer stirred them up with his heavy boot.

A heavy, broad-shouldered man was Farmer Hope, and, as he stooped in his arm-chair, over the smouldering hearth his muscular frame dropped with a ponderous weight, as if the heart inside of it were heavy to lift. A miserable drop, that should have been a tear, hung piteously at the end of his nose; for Farmer Hope had worked out early and late this autumn, and the only thing he had got by it was a cold.

"Every thing goes the wrong way," said the farmer.

He might have said this to himself, but that grandmother Beck sat in the doorway knitting. The last ruddy rays of twilight gleamed over the sloping cornfield that occupied the rising ground just beyond the house, and a broad band of sombre crimson swept in across the porch and over the floor of the unlit room; the faintest skylight was better than candles, grandmother Beck was wont to say—and more economical. Silent and soothing and solemn was the time, and, sitting erect in the doorway, the old lady occasionally varied her employment with an involuntary nod to the departing twilight. Roused from this peaceful mood by Farmer Hope's gruff voice, the needles spasmodically started again, and, vigorously rocking herself in her comfortable arm-chair, the old lady peered over her spectacles after the dropped stitch, till silence ensued once more, and Farmer Hope brooded—Grandmother Beck nodded. And I doubt not as much wisdom was contained in his patient recognition of her old age and acquiescence in fate and decrepitude, as in all his surly struggles and sharp defiance of destiny.

A sweet summer silence reigned in the room for an instant; the katydids in the dewy shrubbery without chirped their tender monotony, and the wondrous peace and spell of a country evening seemed to have settled softly down everywhere. Only the farmer was restive under this opiate of peace brooding in the atmosphere.

"Yes!" he repeated, slapping his broad hand upon his stalwart knee, in a way that startled the knitting-needles with a sudden click, "every thing! I'm darned tired of it all. Here I have been working early and late, like a nigger slave the whole blessed summer, and all these years along back—and it ain't come to nothing! Blamed if I don't drop the whole concern. A fellow may work and work, till his very soul's wriggled out of his body, and what does it all amount to? There's no getting along honestly in this world, old woman! It's all cheating and chaffering, and cheapening—and if you don't do like the rest, it's because you're too much of a fool to be a knave—an' folks 'll tell you of it, too, as farmer Jones did me, when he carted off that last load of hay. It all turns out bad as far as I can see in this world, and as I don't know about the next—"

"Samuel!" said Grandmother Beck, reprovingly.

"To be sure I don't," repeated the farmer, gruffly, stirring up with his boot the sulky embers, "know nothing about it. Whoever's got the charge up there manages things, I take it, pretty much as tyrants do here—or else, may be His place is so far off from these parts they go wrong in spite of Him!"

"Oh, Samuel!" said Grandmother Beck; "if Deacon Gilbert should hear thee talking so!"

Grandmother Beck had been brought up among the Quakers, but she had the profoundest respect for church dignataries of any sect whatever.

"That for Deacon Gilbert!" said Farmer Hope, snapping his fingers. "He don't have any short crops to make long payments with; he—"

"Why, Samuel!" said the old lady, uplifting her wrinkled hands, from which the great ball of gray yarn rolled treacherously upon the floor, "surely thee's not given over to—" Puss, taking advantage of theology, grasped at this instant the luckless ball, and broke at the same time the thread of Grandmother Beck's discourse.

"Believe a lie? Ay, to be sure—it's not a lie if I believe it," said Farmer Hope, with a harsh laugh, "and I do believe it—you may stake your life on that. 'Taint a lie that folks do live in this world to humbug and cheat one another, and them that does it the best gets off the safest, and no one above or below, 'pears to me, takes charge of things, and sets 'em right. 'Tain't done!" And Farmer Hope set the heel of his boot energetically on puss's tail, who had taken refuge on the hearth to investigate the ball of yarn at her leisure. A yell from puss.

"The infernal thing!" cried the farmer, grinding his teeth as she scampered away.

Grandmother Beck rocked herself to patience. Farmer Hope rose up and stretched himself, and, yawning, took a candle from the high mantel-shelf. His tall figure almost reached the kitchen beams. Puss looked down upon him from aloft in the rafters, folded her tail calmly about her, and waited to see what would become of it.

"Had enough of it for to-night, at any rate," said he. "I'm off to bed. There's nothing for it, that I see, but to sell the old place; it's shingled with mortgages now, and I don't see as I'll ever pay 'em off."

"What will Lizette do then?" said Grandmother Beck.

"Lizette may pick blackberries for a living!"

A merry laugh was heard outside, and a little, sun-burned maiden sprung lightly upon the door-sill. There she stood poised an instant, looking within, like a curious bird that intends taking flight again. She was a graceful and gracious maiden, as pleasant to look upon as an apple-blossom in spring. The fading light seemed to concentrate in her tiny figure, as she stood in the doorway. Within, the house was dusk and solemn—this little girl seemed to bring the freshness and life of the meadows with her.

"Indeed, uncle," said she, "I'd like no better fun! Grand! I'd be on the hills all day, instead of dozing and prozing over the school-books," and again she laughed that quick, fresh, gushing laugh; such a frank, free laugh, as, like other girlish things, women learn to put by in the prosaic sadness of their later years. As Farmer Hope strode off to bed, he glanced at his blithe little niece, and his gloomy eyes lit up for an instant. For she was the embodiment to him of all he knew that was loving and beautiful, and his heart, though he did not acknowledge it, took in the glad blessing of her beauty and freshness. Lizette was more to him than meadows or crops, or the old farm-house itself, and dumbly the heavy-hearted man worshipped all beauty through the shape of his little Lizette, the child of his dead wife's sister.

But to-night he had no word, even for her; so, taking himself to bed, he left the old woman and her grand-daughter to speculate upon what was the matter. But Lizette did not speculate long. She broke the silence that followed her uncle's departure, as she set the lighted candle upon the table, and hunted up her basket of patchwork:

"I really think I could do something, now!" she said, half to herself, "mornings and evenings when I ain't at school. My! Why, grandmother, all the girls in the factory pay their own board, and here I ain't any account at all! Don't pay for my salt even. Wonder if blackberries——"

But Grandmother Beck burst into a laugh—a rare feat with her.

"La, child," said she, "set your poor little heart at rest. Your uncle's none so bad off as that. He's got to be unaccountably uneasy lately, your uncle has. But rubbing one's temper betwixt sharp words wears out the ill-humor, I've no doubt. Things haven't worked exactly right, along back, but if the worst comes to the worst——"

"Blackberries will be all gone," said Lizette, archly. "Well," she added, after a thoughtful pause, "it isn't so foolish, neither. Old Mrs. Feming is making up lots of blackberries for the hospitals, and I've heard the girls say that some of 'em make lots of money just gathering 'em."

Lizette was silent for the rest of the evening, as Grandmother Beck and herself pursued their mutual industries, interspersed on the part of the old woman with occasional profound obeisances to Morpheus, and on the part of the young one with thoughtful pauses, and absent drooping of the busy hands, as if some profound problem were being revolved in her mind.

The shadow was still upon Farmer Hope's face the next morning, as he went out to his work—a painful and settled shadow. The only sunshine about this hard-working man, who had not a word to-day for his workmen or his household, lingered in his golden-tinged hair, which yet retained a certain youthful lustre at variance with the grim lines on his face and the morose dejection of his eyes under their shaggy eyebrows. He had grown gray in spirit, working out here in the sunshine and the sunny fields; and the fact that he was not outwardly gray-haired, only made his inner gloom more palpable.

It was a hot, autumn day; the heat lay down on pasture and meadow, like a great, solemn dream. Not a bird chirped, not a leaf stirred. The men, scattered in the shadow of the hedges, or grouped here and there under some branching tree, were taking their noonday lunch; some of them lying lazily at full length.

Suddenly there rose to the heavens a fearful cry, which caused every man to spring to his feet. Across the field, hatless, coatless, heedless of the noonday sun, the reapers hurried, their ruddy faces turned only in one direction.

There, just beyond, over the rising ground, a white smoke rose heavily in the summer sun, curling away in sinister silence toward the welkin. Every one knew what that meant. Just over that slope, then, in sight from the rising-ground, stood the old farm-house. On this silent summer day, without a note of warning, it was smitten, as if from the very heavens. The old place was on fire!

The dear old place! To every soul then hastening on, the ancient and sturdy farm-house that had looked over the brow of the hill as long as any of them remembered, took the aspect of a dear old friend whose life was in the power of an enemy.

Every man's face grew paler with passionate eagerness to reach and to save it; every nerve strained; every foot forgot its heaviness.

But one figure, stalwart and strong, strode on in advance of them all. His stern features worked into a strange emotion under the rude straw hat shading his eyes. This fire-wreathed mass, over which whirled the passion-white clouds of smoke, through which every moment a piercing tongue of flame clove its way to the heavens—this lonely mansion, struggling silently with destruction, taking its last glimpses of the quiet, sunny fields, was not the thing he had hated last night, and almost cursed last night. It was the old homestead again, where his boyhood and youth had been spent, and for which he had lived and labored.

I think in that moment, as Farmer Hope advanced swiftly toward the scene of destruction, he scarcely remembered his property that was being sacrificed; he scarcely thought of the inmates, who had fled, probably, from the flames, helpless and in terror; he only thought of his old love—the old, old house.

But as he approached over the slope of the cornfield that half surrounded it, a wild figure arrested his steps, her gray hair streaming in the wind, her wrinkled hands beckoning with imploring gestures. It was Grandmother Beck.

"Lizette! Lizette!" she cried.

"What of Lizette?" said the farmer. "She's safe in school, isn't she?"

In hurried, broken accents, and with hands that eagerly dragged him forward, the old woman explained that Lizette and her fellow-pupils had received an unexpected half-holiday, and Lizette had come home and gone up in her room to lie down; she was not very well. Grandmother Beck was asleep herself when the fire broke out, and had made her escape through the kitchen. Lizette's room was under the pointed roof of the building, and just beside the great stone chimney that took in almost one side of the house—and which was falling, falling, before their very eyes.

Farmer Hope did not wait to hear more. Shouting to the men who were hastening with ladders and buckets, he disappeared in the smoke and flame which surrounded the entrance. A great tongue of fire leaped fiercely across the doorway as he vanished.

Energetically, as for life, the neighbors worked; but in these lonely country districts such efforts are of little avail.

As the farmer groped along in the blinding smoke and falling timbers, there was but one thought in his breast—to reach and to save Lizette. Lizette! the child asleep in the very arms of death. God! could he rescue this frail little life, he would never grumble again at the hardships through which his was passed. Over the great stone chimney, from which plank and plaster had shredded away, writhed and hissed the hungry flames. They wrapped the doorway of Lizette's little room. Before it the passage-way yawned, a gulf of flames. Every timber had fallen in. With but one glance across the abyss, and a cry that rung out amid the crackle and crash of the falling building—a dumb, despairing cry that had no words to make it a prayer, he sprung across the chasm. His hand touched the latch of Lizette's door: it yielded to his touch, but the sudden weight of his heavy frame loosened the frail, decayed timbers that yet supported it, and, with a crash, it fell, dragging him with it down into the seething flames.

Helpless, scorched, scarce recognizable in the soot and blood that covered his visage, Farmer Hope was dragged, unconscious, from the ruins. And as they did so, the great stone chimney settled, with a heavy, fateful sound, down, down upon the roof, which, yielding beneath the pressure, fell in with a crash; a sparkling fountain of flame sprung triumphantly upward, as the black roof shriveled from sight, and Farmer Hope's mansion was a total wreck.

"Lizette! Lizette!" he moaned, as the awe-struck crowd of neighbors gathered around.

At that moment, Grandmother Beck, bending low over the prostrate figure, and dashing the cold water into his face, raised herself suddenly erect; her fixed and eager eye gleamed out from her disheveled hair, with a sudden, wonderful light. She pointed toward the meadow; there, breaking through the hedge, flying toward them with a breathless speed, a little figure appeared, and flung itself, sobbing, on the neck of the unconscious man.

"Lizette! oh, Lizette," he murmured.

"Lizette! oh, Lizette! where have you been?" cried Grandmother Beck.

"Been for blackberries" said Lizette, with her quaint simplicity, and accustomed submissiveness to Grandmother Beck "Lost 'em all in the hedge, though, when I caught sight of the fire."

Lizette had, for once, practiced a little deception on the old lady, and feigned her illness and need of rest, in order to escape from question.

The old house was gone, but Lizette was safe. She had, as Grandmother Beck shrewdly observed, "earned a living" by picking blackberies.

The last time I saw Farmer Hope, his weather-beaten face was scarred with tokens of his struggle with the flames; but there shone out of it such luminous expression, such a spirit of cheerfulness, as I had never seen before; a token, also, which I think he brought from that battle in which he was vanquished, but which a stronger hand than his forbade to be an utter defeat. With Lizette to inspire him, the farmer works sturdily to recover a home again. With the vanishing of his prosperity, has vanished his quarrel with fate; and, whatever disappointments befall him, he cheers himself with a little laugh about the day when Lizette went blackberrying.

OVER THE SEAS.

AN AMERICAN WOMAN IN EUROPE.

[The Special correspondent of the Springfield Republican writes from Florence, under date of April 22d.]

TWO weeks ago to-day—can it be only two weeks!—we took a fascinating drive through the city of Naples, going up a long hill which commanded views of the bay, with its beautiful islands. At the left rose Vesuvius, blue and bright, with a border of towns at its base, and only smoking as much as a cigar; then came Naples with all its shipping, and Capri and Baiae, the former cut like a cameo against the blue air; its outline is like a calm still face gazing upward, as if it were dead Italy lying here in state, before her beautiful palaces and shores.

In the exhilarating sea air, we moved onward toward the country, which was one mosaic of flowers, and festive with vineyards, the vines looped airily from tree to tree. Returning to our hotel through another and thickly-settled way, we had an excellent opportunity to see the people in their Sunday attire, and out of doors, in processions, in crowds. I do not think an infant was left in the house. Old women sat chatting in groups, with children on their knees; wives walked beside their husbands, two or three bairns beside them and perhaps a donkey. Young men and maidens, old men and children, were out in the sunshine together; and even the solitary took this gay scene to be solitary in, sat mazily and silently in corners while the rest were glad. In one of the steep, narrow streets, we met a kind of Canterbury procession, which was very picturesque; a party of soldiers with plentiful bunches of cock-feathers flying over their faces, a mixture of doctors in black gowns, of citizens and strangers, were mounted upon mules and donkeys, and each had a flute or some other musical instrument upon which, as he rode, he idly sounded a note or two. The bright colors, the careless, graceful attitudes, the leislurely pace of the donkeys, the generally impromptu, aimless and happy look of the party, was entirely Italian. So narrow some of the roads were, and shut in by such high stone walls, that they recalled to our minds the ancient passes "where an hundred could well be stopped by three," and we descended into level streets, almost as narrow, so narrow as to bring us close to the people and the houses. We were as amused as children, and so absorbed in watching, that for an hour or two we did not exchange a word with each other.

THE DRIVE TO SORRENTO.

The next morning we were up early for Sorrento, via Castellamare, and soon found ourselves in the car with a party of French, who, chatting volubly, gave us a lesson in the language. At Castellamare we took a carriage, with three horses and bright Magenta feathers at their ears, and sped along the beautiful, beautiful road, no lovelier on earth. It is as if a balcony were hung on the side of the high cliff, all in and out and around the "Vesuvian bay"—now taking us toward the mountain and the sea, now back toward the deep ravines, over a dizzy viaduct, and along, along, the walls and cliffs bright with poppies and double gilliflower, with deep pink asters and golden gorse, with curtains of portulacca in a blaze of bloom, and the lovely blue-white flowers of the garlic, and orange-groves sweeter than Eden; and ever beside us the sparkling sea, and, lifting us up like wings, the exhilarating air, and scenery such as hardly the angels deserve to look upon. The view from the hotel—Hotel of the Sibyl, I think—was ravishing. We wished we had obeyed our Roman physician and come here at once; we longed to stay a week, a month, forever. From the balconies we look right down into the Mediterranean deep below us—and across at Vesuvius, and on for miles along the bright, blue sea. As we stood there, the words of Aldrich's song came back:

> "My soul, to day, is far away
> Sailing the Vesuvian bay:
> My winged boat, a bird afloat,
> Sails round the purple peaks remote;
> With half shut eyes, my spirit lies
> Under the walls of Paradise."

May they never come back in Boston, some chill east-windy day of Spring! It is the mischief of some of the lovely haunts, that they have a lotus-eating effect upon us, and for the moment make us love them better than our homes.

We went out for purchases of inlaid wood, but found it here, as at Nice, less fine than formerly. The patterns are in great part colored with paint, which, though it produces a good effect at first, soon loses its brilliancy, and betrays the imitation. We wandered about the little town, and into an orange and lemon grove, where we picked the blossoms and ripe fruit to our hearts' content. It is an unusually good year for this fruit, and the trees were bowed to the ground with their weight. Some of the oranges were as large as an infant's head, and really a burden to carry. We hurried back to our hotel for our Arcadian lunch at the open door. Over the door dropped one of the fragrant climbing roses so common in Italy, covered now with thin tiny white blossoms, like snow, and outside sat a strolling band of minstrels, who made excellent music—beginning with the high, sublime, from Mozart and Mendelssohn, and ending in Yankee Doodle. We filled our glasses with lachryma christi, grown in the crater of Vesuvius; and as we sat "sipping like a fly," wished every one whom we cared for at home could be with us, in this our Arcadia! Friends, will you come?

We were a little late for the train, so our tandem team of horses scampered around the mountain balconies, in the most exhilarating manner. We made the ten miles in an hour and a half, and then took the train again for the same shore scenery—having had the good fortune to meet the friends who, of all the hundred acquaintances we encounter in Europe, could most add to our enjoyment of such a day as this:

> "'Twas one of the charmed days
> When the genius of God doth flow—
> The wind may alter twenty ways,
> A tempest cannot blow."

Together in the slanting sunset light we watched the wondrous loveliness of the mountains and water—with purple and rosy hues tinging their haze, and the haze dilating, almost lifting them up from their solid base. "Do you know," said one of our friends, "that all day long some rhymes of Aldrich have been haunting me. He wrote them, he told me, one drearily cold day in Brooklyn. Did you ever read the song, I wonder?—

> "With half shut eyes, my spirit lies
> Under the walls of Paradise;"

And they begin—

> "My soul to-day is far away,
> Sailing the Vesuvian bay."

We were home in our hotel by six o'clock at evening, tired.

PALACES AND CORALS.

We went to some palaces in Naples, but the pictures were modern, and we grew weary of the cold splendor of these palaces, which never look as if any one lived in them.

We went also to coral and lava shops, and saw literally bushels of this beautiful ware, finely carved, and in all shades of white and red. So great is the desire for coral ornaments just now that it is very expensive, a pair of little round buttons of light-colored costing twenty or thirty dollars.

ROME ONCE MORE.

From Naples back to our beloved Rome, which I must confess looked sombre after the gayety and sunshine of Naples. But the first sight of the Campagna made our hearts "leap up" like a letter from home; and far beyond its billowy level the sunshine was lighting up the distant sea to a fine line of silver. Then came the Claudian aqueduct with its thousand arches, hardly two alike, some broader, some lower, some with two stories, some with a broad and a narrow arch alternating, some of large stone and some of small, some whole, some broken, some bare, some ivy-overgrown; into one a little house built, and some loveliest ones adopted into the garden of the Villa Volkenski and embowered in trees and vines. So we came to the ruined temple of Minerva Medica—wild flowers waving among all its graceful arches—came to St. John Lateran, with its statues beckoning, came to the Spanish square, and I began to think how they would be watching at the library window, would run out on the side-piazza to greet us, when it came over me all at once, like an eclipse, that these home-like places and faces were not of home, that we were in the Via Condotti, in the Corso, not in Shawmut avenue. Ah, perhaps after all we did not eat lotus enough in our Neapolitan Arcadia.

In a few days more we took our last drive in Rome. Oh, but it was like tearing an ivy from the wall to tear our hearts from where, in so short a time, they had grown so fast and close. We went out toward the Campagna, saw our last time the sunset gild the Colosseum, looked into the little church where is Michel Angelo's Moses, said farewell to the Fountain of Trevi, and all the dear, familiar places. The fennel leaves above the Colosseum, waving like so many hands, seemed to say au revoir, and not farewell; the doves came back to the fountain and nestled among the carved capitals of its pillars, and so we departed. C. S. W.

A New "Precious Stone."—If the following had not actually occurred, it might be considered a good joke. In a town eight miles from Boston, the pupils of an orthodox Sabbath School have been accustomed to have given them, at the beginning of a month, a sort of "hunt-and-go-seek" task, the result of which was to be made known at the monthly public meeting of the school. On one occasion they were told to bring in a history of all the women named in the Bible; at another time, all the rivers. About a month since they were asked to bring in the names of all the precious stones. The Sabbath evening, when the result of their investigations was to be made known, at length came, and each boy and girl stood up and gave the names of the precious stones of the Bible. After several had been given, one little fellow was called out: "Well, Thomas, what precious stone have you found?" "Brimstone!" answered the boy. It is needless to say that a number of handkerchiefs were called into requisition to choke down the "depraved human nature" that seemed desirous of manifesting itself in laughter.

JEFFERSON DAVIS' BILL-OF-FARE.

THE uproar about Jefferson Davis' health has led to the publication by the New York Times of his bill-of-fare at breakfast and dinner for one week, in order to show that his diet has had nothing to do with the decline of his health. The document, which the correspondent of the Times calls by the impressive name of a "schedule of meals," certainly proves that whatever the cause of Mr. Davis' weakness may be, it is not want of food; but we at the same time feel bound to add that it does not reveal very extraordinary resources on the part of either the caterer or cook of the fortress, according to the notions of variety current in this part of the world. He had mutton chops three times in the week; he had beefsteak four times; he had veal cutlet three times: pork steak he was only treated to once, but oysters appear to have been supplied to him at discretion. They made their appearance at every meal, either "panned" or stewed, and we notice with pleasure that that excellent anti-scorbutic, onions, was supplied to him regularly every day at his dinner. It may seem rather hard that "a scholar and a gentleman" should be condemned to such uniformity of diet, and some boarders at New York hotels will doubtless think the fate of a man so fed as little better than slow starvation. The gentleman who writes the lugubrious articles on this subject in the World and Daily News very probably draws on Mr. Cranston's larder twice a day, and therefore must shudder on reading Mr. Davis' "schedule of meals." But it must be remembered that everybody does not live in New York hotels, and the food served to the prisoner at Fortress Monroe is probably twice as varied as that which he would get on nine out of every ten plantations in the South. We shall not compare it, as the Times does, to the stuff served out to the unhappy men who were confined at Andersonville. No matter whether Davis was responsible for the horrors of the prison pen or not, we owe it to ourselves to treat him like a human being, not like a wild animal. But we may fairly compare it to what he would get if he were staying on most out of the way plantations, and ask him frankly whether he would get beefsteak and oysters and veal cutlets half as often as he does in prison. The fact is, that most Southern men, who are not expert with their rod and gun, are, like farmers and country gentlemen everywhere, generally less familiar with fresh meat and fish than it is desirable they should be. One high official of the Confederacy gave a dinner to a distinguished foreign traveller, some years ago, on his plantation, and the bill-of-fare contained ten courses, all pork, but, of course, dressed in different styles, the reason being that there was no butcher or market within thirty miles. Davis having long resided in Washington must have become used to more generous fare, but then what he gets in Fortress Monroe is so very much better than what the mass of his countrymen get that we think he cannot in common decency complain.—The Nation.

The contract for erecting a monument to commemorate the battle of Gettysburg, to be erected on the field where that decisive conflict was waged, has been awarded to James G. Batterson, of Hartford, Connecticut, who designed the accepted plan. The monument is twenty-three feet square at the base and fifty-five feet high. At the angles of the base are four buttresses, each supporting a colossal statue in a sitting posture. These statues are allegorical, and represent respectively, War, History, Peace, and Plenty. War is represented by the figure of an American soldier, who, resting from the conflict, relates to History the story of the battle and the names of the honored dead, while History, with her stylus and tablet, writes down the imperishable record. The corresponding statues symbolize Peace and Plenty. Peace is represented by a mechanic with the implements of his trade about him. Plenty is typified by a female figure with sheaf of wheat and ploughshare. These last figures indicate the industry and activity which shall succeed the ravages of war, and the abundance and prosperity which are the crowning results of the glorious victory here achieved.

Upon the richly moulded cornice rests an octagonal plinth, bearing in basso relievo the coat-of-arms of the United States. On the shaft above and encircling it are eighteen stars in basso relievo, representing the States which remained loyal throughout the fiery trial.

The Capitol is finely moulded, and supports a three quarter globe, upon which stands the colossal statue, fifteen feet high, representing the Genius of Liberty, clasping within her left arm the folds of the American flag, while in her raised right hand she holds the victor's wreath of laurel. The pedestal is to be made of fine white granite, and the statues of white American marble. The structure will cost about $50,000.

Rich and Brilliant Trimming.—A new trimming has been introduced, under the name of the Target. It is a round medallion, woven at intervals in a flat braid. They are in contrasting colors. Gold or deep yellow medallions on green or blue bands are rich and brilliant. We have seen a couple of white opera cloaks with a trimming of this kind—one in blue, the other in green—that were among the prettiest of the importations of this year.—Boudoir.

HOUSE-MOTHS.

THERE is as much charming suggestion in any article of feminine attire—a knot of ribbon, a little glove, a frill, a belt-clasp, a snowy edge of petticoat—as in a line of Tennyson's; and combine the suggestions in a toilette, there is a poem; but each year has its individuality. There are fossil years in which few poems are worn or written. There are years of warm vitality, war, and struggle, like the passionate days of a century back, such as the present; and warm vitality, war and struggle are poem-makers and poem-stuff; hence, to-day, our streets and drawing-rooms burn and dazzle with the grace of those similar days that we had sighingly thought locked away in picture frames for ever. Miss Adams, in "Leghorn hat and gown and coat of Chamberi gauze, flounced with crape, and trimmed with point and wreaths of roses," needs no change of toilette to step from the drawing-room of 1786 into that of 1866; while Mollie, with crinkled hair piled high, with bands and curls, with dangliug sequins and cameos, pendant ear-rings, waist cut square on the bosom, train, hoop, festooned skirt, and a jaunty bit of crape, derisively styled a hat, lost somewhere on the top of her head, between curls and coils, is Josephine, is Récamier, a Wotteau shepherdess, a Titian, but never that meagre Mollie, whom we recall, with hair smooth on either cheek, and a poky bonnet that covered her back hair, shaded her face, and tied under her chin.

Indeed, a bonnet is no longer a reliable, steady-going, prosaic thing, but an inspiration; pity that an inspiration cannot be "made over!" A boot is a bit of coquetry; there are permitted to it satin heels and crystal buttons. There are fashions and devices for stockings, of which in the old days there was only required spotlessness. Red hair and the back of the head, with other despised things, have their day. Miss Smith wears diamond dust; Miss Brown prefers gold powder. The entire feminine world flutters and palpitates over daring jackets, ribbons, sashes, beads, and bows, for which 1865 would have never had the pluck. There is a raid through all the centuries for what is pretty and startling. The click of their little boot-heels has more than once resounded in provinces strictly masculine. They have robbed us of hat, necktie, coat-tail, vest, skirt, and boots, and we submit without an attempt at revenge, unless it be an intrepid doctor, here and there, solemnly dissecting a poor blue veil or an innocent green gown, and determining to a grain the arsenic contained therein. Broadway is a picture gallery en promenade. In our drawing-rooms are revived the days of the Revolution and the Consulate. Plain girls have developed prettiness; pretty girls are beautiful; beautiful women are superb; all feminity apotheosized in a continually ascending scale of loveliness.

To every good, however, is a reverse side of evil. With this increase of beauty increases also the curious pest classed by Ruskin as the "house-moth." It is found chiefly in cities, being rarely observed in the country, unless in the months of July and August, and is the most pernicious of its family, devouring clothes, houses, upholstery, gold, and diamonds, with the voracity of a dragon-fly and the omnivorous appetite of a shark. It is not a little curious about its habitation, and exhibits as much delight in any glittering substance as the bower-bird; but is as reckless as an ostrich of its young. It is also as changeable as the chameleon, and as capricious as a butterfly; but, unlike every other insect and animal, possesses a set of entirely useless organs in reasoning powers and affections, which are so manifestly an annoyance to the creature, and incompatible with its habits, that warm discussions have arisen among naturalists, many respectable authorities holding tenaciously to the belief that, just as the Bushman is a man lapsed into bestiality, so the "house-moth" is a woman lapsed wholly to bonnets and back-hair; and not without some show of reason, as so startling is the likeness of the creature to what we call a house-wife, that we have frequently seen a young man in full pursuit of one, evidently deceived by its extraordinary resemblance to a woman. Nothing can exceed the beauty of its appearance in its prime, unless it be its insignificance in the shrivelled and faded decadence to which, sooner or later, it is sure to arrive; and yet, spite of its insignificance, it is the most terrible and relentless enemy of man, devouring not only his means but, like the spider, its mate also: his tastes, comfort, and very individuality, till he is resigned at last to sink into—Mrs. House-moth's husband. Worst of all, though supposed indigenous to Europe, it is found to flourish equally well in our own hemisphere, and though a remedy has been anxiously hunted, the means of preventing its increase have not yet been discovered.

True, that eccentric logician, Fact, suggests that unused feminine energies and powers work off in ribbon and trimming outbreaks, for want of better outlet, and that women seize on fashion-plates with an intensity produced by mental starvation; but Fact, as all the world knows, is a theorist; and we ask ourselves, apprehensively, if there is no remedy—is there not, at least, a method of discerning our destroyers? We know the death's-head moth by the marks on the thorax, and can distinguish the humming-bird moth from its namesake; but by what subtle analysis or master-stroke of genius can we seize on the essential difference between a house-moth and a woman? Louis le Grand was reduced to Louis, a shivering, bald-headed nonenity, in a stroke of the pencil, when Thackeray robbed him of wig and buskins. Who will inaugurate a calico test in America—they have already a club de la Sainte Mousseline in Paris—and show us Mollie in print gown, and with hair brushed behind her ears, confronting Mollie in diamond dust and white velvet? and subtracting Metternieh curls and Lamballe Hats from the average Mollies, what will be the average remainder? It is an anxious question for a bachelor deeply conscious of his ignorance and defenceless condition. Who will answer it?—Nation.

THE RUSSIAN PEASANT MADE A NOBLE.—The saving of the life of the emperor of Russia seems likely to result in the spoiling of a very respectable young peasant, a hatter by trade, who had the honor to jog the would be assassin's arm, and so direct the pistol ball wide of the imperial mark. He is wholly uneducated, and therefore unfit for the cultivated society into which his lot is now cast, through the gratitude of Alexander; and Gen. Todleben, the defender of Sebastopol, has undertaken the task of imparting the needed instruction. The name of this person is the terrible one of Joseph Kommissaroff Kostromski. His patent of nobility has been published, and a correspondent writes of him that "he is absolutely a martyr to public feeling, and has no doubt many a time wished himself back at hat-making." He was made hereditary noble by the Emperor. St. Petersburg, Moscow and Kostroma elected him member of their corporations: two landed proprietors of the latter place gave him immense tracts of land; a banker of Moscow begged him to accept a large sum to enable him to support his new condition in life; a national subscription has purchased for him a magnificent house in Moscow; the municipality of St. Petersburg by decree have conferred upon him the title of the "First Citizen of St. Petersburg," and he has been elected honorary member of all the clubs in Russia. Louis Napoleon has conferred upon him the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the Emperor of Austria has sent him the Commander's Cross of the Franz Joseph Order, and he is hereafter to be known as "Kostromsky of Koztroma." On his first appearance at the theatre he was obliged to appear, accompanied by his wife, on the stage, when he was the recipient of an ovation which is indescribable.

Not content with giving him ovations at theatres, poor Kommissaroff has had to eat and drink with all sorts and conditions of men, from the artisan to the prince. At a dinner given by the nobles at St. Petersburg to the deputies from Moscow and other places who have come with addresses to the emperor, Kommissaroff sat next to Count Orloff Davydoff, who was in the chair. There was the unfortunate Kommissaroff going through his second dinner that day, dressed for the first time in the stuffy uniform of a nobleman, and wiping his honest hot face with the trusty right hand that shoved Karakoff's elbow. His health was drunk amidst cheers that might be compared to the roar of artillery, and he returned thanks in words that did not reach either his neighbors or the reporters, on account of the enthusiastic uproar which his presence created. How Mrs. Kommissaroff passes her time is not so well known, for her husband's popularity is but little reflected on her. She appears, however, by his side in a photograph which meets with an immense sale in the streets of the capital. But, of course, she will come in for some of the good things that are lavished on her husband.

THE FRIGHTFUL WHITE MAN.—There must be something (says Dr. Livingstone) in the appearance of white men frightfully repulsive to the unsophisticated natives of Africa; for, on entering villages previously unvisited by Europeans, if we met a child coming quietly and unsuspectingly towards us, the moment he raised his eyes and saw the men in "bags" he would take to his heels in an agony of terror, such as we might feel if we met a live Egyptian mummy at the door of the British Museum. Alarmed by the child's wild outcries, the mother rushes out of her hut, but darts back again at the first glimpse of the same fearful apparition. The dogs turn tail, and scour off in dismay; hens, abandoning their chickens, fly screaming to the tops of their houses. The so lately peaceful village becomes a scene of confusion and hubub until calmed by the laughing assurance of our men that white people do not eat black folks; a joke having oftentimes greater influence in Africa than solemn assertions. Some of our young swells, on entering an African village, might experience a collapse of self-inflation at the sight of all the pretty girls fleeing from them as from some hideous cannibals, or by witnessing, as we have done, the conversion of themselves into public hobgoblins, the mammas holding naughty children away from them, and saying: "Be good, or I shall call the white man to bite you."

A TRAVELLER wishes to know what sense there is just now in the term "Railroad securities," seeing there is no security any of the railroads.

A MALAY TRADITION.—On the western entrance of the mouth of the Singapore river, near that portion which is now built over Fort Fullerton, stood, as late as 1835, a large stone, with some strange characters carved or impressed on it, the deciphering of which had defied the utmost ingenuity. Sir Stamford Raffles was so much occupied with the desire to learn the meaning of these hieroglyphics, that he caused, it is said, an abundant supply of muriatic acid to be poured over the stone, with the view to clear off any crustaceous matter that might have accumulated on it, and bring out more clearly the characters it bore. Unfortunately the experiment failed, as has every more recent attempt either to decipher the letters, or arrive, through them, at a true knowledge of the date of their inscription; and we are still left to the old legend regarding them. It has been differently told, but the most common account is, that a powerful chief—of what country is not very clear—coming to attack the Malays shortly after they had formed their settlement at Singhapura, landed at this point of the island, and proceeded up the hill to the Malay encampment. He was met, it appears, on his approach, by the greatest Sampson among the Malays, named Badang; and, after some altercation, it was agreed that, instead of engaging in a general combat, a trial of strength between the foreign chief and the Malay Sampson should decide the fate of the invasion. A large piece of rock was lying close at hand, and it was decided that whoever could handle this stone with the greatest ease was to be the victor. The invader tried first, and he succeeded in raising the stone as high as his knees, and then let it fall; on which the Malay, seizing it in one hand, balanced it high in the air, took a steady aim, and shot it right out to the mouth of the river, crushing to pieces the boat from which the invader had landed. Others maintain that instead of the stone, the Malay giant seized the invading chief himself, and hurled him back upon his boat, and that the stone was afterward conveyed there to commemorate the deed. In any case, the invading force, fearing that they would be immolated if they had to combat with a race of men like Badang, beat a precipitate retreat.

MRS. CARLYLE, the wife of the celebrated author, has met her death in London under very peculiar circumstances. She was taking her usual drive in Hyde Park about four o'clock, when her little favorite dog, which was running by the side of the brougham, was run over by the carriage. She was greatly alarmed, though the dog was not seriously hurt. She lifted the dog into the carriage, and the man drove on. Not receiving any call or direction from his mistress, as was usual, he stopped the carriage, and discovered her, as he thought, in a fit or ill, and drove to St. George's Hospital, which was near at hand. When there it was discovered that she must have been dead some little time. Mrs. Carlyle's health had been for several months feeble, but not in a state to excite anxiety or alarm. Mr. Carlyle was in Scotland at the time of his wife's death.

The late Mrs. Carlyle was a woman of much intelligence and culture, and in her earlier days was a writer of much promise, and a contributor to Blackwood's Magazine. She, as well as her husband, corresponded with Gœthe and other foreign authors of renown. In the full collection of Gœthe's poems will be found two or three poetical scraps addressed to "Madame Carlyle, Scotland." One of these was originally written on a visiting card, which Gœthe sent to the wife of his friend and admirer, and the lines, roughly translated, run somewhat in this fashion:

> "Messengers like this we send
> To tell the coming of a friend;
> This poor card can only say
> That the friend is far away."

LIFE'S FANTASIES.—A curious German cartoon represents an "Idyllic landscape," a pretty cottage, with romantic gables, balconies overgrown with luxuriant creepers, and trellised summer houses at the side. But when you look closer, you see that the life of the cottage is anything rather than idyllic; one half of the inmates are turning out the other half, there is a fight with pitchforks, brooms and beer-jugs; hats are flying off, or their owners are bonneted with them; dogs bark and cocks crow; one woman belabors her husband with a water-jug, and another empties another jug from the vine-clad window upon the combatants below.

COTTON spinning was known to the ancients, and more than a thousand years before the Christian era cotton cloth was made in India. Muslins take their name from Mosul, a town in Mesopotamia, and the cloth made by the natives of Dacca is of such fineness that a single pound of cotton is spun by them into a thread 250 miles long. This fineness has been exceeded by British manufacturers, however, who have succeeded in spinning a pound of cotton into a thread nearly 400 miles long.

A GENTLEMAN praising the personal charms of a very plain woman, his friend asked him—"Why don't you lay claim to such an accomplished beauty?" "What right have I to her?" asked the former. "Every right by the law of nations," replied the other, "you being the first discoverer."

NOTICE.

The publication of " The Californian " takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

White & Bauer, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for The Californian in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

letters relating to the Business, Editorial or other Departments of the paper should be addressed to the Publishers of The Californian, No. 532 Merchant street, San Francisco.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch, at reasonable rates.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JUNE 30, 1866.

Full volumes of The Californian, from the commencement, can be obtained at the office, 532 Merchant street. Price, in muslin, $4 per volume; two volumes (one year) bound together, $7. Unbound, per volume, $3.

THE "MONADNOCK."

VERY few of us give to contemporary events the thought and attention they deserve. Kingdoms may be destroyed or created; a race, which has been from time immemorial held in abject bondage, may be emancipated and raised to the rank of freemen; electoral reform may be wrung from the most oligarchical caste in the world; science may discover new planets, lay bare the mysterious principle of light, reveal new truths in geology, and make aerial navigation practical and real; but, except to the few whose occupations are given to explorations in physics, great truths of daily development come as mere matters of news, exciting but common remark and then are almost forgotten.

Of the many who gathered on the wharves within the past few days to gaze at the Monadnock, or, who circumnavigated her in steamboats, what proportion was there who felt or were governed by any other impulse than mere idle curiosity? Indeed, we fancy, that with the mass, it was the publicity given to her voyage by the recent bombardment of Valparaiso rather than anything else which attracted crowds to look at her; and yet part of the motive of the visit was to see an odd sort of thing—swimming its bulk below waves—leaving nothing above water except a pair of strange sort of fins; a new sort of arm of warfare—not a ship—nor a raft; but an indefinable something between torpedo and submarine armor that had played an important part in the late war. How many looked beyond the black deck and turrets of this monster to the triumph of a voyage of more than seventeen thousand miles, successfully accomplishing an experiment which we verily believe will, independent of its effect on the science and art of marine architecture, materially influence and govern cabinets to a policy of peace among maritime countries, at least with a nation of inventors and mechanics of warlike tastes and habits such as the United States is? And from the mere mobile mass of iron of which the Monadnock is constructed, how many of these gazers saw and reflected on the advances made in the science of projectiles as shown by the huge cannon which frown from the turrets of this monitor? advances which have had such weight with councils of State and admiralty boards, as to provoke from them the declaration that the American people are the first and strongest nation of the world in the theory and art of war. The recent bloody contest through which we have passed has taught us this truth, and sad and costly has been the lesson.

As one goes back to the day when the frail fleet of Columbus floated on to the new world, amid the gloom and superstition of that age, and contrasts that expedition with that of the Monadnock; he will be struck with the similarity of many of the features of both, and amazed when he reflects on the changes made during the past four centuries, not only in marine architecture, but in the application of such agents of motion as steam and caloric. As one accompanies the Monadnock in her long wanderings, sees her boldly push out to sea, beyond the headlands, the scenes of her prowess; watches her wrestling with wind and wave, at times lost amid the tempest's foam and spray; daring that cape, around which sweep the Antarctic storms, and where floats the dread iceberg; as one sees these things in his fancy, he will be struck with wonder at the boldness of the experiment of that voyage, and the daring skill and dexterity it developed. All praise, then, to the gallant men who have perlormed this bold undertaking! Yet, while we so picture, it is with regret that, to these triumphs of human ingenuity and skill, we cannot congratulate our iron-clad on the farther one of having saved the capital of a free, but defenceless, nation from the incendiary shell of a brutal foe.

Acknowledgments.—An invitation to attend a dramatic entertainment by the pupils of the University School, on Post street, on Friday evening 29th inst. Also a ticket from the St. Andrews Society for their ball on the 3d prox., at Platt's Hall.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

A. ROMAN & CO., 417 and 419 Montgomery street, have supplied our table with the following works received by last steamer:

Pictorial History of the Civil War in the United States of America. By Benson J. Lossing. Philadelphia: George W. Childs.

The author of the Field-Book of the Revolution needs no introduction to the general reader as a graceful, entertaining, and instructive writer. Yet in the present volume he appears in the much more ambitious character of historian of one of the greatest struggles of ancient or modern days. While it is a matter of grave doubt whether we are yet sufficiently far removed from the event to judge of its general aspect; whether we are yet able to accurately define and settle the relations of the chief actors to the different epochs of this history, Mr. Lossing has endeavored to avoid the retrospective and reflective air of the historian, and places his book before the public, asking for it "no higher consideration than that of a faithful Chronicle having the form of history, and aspiring to perform its highest duty, namely: to inspire mankind with a love of justice, and hatred of its opposite and of everything that impedes the onward and upward march of humanity." To achieve this Mr. Lossing relies on facts—on the rhetoric of events, chronologically and consecutively arranged and proceeding steadily to that culmination with which we are all familiar. When we add that these facts are given greater prominence by pictorial illustration, it will be readily seen that the book moves forward like the unrolling of a vast panorama of the Rebellion, with Mr. Lossing as the clever and entertaining exhibitor and lecturer.

It is a volume that will make itself a necessity in every American household, if it be even to the exclusion of a more careful and elaborate history. It contains the everyday story of the war narrated in that graphic reportorial style which is much more fascinating to the average reader than the classic elegance of the historian, and is perhaps better fitted to this comparatively recent chronicle. The illustrations, over 600 in number, comprise all objects and incidents peculiar to the struggle, and form a running pictorial commentary. Whenever the eye can assist the reader to a completer understanding of the text, we have a drawing. Weapons of war, maps, and plans of battle-grounds, forts, and fleets and arsenals, medals of honor, costumes of soldiers, flags, banners, badges, etc., follow each other in picturesque succession. From these illustrations alone, a child could gather a fair idea of the object of the book and the subject treated, while the details themselves are sufficiently accurate, and their arrangement sufficiently harmonious to engage the attention of the most cultivated reader.

The volume is handsomely gotten up, with fair type and broad pages, and makes a reputable appearance on any library or centre-table. A. Roman & Co., of San Francisco, are the agents, and as it is proposed to sell the work by subscription, the reading public would do well to apply to them early.

The Poetical Works of Thomas Hood. New York: Hurd & Houghton.

In this solid and somewhat too plethoric volume, are crowded all the poems contained in the English (Moxon's) collection of Hood's humorous and sentimental verse, as well as in the four volumes of Messrs. Little & Brown's series of the British Poets. It is called the "People's Edition"—but as all of Hood's poems really belong to this edition, the title is not distinctive. We have here the noble "Plea for the Midsummer Fairies," "Hero and Leander," "Rath," and "Lycus the Centaur"—the more ambitious and glowing epics of those days when our author dreamed of fame, and before the sad, practical experiences of life evolved from his deeper consciousness the "Song of the Shirt" and "The Bridge of Sighs." Here, too, are those mirth-provoking and irresistible ballads—the "Waterloo Ballad," "Ben Battle," "The Duel," "Lieutenant Luff;" here, too, the familiar songs in which the tear and smile oddly mingle—"I Remember, I Remember," "O when I was a Tiny Boy;" and those rarer and more sustained efforts—"Miss Kilmansegg" which has enjoyed the sincerest flattery of having been unconsciously imitated by all succeeding comic poets, the satirical "Tale of a Trumpet," and the capital Spenserian story of "Love and Lunacy." The "nuco good" will learn something by reading the "Ode to Rae Wilson Esq.," and the most rigid Sabbatarian must unbend and relax before the humorous protest against shutting up the Zoological Gardens as shown in "An Open Question," where he is told that "Bruin's no worse than bakin' on a Sunday."

Hood has been recognized as the Laureate of the Lowly, as the Philantrophist and Reformer, purely on the merit of his more serious pieces, yet his most humorous poems, written often with aching heart and brain, and with no greater apparent motive than that of earning his daily bread, are full of a satirical wisdom and moral truth far beyond their superficial show. The book is prefaced by a brief memoir of the man whose ashes lie in the modest sepulchre at Kensal Green, but whose immortal and imperishable remains are embalmed in the leaves before us.

Hand and Glove. By Amelia B. Edwards. New York: Harper & Brothers.

The clever authoress of Miss Carew—that admirable collection of short stories which has not been yet surpassed—does not seem to be as happy in her longer and more ambitious novels. Half a Million of Money, though good, was not worthy of the hand that drew those fascinating sketches which won the heart of the "adorable Miss Carew." Hand and Glove is a "governess" story, with a slight leaning toward Bronteism, and a prominent character whose manners are a pleasing mixture of Rochester and M. Paul Emanuel. A fascinating adventurer, nominally a Protestant Episcopal minister but really an escaped convict, is the hero. One of his hands is branded, but always gloved; hence the typical significance of the title. The story is well written, and some of the descriptions of the scenery and customs of southern France where the plot is laid, are excellently drawn.

Chandos. By the author of Strathmore, etc. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co.

Hidden Depths. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co.

Love's Conflict. By Florence Marryat. Boston: Loring, Publisher.

NOTE FROM "EMSTADT."

San Francisco, June 29, 1866.

EDITOR Californian: Your order for "Sundries" was received, but I am indisposed—as regards writing—and shall therefore ask a postponement. Meanwhile, if the enclosed "Reminiscence" is required to fill some obscure corner, let it fill. I suppose you might call it "One-Half," as it relates to a Fourth long since gone by, and the Fourth which will greet us next Wednesday.

As I write, a "thing" occurs to me which might furnish you the basis of two or three conundrums. You are welcome to its use, editorially. [We beg to decline adapting "Emstadt's" "sudden inspiration" to the purposes of a leader. —Ed. Cal.] You see, I was debating whether to cut this note short with a "Yours Truly," or to imperil my life—pay or no pay—as Miss Rosa Celeste did at the Cliff last Sunday, by taking a little more rope, when, looking from my window, I perceived a street car, an "opposition" omnibus, a carpet wagon, and a pet poodle, coming up street abreast, occupying the entire width of the highway. Public convenience and private economy, thought I, demand that they be consolidated. This can be done easily, thus: Put the poodle in the car, and there you have your car and pet (carpet,) which may be placed in the wagon. As to the omnibus, that is peculiarly a car pet, and can go on top of the other one. (If you lay this to me, please send a ticket-of-leave, as I shall deem it prudent to retire to the country for a few days. Tickets can be procured, "four for a quarter," at "all respectable drug stores.") But I promised you

A REMINISCENCE.

The "Coming Fourth" is the absorbing topic to-day. A stranger to our customs might enquire who is expected to come forth, since so much preparation is being made for a public reception. Certainly, not another Lazarus—he would be rather "slow" for our times. But, if that whilom heavy slamberer have no lineal descendent or namesake to whom a command to come forth may be addressed, there is in every man's breast some sleeping memory that will be awakened and called up by the noises and smells which herald the day's approach. One of my recollections, which is regularly revived by the recurrence of patriotic "leaders," fire-crackers, and the tramping of our bold militia, is of an act of extraordinary generosity whereof I was the recipient. I had nearly completed my first year's apprenticeship at a business which has since then taken turns with me in supporting each other, when the "Glorious Fourth" made its advent according to its usual practice. As I was not in receipt of any other salary than board (save and except lectures, prayers, and grace at meat, the which I was graceless enough to term "bored gratis,") I was in some doubt as to how my Fourth would go off. My employer's liberality was of that quiet cast which seldom pained the eye with its glitter. However, after breakfast, and after all the offerings appropriate to the occasion had been made at the family altar, my fears were dissipated—the only dissipation my tender years would warrant. The booming of cannon, the rattling of cider and cake wagons o'er the stony street, the shouts of playmates on their way to "the Fourth," mingled with the welcome tones of my kind "old boss," as he opened: "Well, Emstadt, you know you have holiday—you need not go to the shop—merely saw up wood enough to last a couple of days, and then you can go and celebrate." I informed him that I had done the "fiddling" the night previous. "Ah! then, I suppose, your are waiting for some spending money?" "Yes, sir, if you please." "Well, well; you have been a good boy, and deserve encouragement. Here's a sixpence. Take it—spend it freely—it's all yours; but, Emstadt, for your own good, let me caution you on one point: Don't overload your stomach with trash!"

Emstadt.

INIGOINGS.

CHAMPLAIN, May 30, 1866.

WHEN I think where I am and remember where I was, I start in surprise and say to myself, Can I indeed be here?

It seems but yesterday that I sat in that dark and dingy office, over whose walls it might "surely" be written that there is a vein for the slivers and a place for dust where they find it; and now, behold, I am five or six thousand miles away. Not being the Persian prince of the Arabian Nights story, who had nothing to do but to seat himself on a piece of carpet and wish himself there when he wanted to be anywhere, it is little wonder that now and then I look around like the puzzled country fellow in the familiar rhyme, asking

"Be I Giles Jones, or be I not?"

For indeed "if I be he I've lost" a newspaper; "if not I've found" a farm.

I like farms. The breath of the cows is so sweet, and milk rattles so merrily in the pails of mornings. "So, so, Boss," I hear the dairy-maid say under my window. The cow never says much in reply, but as I have never yet seen her sow, and put no faith in her reaping, I've an idea she minds the dairy-maid's words less than she does the flies, for the latter she switches away from her ears with her tail.

Her claim to the title of "Boss" she emphatically asserted the other morning, by kicking both dairy-maid and pail over and charging wildly about the lawn, to the confusion of the clothes that lay there bleaching.

I've an idea that the lawn dresses of the feminine element of the household will all be "gored" after the latest pattern. If any of my new shirts come in from the green with either bosoms or tails cut a la vache, I have a presentiment that a considerable quantity of beef will be thrown on the market very suddenly.

The weather is scarcely what I expected to find. "It is delightful," wrote my sister. "We have had warm refreshing rains, and everything is green."

I was green enough to leave New York and venture up here in the country upon that artful recommendation. "Warm rains," indeed! Often as they tell about warm rains, I've never seen one yet, and only remember one as being authentically recorded in history—the rain that fell on Sodom and Gomorrah. It has rained every day since I arrived here, and the drops are as cold as hailstones and as big and heavy as grindstones. To-day's papers never get here till to-morrow, and the only regular amusement is a circus, which comes round every Fourth of July. This year the programme has been slightly varied by a panorama of Paradise Lost.

Eve was represented en grand tenue dress decollotée, a chaine Benoitoni about her waist, a parasol over her head, and immense quantities of back hair. This leads me to imagine that the first Fall was a Waterfall.

Adam was not so well treated. The artist had only given him corduroy breeches and a red flannel shirt—as for coat, he had to be satisfied with a coat of paint. In the second scene he was represented with a wheelbarrow, picking up chips for a living.

The serpent, wound spirally round a pole, bore great resemblance to a hoop-skirt, and I do not know but that the artist had the modern temptation of dress in his mind when he sat at his easel.

On the whole, the impression left upon my mind by that Paradise is one of pleasure that it was Lost, and a sincere hope that it may never again be Found.

Seriously, though, I am having a very good time of it. This is a dear, quiet, pleasant little place, nestled down on the banks of a beautiful river at the foot of smiling green-clad hills—and on one of these hills the Chateau de Inigo stands. There are trout in the streams, partridges in the woods and pretty girls in the village. Having a mother and sisters, brothers, nieces, nephews and cousins without number, I am strong in the circle of my fortifications. Moreover, it is my early home, and all the village seems glad to see me. This, perhaps, is the advantage of having always lived abroad.

How curious it is to return to one's old home and find the old landmarks and old people all unchanged—the young ones so wonderfully changed. Little girls, for instance, that a few years ago I trotted on my knee, are young ladies now, and would scarcely accept that substitute for a horse. The old church looks the same as ever, and I am confident that the hands of the clock which graces its tower have not moved during my absence. The stone schoolhouse is gone, having given place to a structure of red brick, with gothic windows, two doors, and a "primary department." If I remember rightly it was all one in my day, and little Goody Twoshoes spelled out her alphabet at one end of a bench, while her oldest brother solved some elegant problem in vulgar fractions at the other.

But oh, this wretched, wretched weather! A party was planned to visit Chataquay Lake this morning, but with a deluge falling about one's ears, why go seek a lake?

Chataquay Lake is about forty-five miles from this place; it long was celebrated for the fishing and hunting which its waters and banks afforded, and of late, since the completion of the Ogdensburg railroad, near the line of which it is located, it has been a great resort for sportsmen. Years ago we used to start out in parties of four or five, taking a lumber wagon, provisions, and all the materiale for a camp. And then for weeks we remained embowered in the woods, bagging pigeons and partridges, stalking deer, and whipping the still waters with our home-made flies. Now city sportsmen make their haunt there, bringing out with them no end of patent rods and reels and lines and fancy guns, but getting few fish and very little game. Probably the sport is not so good as formerly, but still it is reported as being excellent, and parties of ladies and gentlemen go thither and have fine times. A friend managed to fan me into a fever of excitement yesterday by the story of a ten-pound trout that he took trolling there last summer; and now, when a campaign had been planned, it rains and seems to have set in for a week. Of course this materially interferes with our plans, for it is well known that trout will not rise to a fly in a shower. Probably they are afraid of getting wet.

Nevertheless, unpleasant though the weather be, and monotonous as life in a country village always is, one has at least the satisfaction of knowing that he has done the correct thing in coming up here. For outside relatives, like mothers, sisters, etc., have a certain claim upon one's politeness, and should be visited occasionally, if only for form's sake.

Great excitement has been produced this afternoon by the coming of a troupe of minstrels. They marched into the village as a brass band—

"Sonorous music blowing martial sounds—"

each member wearing a red cap upon his head. As the unusual sounds were heard, windows went up and wondering faces looked out; old and young ran into the street, and speculation was rife among the old ladies as to what the demonstration meant. At first I think the minstrels were mistaken for Fenians—this is near the Canada border, you must know—and it was supposed that an immediate invasion of the Provinces was contemplated.

(Apropos of the Fenians: I saw the great Head Centre in New York, and was introduced to him. He seemed quite delighted on being told that "Wearin' the Green" was the popular air in San Francisco. I much regretted that Setchell was not along with me, to sing "The Eatin' of the Greens" for his edification.)

It suddenly occurs to me that I have told you little or nothing of the trip after leaving Panama. It can all be summed up in a very few words: Delightful weather, splendid steamer, and a nifty old time generally. At Aspinwall we took passage on the New York for New York, and a few of our passengers kept crying "New York" until we reached that city. For a minute description of the balance of the voyage behold, is it not all embodied in a "screed" which "the Governor" thought "too long for the Times," though "very amusing," which I accordingly carried out into Egypt and sold to the Bedouins. It should be published by this time, and if it be and should turn up among any of your exchanges, for want of less interesting matter you can transfer it to your columns. [Extracts from the article to which "Inigo" here refers will be found on our 12th page.]

I never write the name New York without regret—that is, when away from it. And yet, when there, it scarcely fills my idea of happiness. There is so much of it! The city has grown in my absence. On first landing I felt strange and lonely, and actually looked San Francisco-wards with regret. The streets seemed full of strangers. I wondered what had become of all the friends I left behind me. Turn which way I would in my first walk of a dozen blocks, not a familiar face greeted me. And this is the feeling of all Californians on first landing. But at the "Metropolitan" we all found chums. First in the proprietors—whose name should be Legion instead of Leland, for they man the hotel, fore and aft, from their own family. Besides the hotel seems to be the headquarters of all Californians. Let me try and tell you whom I met there the morning and evening of my arrival: A. A. Sclover, James Street, John Perry Jr., Harry Platt, Sherry Corbyn, Billy Birch, Charley Backus, Dave Wambold, Mulf Nickerson, John Leach, Tom Fiske, Abe Holstead, Jo Anderson, Michel Angelo—not Michel, perhaps, but an Angelo at any rate who is publishing pen pictures of Idaho—Elisha Teakle, George Alexander, Bob Morrow, Jim Eoff, Johnny Wilson—but I haven't time to call over all the roll. Besides a goodly lot of our passengers were housed there. My old friend G. K. Fitch and family, L. R. Townsend and wife, Mr. Swift and family, Emily Thorne, Mrs. and Miss Ferris, Jim Moore, Mr. Shiels, Mr. Moore, Mr. Wheeler, Col. Benjamin, Paymaster Boggs—and many others too numerous to mention. There was quite a family of us, though I regret to say that by this time the family is about as widely scattered as it could have been had a package of nitro-glycerine been tamped and fired in the centre of the circle.

We found the weather quite cold and unpleasant, but after a day or two it warmed up, the sun shone, and those who had credit with tailors were enabled to display their good clothes on the street. Pretty prices they charge for clothes now-a-days, too! One hundred dollars for a not very swell suit, and a hundred dollars a dozen for shirts; twelve dollars for Oxford-tie shoes: twenty dollars for boots. Blessed indeed are the clothes makers in these times. How I congratulated myself on the far-sighted policy which has always prompted me to make punctual payments to tailors et id genus omne. For verily Porter persisted in dressing me like a prince and as yet has not sent in any bill: Who disputes the eternal truth that Honesty is the best policy? Surely no one will who has tried both.

I witnessed the burning of the Academy of Music in New York. The opera was that incomparably slow one of Halevy's—La Juive—and I had sat it through faithfully. The Jewess fell into the cauldron and the curtain upon the stage simultaneously at about twenty-five minutes to twelve. Turnbull and I had just got comfortably seated at the Metropolitan, cigars lighted and our feet considerably above our heads—an American idea of bliss which I was endeavoring to impress upon that obdurate Englishman—when the alarm struck. Seeing the glare of the flames on the stores opposite we turned out, and ran with the machines. Judge of our surprise on finding that the Academy to whose brilliancy we had so lately contributed the light of our presence was on fire. All efforts to save it were vain—our firemen could find excellent situations in New York I think—and slowly but surely it burned away. It was a good fire while it lasted, and it lasted until morning was bright. And both my companion and myself got wet through by the bursting of a hose—he enjoying the additional fortune of being kicked in the stomach by an angry and rather drunken fireman—catching severe colds which, like the scent of the roses to the shattered vase, "cling to us still."

I had a few other things to write—many other, in fact—intending to tell you of the excitement which a monkey and parroquet that I brought from the Isthmus have made in the village. As yet I am unable to decide whether the many calls with which the Chatean de Inigo is honored are meant for me or for the monkey. With my native modesty, I am content to divide the odd trick, and call the honors easy. The odd trick by right should belong to him, for he certainly has more odd tricks than any other animal that ever before fell under my observation. My little niece does not like the new pet at all. She had a world of pets before—white rabbits with pink eyes, kittens, canary birds, and all that and those. Mr. monkey has pulled out what little stumps of tails the rabbits had, and has snatched the kitten bald-headed, while the parroquet has made it very warm for the canary birds. Fanny says she hopes Uncle Charlie won't ever come home again bringing such pets. If the monkey would but die from a fit of indigestion, consequent upon eating the parrot, I think that Fanny's cup of happiness would be complete.

If I had time, I'd tell you how Bret and Mark Twain are appreciated in New York, and what a warm welcome and open field await those two worthies whenever they choose to effect a change of base and transfer their lines of communication to this coast. I could tell you what THE CALIFORNIAN is thought of in the metropolis, how several authorities declare both orally and in print that it is the best literary journal on the continent, and advise its transfer to New York. But modesty checks me, as usual. However, you will have already seen what the Boudoir says of Mr. Iris Miller's articles upon flowers and gardening. And now, dear CALIFORNIAN au revoir. When I next write you, it will be from Gotham.

INIGO.

FREEDOM OF THE CITY.—We are pleased to know that the Board of Supervisors, in the exercise of their customary courtesy, have tendered to the latest distinguished visitors to California—the officers of the war vessels, Vanderbilt and Monadnock—the "Freedom of the City." From eminent strangers to whom this somewhat vague compliment has been offered heretofore, we are informed that it entitles the persons so favored to lodge at the best hotels, sup at the best restaurants, drive the best horses, and enjoy oneself absolutely according to the best opportunities presented in the vicinity, providing always that the party so enjoying duly meet his obligations and keep the peace. To inquisitive persons who wish to know in what consists the difference between this high compliment as extended by cities of Europe to distinguished guests and as proffered by this city, we have to say, that in the old cities of the old world, the "Freedom of the City" is extended generally in a gold snuff-box, but in San Francisco it is extended in a horn.

THE "Fourth" is to be thoroughly celebrated in this city. All the civic and military associations have tendered a prompt acceptance of the invitation to join in the celebration. The route of the procession, which will be much shorter than usual, will terminate at the Metropolitan Theatre, on Montgomery street, where following exercises will be held:

1. Prayer—By Rev. H. Goodwin.
2. Reading the Declaration of Independence—By Nathan Porter, Esq.
3. Oration—By A. L. Stone, D. D.
4. Poem—By Mr. W. A. Kendall.

In the evening, the grand pyrotechnic exhibition, got up by Church & Clark, will take place at the junction of Market, Seventh and McAllister streets.

UNITED STATES STAMP DUTIES.

AS AMENDED MARCH 3, 1865.

CAREFULLY REVISED AND CORRECTED FOR THE CALIFORNIAN.

PENALTIES.

Penalty for making, signing, or issuing any instrument, document, or paper of any kind whatsoever, without the same being duly stamped, for denoting the duty hereby imposed thereon, $50; and the instrument shall be deemed invalid and of no effect; or for counterfeiting stamps or dies, $1,000, and imprisonment to hard labor not exceeding five years. For making, signing, issuing, accepting, or paying any bill of exchange, draft, order, or note without stamp, $200. For selling proprietary cosmetics, matches, photographs, etc., without proper stamps, $10. For removing stamps on these articles, $50.

STAMP DUTIES.

Agreement Contract or Appraisement, not otherwise specified, each sheet or piece of paper..$0 05
Assignment of Mortgage, Lease, or Policy of Insurance, same as original instrument. Assignment of Patent Right..... 05
Bank Checks, Drafts or orders, exceeding $10, at sight or on demand..... 02
Bills of Exchange, (inland,) or draft otherwise than at sight or on demand, or promissory note except bank notes for circulation,) or any memorandum, check or receipt, or any evidence of an amount of money payable on demand or at a designated time, for a sum not exceeding $100..... 05
Every additional $100, or fractional part... 05
Bill of Exchange, (foreign,) or letter of credit, drawn in, but payable out of the U. S., if drawn singly, the same rates as inland bills of exchange, or promissory notes.
If drawn in sets of three or more, for each bill of the set, where the sum shall not exceed $100 or its equivalent in any foreign currency in which such bill may be expressed, according to the standard value fixed by U. S. 02
Every additional $100, or fractional part... 02
Bill of Lading, or receipt for any merchandise or effects, to be exported to a foreign port or place..... 10
Bill of Sale, conveying any ship or vessel, or any part thereof, where the consideration does not exceed $500..... 50
For every additional $500, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Bill of Sale of personal property other than ships or vessels..... 05
Bond, indemnifying any person for the payment of money, where the amount recoverable is $1,000 or less..... 50
For every additional $1,000, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Bond for the due performance of the duties of any office..... 1 00
Bond of any other description, except such as may be required in legal proceedings, or used in connection with mortgage deeds, and not otherwise charged in this schedule..... 25
Charter-Party, ship, vessel or steamer, not over 150 tons, $1; 150 to 300 tons, $3; 300 to 600 tons, $5; over 600 tons.....10 00
Certificate of Profits, or any memorandum showing an interest in property, or accumulations of any incorporated company, for a sum not less than $10 nor exceeding $50..... 10
Exceeding $50 and not $1,000..... 25
For every additional $1,000 or fract'al part 25
Certificate of Damage, and all other certificates or documents issued by Port Wardens or Marine Surveyors, or other persons acting as such 25
Certificate of Deposit, not exceeding the sum of $100, 2 cents; exceeding $100..... 05
Certificate of stock in any incorporated comp'y, 25
Certificates, other than specified..... 05
Contract, broker's note or memorandum of sale of goods, stocks, bonds, exchange notes of hand, real estate, or other description of property, issued by any person acting as a broker, for each note or memorandum of sale..... 10
Deed or Conveyance of Real Estate, value not over $500, 50c.; every additional $500, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Entry of Goods at any custom-house, value not over $100, 25c.; over $100 and not over $500, 50c.; over $500.....1 00
For the withdrawal of goods from bonded warehouse..... 50
Ganger's Returns, quarterly, for quantity not over 500 galls. gross, 10c.; over 500 galls. gr. 25
Insurance (Marine, Inland and Fire) policy or renewal, premium not over $10, 10c.; $10 to $50, 25c.; over $50, 50c.; Life policy, under $1,000, 25c.; $1,000 to $5,000, 50c; over $5,000.1 00
Lease of lands or tenements, rent not over $300 per annum, 50c.; each add'l $200 or fraction. 50
Manifest, cargo to foreign port, registered tonnage not over 300 tons, $1; over 300 and not over 600, $3; over 600 tons.....5 00
Measurer's Returns, for quantity not over 1,000 bushels, 10c.; over 1,000 bushels..... 25
Mortgage, Trust deed, or personal bond for payment of money, $100 to $500, 50c.; each additional $500..... 50
Each assignment of mortgage, lease or policy of insurance, or renewal of the same, is subject to same duties as the original.
Medicines or Preparations, Perfumery and Cosmetics—Every package, box, bottle, etc., retailing for 25c. or less..... 01
Each additional 25c. or fractional part thereof, up to $1, 1c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof, over $1..... 02
Playing Cards—Each pack, price not over 18c., 2c.; from 18 to 25c., 4c.; 25 to 50c., 10c.; 50c. to $1, 15c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof..... 05
Photographs, Ambrotypes, Daguerreotypes or Sun Pictures, upon each, retailing for 25c. or less, 2c.; over 25 and not over 50c., 5c.; over 50c. and not over $1, 3c.; each additional $1 or fractional part thereof..... 05
Passage Ticket to foreign port, cost not over $35, 50c.; over $35 and not over $50, $1; every additional $50 or fractional part thereof.....1 00
Power of Attorney to sell or transfer stock, scrip, bonds, or collect dividends or int. thereon 25
To vote for officers of incorporated comp'y or society not religious, charitable or literary, or public cemeteries..... 10
To receive or collect rents..... 25
To sell, convey, rent or lease real estate.....1 00
For any other purpose..... 50
Probate of Will, or letters of admiuistration, estate not over $2,000, $1; each additional $1,000 or fractional part thereof..... 50
Protest of note, bill, acceptance, check or draft, 25
Promissory Note—See Bill of Exchange, inland.
Receipt for payment of money or debt over $20, not being for satisfaction of mortgage, judgment or decree of Court, and receipt for the delivery of property..... 02
Warehouse, for property stored, not over $500 in value, 10c.; $500 to $1,000, 20c.; every additional $1,000..... 10
For any goods held in storage, and not otherwise provided for..... 25
Weigher's Returns, up to 5,000 lbs., 10c.; over 5,000 lbs..... 25
Writs, or original process, for commencing suit in Court of record, and in Court not of record, when amount claimed is $100 or over, except before Justices of the Peace, or in court of no greater jurisdiction as to damages, or in suit commenced by the United States or any State..... 50
Upon every confession of judgment, or cognovit, for $100 or over, except where tax for a writ has been paid..... 50
Writs or process on appeal from Justice's courts and other courts of inferior jurisdiction to courts of record..... 50
Warrant of distress—rent claimed under $100, 25c.; over $100..... 50

BRITISH PERIODICALS.

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW (Conservative.)
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW (Whig.)
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW (Radical.)
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW (Free Church.)
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE (Tory.)

The interest of these Periodicals to American readers is rather increased than diminished by the articles they contain on our late Civil War, and though sometimes tinged with prejudice, they may still, considering their great ability, and the different stand-points from which they are written, be read and studied with advantage by the people of this country, of every creed and party.

TERMS FOR 1866.

For any one of the Reviews, per annum.....$4
For any two of the Reviews, per annum..... 7
For any three of the Reviews, per annum.....10
For all four of the Reviews, per annum.....12
For Blackwood's Magazine, per annum..... 4
For Blackwood and one Review, per annum.... 7
Blackwood and any two of the Reviews, per an..10
Blackwood and three of the Reviews, per annum.13
Blackwood and the four Reviews, per annum....15

CLUBS.

A discount of twenty per cent. will be allowed to clubs of four or more persons. Thus, four copies of Blackwood, or of one Review, will be sent to one address for $12 80. Four copies of the four Reviews and Blackwood, for $48, and so on.

POSTAGE.

When sent by mail, the Postage to any part of the Union will be but Twenty-four Cents a year for Blackwood, and but Eight Cents a year for each of the Reviews

REDUCED PRICES FOR PREVIOUS YEARS.

Subscribers may obtain the Repriuts immediately preceding 1866, as follows, viz:

Blackwood from September, 1864, to December, 1865, inclusive, at the rate of $2 50 a year.

The North British from January, 1865, to December, 1865, inclusive; the Edinburgh and the Westminster from April, 1864, to December, 1865, inclusive, and the London Quarterly for the year 1865, at the rate of $1 50 a year for each or any Review.

A few copies yet remain of all the Four Reviews for 1863 at $4 a set, or $1 50 for any one.

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., Publishers,
38 Walker street, New York.

GREAT ATTRACTION!

THE FASHIONS
ARE ALL THE GO!

Lamott, - - - Hatter,

IS NOW THE MAN! HE IS READY WITH HIS BROADWAY STYLES FOR THE

Spring of 1866.

JUST SEE THE DIFFERENCE between his styles and the others in this city. There is style about his Hats that does not appear in others.

FACTS ARE STUBBORN THINGS!

LAMOTT, 227 Russ Block, is bound to be the LEADER of Fashions.

LAMOTT'S SPRING STYLES

show taste. It is a good thing that you have a man among you who is willing to take a stand outside of others, to introduce a style that is new, and not follow in the wake of others that are about one year behind the times.

GO TO HIS STORE FOR A HAT,

No. 220.....Montgomery street,

and get something that is new. jc22-3m

PISCO!

G. & F. MARTELL'S COGNAC;
JAMES HENNESSY'S Cognac;
STEAMBOAT GIN;
OLD TOM GIN;
IRISH WHISKY,
from Bond direct.

For sale by V. SQARZA,
my28 Lied street, San Francisco.

OCCIDENTAL HOMESTEAD Association,

OFFICE, - - - 305 MONTGOMERY STREET.

CAPITAL STOCK, $33,660.

102 SHARES.....$330 EACH.

THIS ASSOCIATION was formed to enable its members to obtain desirable homestead lots in this city at a cheap and easy rate, paying for the same by regular monthly instalments.

For this purpose they have purchased Blocks 499, 500, and 501, in the Western Addition to this city, bounded by Devisadero, Pine, Broderick and Clay streets.

Subscribers will pay an initiation fee of $5 on each share taken, to form a fund for defraying current expenses, and $11 per month for thirty months, commencing in April, 1866.

The property is within three blocks of the

TURK STREET RAILROAD,

IS NEARLY ALL ON THE GRADE, and is most desirably located for Homestead purposes.

It is directly east from the lands of the California Association.

The property has been purchased on very reasonable terms, and offers a rare opportunity for investment.

A number of fine houses are in process of erection, and streets are being graded near this property, which will greatly increase its value.

When twelve monthly payments have been made, the property will be divided among the members in the usual manner, and each shareholder will receive a contract for a deed to the lot or lots to which he may be entitled, and have the privilege of taking immediate possession of the same.

The lots average 27 feet in front by 120 feet in depth The whole amount due upon any lot may be paid at any time, and discount at the rate of one and one-half per cent. per month will be deducted therefrom.

Persons wishing to visit the lands of this Association will take the Turk street cars to Devisadero street, and thence go northerly along Devisadero to Pine street.

Twenty thousand dollars of the capital stock is taken, and the books are open for subscription to the balance at the office of the Secretary, where the Official Map of the Association can be seen, and full particulars obtained.

The Title to this Property is Perfect.

J. S. LUTY, Secretary,
Office, 305 Montgomery street, corner of Pine,
my19-3m Rooms 2 and 6.

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME!

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,

New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17

Have received a Large Stock of

GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING

—AND—

FURNISHING GOODS,

Which they are selling

AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.
ja1 624 Clay street, San Francisco.

PACIFIC OCEAN HOUSE,

SANTA CRUZ, CAL.

THIS NEW AND COMMODIOUS HOTEL, built and furnished in accordance with the most modern and improved plans, and with a view to the comfort and convenience of its patrons, is now open for the reception of guests.

To those who have visited Santa Cruz, it is unnecessary to speak of its beauties and its natural advantages over all other places of Summer Resort.

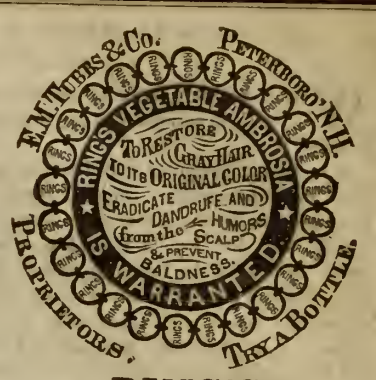
To those who have not, the Proprietor can only say COME AND JUDGE FOR YOURSELVES—giving all who may come the assurance that his earnest endeavors shall be to make the Hotel, in all its appointments, equal to the surroundings of this delightful Sea side Resort.

GEO. T. BROMLEY,
Santa Cruz, April 4, 1866. Proprietor.



MARKET STREET RAILROAD

CHANGE OF TIME TABLE.

ON AND AFTER AUGUST 1, 1865, Trains will start from the City and the Mission every hour instead of every forty minutes, as heretofore.

Trains from the City will start at the odd hour, commencing at 6:30 A. M. and every hour thereafter until 11.30 P. M.

mh25 F. McCOPPIN, Superintendent.

RING'S VEGETABLE AMBROSIA

IS THE MIRACLE OF THE AGE!

Gray-headed People have their locks restored by it to the dark, lustrous, silken tresses of youth, and are happy!

Young People, with light, faded or red Hair, have these unfashionable colors changed to a beautiful auburn, and rejoice!

People whose heads are covered with Dandruff and Humors, use it, and have clean coats and clear and healthy scalps!

Bald-Headed Veterans have their remaining locks tightened, and the bare spots covered with a luxuriant growth of Hair, and dance for joy!

Young Gentlemen use it because it is richly perfumed!

Young Ladies use it because it keeps their Hair in place!

Everybody must and will use it, because it is the cleanest and best article in the market!

For Sale by Druggists generally.

For sale, wholesale and retail, by

JOHN F. SNOW,
Sole Agent for the Pacific Coast, 24 Post street,
je23 San Francisco.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S Through Line to New York.

CARRYING THE U. S. MAIL!

Leave Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.

On the 16th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.

On the 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.

When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 19th connects with French Transatlantic company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamer for Southampton, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America.

Departure of 30th connects with English steamer for Tumaco, the port of the new mines.

STEAMERS FOR JUNE:

The following steamships will be despatched from San Francisco on the date given:

JUNE 30th, - - - - - - GOLDEN CITY,
Captain Watkins.
(Connecting with ARIZONA, Captain Maury.)

An experienced Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

Cabin Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Messrs. Wells, Fargo & Co.

The steamer will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

THE BANK OF CALIFORNIA,

SAN FRANCISCO, MAY 9, 1866.

NOTICE.

At a meeting of the Stockholders of this Bank, held on the 5th inst., it was resolved to increase the Capital Stock of the corporation to $5,000,000, gold, to take effect on

THE FIRST DAY OF JULY NEXT,

and the President and Cashier were authorized to receive subscriptions for $2,000,000 of said capital stock. Parties desirous of subscribing will make application at the Bank, either personally or by letter, when further details will be given. D. O. MILLS, President.
my20-1m W. C. RALSTON, Cashier.

BEER AND WINE SALOON.

Faust Cellar.

Southeast corner of Clay and Montgomery streets.

A. L. THIELE.....Proprietor

WESTPHALIA HAMS, RUSSIAN CAVIAR, SARDINES, Anchovies, Swiss and Limburg Cheese, etc.; the finest Brands of Liquors, Wines, Cigars, and Seltzer Water, Wholesale and Retail.

☞ Fishing and Hunting Parties fitted out at the shortest notice. 1y24

OCCIDENTAL INSURANCE COMPANY,

S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

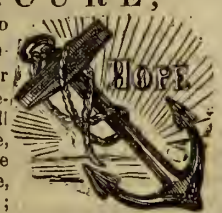
THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

CHRISTOPHER CHRISTIANSEN, President.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary. mh25-tf

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late ex. INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.



The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York. my25

AYER'S AGUE CURE,

FOR THE SPEEDY AND Certain Cure of Intermittent Fever or Chills and Fever, Remittent Fever, Chill Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical Headache or Bilious Headache, and Bilious Fevers; indeed, for the whole class of diseases originating in biliary derangement, caused by the malaria of miasmatic countries.

This remedy has rarely failed to cure the severest cases of Chills and Fever, and it has this great advantage over other Ague medicines, that it subdues the complaint without injury to the patient. It contains no quinine or other deleterious substance, nor does it produce quinism or any injurious effect whatever. Shaking brothers of the army and the West, try it and you will endorse these assertions.

Prepared by J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by

CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco,
my26-2m and all Dealers.

OPPOSITION STEAMER-DAY,

SATURDAY, JULY 14, 1866.

GREAT REDUCTION IN RATES,
VIA NICARAGUA!

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN TRANSIT COMPANY will despatch the favorite Steamship

AMERICA,

ON SATURDAY, - - - JULY 14TH,

From Mission street Wharf, at 10 o'clock, A. M., precisely

Connecting at GREYTOWN with the splendid Steamship

SANTIAGO,

2,500 TONS, FOR NEW YORK.

☞ For Passage and Freight, and Insurance on Treasure, at greatly REDUCED RATES, apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,
Up stairs, San Francisco.

THE ONLY LIVING ASTROLOGER,

PROF. COHEN,

530 California street, San Francisco,

THROUGH HIS NATURAL GIFT, can give correct information on the Past, Present and Future, on any subject that may be required so as to avoid trouble. As evidence of his reputation, he has received over 18,000 consultations during his residence of six years in San Francisco! Consultation fee, $2. By letter, $3. Letter box, 104. It is not necessary to give the age. Office, 530 California street. Hours from 8 A. M. to 11 P. M. mar15 3m

COME AND SEE ME!

DR. JOHN HEALD, DENTIST,

HAS REMOVED TO THE

CORNER KEARNY AND CALIFORNIA STS,

Where he will be pleased to see all old friends, and plenty of new ones. Every variety of Dental Operations performed in the best manner, and at prices that shall suit all persons. ☞ ENTRANCE ON CALIFORNIA SREET. ap28 3m

TO FARMERS, MINERS, LABORERS

And all those wishing to secure themselves a portion of

THE MOST VALUABLE AGRICULTURAL AND MINERAL LANDS OF MEXICO,

With an equal interest in the Profits of the Plantations of

THE MEXICAN SEA ISLAND COTTON COMPANY.

HOMES FOR THE POOR AND COMPETENCY FOR ALL.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The Mexican Sea Island Cotton Company, having reserved from their final Subscription List a Limited Number of Unassessable Shares, (the remaining shares of the Company having been taken up by the stockholders,) hereby offer the same for sale at the original subscription price of Sixteen Dollars each, payable in cash. Every holder of a share will be entitled to a portion of the Company's lands, having the privilege to settle thereon and participate in all the advantages and profits of the enterprise, and special privileges granted to this Company by an Imperial Decree of Maximilian, dated 9th January, 1866, without being subjected to the conditions of regular Government emigrants, this Company settling upon their own lands, secured by private purchase, and held under indisputable Spanish titles.

Shareholders becoming actual settlers will also have the privilege of any employment upon the Company's plantation. Portions of land will be allotted to settlers, to be held by them until a final division makes it their property.

For the purpose of increasing the value of the Company's land, and to create all the comforts of a home and society, it is the intention of the company to form a regular settlement and to lay out a town adjoining their present plantation into building lots, which will likewise be fairly divided between the 8,000 shares which comprise the total number of the company.

A large number of shareholders will settle upon the company's lands after the rainy season in October next. Many of them may then be employed by the company, or by others able to plant for themselves, or in developing the mineral resources of the adjoining mountains, etc., etc.

Men of all trades and professions, desiring to emigrate to Mexico, will have great advantages as shareholders of this company. They will find the lands already purchased for them at a rate equivalent to a free gift, to be held by each shareholder as his property, protected by the best Spanish titles, and the good will of all political parties now contending for the reins of government; the climate the most salubrious, and the land rich and fertile beyond description; every kind of game abounding; the rivers full of fish and with extensive beds of large oysters; altogether, a country where it is easy to procure a livelihood and the comforts of a home with less labor and less capital than in any other part of the world.

The extensive placer diggings, veins of silver, and solid quartz ledges, which are to be found in the immediate vicinity, and acknowledged to be rich and very extensive, can, by the presence of a number of settlers, be profitably developed. Many of these mines are to be found within the limits of the company's grant. The Sierra Madre or Mother Mountain of Mexico, situated only within about twenty miles from the coast, can be reached and developed with much greater facility than the more remote mines in the interior, and will therefore make the company's lands the most desirable to locate upon.

For Maps and Survey, and further information, apply at the office of the MEXICAN SEA ISLAND COTTON CO., Betge's Book Store, Russ House, Montgomery street, between the hours of 11 and 1 o'clock.

☞ All the assessable stock having been taken up by mutual subscription of stockholders, the company will have no more shares to offer after the limited number of unassessable shares have been placed, and shall prefer to sell these to actual settlers—a single share of which will be sufficient to entitle them to a large portion of the lands.

WE, THE UNDERSIGNED shareholders in the Mexican Sea Island Cotton Company, having investigated and satisfied ourselves of the importance of the enterprise, recommend the same to the public. We are convinced that under the management of the present officers of the company, with their efforts to induce industrious parties to locate upon the land, that the enterprise must become very profitable to all parties interested, and most beneficial to actual settlers.

S. R. Kettlewell, Blacksmith, 264 First street.
W. C. Mead & Son, 224 Sansome street.
M. O'Neil, Proprietor New Branch Hotel, 12 Sutter street.
Winall & Clapp, 505 Market street.
R. A. S. Repiton, M. D., 816 Montgomery street.
Wm. Rudolph, Gunsmith, 216 Pacific street.
G. Burkhardt, Jeweller, No. 209 Pacific street.
E. Keil, East India Tea Co., 631 Washington-st.
P. D. O'Regan, People's Bakery, corner Fourth and Jessie streets.
Wm. Meyer, Provision Dealer, 258 Third street.
John Duff, Painter and Paper Hanger, 642 Clay street.
A. E. Mylott, Importer and Dealer in Cigars and Tobacco, 305 Battery street.
M. M. Baldwin, Jeweller, 433 Montgomery-st.
S. Baysen, Hatter, No. 346 Kearny street.
Mathew McCloskey, 644 Howard street.

San Francisco, March 20th, 1866. mar24

MR. AND MRS. COGILL AND SONS,

Teachers of Dancing,

CONGRESS HALL,

On Bush-st., adjoining Russ House.

SCHOOL—MONDAYS AND WEDNESDAYS. Ladies at 2 P. M. Gentlemen and Ladies at 7 1-2 P. M. Soirees every Friday Evening. Hall to rent. my5 3m

AMERICAN HOTEL,
Main street. - - Petaluma.
mar24 6m EMERSON & LAMBERSON, Proprietors.

SPRING AND SUMMER STYLE

SILK  HAT,

1866,

INTRODUCED - - - - - - - MARCH 3

BY

McGANN & CO.,
FASHIONABLE HATTERS,
No. 654 Washington street,
Two doors below Kearny.

SPRING AND SUMMER STYLES.—Silk, Felt, Beaver, and other HATS for sale at the lowest prices.

CAPS of every description, suitable for all ages, made to order.

McGANN & CO., being experienced and skilled in all the branches of the manufacture of Hats, feel confident of giving entire satisfaction to their patrons. Every description of Hats and Caps made to order.

Remember, McGANN & CO., Practical Hatters, 654 Washington street, two doors below the Plaza.

☞ New Goods by every steamer. mar10

THE NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE INSURANCE CO

OF LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

ESTABLISHED, 1809.

Capital, - - - - - -	$10,000,000
Accumulated Funds, March 6, 1865, - -	11,522,500
Annual Income, - - - - -	2,827,290
Deposit in California under State law, -	$75,000

GENERAL AGENCY FOR THE PACIFIC STATES AND TERRITORIES,

Cor. Sansome and California streets, San Francisco

Insurances effected at the lowest rates on buildings of both Brick and Wood, throughout the State, whether occupied as Stores, Dwellings, or Warehouses, together with their contents.

Also, VESSELS in port, with or without their Cargoes.

Also, QUARTZ MILLS and MACHINERY.

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN immediately on adjustment.

WM. H. TILLINGHAST, Agent.
my19

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS

CREATE A HEALTHY APPETITE!

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa and Constipation.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Invigorate the System and enliven the mind.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Overcoms the effects of Drunkenness and Late Hours.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure all Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Are Palatable to the Taste.

They are the

BEST BITTERS IN THE MARKET,

And when once used will always be called for again.

They are made in the most careful manner

From Pure Old Wheat Whisky, Medicated from Roots and Herbs

Especially adapted for the cure of all Stomachic Diseases and Liver Complaints.

Try Them and You will be Satisfied.

For sale everywhere by Druggists and Liquor Dealers or by

N. B. JACOBS & CO.,
423 Front street,
my11-6m San Francisco

CALIFORNIA Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS. CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA.....CAPT. W. BROMLEY.
" JULIA.....CAPT. E. CONCKLIN.

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.

Steamships PACIFIC, ORIZABA, CALIFORNIA, ACTIVE, and SENATOR, leave as advertised, for Portland, Oregon, New Westminster, British Columbia, Victoria, (V. I.,) Santa Barbara, San Pedro, and San Diego.

Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.

mar23 B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

FURNITURE AND BEDDING!

LARGEST STOCK!

LATEST STYLES!

The Best Workmanship,

AND

LOWEST PRICES!

AT

Goodwin & Co.'s

FURNITURE WARE-ROOMS,

Nos. 508, 510, 518 and 528 Washington-st.

ja16 SAN FRANCISCO.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,
IMPORTERS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS
IN FINE CLOTHING,
AND
Gent's Furnishing Goods,
TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,
Nos. 200 and 202 Montgomery street,
Corner of Bush, - San Francisco.

JOS. WINTERBURN & CO.

J. WINTERBURN, V. A. TORRAS, W. HOFFSCHNEIDER.
(Successors to W. P. Harrison.)

Printers and Electrotypers,

413 TO 417 CLAY ST., (Below Sansome.)
SAN FRANCISCO.

ALL KINDS OF JOB PRINTING
Neatly and Promptly Executed.

ELECTROTYPING
Done at the shortest notice.

Stamps of all kinds made to order.

Printing in Spanish, French, German and Italian Languages, executed with correctness.

A "Mammoth" and two No. 3 Hand Presses FOR SALE very cheap. my3-3m

SMOKE THE PATENT RUSSIAN CIGARETTES,

MANUFACTURED BY

GIBB & STAHL,
S.W. COR. KEARNY AND SACRAMENTO STREETS,
SAN FRANCISCO.

☞ For sale at all Cigar Stores. ap28 3m

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,

No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,
SAN FRANCISCO.

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Metal Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship-Work of all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.

All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.

Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.

JOHN P. GALLAGHER,
JOSEPH H. WEED.
je10 3m

MONEY TO LOAN!

MONEY TO LOAN

On City Real Estate, Dwellings, Factories, Shipping and Merchandise, for such time as may be agreed for. Deposits received in small or large sums, at interest, by the CALIFORNIA BUILDING, LOAN AND SAVINGS BANK,
53 California street, (one door from Sansome street.)
my THOMAS MOONEY, President

FROM SAN FRANCISCO TO NEW YORK.

["Inigo," in his letters to The Californian, from Acapulco and Panama, has given our readers a racy—and no donbt graphic—account of a portion of his journey homeward. The following extracts from a contribution to the New York Leader will enable the reader to follow "Inigo" to the metropolis. Elsewhere we publish a letter written from the "home of his boyhood," Champlain, N. Y.]

PERHAPS some one would like to know something abont the railroad across the Isthmns. If so, they mnst make the trip, for it is quite enongh to ride over it without writing about it. I suppose, in any event, the company don't much care what is said abont their road, there being no rival ronte. The seenery I cannot deseribe, as a youug lady was resting her lovely head npon my shoulder in innocent slumber all the way over, and I could not turn my head without disturbing her. Contrary to the general idea, we were not distnrbed by parrots flying in at the windows, nor by monkeys climbing over the roofs of the cars The only thiug in the menagerie line visible was seen at the depot at Panama. There birds were hawked about and monkeys went begging. I purchased a couple of parroquets in an improvised bamboo-cage, for four dollars, and very soon afterwards had the satisfaction of seeiug four, in a magnificent tin cage, sold by the same man to a gentleman in my immediate vicinity for one dollar and a half. However, I am firmly persnaded that mine are the best birds—else why was the greater price asked for them?

* * * * * * *

At Aspinwall we fonnd the steamer New York awaiting us. Bless her dear heart—heart of oak—light as a feather, bnoyant as a dnck, comfortable as a cottage on the Hudson, and steady as a cathedral—I'm in love with her every timber. Little did I think, though, on my first introduction, that ever I wonld be thus writing in her praise. She was not qnite ready on our arrival at Aspinwall, and we had to await for an hour or two the firing of the gun which is the signal to come on board. Not being in mnch of a hurry, I did the town pretty thoronghly and then blundered on board quite late at night, thoroughly tired ont, aud barely able to prop my eyes open by pntting little pieces of bamboo between the lids. Into my state-room I groped and very soon was sleeping the sleep of the just—thongh the nnjust, I snppose, sleep jnst as well. Both portholes were open, and all was cool and comfortable. How was I to know that the room was planted right alongside the starboard wheel, and that that starboard wheel, when the steamer got under weigh, was going to dash in the water at the open portholes with as little regard for my comfort as though I were a dnck or any other waterfowl? It is a compliment to my conscieuce to say that I slept through it all. Trne, I may have dreamed of Niagara Falls, or a swimming bath at North Beach, but nothing beyond. In the morning I awoke a wiser and a wetter man. There were three inches of water in my birth, six upon the floor. My clothes, out from which I always crawl on going to bed as a crab does from its shell, leaving it huddled upon the beach, lay on the floor soaked aud sodden through. There was a situation for you! Five o'clock in the morning, and not a clean stitch or change of clothes in my valise, and the bag gage room not opened until eleven o'clock! When you can do nothing else it is sometimes very well to make a noise. So I shonted. Very soon there were three men pumping the water out of the room—six swabbing up the floor. But that was not all: I wanted clothes. So sent for Fuller and commanded him to get up my trunk at once. He laughed. Per contra, I swore, but that bettered the situatiou not at all. The hottest oaths that ever the army in Flanders swore were perfectly incompetent to dry so much even as a shirt collar. I found fault with the company. Fuller to me:

"Why did you not shut up the portholes?"

I to Fuller: "Who the devil knew I was stuck under a water-wheel?"

"Why did-you not have a change in your valise?"

"You unmitigated son of a sea cook! Why didn't I have a life-preserver strapped on? Who expects to be shipwrecked in one's own berth?"

And if the villain had not got beyond my reach, I do thiuk the winds and waves would now have been howling his dirge, for I had a wet boot in my hand, and was on the point of firing it.

By and by he returned with a shirt and pair of stockings he had borrowed from the doctor. There was a quarter-deck costume for you! Man may want but little clothes below, but he certainly wants those little cut after a longer pattern than most shirts are. Menken is complained of, and yet her costnme were cnmbersome compared to that which I was expected to go to breakfast in. Let Greeley denounce compromises as much as he pleases—in this case a compromise was my salvation. I borrowed a hat and a very long overcoat from a roommate. You would have thought me a grandee of Spain or a Field Marshal of France. The overcoat came down to my heels, and I had on a pair of gold-embroidered slippers that Jim Moore lent me. The main trouble lay with the doctor's shirt. That buttoned behind, and I'm not accustomed to that style. The consequeuce was I canght a cold in the back. But, on the whole, everything turned ont much better than I expected. My trunk was got up in good time, I became a successfnl candidate for a "new birth," and now I have chronicled the only discomfort that befell me on the voyage.

* * * * * * *

My chief amnsement was with the monkeys. Of these there were two—one a lively, jolly fellow, that seemed to think every day the Fonrth of July, and celebrated it by one constant jollification. The other was sullen and morose, appearing to view every one that approached him as an enemy and look npon the world generally as something against which he entertained a bitter grudge. The treatment he got from the sailors may have had something to do with framing for him this morose turn of mind. For it certainly could not conduce much to his amiability to have tobacco juice sqnirted into his eyes, while his neighbor was feted with oranges and bananas. On the whole, though, I fancy he was naturally an "unhappy cuss." I've seen some pietists of whom he reminded me strongly. Judge of my surprise when, on arriving in this harbor, the owner of that morose monkey led him up to me by a chain nnd formally presented me with him. He had perhaps noticed me watching the animal with contemplative eyes, and had fancied that there was some sympatnetic feeling between ns. You have heard of the man with the elephant! Well, you should have seen me bringing that monkey ashore. He jumped upon the head of the Custom-House officer who stood at the gangway, nearly knocking that sedate official into the river. Being actually afraid to trust myself alone in a carriage with the animal, I tucked him under my coat and started for the hotel. He availed himself of the situation by biting my legs and tearing my trowsers. By way of mild reproof, I boxed his ears. He revenged himself by yelling like a copper-colored Indian, leading the police to believe that I was kidnapping a child, and biting my fingers to the bone. That was piling Ossa upon Pelion with a vengeance; so, finding he wouldn't be carried and refused to be led, I finally compromised matters by artistically kicking him to the hotel. He is now in charge of the colored attaches of the establishment, among whom he seems to feel himself perfectly at home, evidently considering himself a member of the Freedmen's Bureau Association, entitled to all the benefits of the Civil Rights Bill, and under the immediate protection of Congress.

But we had more fnn over a bird that wasn't brought aboard than over any monkey that was. An Englishman fresh from the colonies bought a very small bird, scarcely the size of a tomtit, at the Isthmus. He purchased a cage nearly as large as a hen-coop, and put the bird in at the door. I have an idea that originally the cage was intended for a turkey-buzzard. On being put in at the door on one side, the little bird very sensibly walked out between the slats on the other. All unknowing of the escape that had been made, the Englishman brought the cage on board the ship. At snpper-time he stuffed enough yams and potatoes in it to feed an ox, and set a small bucket of water down by the door. At night he took the cage into his state-room, and hung a blanket over it. In the morning he brought it out and aired it. Thinking to amuse himself with the captive, he chirruped at the door and thrust in his finger, but no bird perched thereon. The look of blank amazement on his face when, after peering in every corner of the cage—he was very near-sighted and used eye-glases—he found no bird there, was very comical indeed.

* * * * * * *

If any one doesn't think that New York harbor looks smiling and cheerful when one enters it after a four years' absence, he can get many a bet out of me! The pleasant little conntry seats that dot the shores, the green terraces, and the waving shade-trees, all offer a marked contrast to the sand-hills that greet the stranger on gliding within our Golden Gate. Reaching the wharf, one finds a familiar feature in the hackmen—hackmen, I fancy, are the same all the world over. But how the city and the people seem to have changed! One feels himself alone in what has been his home for years. Some way, the old faces seem to be gone and new ones to have taken their places. And I can now understand the feeling of discontent which the Californian experiences when he walks up Broadway without meeting a soul who takes him by the hand and expresses pleasnre at seeing him. Though tolerably well "fixed" for friends in this city, I experienced at first landing sufficient of the feeling to sympathize a little with the many who loudly express their disgust at the size of the city and the way in which a man finds his individnality merged in the mass and gone, while they sigh for San Francisco. But I cannot indorse to the full the generally expressed opinion that San Francisco can discount New York on everything. Jim Moore, for instance, has written to a friend in San Francisco that the Academy of Music doesn't begin with Maguire's Opera House, and that Pat Gallagher is a better dressed man than can be found on Broadway. And Jack Stratman, on being taken out to the Central Park, looked contemptnously round:

"And this is Central Park, is it?"

"Yes."

"The h-ll you say! You should see Hayes' Park once!"

Suggestions to the Ladies.—Very few people give themselves the trouble to nnderstand the rules of color. They consider them as belonging to an abstruse science. The principles, which are supposed to be too much wrapped in mystery to be worth the trouble of acquiring by any but professional persons, are those comprehended in the laws of contrast of color and contrast of tone.

First, as regards contrast of color. There are three primary colors—red, blue, and yellow. From these every other color is formed, and each has its perfect harmony in its contrasting or complimentary color. The complimentary of each color is formed by the union of the other two, (and is therefore called the secondary.) that is, green, being the mixture of blue and yellow is complimentary to red; violet, being formed of red and blue, is complimentary to yellow; and orange, a compound of red and yellow, to blue.

Each of these colors, when placed near its complimentary, intensifies its effect. Green causes red to appear redder, blue adds a brighter tint to orange, and yellow enhances the color of violet. In other words, every color looks its purest and best when it is beside its complimentary.

By means of the simple law of contrast, therefore, we have the power of imparting any tint that we choose to the complexion, and of rendering our costume agreeable to the eye by the harmony produced by properly contrasted colors: and we may learn to avoid increasing the undesirable tints of a sallow complexion by the jnxtaposition of blue or violet, or rendering a florid complexion still more highly-colored by contrasting it with green. On the other hand, ladies with golden hair and clear complexions will see that they should wear blue in prefereuce to any other color, harmonizing agreeably as it does, with the former, without exercising any ill-effect on the latter.

The new Opposition steamer, the S. M. Whipple, is to make her trial trip to-day, and will be placed on the Sacramento route next week. She is not so large as the Navigation Company's Sacramento boats, but her friends claim that she will be very apt to come in winner in the contest for speed with some of them. At all events she is in fast hands.

Herr Grosse, a publisher of Berlin, was lately sentenced to a month's imprisonment for publishing a novel directed against the French Emperor. Its title was Louis Napoleon; or, the Struggle Between Destiny and the Imperial Crown.

Mr. Carlyle's Frederick the Great, translated into German from time to time, as the volumes originally appeared, has been successful enough to jnstify two editions, which are published at Berlin—a library edition and a people's edition.

M. Bismark's name has added a new word to the French language, bismarquer being now used therein as the synonym of tricher, to cheat.

Facts vs. Theories.—"Give me a place to rest my lever on, says Archimedes, "and I will move the world." "Give me pnre and unadulterated drugs," says Medicus, of the oldea time, "and I will cure disease."

In one sense, both of these learned pundits were the veriest charlatans. They knew there was no place to rest their lever on, either to move the world or cure disease. Mechanism was in a backward state, and the medical profession was bnt another name for sorcery, and all the adjuncts of magic filters and charms of the "evil eye," etc.

But these latter days have borne unto us something more than even superstition and its crew ever dreamt of in their maddest philosophy. In these days of practical science, what was theory of yesterday is fact to-day, and all the old time notions become as bubbles in the sun, and burst and break with every breath we draw.

Let Archimedes shoulder his lever and we will find a resting place for it to move the world. Let mine ancient Medicus pant and toil no more for the drugs he so sorely needs, for we have them at our hand ever ready to serve them at his beck.

Refined in the laboratory of Dr. Maggiel, the finest materials known in the medical profession are obtainable by any one. His Bilious, Dyspeptic, and Diarrhea Pills stand unrivalled, and his Salve operates with magical effect upon burns, scalds, and all sores and ulcers of the skin.

In fact, we think Maggiel's Pills and Salve are the wonder of this century, and we are happy in the thought that many others of our brethren of the craft agree with us. We would earnestly counsel that all families provide themselves with Dr. Maggiel's Preparations at once, and keep them ready at hand, so as to use them at the most opportune time and as occasion serves.—Valley Sentinel. c14

We refer our readers to the advertisement of Meagher, Taaffe & Co., who publish in our advertising columns a list nearly as long as an auctioneer's catalogue of their extensive varieties of Cottons, Linens, Dress Goods, Shawls, Lace and Muslin Goods, Hosiery, Flannels, etc., which they are now selling at reduced rates. This mammoth Dry Goods House is the most enterprising establishment in this city, and does business on the "nimble sixpence" order of quick sales and light profits, by the aid of liberal advertising, to the amount of thousands of dollars per day. They are spoken of among the trade as the "Stewards of the Pacific Coast"—a very delicate way of acknowledging their business standing.

No Lady of Fashion thinks of going to a party or making a morning call without first adorning and beautifying her complexion and skin with that elegant, innocent and fragrant, toilet article—Davidson's Circassian Bloom. Sold by all Druggists.

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.—The prettiest thing, the "sweetest thing," and the most of it for the least money. It overcomes the odor of perspiration; softens and adds delicacy to the skin; is a delightful perfume; allays headache and inflammation, and is a necessary companion in the sick room, in the nursery and upon the toilet sideboard. It can be obtained everywhere at one dollar per bottle.

LYON'S MAGNETIC INSECT POWDER is instant death to Fleas, Ticks, Roaches, and everything of the insect species. It is one of the few articles that can be relied upon, and for a mere wo hits we can save the bites and bills of these little pests. None is genuine unless signed by E. Lyon, and bearing the private stamp of Demas Barnes & Co., New York.

S—T—1860—X. DRAKE'S PLANTATION BITTERS.

They purify, strengthen and invigorate.
They create a healthy appetite.
They are an antidote to change of water and diet.
They strengthen the system and enliven the mind.
They prevent miasmatic and intermittent fevers.
They purify the breath and acidity of the stomach.
They cure Dyspepsia and Constipation.
They cure Liver Complaint and Nervous Headache.

They are the best Bitters in the world. They make the weak strong, and are exhausted nature's great restorer. They are made of pure St. Croix Rum, the celebrated Calisaya Bark, roots and herbs, and are taken with the pleasure of a beverage, without regard to age or time of day. Particularly recommended to delicate persons requiring a gentle stimulant. Sold by all Grocers, Druggists, Hotels and Saloons. Only genuine when Cork is covered by our private U. S. Stamp. Beware of counterfeits and refilled bottles.

P. H. DRAKE & CO., New York.

"In lifting the kettle from the fire I scalded myself very severely—one hand almost to a crisp. The torture was unbearable. * * * The Mexican Mustang Liniment relieved the pain almost immediately. It healed rapidly, and left very little scar.

"CHAS. FOSTER, 420 Broad street, Philada."

This is merely a sample of what the Mustang Liniment will do. It is invaluable in all cases of wounds, swellings, sprains, cuts, bruises, spavins, etc., either upon man or beast.

Beware of counterfeits. None is genuine unless wrapped in fine steel-plate engravings, bearing the signature of G. W. Westbrook, Chemist, and the private stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., New York.

ALL WHO VALUE A BEAUTIFUL HEAD OF HAIR, and its preservation from premature baldness and turning gray, will not fail to use Lyon's Celebrated KATHAIRON. It makes the hair rich, soft, and glossy, eradicates dandruff, and causes the hair to grow with luxuriant beauty. It is sold everywhere. E. THOMAS LYON, Chemist, N. Y.

LYON'S EXTRACT OF PURE JAMAICA GINGER, for Indigestion, Nausea, Heartburn, Sick Headache, Cholera Morbus, &c., where a warming, genial stimulant is required. Its careful preparation and entire purity make it a cheap and reliable article for culinary purposes. Sold everywhere, at 50 cents per bottle. ap7-1y

NO FORFEITING.—Heretofore, if a person holding a Life Policy became unfortunate, and could not raise the sum of money required to pay his next premium, his policy was declared forfeited. The BROOKLYN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK has decided to make EVERY POLICY it issues NON-FORFEITABLE, giving a PAID-UP POLICY to the party if unable to continue his payments of premiums. The dividends of the Brooklyn Life Insurance Company are settled annually in cash. This plan is far more acceptable to insurers than at the end of three or five years, as in other companies. The Brooklyn Life Insurance Company allows thirty days grace in the payment of premiums. Its policies are incontestable, and its losses are promptly paid. The Brooklyn Life Insurance Company offers every known plan of Life and Endowment Insurance. Get a pamphlet at the office, 240 Montgomery street, southeast corner of Pine, from Stephen T. King, General Manager, or David B. Arrowsmith, Local Agent.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

E GOLDSMITH & Co., at No. 646 Sacramento street, three doors below Kearny, have just received some beautiful new style Garibaldis and Zouave Jackets, that for taste and style are particularly worthy of the attention of our lady readers. They have also a fine assortment of Ladies' Furnishing Goods of the choicest description. French corsets for one dollar. A great variety of French toilet and fancy articles, the newest styles of buttons and dress trimmings, may always be found at Goldsmith's 646 Sacramento street.

RHEUMATISM.

Throughout this coast a great deal of suffering is experienced from Rheumatism. Weeks and even months of protracted and aggravated misery is endured by the victims of medical inefficiency and ignorance, which could be cured just as speedily as was Mr. Sparrow, whose testimony is given below, and is only the echo of hundreds of other cases. Dr. Bourne cures without medicines, which accounts for his extraordinary success. No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street entrance:

SAN FRANCISCO, September 6, 1861.

Dr. Bourne: Last Winter I was nearly dead, by an attack of inflammatory rheumatism. I suffered the most excruciating pains for about five weeks, without any hope of relief, when a friend, hearing of my illness, called to see me, and assured me that if I would stop "drugging and dosing," and go to you, that you would have me walking about the streets in three days. Sure enough, although I was utterly helpless, and conveyed to your house in a carriage, and carried into it by three stout men, and was by them lifted into the bath, yet, on coming out of the bath I was able to largely assist myself, doing much toward dressing, and without assistance walked from the bath to the carriage. On the fourth day, I discharged my carriage and walked with a friend's aid the entire distance to your house (nearly a mile) and home again, and so on until cured; and I had not taken more than twelve baths when, all pain and swelling having ceased, I felt myself a well man. And now I am happy to do this little service of publicly certifying to the simple truth, leaving it to do its own work among such of my friends and acquaintances as may chance to see this. Your friend. JOSEPH SPARROW.

DAINTY WORK.—About the daintiest work we ever saw were specimens of hair jewelry at the establishment of Mrs. C. Cook, 615 Clay street, between Montgomery and Kearny streets, yesterday. This lady manufactures all sorts of jewelry—watch-chains, earrings, finger rings, breastpins, and various other kinds of ornaments—from human hair. We witnessed the process of manufacture, and it is intricate and ingenious in the highest degree.—S. F. Examiner.

A SUMMER AND WINTER MEDICINE.

"Great oaks from little acorns grow."

The worst diseases known to the human race spring from causes so small as to almost defy detection. The volumes of scientific lore that fill the tables and shelves of the medical fraternity only go to prove and elaborate these facts.

Then guard yourselves while you may. The smallest pimple on the skin is a tell-tale and indicator of disease. It may fade and die away from the surface of the body, but it will reach the vitals, perhaps, at last, and death be the result and final close. Maggiel's Bilious, Dyspeptic and Diarrhœa Pills cure where all others fail. While for Burns, Scalds, Chilblains, Cuts, and all abrasions of the skin, Maggiel's Salve is infallible. Sold by J. Maggiel, 43 Fulton street, New York, and all Druggists, at 25 cents per box.

WANTED—Agents to sell, by subscription only the most popular work ever written: "GRANT AND SHERMAN; their Campaigns and Generals." By the world-renowned historian, Hon. J. T. Headley, author of Washington and his Generals, Sacred Mountains, etc. Agents are taking as high as thirty subscribers per day, and all agree in pronouncing it the most saleable work they ever took hold of. The people want Headley's illustrated "GRANT AND SHERMAN," etc. For terms and territory, address E. E. SHEAR, No. 8 Montgomery Street, and Box 1,430, San Francisco, California

FRAGRANT SOZODONT FOR THE TEETH

READ the Testimony of a few of the many Eminent Clergymen and their Families of New York city, who, having used the Sozodont for a long time past, are convinced of its excellent and invaluable qualities, and give it their cordial commendation:

Rev. THOMAS DEWITT, Pastor Collegiate Ref. Dutch Church, Lafayette Place.
Rev. J. W. ALEXANDER, D. D., Presbyterian Church, Fifth Avenue.
Rev. J. B. WAKELEY, M. E. City Missionary.
Rev. W. F. MORGAN, D. D., Rector St. Thomas Church, Broadway.
Rev. E. H. CHAPIN. D. D., Pastor Fourth Universalist Church, Broadway.
Rev. SAMUEL COOKE, D.D., Rector St. Bartholomew's Church, Lafayette Place.
Rev. SAMUEL OSGOOD, D.D., Pastor Church of Messiah, Broadway.
Rev. B. M. ADAMS, M. E. Church, Duane street.
Rev. HEMAN BANGS, late Pastor Centenary M. E. Church, Brooklyn.
Rev. W. S. MIKELS, Pastor Baptist Church, Sixteenth street.
Rev. GEO. POTTS, D.D., Pastor Presbyterian Church, University Place.
Rev. E. E. RANKIN, Pastor Presbyterian Church Forty second street.
Rev. T. E. VERMILYE, D. D., Pastor of Co Dutch Reformed, Lafayette Place.

FROM G. F. J. COLBURN, DOCTOR DENTAL SURGERY, NEWARK, N. J.

The Popular Dentrifice known as Van Buskirk's "SOZODONT," besides being a very pleasant addition to the toilet, contains ingredients that, if used according to the directions, will prove of the greatest utility to the health of the mouth and teeth.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS!

Sold by all Druggists and Perfumers.

HALL & RUCKEL,
NEW YORK.

je2-4m

HALL'S SARSAPARILLA,
YELLOW DOCK AND IODIDE POTASS,
THE
Best Blood Purifier Known.

Persons that are troubled with Rheumatism, Scrofula, Neuralgia, Morbid Liver, Salt Rheum, Pimples, Boils, or any of the many diseases that originate from Impure Blood, would find it much to their advantage to give this justly celebrated article a trial. One or two bottles are quite sufficient to convince the most skeptical of its merits. It contains neither Spirit, ARSENIC nor MERCURY which cannot be truly said of any other preparation called "Sarsaparilla."

SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,
N. W. cor. Sansome and Commercial-streets.

ap7-3m

THE CALIFORNIAN'S
SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

BATHS.
Dr. Bourne's, (Medical,) 10 Post, near Montgomery.

AUCTIONEERS.
Olney & Co., removed to 418 Montgomery street.

BUSINESS AND PROPERTY AGENCY.
S. P. Whitman, 313 Montgomery st.

BOWLING ALLEYS.
Cosmopolitan, White & Lafferty, Cosmopolitan Hotel.
Wholers & Steil. Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.)

BOOKS.
A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street.
I. M. Wentworth & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine st.

HATTER.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street,

HOTELS.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.

INSURANCE.
Bigelow & Bro., N.W. cor. Montgomery and Sacramento.
Mutual Life Ins. Co., H. S. Homans, Agent, 609 Clay.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Ag'ts, 206 Front, cor Cal.
National Ins. Co., N.E. cor. Montgomery and California.
Occidental Ins. Co., S.W. cor. Montgom'y and California.
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.

COLLECTOR.
B. Pulverman, 614 Montgomery—Office hours, 1 to 3 P.M.

CLOTHING.
H. M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.
Dell, Cranna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.

COPPER CRUSHER AND SAMPLER.
S. W. Howland, 24 California street, (at Thomas' Mill.)

DRESS TRIMMINGS, WORSTEDS, ETC.
Mrs. Norcross, 5 Montgomery street (Masonic Temple.)

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Dr. A. N. Clark (late Knowles & Clark) removed to 410 Kearny.
Dr. Wm. B. McAllister, 221 Third street.
Whitcomb & Dyer, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.
Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.

DRUGGISTS.
R. H. McDonald & Co., (Wholesale) Sansome, cor. Pine.
Shepardson & Gates, (successors to R. Hall & Co.,) corner Sansome and Commercial.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.
Cal. Collegiate Institute, Miss M. Lammond, 68 Silver.
Miel Institute, Miss Florence James, 55 South Park.
Pacific Business College, 751 Market street, above Third.

FURNITURE.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
J. Poirce, 415, 417 and 419 California street.

GROCERS.
N. Boschen, corner Fifth and Minna.
Slosson & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
J. J. Miller, corner Sutter and Leavenworth.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market.
W. M. Nohle & Co., cor Howard and Twelfth streets

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

LIVERY AND SALE STABLE.
Philip Morshead, removed to Howard, near Fifth.

MAPS.
Pacific Map Depot, A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.

MERCHANT TAILORS.
J. H. Hammond removed to 328 Montgomery.

PIANO SCHOOL.
Mr. Gustave A. Scott, at Miel Institute, 55 South Park.
W. S. Pierce, removed to 534 Market, opposite Second

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
M. Gray, 613 Clay street.

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

REAL ESTATE.
Fifteen-dollar lots for sale by H. S. Brown, S.E. corner of Battery and Commercial streets.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

MARY SMITH, Plaintiff,
vs.
WILLIAM SMITH, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to WILLIAM SMITH, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court, dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and that one-half of the Defendant's property, if he have any, be awarded to Plaintiff, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 27th day of June in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six.

Seal. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cts., cancelled.
WM. LOEWY, Clerk,
By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.

A. WILLIAMS, Plaintiff's Attorney, 535 Clay street.

je30-3m

RATES OF POSTAGE.

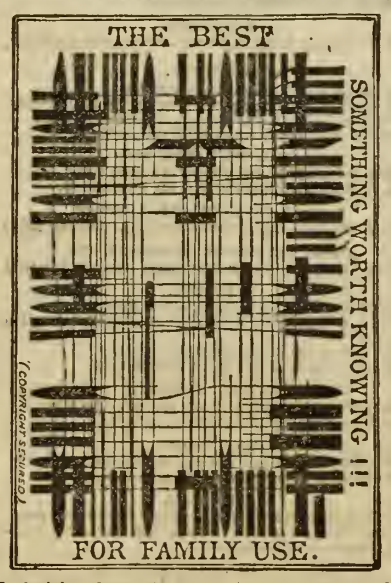
Valuable letters may be registered on application at the office of mailing, and the payment of 20 cents registration fee.

Transient newspapers, periodicals, blanks, proof-sheets, book manuscripts, pamphlets, and all mailable printed matter, except circulars and books, 2 cents for each and every 4 ounces. Double these rates are charged for hooks.

Seeds, cuttings, roots, etc., 2 cents for each 4 ounces or less quantity.

All packages of mail matter not charged with letter postage must be so arranged that the same can be conveniently examined by Postmasters; if not, letter postage will be charged.

Unsealed circulars, to one address, not exceeding three in number, 2 cents, and in the same proportion for a greater number.



No package will he forwarded by mail which weighs over 4 pounds.

All postage matter, for delivery within the United States, must be prepaid by stamps (except duly certified letters of soldiers and sailors;) otherwise, double the above rates will be charged on delivery.

Weekly newspapers (one copy only) sent to actual subscribers within the county where printed and published, free.

Letters to Canada and other British North American Provinces, when not over 3,000 miles, 10 cents for each ½ ounce. When over 3,000 miles, 15 cents. Prepayment optional.

Letters to Great Britain or Ireland, 24 cents. Prepayment optional.

To decipher, lower the top of the paper to an angle of forty-five degrees; then close one eye, and read at your ease.

THE

AWARDED THE HIGHEST PREMIUM
AT THE
State Fair of California,

The only Fair on the Pacific coast at which any two double-thread Machines were exhibited in competition in 1865.

If there is a FLORENCE SEWING MAchine within one thousand miles of this office that is not working well, it will be attended to if I am informed of it, without expense to the owner. SAMUEL HILL,
General Agent,
111 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

THE

FLORENCE

SEWING MACHINE

RECEIVED THE FIRST PREMIUM, A GOLD MEDAL, at the Great Exhibition of the AMERICAN INSTUTE, - - - New York, 1865.

my10-3m

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL
Confectioners,
111 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter.

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double-refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge. my24-3m

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,

WHOLESALE

DRUGGISTS,

IMPORTERS OF

Drugs, Chemicals, Herbs,

PATENT MEDICINES,

PAINTS, VARNISHES,

ACIDS, DYE STUFFS,

OILS, PERFUMERIES,

TOILET ARTICLES,

BRUSHES.

We are just receiving, direct from Spain, a complete assortment of

CORKS! CORKS! CORKS

which we offer at lower prices than usual

DUSTING, PAINT, VARNISH, SHOE, SCRUB, HAIR AND TOOTH BRUSHES:

We have a splendid stock, which we offer at extremely low prices.

HERBS.

We have received, direct from the Shakers, all kinds of fresh Herbs, and intend to keep every article used of this description.

TILDEN'S SOLID AND FLUID EXTRACTS, PILLS, AND CONCENTRATED PREPARATIONS.

We have on hand, and shall keep a full assortment of the above celebrated preparations, which we offer to the trade at such prices as will defy competition.

FLAVORING EXTRACTS.

A great variety, not to be equalled in the market as to quality and price.

Parties about purchasing would do well to give us a call and examine prices and goods before purchasing elsewhere.

PLAIN
AND GUM TEETH.

We have the largest assortment of any house on the Pacific coast.

GOLD FOIL.

We are manufacturing Foil which we can recommend to the profession as being a superior article. We also have on hand a full assortment, of all the various makers

VULCANIZERS,

DENTAL CHAIRS AND LATHES

FILES,

VULCANITE AND GUTTA PERCHA,

FORCEPS,

BURRS, DRILLS AND EXCAVATORS,

MIRRORS, ETC.

We have, besides the above, every article used by the Dentist, and are daily in receipt of all the new inventions in use.

Dentists will find it to their interest to call and examine our stock and prices before purchasing elsewhere.

R. H. McDonald & Co.,

CORNER SANSOME AND PINE STREETS,
SAN FRANCISCO.
AND
J STREET - - SACRAMENTO.

ap28-3m

THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD.

DR. MAGGIEL'S

Pills and Salve.

These Life-giving remedies are now, for the first time, given publicly to the world. For over a quarter of a century of private practice the ingredients in these

LIFE-GIVING PILLS!

Have been used with the greatest success. Their mission is not only to prevent disease, but to cure. They search out the various maladies by which the patient is suffering, and re-invigorate the failing system. To the aged and infirm a few doses of these valuable PILLS will prove to be

A VERY FOUNTAIN OF YOUTH,

For in every case they add new life and vitality, and restore the waning energies to their pristine state. To the young and middle-aged, they will prove most invaluable, as a ready, specific, and sterling medicine. Here is a dream realized, that Ponce-de-Leon sought for three hundred years ago, and never found. He looked for a fountain that would restore the old to vigor and make youth ever

AN ETERNAL SPRING!

It was left for this day and hour to realize the dream, and show in one glorious fact, the magic that made it fair.

THESE FAMOUS REMEDIES

Cannot stay the flight of years, but they can force back, and hold aloof, diseases that might triumph over the aged and the young. Let none hesitate then, but seize the favorable opportunity that offers. When taken as prescribed—

FOR BILLIOUS DISORDERS

Nothing can be more productive of cure than these Pills. Their almost magic influence is felt at once; and the usual concomitants of this most distressing disease are removed. These remedies are made from the purest

VEGETABLE COMPOUNDS.

They will not harm the most delicate female, and can be given with good effect in prescribed doses to the youngest babe.

FOR CUTANEOUS DISORDERS

And all eruptions of the skin, the SALVE is most invaluable. It does not heal externally alone, but penetrates with the most searching effects to the very root of the evil!

Dr. Maggiel's Pills

Invariably cure the following diseases:

Asthma,
Bowel Complaints,
Coughs,
Colds,
Chest Diseases,
Costiveness,
Dyspepsia,
Diurrhœa,
Dropsy,
Debility,
Female Complaints, Fever and Ague
Headache,
Indigestion,
Influenza,
Inflammation,
Inward Weakness,
Liver Complaint,
Lowness of Spirits,
Ringworm,
Rheumatism,
Salt Rheum,
Scalds,
Skin Diseases.

NOTICE.—None genuine without the engraved trade-mark around each pot or box, signed by Dr. J. Maggiel, 43 Fulton st., New York, to counterfeit which is felony.

☞ Sold by all respectable Dealers in Medicines throughout the United States—at 25 cents per box or pot. ap14-1y

A CARD.

M. Howard's Hair Restorative,

NO. 315 MONTGOMERY STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO.

THE ABOVE PREPARATION, which has been recently discovered and patented, is purely a Vegetable Extract.

The undersigned are fully aware of the many unsatisfactory and useless preparations for restoring hair that have been introduced to the public, and how little confidence is to be placed in any pretensions to restoring the hair to bald heads, but, we are able to state that it not only prevents the Hair from falling out, but absolutely reproduces it, and that we now have good suits of Hair growing where we were entirely bald. Therefore, as a matter of justice to Mr. Howard, and of consolation to bald heads, we tender him this testimonial. Mr H. keeps the article for sale in bottles, with directions for its use, or applies it himself, as may be desired.

HAVING TRIED MR. HOWARD'S PREPARATION,

San Francisco, April 6, 1866.

Frank M. Thayer,	R. A. Redman,
W. S Davis,	J. O. Rountree,
T. A. Hall,	G. W. Gumble,
A. C. Knox	J. W. Miller,
Bradbury Sanborn,	E. C. McComb,
George Wells,	D. C. Ross,
Joseph Wells,	ap7

FRANKLIN PRINTING OFFICE,

509 CLAY STREET, (near Sansome,)
SAN FRANCISCO,

"The oldest and most complete Book and Job printing establishment in California. All descriptions of work neatly executed at low rates."

ja1. FRANK EASTMAN, Proprietor.

J. PEIRCE,

FURNITURE AND

Bedding Warerooms.

Nos. 415, 417, AND 419 CALIFORNIA STREET,
NEAR MONTGOMERY.

THIS STOCK OF FURNITURE, etc., was selected with great care, and special attention given to the wants of this market, ENTIRELY AT THE EAST. It is NOT COMPOSED OF REFUSE GOODS, ODDS AND ENDS OF OTHER HOUSES that have lately closed out here, but CONSISTS ENTIRELY OF NEW GOODS, made after the latest patterns and in the most durable manner.

The present Stock is fully TWICE as large as that of any other house here. Parties having any doubts of this, or that the assortment is not superior to any in the city, can easily satisfy themselves by calling.

The stock of Case Goods is larger than ever before.

J. PEIRCE,
Ware-rooms 415, 417 and 419 California street,
mh16-3m SAN FRANCISCO.

B. F. STERETT, 533 Clay St., a few doors below Montgomery, continues to print all kinds of Books, Bills, Circulars, Cards, etc. in superior style, and at reasonable prices.

T. RODGERS JOHNSON,

ODD FELLOWS' HALL, 329 Montgomery street,
mb30 3m San Francisco.

NATHANIEL GRAY,
UNDERTAKER,
CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,
641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB
Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

mar17-3m

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,

PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,
517 CLAY STREET,
Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

SCHOOL FURNITURE.

RANKIN'S PATENT SCHOOL DESK;
Liquid Slating for Blackboard;
ARITHMETICAL FRAME;
Babbitonian System of Writing—the Best System know

W. HOLT,
de9 305 Montgomery street, Room No 2.

DISTANCES FROM SAN FRANCISCO
To various points:

To Fort Point, 4 miles, by omnibus, four trips a day.
Loue Mountain, 3, street railway.
Seal Rock, 6, cars and omnibus, two trips a day.
Mission Dolores, street railways; Ocean House 8.
San Mateo, 20, railroad.
Crystal Springs, 23, railroad and stage
Half-Moon Bay, 29, do. do.
Redwood city, 30, do.
Mountain View, 38, do.
Santa Clara, 47, do.
San Jose, 50, do., or steamer and stage, 54.
Alviso, 46, steamer, daily.
Almaden mines, 67, steamer and stage; or by railroad and stage, 64.
Santa Cruz, 78, railroad and stage.
Oakland, 8, steamer and railroad, six trips a day.
Alameda, 11, steamer, three trips a day.
San Leandro, 15, steamer and railroad.
Mission San Jose, 34, steamer, railroad and stage.
Warm Springs, 37, do. do.
Benicia, 30, steamer leaves at 4 P. M. daily.
Sacramento, 117, do. do.
Stockton, 117, do. do.
Martinez, 33, do.
Pacheco, 38, steamer and stage.
Diablo Coal Mines, 44, steamer and stage.
Suisun, 50, steamer, or 54 by steamer and stage
Vallejo, 28; Mare Island, 37; Napa city, 50
White Sulphur Springs, 67, stage from Napa.
Geyser Springs, 118, do. do.
Sonoma, 52, steamer, tri-weekly.
Petaluma, 48, steamer, daily.
Healdsburg, 80, stage daily from Petaluma
San Quentin, 12, steamer; Farallone Islands, 20.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,
1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, situated on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,
SAN FRANCISCO.

It was built expressly for a Hotel, with all the modern conveniences attached to it.
Gas and water are supplied throughout the House.
Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

LARGE READING ROOM
Attached to the Hotel,
Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,
Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr.,
my6-3m Proprietor.

THE PACIFIC
INSURANCE COMPANY,
HAVING ADDED
MARINE INSURANCE
TO THEIR BUSINESS, ARE NOW PREPARED TO ISSUE POLICIES ON
Marine, Inland Navigation, and Fire Risks,
ON THE MOST FAVORABLE TERMS.

Office, 436 California street.

J. HUNT, President
A. J. RALSTON, Secretary. my5-3m

BREWSTER & CO.'S
Carriage Manufactory,
372 Broome steet, New York.

We desire to announce to our California friends that we have made extensive arrangements by increasing our works for the coming season, and with a view to
SUPPLYING THE
WANTS OF CALIFORNIA,
will manufacture a style of work particularly adapted to city and country use, and in view of the destructive effects of city railroads on all light work, will give
PARTICULAR ATTENTION
to remedying the evil, and guard against it in work shipped to California.
CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, PHAETONS, COUPES, and Vehicles of every description, of our own manufacture, on hand and made to order.
Orders or communications should be addressed to
BREWSTER & CO.,
Of Broome street,
The firm of Brewster & Baldwin not being in any way connected with
BREWSTER & CO.,
Of No. 372, Broome street,

STOCKDALE HOUSE,
Corner Main and Oak streets, Petaluma.
mar24 6m H. STOCKDALE, Proprietor.

BOWMAN & CO.,
Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware,
mar24-6m Main street, Petaluma.

ALLEN'S
LUNG BALSAM!

A CERTAIN CURE FOR
COUGHS, COLDS, INFLUENZA, NIGHT SWEATS, BRONCHITIS, SPITTING OF BLOOD, ASTHMA, WHOOPING COUGH, CONSUMPTION,
And all Diseases of the
CHEST AND LUNGS!

This celebrated Cough Remedy effects a speedy cure by producing a free and easy expectoration, heals abscesses of the lungs, prevents unhealthy secretion of the bronchial tubes, and removes from them those accumulations of morbid matter which cause oppression of the breast, difficulty of breathing, etc, soothes irritation of the respiratory organs which produces cough.
PRICE.....ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE.
Sold by all Druggists.
HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
401 Battery corner of Clay,
ap27-3m San Francisco.

DR. HUMPHREYS'
Homœopathic Specifics

Have proved, from the most ample experience, an entire success—simple, prompt, efficient and reliable. They are the only Medicines perfectly adapted to popular use—so simple that mistakes cannot be made in using them; so harmless as to be free from danger, and so efficient as to be always reliable. They have received the highest commendation from all, and will always render satisfaction.

No. 1	cures Fevers, Congestion, Inflammations.	0 25
" 2	cures Worms, Worm Fever, Worm Colic,	25
" 3	cures Crying Colic, or Teething of infants	25
" 4	cures Diarrhœa of children or adults	25
" 5	cures Dysentery, Griping, Bilious Colic,	25
" 6	cures Cholera Morbus, Nausea, Vomiting,	25
" 7	cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis	25
" 8	cures Neuralgia, Toothache, Faceache.	25
" 9	cures Headaches, sick-Headache, Vertigo,	25
" 10	cures Dyspepsia, Bilious Stomach	25
" 11	cures Suppressed, or Painful Periods	25
" 13	cures Croup, Cough, difficult Breathing,	25
" 14	cures Salt Rheum, Erysipelas Eruptions,	25
" 15	cures Rheumatism, Rheumatic Pains	25
" 16	cures Fever and Ague, Chill Fever, Agues	50
" 17	cures Piles, blind or bleeding	50
" 18	cures Opthalmia, and Sore or Weak Eyes,	50
" 19	cures Catarrh, acute or chronic, Influenza	50
" 20	cures Whooping-Cough, violent coughs.	50
" 21	cures Asthma, oppressed Breathing	50
" 22	cures Ear Discharges, impaired Hearing	50
" 23	cures Scrofula, Enlarged Glands, Swellings	50
" 24	cures General Debility, Physical Weakness	50
" 25	cures Dropsy, and scanty Secretions	50
" 26	cures Sea-Sickness, sickness from Riding,	50
" 27	cures Kidney Disease, Gravel	50
" 29	cures Sore Mouth, Canker	50
" 31	cures Painful Periods, even with Spasms	50
" 32	cures Sufferings at change of life	$1.00
" 33	cures Epilepsy, Spasms, St. Vitus' Dance.	1.00
" 34	cures Diphtheria, Ulcerated Sore Throat,	50

FAMILY CASES.

35 vials, morocco case, and book.....$10 00
28 vials, morocco case, and book..... 8 00
20 vials, morocco case, and book..... 6 00
These Remedies, by the case or single box, are sent to any part of the country, by Mail or Express, on receipt of the price.
HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
ap27-3m San Francisco.

A BEAUTIFUL COMPLEXION!
Secret of Beauty!
USE GEO. W. LAIRD'S
BLOOM OF YOUTH,
OR
LIQUID PEARL!
See that the name,
GEO. W. LAIRD,
is stamped
ON THE BOTTLE.
No other is Genuine.
The best article in the world for Preserving and Beautifying the Complexion and Skin.
This magnificent Toilet Article is prepared only, by GEO. W. LAIRD, 74 Fulton street, New York, formerly 483 Broadway.
Sold by Druggists everywhere.
HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
ap27-3m San Francisco.

FOURTH OF JULY, 1866.
NOTICE.

THE UNDERSIGNED having been appointed Grand Marshal of the Ceremonies for the coming Anniversary of the Independence of the United States, hereby respectfully invites the different Military, Fireman and Civic Societies in this city to participate in the celebration, and requests the officers of the same to send immediate notice of acceptance to the office of the Marshal, Nos. 25 and 26 Montgomery Block.
The proposed celebration is intended to be one of the grandest ever held in San Francisco, and, in view of the peculiar circumstances attending the present Anniversary, it is hoped that a full representation of the above-mentioned societies will assist in giving honor to the day.
As peace has again visited our Nation it is especially appropriate that the whole people should unite in publicly showing their gratitude and joy on the occasion referred to; and a demonstration such as intended to be made will go far toward showing the patriotism which still endears the memory of the Birthday of America.
je23-2t WILLIAM G. BADGER, Grand Marshal.

HEUSTON,
HASTINGS
& CO.
The Fashionable Clothiers
OF
SAN FRANCISCO,
Are now engaged in enlarging their already extensive European connections, and are offering the LARGEST, FINEST, AND MOST COMPLETE
STOCK OF
CUSTOM-MADE CLOTHING,
GENTS' FURNISHING GOODS,
TRUNKS, BAGS, VALISES, ETC.,
ON THE PACIFIC COAST,
AT REDUCED PRICES.
je17-3m

TYLER BROTHERS,
NO. 632 WASHINGTON STREET,
AND 691 MARKET STREET, - - - - CORNER THIRD,
SAN FRANCISCO,
IMPORTERS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN SCHOOL BOOKS,
STATIONERY,
PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,
BLANK BOOKS,
PORTFOLIOS,
JUVENILE BOOKS,
FANCY ARTICLES,
CHILDRENS' PICTURE BOOKS, Etc.
Especial attention given to
LADIES' STATIONERY,
Which we stamp with
INITIALS,
In COLORS or PLAIN.

WEDDING AND VISITING CARDS
ENGRAVED, WRITTEN, OR PRINTED.
je23

THE CALIFORNIAN.

TERMS—FIVE DOLLARS PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

A PAPER FOR THE TIMES

DEVOTED TO LIVE TOPICS,

THE DISSEMINATION OF A PURE LITERATURE, DEVELOPMENT OF HOME TALENT,

AND THE

BEST INTERESTS OF CALIFORNIA.

Published

EVERY SATURDAY MORNING

AT

532 MERCHANT STREET,

BY THE CALIFORNIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY.

A. A. STICKNEY, J. P. BOGARDUS, W. J. BINGHAM, C. H. WEBB.

No effort will be spared to enable THE CALIFORNIAN to appeal to the Public for support, not only as the
BEST JOURNAL ON THE PACIFIC COAST,
But also as being
THE EQUAL OF ANY ON THIS CONTINENT
THE BEST TALENT OF THE STATE
Is employed upon THE CALIFORNIAN.

The voluntary notices bestowed by the press of the Eastern cities have been no less warm and congratulatory than those which we have received at the hands of our cotemporaries of the Pacific. Their verdict is unanimously in favor of
THE CALIFORNIAN
and all join in pronouncing their unqualified approval of its unequalled merits.
Its reputation is now fully established. It is not EXCELLED BY ANY LITERARY JOURNAL
on the Continent.
☞THE TERMS OF THE CALIFORNIAN are $5 per year, mailed to subscribers, invariably in advance; 50 cents per month served by carriers.
All communications and correspondence must be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN,
No 532 Merchan street,
SAN FRANCISCO.

FULL SETS
FROM THE COMMENCEMENT OF THE CALIFORNIAN
TO THE CLOSE OF VOL. IV.
Can be procured at the Office. Price, bound in muslin, per volume, $4. Two volumes bound together, $7. Unbound, per volume, $3.

CARRINGTON & CO'S
GENERAL PURCHASING AGENCY.
No. 40 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

IF YOU WANT
Books, Prints, Clothing, Instruments, Music, Tools, Weapons, Sporting Implements, Fancy Stock, Jewelry, Silver or Plated Ware, Wines, Cigars, Fine Groceries, Furniture; in short, any Article, large or small, singly or in quantity, for Ladies' or Gentlemen's use or wear, or for Dealers' Supplies, from a seal-ring to a steam-engine—a Cameo or a Cashmere; lace or leather,
SEND ON YOUR ORDERS.
Orders may be given in French, Spanish or German.
COMMISSION CHARGE, - - - FIVE PER CENT.
Address:
CARRINGTON & CO.,
40 Broadway, N. Y.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE - - - - - - - - PROPRIETOR.
C. L. GRAVES - - - - - - - STAGE MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON - - - - - - - TREASURER.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, JUNE 30, 1866.

Mr. John McCullough,

SUPPORTED BY THE OPERA HOUSE COMPANY,
will appear in the play of Romeo and Juliet.

SATURDAY EVENING:

Benefit of Howard Engine Co.

On which occasion,

RUY BLAS,

AND

COOL AS A CUCUMBER.

MONDAY EVENING, JULY 2:

First Night of

Miss Kate Denin

AND

Mr. John Wilson

In the celebrated play of CAMILLE.

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Dress Circle and Orchestra, - - - - - - $1 00
Parquet, - - - - - - - - - - 50
Upper Circle, - - - - - - - - - 25

LOW PRICES

IN

Gents' Furnishing Goods,

AT

WARD'S SHIRT STORES,

323 MONTGOMERY STREET,

AND CORNER OF MARKET AND THIRD STREETS,

SAN FRANCISCO.

P. S.—Printed directions for self-measurement for Shirts and Price Lists of Goods sent free by mail.

ap21-3m

FIREWORKS!

Union Fireworks!

Premium Fireworks!

MANUFACTURED AT THE

UNION LABORATORY,

Market street, between Seventh and Eighth,

FOR THE CELEBRATION

OF

JULY 4TH, 1866.

Our Fireworks are newer, better and surer than any imported stock, and we are the only manufacturers on the Pacific coast, guaranteeing our work to be as represented.

Rockets, Wheels, Triangles,
Bombs, Shells,
Bengolas, Mines, Blue Lights,
Rom. Candles, Serpents,

AND EVERY VARIETY OF FIREWORKS KNOWN IN PYROTECHNY.

Temples, Capitals, Domes, Emblems,
For city and country Exhibitions, of any required dimensions, of all and every design.

Gold Chop Fire Crackers,
Pistol Fire Crackers,
Constitution Fire Crackers,
Rattan Bombs,
Columbiad Fire Crackers,
Union Fire Crackers,
Double Headers, Torpedoes, Torpedo Bows.

☞ FLAGS!

Cotton Flags, DeLaine Flags,
Silk Flags, Bunting Flags,

Of all Sizes.

PHARAOH'S SERPENTS,

Of all Sizes, Plain and Colored.

All of which we offer at low rates, and guarantee satisfaction.

CHURCH & CLARK,
407 Front street.
je30 1t

GENTLEMEN'S FURNISHING GOODS!

Meagher, Taaffe & Co.

WILL THIS DAY OFFER,

At a Reduction of 25 per ct.,

200 dozen Super Merino Shirts and Drawers;
100 dozen Super Lamb's Wool Shirts and Drawers;
100 dozen Silk Shirts and Drawers;
100 dozen Cotton Flannel Shirts and Drawers;
75 dozen French Linen Shirts;
200 dozen Cotton Half-Hose;
150 dozen Merino Half-Hose.

ALSO,

POCKET HANDKERCHIEFS, NECK-TIES, COLLARS, ALEXANDRES'S BEST KID GLOVES, ETC.

9 Montgomery Street,

LICK HOUSE BLOCK.

Wholesale House, 107 Battery street,
Between Pine and California streets.
jc23

TRY LE COUNT'S INK.

CORNER OF

Sacramento and Montgomery streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

Post Office Address: Lock Box No 1477. je30 3m

DRY GOODS.

FOR CHOICE STYLES IN

Dress Goods,

THE VERY BEST MAKES OF

IRISH LINEN,

And superior French and English

Calicos,

Go to

S. MOSGROVE,
222 Third st.,
Colton's Building.
je23

DO YOU WANT ANY Printing?

IF YOU DO, GO TO

411 CLAY STREET,

BETWEEN SANSOME AND BATTERY.

PRINTING OF EVERY DESCRIPTION DONE ON short notice and in the best style, by

M. D. CARR & CO.

je30-3m

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE

Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,

Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street, between California and Pine.
ja27-tf

DRY GOODS

AT

REDUCED PRICES!

Meagher, Taaffe & Co.

ARE OFFERING

AT RETAIL:

COTTONS—

6-4, 7-4, 8-4, 9-4, and 10-4 Super Cotton Sheetings;
New York Mills Bleached Muslins;
Wamsutta Bleached Muslins;
White Rock Bleached Muslins;
Masonville Mills Bleached Muslins;
Lonsdale and Slater's Bleached Muslins;
Brown Cotton sheetings and shirtings;

All at Reduced Prices.

LINENS—

6-4, 7-4, 8-4, 9-4, 10-4, and 11-4 super Barmesty and Scotch Linen sheetings;
Pillow and shirting Linens, Diapers, Lawns;
Towels and Towelings of every description;
Napkins, Doylies, etc., etc.;
Barnsley and Scotch Table Damask;

☞ ALL AT REDUCED PRICES.

DRESS GOODS—

Poplins, Mohairs, Melange, Cashmeres, Barege de Laines, Empress Cloth, Prints, Lawns, Organdies, Alpaeas, Linseys, Winseys, Black and Colored silks.

☞ ALL AT REDUCED PRICES.

SHAWLS—

India Cashmere Shawls;
French Cashmere shawls;
Paisley Cashmere shawls;
Broché and Plaid Wool shawls;
Black Embroidered Cashmere shawls;
Chantilly and Lama Lace shawls;
Cloaks, Basques, saques, Talmas;

☞ ALL AT REDUCED PRICES.

HOSIERY—

Ladies', Children's and Gentlemen's Hose and Half Hose, in Cotton, Merino and Lambs' Wool;
Children's and Gentlemen's Under-garments, in Merino, Silk and Lambs' Wool.

☞ ALL AT REDUCED PRICES.

FLANNELS—

Welsh, English, and American Flannels;

All at Reduced Prices.

LACE AND MUSLIN CURTAINS—

☞ ALL AT REDUCED PRICES.

9 Montgomery Street,

LICK BLOCK.

WHOLESALE HOUSE,

107 BATTERY ST., BET. PINE AND CALIFORNIA.

je30

CARPETS.

Removal! Removal!

KENNEDY & BELL

HAVE REMOVED TO

BUSH STREET,

Below Montgomery,

Store lately occupied by the Franco-American Commercial Company.

ap21-3m

A. ROMAN & CO.,

417 AND 419 MONTGMERY STREET,

BOOK-SELLERS, PUBLISHERS,

AND IMPORTERS,

Offer for sale the following list of

PARLOR GAMES,

AT WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

The Garison Game, two styles;
The Magic Wheel, four kinds;
The Game of Authors, different kinds;
Noted People and Places;
The Old Curiosity Shop; Extant Authors;
Tipsy Philosophers; Peggy;
Anybody and Everybody, Somebody and Nobody;
Originations of Shakspeare;
Fun for Winter Evenings; Game of Letters;
The Game of Events;
The Showman; The Commanders of our Forces;
The Game of Familiar Quotations;
Protean Cards, or the Box of 100 Games;
The Game of Great Truths;
The Game of Courtship and Marriage;
The Shakspearian Game;
The Game of Battlefields of our Fathers;
The Game of Young Peddlers;
The Laughable Game of Red, White and Blue;
The Game of School in an Uproar;
The Game of Old Pamphleezle;
The Game of Comical Dominoes;
The Game of Gipsy Fortune Teller;
The Game of Squail, two styles;
Colton's Series of Dissected Maps, viz.:
The World, North America, South America, Africa, Asia, Europe.

We are receiving by Every Steamer,

All the New Publications

OF THE DAY.

Our stock of Books in every branch of

LITERATURE

is very complete, which we offer at the lowest rates.

PUBLIC AND PRIVATE LIBRARIES SUPPLIED, ON FAVORABLE TERMS.

A. ROMAN & CO.,
417 and 419 Montgomery street,
San Francisco.
je19

SUMMER MEDICINE.

PURIFY THE BLOOD

AND

Constitution,

WITH

LE DOYEN'S

SARSAPARILLA,

YELLOW DOCK,

IODINE ALTERATIVE.

CRANE & BRIGHAM, Agents,
SAN FRANCISCO
my19 1m

NATURE UNVEILED,

AT THE

PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street, between California and Pine.
ja27-tj

The Californian.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME V., No 7. OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, JULY 7, 1866.

TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE. 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

PROSE.

The "Fourth" in the Suburbs.—By "Bret."
Inigoings.—By "Inigo."
Sundries.—By "Emstadt."
Amusements.
A Strange Dream.—By Mark Twain.
Sketch of Edwin Forrest.
The Ball of Fire.
Old People.
Cookery Lectures at the "Hub."
A Legend for Swearers.
College "Commons."
Climatic Peculiarities of California
A People too Busy to Read.
The Brothers.
A London Hospital.

POETRY:

Cheated.—By Emilie Lawson.
Ode (July 4, 1866).—By Charles Warren Stoddard.

[For the Californian.]

ODE.

WE know what awful pangs and throes
Of birth were ours when first arose
The child that was to be
Our Goddess—Liberty.

'Twas fitting from such travail-pains
Should spring an idol for our fanes,
And stars not too mean
For a right royal queen.

Then we did robe her as we might
In graceful skirts of red and white,
And to those fair bright bars
Drew down God's burning stars.

She cheered us on the far blue main,
She nursed us on the battle-plain;
For her we armed and fought,
The deadliest danger sought.

With blazing stars more heavenly bright
In deeper red and purer white,
Did royal liberty
Proclaim our victory.

We will not strive to deck her more
In gaudy colors, but adore
Our Vestal in her gown
As chastely white as down.

She who is modest and yet bold,
As firm as steel—honest as gold—
Now does she preach to us
In deeds magnanimous,

And waves her olive-bough of peace.
O! boastful drums and trumpets cease!
Protect her from all taints—
Go throne her with the saints!

JULY 4, 1866. CHARLES WARREN STODDARD.

STILL ANOTHER SNAKE STORY.—A newspaper correspondent at Winterhock writes the following story: "A large snake of the cobra tribe, about 4 feet 6 inches long, got unseen into a farmer's house, it is supposed on the Saturday afternoon, and concealed himself. On the Sunday afternoon, the farmer and his wife were quietly enjoying themselves reading, when the snake crawled out, got, unperceived, under the good woman's crinoline, and twisted itself around her leg from the ankle to the knee, which position it kept for upwards of half an hour. The farmer's wife, all the while thinking it was her favorite kitten, took no notice of it, until at length, wishing to eject the intruder, she slightly raised her dress for the purpose. Judge of her surprise on finding so deadly a creature twisted round her leg. She sat perfectly still, not even looking at her husband lest he should disturb the reptile. At last it uncoiled itself, and then twisted itself about her foot. The shoe fitted loosely, and she softly withdrew her foot, made one bound across the room, and called her husband's attention to the cause of the disturbance. The savage creature now charged the wife, and was only kept off by the husband with his Sunday coat. It at length retreated into the bedroom, and was there killed."—Australian paper.

HORNE TOOKE returned his income at sixty pounds a year; the commissioners said they were not satisfied. Horne Tooke in reply, said he had much more reason to be dissatisfied with the smallness of his income than they had.

[For the Californian.]

THE FOURTH IN THE SUBURBS.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "MY SUBURBAN RESIDENCE."

IN independence of all civic celebration and display, I have been spending the Fourth of July at my suburban residence. Let not the incautious reader suppose that my pleasures were purely bucolic or rural. I have not been unfamiliar with those ingenious contrivances which my youngest boy, in the imperfect orthœpy of youth, denominates as "fire-wax." Even as I write, a subtle, sulphurous flavor pervades the house; the garden walks are strewn with fragmentary and exploded crackers, whose red outer wrappings rustle in the breeze, as though they were the autumnal leaves of that Tree of Liberty which flourishes so pre-eminently at this season. The fences are blackened, remarkable blisters appear upon the white paint of the verandah, and the hand that records these experiences is grimy and black with powder.

The celebration of the day was opened with cheerful energy by a neighbor with a four-pounder. Apparently under the impression that his remoteness from the city limits justified him in an extra vigor of expression, he for a long time held a terrible pre-eminence in the neighborhood, dominating over all other sounds to that extent that the Chinese crackers of my children, albeit they were extra size, sank into puerile insignificance. He kept up this system of brain-shattering explosions, until I hit upon the expedient of upsetting at regular intervals a pile of clap-boards which stood conveniently in my back-yard, and which I am gratified to state produced a concussion, not only equal in intensity, but far superior in the matter of duration. This, or want of powder, silenced him eventually. My Newfoundland dog rendered me valuable assistance during the controversy by barking furiously, and charging the enemy's cannon violently, after each discharge.

In fact I had matured a plan of celebration of my own, with which this self asserting character of my neighbor's somewhat interfered. My eldest boy had been presented with a model of a Monitor, which had a practicable turret that moved by machinery, and I wished to turn the occasion to account. I accordingly constructed on the banks of a little pond in the rear of my lot, a small fortress, which I mounted with miniature practicable cannon, and garrisoned with a company of stolid and inflexible wooden soldiers, borrowed for the occasion from the nursery. A little distance from this frowning fortress I laid a mine, with a slow match. A few feet from the fort floated a model ship-of war with a fine broadside (also practicable) of four guns. The fort bore a rebel flag, the ship-of-war carried the stars and stripes. When I state that I christened the fort, Fort Fisher, the reader will understand how my object was to combine instruction and patriotism, and to endeavor to exhibit to my children in mimic detail the events of that memorable engagement. The Monitor, which also mounted a small cannon in its turret, it is needless to say was kept in reserve until the proper moment.

With the exception of some slight incongruities, the effect of these details when completed was very fine. The fact that the rebel garrison was composed of giants—who might have been, in comparison with the size of the Union ship, roughly estimated at fifteen feet high—lent an additional moral effect to the victory which was to be achieved over them. At exactly twelve the ship of war was placed into position, with her guns covering the fort, and the slow matches lighted. An interval of breathless suspense followed. The audience, consisting of my two children, and a select deputation of young people from the neighboring houses, fairly trembled with excitement.

Bang!—the first gun from the ship. A cheer from the juveniles. No visible effect on the fort, but a decided splash in the water on the opposite side of the ship. On examination one gun was missing from her deck. General depression—with the exception of my youngest, who then and thereafter wildly cheered everything in a most extravagant manner.

The second gun was very appropriately fired from the fort. But, while it resembled the first in its harmlessness toward the object against which it was directed, it was attended by disastrous consequences within. The whole garrison instantly fell stiffly and immovably on their faces, with the exception of the rebel commander, who, being placed for greater prominence on the parapet, calmly dropped over the wall, and remained standing on his head, with his inflexible legs in the air, coolly surveying the enemy during the rest of the engagement. The quiet unconcern he exhibited might have been the effect of discipline, or the conscious security of his position, for the next movement of the ship was to yaw and discharge with extreme rapidity the rest of her broadside into my party, who retired with some precipitation.

On returning to the scene of conflict, it was discovered that one of the rebel sentries had deliberately rolled down the bank into the water and was just then floating in a peculiarly imbecile and stiff legged manner in the pond. A disagreeable smell of burning paint which was occasionally wafted from the fort, was found to proceed from another sentry who had been ignited by some burning wadding and was slowly being consumed from his legs upward, without any visible alteration in his military bearing or movement of his inflexible features. It was evident that the critical moment had come—the hour for decisive action had arrived. The rebel fort was already in a defenceless condition, but for the matter of that the Union war vessel was also in distress, with her shrouds on fire. I rapidly wound up the Monitor, set a slow match to her two redoubtable cannon, and amid the intensest excitement shoved her off. She proceeded toward Fort Fisher finely—although perhaps her turret revolved a little too rapidly to be consistent with the best facilities for aiming—until she arrived directly opposite, and then without the slightest apparent reason changed her course and threw herself with a fearful clicking of wheels full against the hapless Union vessel. Totally disregarding her duty to save the ship at all hazards, she deliberately bore her unfortunate ally to the opposite bank and discharged with frightful rapidity her two cannon, raking the deck of the defenceless vessel and blowing the remaining guns overboard. A thrill of horror ran through the spectators. But at this moment the sagacity of my noble Newfoundland dog who had been barking furiously at the whole proceeding, changed the aspect of affairs. Disregarding the fire of Fort Fisher, he sprang into the pond, sunk the Union vessel with one stroke of his paw, seized the Monitor whose turret still revolved frantically, and brought the vessel dripping to my feet. As a matter of course the mine, till then forgotten, took that opportunity to explode directly under one of the interested spectators.

The infelicities of the morning were repeated in the evening celebration. The exhibition of fire-works was remarkable, and some novel effects were introduced, but, on the whole, it could hardly be called successful. A thick fog enveloped the house, the wind blew chilly from the west, and the moisture dripped incessantly from the foliage. Some of the rockets sulked; those that were successfully ignited were completely controlled by the wind and took one uniform direction and angle in their flight. After I had despatched half a dozen, I received a courteous, but firm remonstrance from one of my neighbors, who informed me that, as their ultimate destination appeared to be his attic windows, he would like some explanation. His statement seemed credible from the fact that the rockets were lost in the fog almost as quickly as they rose. I sent by way of reply another, which I have since learned overtook the messenger, and fixed itself on the verandah, where, for some time, it played like a fiery hose over his garden bed. The Catherine wheels, after one or two revolutions, remained fixed, and derisively hissed at the spectators. A star mine, which had persistently refused to ignite, after having been returned to the parlor, suddenly sprang into fearful activity, sent up a brilliant and variously-tinted shower of sparks into the chandelier, and finally had to be quenched ignominiously by the garden hose. Only the Bengola Lights acted consistently. They burned steadily, with a baleful and peculiarly wicked glare, lighting up the disastrous scene, apparently enjoying the discomfiture of my audience, and investing them with a ghastly solemnity. They burned long after the entertainment was concluded, and one of them, fixed upon the fence, still lends its ominous light as I write these experiences.

THE BALL OF FIRE.

ONE evening towards the close of the last century, two persons were walking arm-in-arm in a shady walk in Hyde Park. One was a soldier, young, good-looking, and apparently in the strongest health; and his companion, a neatly dressed woman, younger than himself, with a gentle, pleasing expression of countenance, fair hair, and a good, though somewhat pale complexion. They were walking quickly, and it was evident from the snatches of their conversation which a passer-by might have caught, that she was anxious to be home by a certain hour, while he endeavored to prolong the walk, and the pleasure which it gave him. Their conversation turned chiefly on the future—the future which they hoped to spend together—for they were engaged—and, though the period of their marriage was uncertain, neither of them entertained doubt or fear on the subject, so constant, deep, and sincere was the affection which subsisted between them. Their walk was not so hurried but that they had time to appoint an hour on the morrow, on which to resume their walk and conversation on the subject of their arrangements and plans for the future; so, when they parted, it was with that feeling of temporary sorrow which is called up by a separation of a few hours only, with a certainty, humanly speaking, of a speedy meeting again.

Truly, they but little knew how uncertain that meeting was! The young man was a private in the ——th Regiment, where he bore the highest character for steadiness and regular conduct, and in a short time he was to obtain a step in rank, which he trusted would enable him to maintain as his wife, this girl, to whom he had long been attached. They were natives of the same country village, and chance had brought them into close contact in London, for she lived as maid to an excellent mistress in Bryanstone Square, and his barracks were but a five minutes' walk distant. The acquaintance was gladly renewed, and soon ripened into the warmest love, and, with the full consent of her mistress and her relations, she engaged herself to him.

She hurried home now to attend to her mistress's dressing, and to be ready to resume her accustomed occupation of reading aloud to her of an evening; for Mrs. Howard was an invalid, and the careful attention of her maid, Jane Irvine, had induced her for many months to treat her more as a companion than as a servant—a distinction which her good education fully warranted.

"Well, Jane," said Mrs. Howard to her, soon after she came in, "I hope you had a pleasant walk with James; and have you settled anything definitely with him?"

"No, ma'am, we can arrange nothing with certainty till he knows when he shall get his promotion; and he has advised me to ask you to be good enough to let me remain with you for some little time yet, as we can hardly marry, so as to be comfortable, for some weeks after that."

"By all means," was Mrs. Howard's ready answer; "I shall be very glad for you to stay as long as it suits you. Now, give me my handkerchief, and after dinner, towards ten o'clock, come to the drawing-room and read to me."

Mrs. Howard went to dinner; Jane, no doubt, to supper. Meantime, the sun had set with brilliancy, and to-night there were no apparent signs of the thunderstorms which had been so frequent of late. The sky was clear and cloudless, and the rich golden light which gleamed over it, tempted one to quarrel with Byron's depreciation of English sunsets as compared with those of more southern lands:

> Slow sinks, more lovely ere his race be run
> Along Morea's hills the setting sun—
> Not as in northern climes, obscurely bright,
> But one unclouded blaze of living light.

But it sank down and was gone, and with it went, though as yet they knew it not, the happiness of those two loving hearts.

The hour came at which Jane was to bring her book, and continue the history which so much interested Mrs. Howard. When she came down, she found, as was often the case, that the party was joined by a young man, her mistress's son, who, having his home in another part of London, often came to dine and spend the evening with his mother. However, the reading was not on that account abandoned, but the young man, William Howard, sitting down in an arm-chair on one side of the fire-place, proposed to listen to it with as much attention as his mother, who sat opposite to him: while Jane Irvine took her place at the table, having the door of the room on her right hand, and her mistress on her left, between herself and the fire place; where, of course, being summer time, there was no fire, but the two arm-chairs retained their position all the year round, and, from force of habit, Mrs. Howard and her son sat in them summer and winter alike. In front of Jane, and shedding their light on her book, were two candles, and there was no other light in the room, as Mrs. Howard had weak eyes, and did not generally occupy herself with any work while the reading was going on.

Suddenly, as Jane Irvine was raising her hand to snuff one of the candles, a scream from her mistress caused her accidentally to put it out, and she echoed herself a piercing scream as a flaming globe of fire roll'ed along the floor, touching the edge of her dress as it passed! A perfect ball of fire, larger than a cricket ball, lighting up the room with a flash for an instant, which then seemed to relapse into utter darkness, so dazzling was its effect!

What was it? Whence could it have come! It had come from the fire-place side, but, as we know, there was no fire there, and had gone—whither? The door was shut, and the window also. The three people were almost paralyzed for a moment, but William Howard was the first to recover himself, and to perceive that his mother was fainting.

"Quick, Jane!" he cried; "bring some water! she is fainting; she is dying! Oh! mother——"

Jane Irvine controlled her own feelings in anxiety for her mistress, for she knew that her constitution could little bear such a shock, and it was not for some time that she was sufficiently recovered to be able to speak. Her first words were—

"I shall die, I shall die within the month."

"No, no, my dear mother; why should you think so? Do not talk like that, I beg of you."

"Yes, William, I shall die. It touched me, and I know that was my summons."

"That is mere superstition," he said; "don't let that weigh with you."

"But it does, William. I cannot help it. I cannot disbelieve it. All whom that fearful messenger touches will leave this world within a month."

Jane shuddered. Had not the messenger touched her, too? William did not leave the house that night, nor did Jane Irvine quit her mistress's side. She spoke very little, and when she did it was with the words of one whose hours are numbered. She told her son where her will would be found; mentioned that she had made in it a provision for her faithful attendant, amongst other small legacies, which she begged her son to see duly paid. This he promised, but added—

"But, my dear mother, don't talk like this. I do trust you will shake off the impression which this has made on your mind. Take a simple explanation of what you saw, and believe that it was one of the curious effects of electricity or some other natural phenomenon. Don't let superstition have such a strong hold upon you."

"You saw it, William, though?" she asked. "You saw it yourself, and it did not touch you?" she added eagerly.

"No, it did not touch me; but I saw it plainly, and Jane saw it, too."

"Yes, and it touched me," said Jane, in a low tone, not too low, though, for it to reach Mrs. Howard's ear, who, raising herself in bed with a look of horror, almost sternly asked, "Did you say it touched you, too? Then you will die."

Jane Irvine shuddered again, and turned away, but was recalled by an exclamation from William. His mother, after uttering those words with an air of prophetic conviction, fell back in a fit. The doctors came, but their skill was of little avail. She never rallied. Jane Irvine was most unremitting in her care, and for days never left her mistress's side; attending to all her wants, and watching most anxiously for a gleam of consciousness, a glance of recognition. All in vain. At night she slept in the same room, and by day she could not be persuaded to leave her, for however short a time. So firmly did she cling to the idea that her beloved mistress would wake once more, and revoke the fatal words, which she felt had cast a sort of spell over her. Why should she die? Life was strong within her—happiness before her. She was not superstitious; she would shake off these gloomy ideas. Mrs. Howard, she could not but believe, would die, but what had that to do with the ball of fire? She had long been an invalid, and her health for the last year had been daily growing more and more feeble, and she was not likely to be able to stand any shock, however slight. Very naturally, with her temperament, the ball of fire had shattered her nerves, already so weak; and had accelerated, though not absolutely caused, the paralysis, which so often strikes down the aged—those who have fought the battle of life and have no strength left to struggle. But with herself the case was widely different. Young, strong, with sound nerves, and not easily frightened, she still admitted that what she had seen on that particular evening had certainly, for the time, alarmed her beyond anything she had ever felt before; but now that was over. These things could be explained by science. Electricity, a power she could not understand, but others did—was that more wonderful than the shooting stars she had so often watched streaming over the sky on a clear November's night? But those words, "Then you will die!"—clear and distinct as her mistress had spoken them, they rang in her ears. "But I will not believe it," she resolutely said, "let me think of other things. Poor James, I have not been able to see or hear of him for some days, but he will have called and have heard of our misfortune. I will write and tell him how ill Mrs. Howard is. I wonder they have not told me of his coming, for he is sure to have asked to see me. I will tell him to call again to-morrow, and I could just see him for five minutes in the hall."

So she wrote, and sent her note, and returned to mount guard by Mrs. Howard. That night there was a change, and before morning Mrs. Howard was a corpse!

So she was dead before the month was out!

Jane Irvine got no answer to her note. To explain why, we must go back to that hot summer's evening, when she and he had, as it proved, taken their last walk together. Near Mrs. Howard's house, on the same side of the square, there was, at that time, a public institution, guarded by a sentry day and night. On the night in question it was the turn of James Radstock, who marched cheerfully to the spot where his watch was to be kept, thinking in his heart that he should in a manner stand sentry over his beloved also. The temptation to look up at the window, and if possible, discover, from the flickering shadows on the blinds, what Jane Irvine was doing—also, perhaps, with a latent hope that he might see a window open, and a smile from her come down to him through the summer night, induced him to extend his walk beyond the regular beat which the national service for the safety of the institution demanded, and more than once he had advanced as far as Mrs. Howard's door, and had then retraced his steps to advance again and again with the same hope. But no Jane was to be seen; only a shadow on the blind, which might or might not be hers. Backwards and forwards he walked, till the night grew dark, and on a sudden he stopped and fell, lifeless apparently, on the pavement—just him, touching his boot, had rolled that ball of fire!

There he lay, and by-and-by there he was seen, senseless and motionless on the pavement. "Drunk," said a passer-by, and moved carelessly on. "Drunk on duty," said a corporal of his regiment, as he found him there; "I should not have thought it of James, though. I don't know a steadier fellow. But that's no good now. Drunk on duty, and so drunk, too," he added, as the men with him tried to raise their comrade, who lay in their arms like a sack; "this won't be passed over in a hurry. Take him home, men," he continued; "we must report him in the morning."

Next morning James recovered so far as to be able to speak, but he seemed to have lost his senses, for all he could say was, "I've seen it—it touched me."

"Seen what, lad," asked the soldier, who was bringing him some breakfast, "your own ghost?"

"That ball of fire; it touched me!"

"Fire-water, I expect it was. And it certainly touched you, or you touched it; for you were as drunk as you could be, last night."

"No, no," James answered, "I wasn't drunk. I tell you, I saw it as plain as I see you now."

"No doubt you did, my good fellow, lots of it."

"I shall die; it touched me here," he went on, pointing to his foot.

"You've got into a scrape, anyhow," his sympathizing friend answered; "but I don't know about dying."

"I must die within the month! Oh, poor Jane, poor Jane!"

"I can't make you out, unless you're drunk still; but why you should be so bent on dying, I don't see."

"I saw it," James went on. "It came straight towards me, and touched my foot, and then vanished. Oh! it was horrible. I must die; I know it."

"Never fear, man," said the other; "you're a little cracked, I do believe; but here's your breakfast, and you had better eat it; it may do you good." Poor James! His trial came on, and the evidence went to prove that he was drunk on duty. He persisted in every word of his story, that he had seen a great ball of fire, that it had rolled along the pavement towards him, had passed over his boot, and then vanished. Never in all the cross questioning did he vary a hair's breadth from his statement, adding that after that he was totally unconscious of anything till he found himself next morning in the lock up of his barracks, on, as he was told, a charge of drunkenness. All this he maintained, but who would believe such an unnatural story on the strength of his unsupported word? On a sudden there was a mention of a new witness in the prisoner's favor, and Mr. William Howard appeared, and gave such clear evidence of the appearance of the ball of fire, further explaining that it might well have passed out of his door to the feet of the sentry who had extended his beat, that the whole face of the charge against him changed, and by comparing notes as to the time at which these appearances had been made to both parties, it was evident that the statement of the soldier was wholly true, and he was fully acquitted.

After the trial, Mr. Howard joined James to congratulate him on his escape, which was unquestionably a very narrow one. James expressed his gratitude to him for having stepped in in time to save his character—beyond that he had neither care nor hope.

"Why?" asked Mr. Howard, surprised at the continued gloom which oppressed the man, instead of the cheerfulness which he expected him to feel at the result of the trial.

"It's of no use, sir," was the only answer.

"How do you mean, of no use?" said Mr. Howard. "It's all right enough now."

"I am a dead man, sir. No man can live a month who has been touched by that ball of fire."

Mr. Howard was struck. Those were the very words used by his mother, who was now hovering between life and death. He had not the heart to argue about it then; but merely tell ing the man that his mother was ill, which was the reason Jane Irvine could not see him at present, he went to his own house, where business called him. When he came back to his mother's house next morning, it was to hear that she had breathed her last. In a few minutes a messenger came hurrying in to say that James Radstock had just been found dead in his bed. On looking round at Jane Irvine, he saw her grow deadly pale, and in an instant she fell back—fainting.

He thought she was dead, and for a moment his strong mind yielded to the influence of superstition; he thought that she, too, had in reality been called away by the fiery messenger! But it was not so; by degrees the color returned to her cheek, and life reanimated her pulses; but the shock had been so great, that even her strong nerves gave way in some degree, and a long and serious illness followed. When she recovered, it was to contemplate an altered and lonely future. Her mistress was dead, and her tryst with James would be held in heaven, never on earth. To that she must look forward, and, faithful to the one idea of happiness at last, she pursued a useful and contented life on earth, cheering those around with kindness and sympathy, doing good to the small circle in which she lived, but never giving up her heart to another (though many a one beat warmly when her name was spoken;) for it was wholly wrapped up in the great love she had borne for James on earth, and as fully belonged to him in Heaven.

Never to her latest day did she forget that fatal evening, though, as years passed on, she learned to look back upon it with calmness, and at length regarded it, as indeed it was, as a coincidence, rather than a cause.—Once a Week.

COOKERY LECTURES AT "THE HUB."

PROFESSOR BLOT is the hero of the hour. He has taken Boston by storm, and the whole city is at his feet. To mention his name is to excite immediately the most lively interest, and it is only necessary to say that one has been to Blot's lectures to become at once the centre of curiosity and attraction. Emerson, the Allston club exhibition, the new pictures at Doll & Richardson's in Summer street, the picnic of the bears at Childs & Jenks', plans for the summer, etc., are totally insignificant topics compared with the one engrossing subject of Blot and his system of cookery. The daily papers devote columns to reports of his lectures, and, as to the Transcript, it may safely be said to have "Blot on the brain," for, not content with very clever and full reports of the doings of the famous professor, it considers it a duty to perpetrate daily some witticisms over the subject, which, if they do not end in driving the perpetrators thereof to distraction, certainly will the public. It has been wittily said that if Shakspeare had not killed Mercutio, Mercutio would have killed Shakspeare. Very much of the same serious result is to be anticipated if our indispensable companion of the tea-table continue to give us a daily dish of Blot, flavored with "sauce piquante." For if the jocose author of these continual pleasantries himself survive, as by a miracle, can the public stand it? For the sake of others, then, if not for himself, let him profit by Dr. Holmes' advice, and never try to "be funny as he can."

But to return to the professor and his mission. Surely it is a benevolent one, and, if he succeeds in delivering American housekeepers from the dominion of the cooks, who now reign supreme, he will be entitled to the nation's everlasting gratitude, and ought to have a monument raised in his honor bigger than the one to be erected to the discoverer of ether. One thing is certain, that the ladies who attend his lectures catch the professor's enthusiasm for his art, and return to their homes with the full and sincere intention of testing for themselves his very fascinating receipts. Whether this enthusiasm will be lasting is another question, that, however, is not the professor's duty to solve. He does his part well, at all events. He not only understands himself thoroughly, but has a remarkable faculty of imparting information. His explanations are so full and clear that it seems scarcely necessary to ask him any questions, though he is continually plied with them, questions in many cases so idle and childish that his patience at times must be sorely tried. It is a singular fact that questions of this character are mostly asked by old ladies, who, judging from their interrogations, are entirely devoid of the power of comprehending the simplest details. Several of these well-dressed and important dowagers hover around the platform at every lecture, and appear plentifully supplied with curiosity, if not with brains. But nothing disturbs the professor's equanimity. He is never flurried. He answers all questions politely, but as concisely as possible, and proceeds with his explanations.

The first thing on the programme is writing the bill-of-fare on the black-board. When this is copied by his audience, his assistant proceeds quietly, quickly, and neatly to cook the dinner, while he stands by and explains. Besides giving the receipts for the different dishes under preparation, the professor throws out hints with regard to the proper order of the various courses. Thus melons, he asserts, should not make part of the dessert, but be served after the soup, or if there is no soup they should form the first course. Raw oysters at dinner is against all principles of gastronomy. If served before the soup they spoil its taste; if after, they neutralize its effects. They should therefore be reserved for breakfasts, lunches, or suppers. The daily papers have been so free in their reports, it seems scarcely worth while to repeat what they have already given so well, but for the information of those readers of your paper who are yet uninformed as to the professor's system of cooking, I give one bill-of-fare in its order, with the receipts of its various dishes:

Potage a la Julienne.
Fish, with Genevoise sauce.
Beef, baked, with sauce piquante.
Cotellettes jardiniere—Croquettes.
Spinach, au gres.
Smelts, fried.
Petites bouchees a la creme.
Pie.

Potage a la Julienne for eight persons: Slice two carrots and two turnips in fine fillets, melt a small tablespoon of butter in a sauce pan, stir in the carrot and turnip and keep stirring until they are partly fried; add a small leek cut fine, not chopped; pour two quarts of broth, strained, on the vegetables, cover and put on the corner of the fire to simmer until the vegetables are perfectly done.

Fish, with Genevoisse sauce: Put a two pound bass in a pan and nearly cover it with cold water, with a few slices of carrot and onion, two stalks of parsley and thyme; boil it ten minutes, add a tablespoonful of vinegar to each pound of fish. Genevoise sauce: Melt two tablespoons of butter with a little onion and a teaspoonful of flour; stir until brown, add a gill of the water in which the fish was cooked, half a gill of white wine, a teaspoonful of vinegar, a few preserved or fresh mushrooms cut in pieces.

Beef, baked, with sauce piquante: Put the beef in a bake-pan with salt and pepper on the top and a little butter; pretty warm oven, not very quick; mix the gravy with the sauce. Sauce piquante: One-half tablespoonful of butter, a little piece of onion chopped fine, one teaspoon of flour; stir until brown; two tablespoonsful of vinegar, two of broth; just before serving a little chopped parsley; if too thick, add broth.

Cotellettes jardiniere: Cover a carrot and turnip with water, add a pinch of salt; boil until tender, then put them through a colllender; put a little piece of butter in a pan, when melted put in six chops, turn both sides until half done; take them out, put in the pan a teaspoonful of flour and stir until the flour is turning brown, then add nearly a gill of broth; put the chops back and add the carrot and turnip.

Veal croquettes: One pound of cold veal, without any fat: chop it very fine, melt half a tablespoonful of butter over the fire, put in a little piece of onion chopped fine, stir it until fried, add half a tablespoonful of flour; then put in the meat and stir, add salt and pepper, and one and a half gills of broth, three stalks of parsley chopped fine; stir all the time it is on the fire. Stir in fast two eggs, and then take it out of the pan to cool; when cold, spread flour on the paste-board, roll the croquettes in it, then dip each in egg, and roll them in bread crumbs; put butter in the saucepan, and stir in pepper and salt and a little nutmeg; as soon as vapor rises, they are done.

Spinach au gres: Throw the spinach when washed and picked into boiling water with a little salt; boil three or four minutes, turn it into a cullender und press it; chop it, melt a small teaspoonful of butter in a saucepan, put in spinach with salt and pepper, a little grated nutmeg, one teaspoonful of flour, stir well, and add a gill of broth. This dish is worthy of great commendation, and is to be especially recommended to all those unfortunates who, not liking spinach the way it is usually prepared, have been condemned in early spring to do without the only fresh vegetable to be had. For if hitherto they have regarded spinach with even as much dislike as poor Goldsmith did tripe and bacon—

> "Now, my lord, as for tripe, 'tis my utter aversion,
> And bacon I hate like a Turk or a Persian,"

They will become at once converted, and own that thus prepared spinach is very palatable, or as the professor says, "most excellent."

Fried smelts: Roll in flour, and string them on a skewer and put them, skewer and all, into boiling fat: sprinkle them with salt when done, strain the fat, put it away in a stone jar and use it again.

Petites bouchees a la creme: Sift one half pound of flour on the paste-board, make a hole in the middle, put in a pinch of salt and one gill of cold water, and mix it well with the hand, roll out the paste one-fourth of an inch thick, spread over it the whole quantity of butter, previously worked in cold water to get out the salt, fold the paste in four, then roll it, fold it again in four, roll it out four or six times; keep it very cool; cut into shapes, put on with a brush yolk of egg and water; bake in a quick oven and do not open the door for ten minutes or the cakes will fall. Fill them with either prepared creams or sweatmeats.

The pie is made in the same manner but with a plainer under-crust.

After the dinner is cooked comes the tasting, which is attended with some difficulties. The ladies on the front seats have a great advantage. They can look and taste at their ease, but for those further off, it requires either a great deal of impudence in the way of elbowing and pushing, or else an illimitable share of patience. The tasting, upon the whole, seems very satisfactory, still if the truth must be told in regard to a few of the dishes some of the ladies had more confidence and enthusiasm for the professor before than after the tasting. But is perfect success possible in this world even in the noble science of gastronomy?

This dinner took over two hours and a half to prepare, on account of the puff paste, but the lectures generally are two hours in length, and are held on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, at eleven o'clock. The course is to consist of fourteen, three of which have been already given. They are extremely well attended, the class increasing at each lecture. It is composed chiefly of ladies of all ages, from the experienced matron to the housekeeper in prospective. It is amusing to watch the looks of the ladies as they enter. Some come in with a doubting, half-laughing expression, as though they thought the whole thing a good joke; others have a most business-like, enthusiastic air, and some, among whom are the dowagers mentioned above, regard the whole assembly, including the professor, assistants, gas, cooking-stove, table, etc., with an air of mild patronage and benevolent superiority truly edifying to witness. Many of the ladies who listened to Prof. Blot at eleven on Friday were seen at Emerson's lecture at twelve on Saturday. When one of the number was asked from which she had derived the greatest good, mentally and morally, she unhesitatingly gave the palm to the French professor. Is this a humiliating or encouraging sign of the times?—Boston Correspondence Springfield Republican.

College "Commons."—When our fathers were in college, the public table at which all the students were required to take their meals was prolific in trouble. "Bread and Butter Rebellions" succeeded one another with almost as much regularity as the fruits in their season. Poor food, bad cooking, and no choice but Hobson's choice of horses, "Take this or go without," led to constant quarrels between the students and the faculty, in which, according to the judgment of the latter, the complainants were always wrong and the steward was always right. In time "commons" disappeared in almost every college, and for a quarter of a century private boarding houses and dinner clubs have provided "rations" according to the taste or purse of each student. Thus the only remaining traces of that English institution, the college hall, with its well served roasts of beef and mutton, have the occasional public dinners at Commencement and other festive times, with the "tongue" and "pie," horresco referens, on which the academic appetites have been regaled. But now a curious change is in progress. "Commons" are coming back, not with all the objectionable features of the old régime, but in a sensible form which gives general satisfaction. The authorities of our oldest colleges are providing halls and table furniture, making purchases of provisions and of fuel at wholesale prices, and offering board to students at prices much lower than it can be obtained for in the private clubs. A committee of those students who come to the common table is chosen to superintend its management and suggest improvements. The actual expense of the establishment is divided up in equal proportions among those who share in the advantages. None are required to come to the college table; any one may. Thus many of the benefits of a college dining hall are secured and most of the evils are avoided. Good board at low prices is secured, and a wholesome check is put upon the exorbitance of private boarding-houses. Harvard, we believe, is entitled to the credit of devising this new fashion. The experiment has there been tried so thoroughly that it is no longer an experiment. It is a success. Perhaps two hundred students voluntarily avail themselves of the proffered privilege. Not only do they receive board at a low rate, but the price of board in other places is decidedly lessened. Yale College is following the example of Harvard. A college boarding house has just been opened on the plan we have indicated and is very popular. Other colleges are likely to pursue a similar course. By and by we expect to see the college "buttery" or "butlery" re-established—a plain refreshment room from which the students may procure their breakfast and tea at reasonable rates. Some place within the college walls from which the occasional invalids may be served, and to which the belated and the busy may resort, would be very popular. Many persons, indeed, if the fashion were once introduced, would like, as a general rule, the European way of breakfasting in one's room and dining at a public table. It is both economical and convenient. Nation.

At Adrian, Michigan, a lady saw an engine house with a steeple, and innocently asked a gentleman attendant, "What church is that?" The gentleman, after reading the sign "Deluge No. 3," replied: "I guess it must be the Third Baptist."

CHEATED.

THE dusky clouds of evening flee,
The darksome night broods dismally,
The fog's white fingers dimly grope
Abont the far hill's fading slope—
I watch the gathering shadows fall,
The dreariest shadow of them all.

My mother sang the sorriest songs,
My baby-dreams were of her wrongs;
Then came a glimpse of life complete,
One brief sweet dream—a lovely cheat!
And then the shadows one by one,
Shut out the glory of the sun.

How often in the April day
When clouds flew darkly o'er my way,
I've tried to reach some spot of blue—
The rift the sunbeam glimmered through—
Only to find the clouds could fly
As fast as I—as fast as I.

And when the Summer clothed the wood,
Within its leafy solitude,
Chilled by the thick glooms, I have crept
Where, here and there, a sun-gleam stept,
The leaves o'er head would interlace,
And drop their shadows on my face.

And even in my very dreams
I wander by the shadiest streams;
Nor buttercups the meadows gild,
Nor robin-redbreasts sing nor build,
Nor lovers tell their tender vows
Under the wailing hemlock boughs.

And now, I hear the eerie Sea
Call from its caverns mournfully;
Lost in the blackness of the night
The winds are sobbing with affright;
And dolefully upon the pane,
Drift the first dull drops of the rain.

New York Evening Post.] EMILIE LAWSON.

A STRANGE DREAM.

BY MARK TWAIN.

VOLCANO HOUSE, CRATER OF "KILAUEA,"
Sandwich Islands, April 1, 1866.

ALL day long I have sat apart and pondered over the mysterious occurrences of last night. * * There is no link lacking in the chain of incidents—my memory presents each in its proper order with perfect distinctness, but still—

However, never mind these reflections—I will drop them and proceed to make a simple statement of the facts.

Towards eleven o'clock, it was suggested that the character of the night was peculiarly suited to viewing the mightiest active volcano on the earth's surface in its most impressive sublimity. There was no light of moon or star in the inky heavens to mar the effect of the crater's gorgeous pyrotechnics.

In due time I stood, with my companion, on the wall of the vast cauldron which the natives, ages ago, named Hale mau mau—the abyss wherein they were wont to throw the remains of their chiefs, to the end that vulgar feet might never tread above them. We stood there, at dead of night, a mile above the level of the sea, and looked down a thousand feet upon a boiling, surging, roaring ocean of fire!—shaded our eyes from the blinding glare, and gazed far away over the crimson waves with a vague notion that a supernatural fleet, manned by demons and freighted with the damned, might presently sail up out of the remote distance; started when tremendous thunder-bursts shook the earth, and followed with fascinated eyes the grand jets of molten lava that sprang high up toward the zenith and exploded in a world of fiery spray that lit up the sombre heavens with an infernal splendor.

"What is your little bonfire of Vesuvius to this?"

My ejaculation roused my companion from his reverie, and we fell into a conversation appropriate to the occasion and the surroundings. We came at last to speak of the ancient custom of casting the bodies of dead chieftains into this fearful cauldron, and my comrade, who is of the blood royal, mentioned that the founder of his race, old King Kamehameha the First—that invincible old pagan Alexander—had found other sepulture than the burning depths of the Hale mau mau. I grew interested at once: I knew that the mystery of what became of the corpse of the warrior King had never been fathomed; I was aware that there was a legend connected with this matter, and I felt as if there could be no more fitting time to listen to it than the present. The descendant of the Kamehamehas said:

"The dead king was brought in royal state down the long, winding road that descends from the rim of the crater to the scorched and chasm-riven plain that lies between the Hale mau mau and those beetling walls yonder in the distance. The guards were set and the troops of mourners began the weird wail for the departed. In the middle of the night came a sound of innumerable voices in the air, and the rush of invisible wings; the funeral torches wavered, burned blue, and went out! The mourners and watchers fell to the ground paralyzed by fright, and many minutes elapsed before any one dared to move or speak, for they believed that the phantom messengers of the dread Goddess of Fire had been in their midst. When at last a torch was lighted, the bier was vacant—the dead monarch had been spirited away! Consternation seized upon all, and they fled out of the crater. When day dawned, the multitude returned, and began the search for the corpse. But not a footprint, not a sign, was ever found. Day after day the search was continued, and every cave in the great walls, and every chasm in the plain, for miles around, was examined, but all to no purpose—and from that day to this the resting-place of the lion king's bones is an unsolved mystery. But years afterward, when the grim prophetess Wiahowakawak lay on her deathbed, the goddess Pele appeared to her in a vision and told her that eventually the secret would be revealed, and in a remarkable manner, but not until the great Kauhuhu, the Shark God, should desert the sacred cavern Aua Puhi, in the Island of Molokai, and the waters of the sea should no more visit it, and its floors should become dry. Ever since that time, the simple, confiding natives have watched for the sign. And now, after many and many a summer has come and gone, and they who were in the flower of youth then have waxed old and died, the day is at hand! The great Shark God has deserted the Aua Puhi: a month ago, for the first time within the records of the ancient legends, the waters of the sea ceased to flow into the cavern, and its stony pavement is become dry! As you may easily believe, the news of this event spread like wild fire through the islands, and now the natives are looking every hour for the miracle, which is to unveil the mystery, and reveal the secret grave of the dead hero.

—

After I had gone to bed, I got to thinking of the volcanic magnificence we had witnessed, and could not go to sleep. I hunted up a book and concluded to pass the time in reading. The first chapter I came upon related several instances of remarkable revelations, made to men through the agency of dreams—of roads and houses, trees, fences and all manner of landmarks, shown in visions and recognized afterwards in waking hours, and which served to point the way to some dark mystery or other.

At length I fell asleep, and dreamed that I was abroad in the great plain that skirts the Hale mau mau. I stood in a sort of twilight which softened the outlines of surrounding objects, but still left them tolerably distinct. A gaunt, naked figure stepped out from the shadow of a rude column of lava, and moved away with a slow and measured step, beckoning me to follow. I did so. I marched down, down, down, hundreds of feet, upon a narrow trail which wound its tortuous course through piles and pyramids of seamed and blackened lava, and under overhanging masses of sulphur formed by the artist-hand of Nature into an infinitude of fanciful shapes. The thought crossed my mind that possibly my phantom guide might lead me down among the bowels of the crater, and then disappear and leave me to grope my way through its mazes, and work out my deliverance as best I might, and so, with an eye to such a contingency, I picked up a stone, and "blazed" my course by breaking off a projecting corner, occasionally, from lava walls and festoons of sulphur. Finally we turned into a cleft in the crater's side, and pursued our way through its intricate windings for many a fathom down toward the home of the subterranean fires, our course lighted all the while by a ruddy glow which filtered up through innumerable cracks and crevices, and which afforded me occasional glimpses of the flood of molten fire boiling and hissing in the profound depths beneath us. The heat was intense, and the sulphurous atmosphere suffocating, but I toiled on in the footsteps of my stately guide, and uttered no complaint. At last we came to a sort of rugged chamber whose sombre and blistered walls spake with mute eloquence of some fiery tempest that had spent its fury here in a bygone age. The spectre pointed to a great boulder at the farther extremity—stood and pointed, silent and motionless, for a few fleeting moments, and then disappeared! "The grave of the last Kamehameha!" The words swept mournfully by, from unknown source, and died away in the distant corridors of my prison-house, and I was alone in the bowels of the earth, in the home of desolation, in the presence of death!

My first frightened impulse was to fly, but a stronger impulse arrested me and impelled me to approach the massive boulder the spectre had pointed at. With hesitating step I went forward and stood beside it—nothing there; I grew bolder, and walked around and about it, peering shrewdly into the shadowy half light that surrounded it—still nothing. I paused to consider what to do next. While I stood irresolute, I chanced to brush the ponderous stone with my elbow, and lo! it vibrated to my touch! I would as soon have thought of starting a kiln of bricks with my feeble hand. My curiosity was excited. I bore against the boulder, and it still yielded—I gave a sudden push with my whole strength, and it toppled from its foundation with a crash that sent the echoes thundering down the avenues and passages of the dismal cavern! And there, in a shallow excavation over which it had rested, lay the crumbling skeleton of King Kamehameha the Great, thus sepulchred in long years, by supernatural hands! The bones could be none other, for with them lay the rare and priceless crown of pulamalama coral, sacred to royalty, and tabu to all else beside. A hollow human groan issued out of the——

I woke up. How glad I was to know it was all a dream! "This comes of listening to the legend of the noble lord—of reading of those lying dream revelations—of allowing myself to be carried away by the wild beauty of old Kileana at midnight—of gorging too much pork and beans for supper!" And so I turned over, and fell asleep again. And dreamed the same dream precisely as before; followed the phantom—"blazed" my course—arrived at the grim chamber—heard the sad spirit voice—overturned the massy stone—beheld the regal crown and the decaying bones of the great king!

I woke up, and reflected long upon the curious and singularly vivid dream, and finally muttered to myself, "This—this is becoming serious!"

I fell asleep again, and again I dreamed the same dream, without a single variation! I slept no more, but tossed restlessly in bed, and longed for daylight. And when it came I wandered forth, and descended to the wide plain in the crater. I said to myself, "I am not superstitious, but if there is anything in that dying woman's prophecy, I am the instrument appointed to uncurtain this ancient mystery." As I walked along, I even half expected to see my solemn guide step out from some nook in the lofty wall, and beckon me to come on. At last when I reached the place where I had first seen him in my dream, I recognized every surrounding object, and there, winding down among the blocks and fragments of lava, I saw the very trail I had traversed in my vision! I resolved to traverse it again, come what might. I wondered if, in my unreal journey, I had "blazed" my way, so that it would stand the test of stern reality; and thus wondering, a chill went to my heart when I came to the first stony projection I had broken off in my dream, and saw the fresh new fracture, and the dismembered fragment lying on the ground! My curiosity rose up, and banished all fear, and I hurried along as fast as the rugged road would allow me. I looked for my other "blazes," and found them; found the cleft in the wall; recognized all its turnings; walked in the light that ascended from the glowing furnaces visible far below; sweated in the close, hot atmosphere, and breathed the sulphurous smoke—and at last I stood hundreds of feet beneath the peaks of Kileana in the ruined chamber, and in the presence of the mysterious boulder!

"This is no dream," I said; "this is a revelation from the realm of the supernatural; and it becomes not me to longer reason, conjecture, suspect, but blindly to obey the impulses given me by the unseen power that guides me."

I moved with slow and reverent step toward the stone and bore against it. It yielded perceptibly to the pressure. I brought my full weight and strength to bear, and surged against it. It yielded again, but I was so enfeebled by my toilsome journey that I could not overthrow it. I rested a little, and then raised an edge of the boulder by a strong, steady push, and placed a small stone under it to keep it from sinking back to its place. I rested again, and then repeated the process. Before long, I had added a third prop, and had got the edge of the boulder considerably elevated. The labor and the close atmosphere together were so exhausting, however, that I was obliged to lie down, then, and recuperate my strength by a longer season of rest. And so, hour after hour I labored, growing more and more weary, but still upheld by a fascination which I felt was infused into me by the invisible powers whose will I was working. At last I concentrated my strength in a final effort, and the stone rolled from its position.

I can never forget the overpowering sense of awe that sank down like a great darkness upon my spirit at that moment. After a solemn pause to prepare myself, with bowed form and uncovered head, I slowly turned my gaze till it rested upon the spot where the great stone had lain.

There wasn't any bones there.

* * * * * * *

I just said to myself, "Well, if this ain't the blastedest infernalest humbug that ever I've come across yet, I wish I may never!"

And then I scratched out of there, and marched up here to the Volcano House, and got out my old raw-boned fool of a horse, "Oahu," and "lammed" him till he couldn't stand up without leaning against something.

You cannot bet anything on dreams. MARK TWAIN.

N. Y. Saturday Press.]

THE Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science is open every day and evening, and every Sunday from two o'clock in the afternoon till ten in the evening. Dr. Jordan's Sunday evening lectures to young men, illustrative of the anatomical models and scientific charts on exhibition, are full of valuable information and scientific research.

A CORRESPONDENT of a western religious paper knows of a preacher in one of the Southern States who has charge of four churches, edits a newspaper, is president of a female college, runs several pedlar wagons, keeps up a farm, and owns several patent rights which he farms out.

CLIMATIC PECULIARITIES OF CALIFORNIA.

JUST at this time, when all the world has its attention occupied by details of approaching or prevailing cholera, and the citizens of this coast have been questioning whether the dreadful epidemic is to make its appearance among us, a brief reference to the peculiarities of our climate, in reference to its health-giving propensities, will be received with interest. Probably in no part of the world were so many diversities of atmospheric condition ever found so curiously commingled at one and the same moment. Much of this is due to local configuration. Thus we find, according to the statistics of Dr. Logan (see his Report on the Medical Topography and Epidemics of California,) in the western slope of the Coast Range, between Point Conception and Cape Mendocino, a multiplicity and confusion of climates almost indescribable. South of Point Conception quite a different kind of climate is noticeable, and in the elevated Sierra Nevada and Klamath basins and plateaus a similar change is observed in the climatic features. Again, the climate of the Great Basin of Utah and of the Colorado Desert are as distinct from each other as they are from all the rest. The atmosphere at San Francisco is favorably affected by its position, being in close vicinity to the pass known as the Golden Gate, which allows free access to the sea winds and attendant mists and fogs, while the smaller valleys opening into the larger valley of the Bay, as well as most of the valleys embosomed in the Coast Range, though having each a peculiarly modified climate of its own, and productions corresponding, all partake more or less of the characteristics of the climate of San Francisco—the shades of difference being caused by the great equalizing power of the ocean, and the greater or less exposure to it. The Pacific winds are the great barometer by which the degrees of health are determined. The nearer the Pacific the denser and more frequent the fog, the stronger the winds, the warmer the winters, the cooler the summers. Every degree of temperature can be found in close juxtaposition near the level of the sea—from the heat of a torrid zone to a chilling cold. The climate of various places is graduated in the summer by their comparative distance from the ocean—Sacramento being eighty miles direct, Benicia forty, Napa thirty-five, Sonoma thirty, Petaluma twenty, San Rafael ten. At Sacramento the influence of the sea-breeze is sometimes wanting and the heat oppressive, but Sonoma valley, while far enough off from the ocean to escape the fogs and cold blasts which prevail at San Francisco, enjoys just enough of the sea-breeze to temper the heat of every summer day to the right standard for comfort. Apparent inversions of latitude perplex the visitor. In the region about Marysville the stranger finds himself in April enveloped in a fierce sweltering heat, and scarce hears the song of a bird. Passing by steamer via San Francisco to San José, a distance of more than two hundred miles, he finds a cool, spring-like freshness in the air and the singing of innumerable birds—being as if he passed out of a tropical into a temperate climate, when, in fact, he is due south of Marysville by the whole route passed over.

The Sacramento and San Joaquin valleys may be called a single valley, the meteoric condition of which varies as little as its geographical formation. The exposure, according to Logan's tables, is locally over low plains, with much surface water, in the centre of the wide interior valley. The climatic condition ranges from 46.9 up to 72.9—the mean for the whole year being 60.05. This is the approximate estimate at this city for nine years. The free movement of the aerial mass is interrupted by the frequent ranges of mountains imparting a tropical feature. The mean successive daily range of barometre here, in summer, frequently does not amount to more than the ninety-four thousandth part of an inch. During the past year Sacramento has been subjected to an unusually severe winter, followed by much rain, and a sudden change from cold to heat. Yet, withal, it is quite as healthy as any portion of the State. The diseases are the usual order, including epidemics, contagious, infections, and meteoric. The contagious embrace variola, scarlatina, and rubeola; the infectious—typhoid, typhus, and spotted fevers; and the meteoric—influenza and diptheria. The persons most affected are usually the native Mexicans or the mixed races, whether of Mexico or California, the lower foreign population, and the Indian tribes. Fevers are occasional. We may add, while on this subject, that the meteoric conditions of the climate this year do not promise any consequences more pernicious to health than have been manifested in our healthiest periods—Bee.

THE New York Atlas says: Nature in her most benignant mood never fashioned a more kindly or a milder-mannered man than the facetious Mark Twain, yet he can't stand mosquitoes. Mosquitoes cause him to take gloomy views of human life and human nature. Mosquitoes make him positively bloodthirsty. In a letter from Honolulu to the Sacramento Union he pensively and pathetically remarks: "There are a good many mosquitoes around to-night, and they are rather troublesome; but it is a source of unalloyed satisfaction to me to know that the two millions I sat down on a minute ago will never sing again."

A LONDON HOSPITAL.

ON the blackboard by the door of a London hospital there is attached by four wafers a simple announcement. Simple as it looks, it meets with very great notice, for as the students keep dropping in, some in little knots, others singly, a good many in pairs, the first thing they look at is the little sheet of paper, with but few words in print and fewer in writing upon it. "Has it begun?" "Is Mr. —— here yet?" are the constant questions addressed to the important man with the red collar on his coat of blue. The functionary is the porter, whose chief business consists in keeping order among the crowd of people in the out-patients' room, and in letting up and down a wooden bar to allow them, as their turn arrives, access to the celebrities that they have come to consult. Let us follow the students as they pass through the various passages and corridors of the building. The out-patients' practice has no charm for the students to-day. The physicians are going their rounds alone; for, however often the the ry may be enunciated that in rank the practice of physic takes precedence of the practice of surgery, yet the fact remains patent that a brilliant operator creates more enthusiasm than the best physician, his test-tubes, stethoscope and microscope notwithstanding. Passing up a narrow staircase, we find ourselves at the top of a tier of steps, at the bottom of which is the room proper. The bright rays of the sun pass through the ample skylight, and discover a densely packed mass of people filling the round gallery.

We are in the operating theatre of the hospital. Around us we see, set into the walls, medallions of the great surgeons of the old times—the apostles of the art, whose names are held in veneration by their clever, eager followers of to-day. Here and there among the students we have pale-faced, anxious-looking men, who have called in during their round of so-called "general practice." They have come to see their former master operate—the surgeon who is at the pinnacle of the profession, and who has fame, wealth, and now a title, by his talent, and who has been the instrument in God's hands of alleviating much human suffering and distress. In the area of the theatre there are signs of approaching operations. There is the peculiar table, that can extend and fold in all directions, with its straps and appendages. There are the cans of hot and cold water, the basins, the sponges, and many other things. The surgical dressers flit about, anxious that nothing shall be forgotten, and the house-surgeon, with ligatures ready in the button-hole of his coat, is examining for the last time the glittering array of knives and other instruments, preserved in a case as delicately lined as a lady's jewel-box. By degrees the minor luminaries of the medical and surgical staff of the hospital arrive, and the students ranged above, so noisy at their college in awarding approval to their favorite teachers, only show here by a half-stifled buzz their recognition.

At last the lion of the hour arrives, a strong, stalwart man, placid, cool and smiling, the least anxious of the whole assembly. A smothered roar of approbation meets him as he lifts his eyes and nods to the assembled crowd. A gesture of his hand checks any unseemly noise, for now the patient is being carried in and laid with great tenderness on the cushioned table.

The latter gives a sharp, half-frightened glance above at the dense mass of hushed, eager and expectant students. The time has at last arrived which has been in his thoughts for days and weeks, aye, may be for months. It is a moment of agony for the poor man, in spite of all the care and kindness shown him. The great surgeon whispers in his ear and pats his shoulder kindly. The patient grasps the hand of his friend, and instantly another medical man fits the apparatus for the inhalation of chloroform. Soon he is wandering in his talk, he gesticulates with his hands, but soon he drops off like a sleeping child. Quietly turning up his cuffs and giving a scrutinizing glance through the gleaming instruments on the white-clothed tray, the surgeon turns to the diseased limb. There is a dead stillness through the theatre as with a steady hand the operator coolly and rapidly proceeds.

His knife is crimson, and the warm red blood wells up and spirts around. The saw is quickly used, and a few more dexterous movements with the knife complete the operation. All the pumping arteries are caught and tied, and the still unconscious patient is carried off to awake in his bed and find himself surrounded by all that skill, ingenuity and wealth can bring to bear for suffering man.

BOUQUET HOLDER AND WAIST CLASP.—An elegant and handsome waist clasp has made its appearance. The buckle is made of gold, and not only performs the functions that usually devolve on this article of dress, but is also intended to hold (in a little glass receptacle bound with the same metal as the buckle) a flower, such as a camellia or rose-bud. Altogether, it is the most elegant and chaste article of its kind that we have seen for some time, and deserves, as no doubt it will, to become very popular among the ladies.—Boudoir.

A WAG wrote on the back of a fat Alderman, "Widened at the expense of the corporation."

SANTA ANNA.—Few men have experienced so many ups and downs in life as Santa Anna, who is now quietly sojourning at Elizabethport, New Jersey, where he arrived, recently, from St. Thomas. He was born at Jalapa, Mexico, in 1798, and is therefore 68 years old. No one man living has mingled so freely in the scores of revolutions and political changes which have taken place in Mexico since that time. He first came into public notice during the war for Mexican independence in 1821, and was given command of Vera Cruz in the following year, after expelling the royalists from the city. Yturbide, who had proclaimed himself emperor, soon deposed him, but Santa Anna, in true Mexican style, turned about and deposed Yturbide. In the numerous revolutions subsequent Santa Anna played a prominent part, being made commander-in-chief of one of the armies in 1829. In 1832 he headed another insurrection, and in 1835, after completely defeating the opposing army, killing 2,000 and taking 2,700 prisoners, he was named dictator. An insurrection broke out, the following year, in Texas, then under Mexican control, and heading an army of 6,000 men in person to suppress it, he was taken prisoner. He was set at liberty in 1837. His services were soon called to the defence of Vera Cruz, where he defeated the French and lost a leg. From 1841 till 1844 he was virtually dictator of Mexico, with the title of president, but was deposed by a revolution in 1845 and banished for ten years. He went to Cuba, but in a year was recalled and through the connivance of our government, which supposed him favorable to peace, reached Mexico in safety. In December, 1846, he was made provisional president, and immediately headed 20,000 men and attacked General Taylor, with 5,000 men, at Buena Vista, Santa Anna being badly beaten. He led the Mexican troops in all the great battles of the Mexican war. Discouraged at defeat, he left Mexico in 1848 for Jamaica, where he spent several years. He returned to Mexico in 1853, was appointed president for one year, appointed himself president for life, ruled with great rigor, and was obliged to sign his abdication in 1855. Most of the time since, he has lived at St. Thomas. On Maximilian's advent he declared for him, but now comes out for Juarez and proposes to fight for him.

INTERESTING DISCOVERY AT JERUSALEM.—The Tyroler Stimmen contains an account of the recent discovery of a subterranean chapel, near the Church of the Holy Sepulchre. It is the one often mentioned by ancient writers as that of Maria Minor, founded during the reign of Charlemagne, and to which was attached a convent for Benedictine nuns, and a residence for female pilgrims. It had often been searched for, but always in vain. The present discovery is entirely due to the energetic researches of Signor Carlo Guarmani, director of the French post-office at Jerusalem. The church contains three aisles, separated by rows of pillars, and terminating in seperate apsides. The centre is spanned by a dome, under which are still visible the oratories of the nuns. Though entirely covered by the soil, which has now been carefully removed, the building has suffered no injury to any extent, and is still nearly perfect.—Builder.

AN interesting relic has recently been acquired by the Academy of Sciences. It consists of a copy of the Memoirs of Lagrange, in eight volumes, which belonged to D'Alembert, by whom it was given to Condorcet. It next passed into the hands of Biot, who, in 1856, presented the volumes to M. Bour, Professor at the Ecole Polytechnique, a rising mathematician, whose death was lately announced. M. Bour, fearing lest a work which had been successively identified with such illustrious names should be lost, requested, during his last illness, that it should be placed at the disposal of the Academy of Sciences.

THE abbe-pianist, Liszt, has been to Amsterdam to have his 13th Psalm played, and has been crowned and glorified without stint. Moreover, his Mass, a favorite with the Hollanders, has also been performed, and renewed the sensation created on seven or eight former occasions. Liszt was accompanied by his son-in-law, M. de Bulow.

AT Vienna, notwithstanding the rumors of war with Italy, the Italian singers are as popular as ever. In Leipsic, on the contrary, there has been a disturbance, and the police have interfered to protect the Italians from insults in the streets.

IT is said that the British Government, as a measure against Fenianism, intend to abolish the use of the shillaly in Ireland, as its use is considered dangerous to the security of the crown.

WE refer our readers to the advertisement of Meagher, Taaffe & Co., who publish in our advertising columns a list nearly as long as an auctioneer's catalogue of their extensive varieties of Cottons, Linens, Dress Goods, Shawls, Lace and Muslin Goods, Hosiery, Flannels, etc., which they are now selling at reduced rates. This mammoth Dry Goods House is the most enterprising establishment in this city, and does business on the "nimble sixpence" order of quick sales and light profits, by the aid of liberal advertising, to the amount of thousands of dollars per day. They are spoken of among the trade as the "Stewarts of the Pacific Coast"—a very delicate way of acknowledging their business standing.

ODD PEOPLE.

MEN have, in most times, withdrawn themselves from the world and taken up their abode in caverns or ruins, or whatever shelter they could find, and lived on herbs, roots, coarse bread and water. In many cases, such persons have deemed these austerities as acceptable to God, and this has become one of the rudest forms of monastic life. It is not from this class of persons that we propose to introduce a few portraits of hermit life, but rather to those whose peculiarities have taken a more eccentric turn, almost in our own time.

The Hon. Charles Hamilton, in the reign of George II., proprietor of Pain's Hill, near Cobham, in Surrey, built a hermitage upon a steep brow in the grounds of that beautiful seat. Of this hermitage Horace Walpole remarks that it is a sort of ornament whose merit soonest fades, it being almost comic to set aside a quarter of one's garden to be melancholy in. There is an upper apartment, supported in part by contorted logs and roots of trees, which form the entrance to the cell, but the unfurnished and neglected state of the whole proves the justness of Walpole's observation. Mr. Hamilton advertised for a person who was willing to become a hermit in that beautiful retreat of his. The conditions were that he was to continue in the hermitage seven years, where he should be provided with a Bible, optical glasses, a mat for his bed, a hassock for his pillow, an hour-glass for his time-piece, water for his beverage, food from the house, but never to exchange a syllable with the servant. He was to wear a camlet robe, never to cut his beard or nails, nor ever to stray beyond the limits of the grounds. If he lived there, under all these restrictions, till the end of the term, he was to receive seven hundred guineas. But on breach of any of them, or if he quitted the place any time previous to that term, the whole was to be forfeited. One person attempted it, but a three weeks' trial cured him.

A correspondent of Notes and Queries describes a gentleman near Preston, Lancashire, as more successful in the above eccentricity. He advertised a reward of £50 a year for life to any man who would undertake to live seven years underground, without seeing anything human; and to let his toe and finger nails grow, with his hair and beard, during the whole time. Apartments were prepared under ground, very commodious, with a cold bath, a chamber organ, as many books as the occupier pleased, and provisions served from his own table. Whenever the recluse wanted any convenience he was to ring a bell, and it was provided for him. Singular as this residence may appear, an occupier offered himself, and actually stayed in it, observing the required conditions for four years.

BURIAL REQUESTS.

In June, 1864, there died at Drogheda one Miss Hardman, at the advanced age of ninety-two years. She was buried in the family vault in Peter's Protestant Church. The funeral took place on the eighth day of her decease. It is not usual in Ireland to allow so long an interval to elapse between the time of a person's death and burial; in this instance it was owing to the expressed wish of the deceased, and this originated in a very curious piece of family and local history. Everybody has heard of the lady who was buried, being supposed dead, and who bearing with her to the tomb, on her finger, a ring of rare price, this was the means of her being rescued from her charnel prison-house. A butler in the family of the lady, having his cupidity excited, entered the vault at midnight in order to possess himself of the ring, and in removing it from the finger the lady was restored to consciousness and made her way in her grave-clothes to her mansion. She lived many years afterwards before she was finally consigned to the vault. The heroine of the story was a member of the Hardman family—in fact the late Miss Hardman's mother, and the vault in Peter's Church was the locality where the startling revival scene took place.

The story is commonly told in explanation of a monument in the Church of St. Giles, Cripplegate, London, which is commemorative of Constance Whitney, and represents a female rising from a coffin. "This," says Mr. Godwin, in his interesting history of the Churches of London, "has been erroneously supposed to commemorate a lady who, having been buried in a trance, was restored to life through the cupidity of the sexton, which induced him to dig up the body to obtain possession of a ring." The female rising from the coffin is undoubtedly emblematic of the Resurrection, and may have been repeated upon other monuments elsewhere; but there is no such monument at Drogheda, which as above is claimed as the actual locality.

Mr. Guy was possessed of considerable property, and was a native of Gloucestershire. His grave and coffin were made under his directions more than a twelvemonth previous to his death; he wrote the inscriptions, he gave the orders for his funeral, and wrapped in separate pieces of paper five shillings for each of the bearers. The coffin was very neatly made, and looked more like a piece of cabinet-work for a drawing-room than a receptacle for the dead.

Dr. Fidge, a physician of the old school, who in early days had accompanied the Duke of Clarence (afterwards William IV.) when a midshipman, as medical attendant, possessed a favorite boat; and upon his retirement from Portsmouth Dockyard, where he held an appointment, had this boat converted into a coffin, with the sternpiece fixed at its head. This coffin he kept under his bed for many years.

The circumstances of his death were very remarkable. Feeling his end approaching, and desiring to add a codicil to his will, he sent for his solicitor. On entering his chamber he found him suffering from a paroxysm of pain, but which soon ceased; availing himself of the temporary ease to ask him how he felt, he replied, smiling, "I feel as easy as an old shoe," and looking towards the nurse in attendance, said, "Just pull my legs straight, and place me as a dead man; it will save you trouble shortly;" words which he had scarcely uttered before he calmly died.

THE ECCENTRIC MISS BANKS.

Oddities of dress were half a century ago much oftener to be seen than in the present day; or, rather, their singularities were more grotesque than the peculiarities of the present day. John Thomas Smith, writing in 1818, says: "It is scarcely possible for any person possessing the smallest share of common observation to pass through the streets in London without noticing what is generally denominated a character, either in dress, walk, pursuits, or propensities." At the head of his remarks on the eccentricity of some of their dresses he places Miss Sophia Banks, Sarah, the sister of Sir Joseph, who was looked after by the eye of astonishment wherever she went, and in whatever situation she appeared. Her dress was that of the Old School; her Barcelona quilted petticoat had a hole on either side for the convenience of rumaging two immense pockets, stuffed with books of all sizes. This petticoat was covered with a deep stomachered gown, sometimes obscuring the pocket-holes, similar to many of the ladies of Bunbury's time, which he has introduced into his prints.

In this dress she might frequently be seen walking, followed by a six-foot servant, with a cane almost as tall as himself. Miss Banks, for so that lady was called for many years, was frequently heard to relate the following curious anecdote of herself: "After making repeated inquiries of the wall-vendors of hall-penny ballads for a particular one which she wanted, she was informed by the claret-faced woman, who strung up her stock by Middlesex Hospital gates, that if she went to a printer's in Long Lane, Smithfield, probably he might supply her ladyship with what her ladyship wanted. Away trudged Miss Banks through Smithfield; but before she entered Mr. Thompson's shop she desired her man to wait for her at the corner, by the plum-pudding stall. 'Yes, we have it,' was the printer's answer to her interrogative. He then gave Miss Banks what is called a book, consisting of many songs. Upon her expressing her surprise when the man returned her eightpence from her shilling, and the great quantity of songs he had given her, when she only wanted one—'What, then!' observed the man, 'are you not one of our characters? I beg your pardon.'"

This lady and Lady Banks, out of compliment to Sir Joseph, who had been deeply engaged in the production of wool, had their riding-habits made of his produce, in which dresses the two ladies at one period on all occasions appeared. Indeed, so delighted was Miss Banks with this overall covering, that she actually gave the habit-maker orders for three at a time, and they were called "Hightum," "Tightum," and "Scrub." The first was her best, the second her second best, and the third her everyday one.

Once when Miss Banks and her sister in-law visited a friend with whom they were to stay several days, on the evening of their arrival they sat down to dinner in their riding habits. Their friend had a large party after dinner to meet them, and they entered the drawing-room in their riding-habits. On the following morning they again appeared in their riding habits; and so on, to the astonishment of every one till the conclusion of their visit.

Although Miss Banks paid great attention to many persons, there were others to whom she was wanting in civility. A great genius, who had arrived a quarter of an hour before the time specified on the card for dinner, was shown into the drawing-room, where Miss Banks was putting away what are sometimes called rattletraps. When the visitor observed, "It is a fine day, ma'am," she replied: "I know nothing at all about it. You must speak to my brother upon that subject when you are at dinner." Notwithstanding the very singular appearance of Miss Banks, she was, when in the prime of life, a fashionable whip, and drove four-in-hand. Miss Banks died in 1818.

THE KING AND QUEEN OF THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.

In the year 1824, their savage Majesties of the Sandwich Islands visited England. They were seen by Miss Berry, who has thus graphically described their visit:

"At half past ten o'clock, I went with the Prince and Princess Lowenstein, their son, and my sister, to Mr. Canning's, the Secretary of State, who received for the first time the King and Queen of the Sandwich Islands. They arrived in the midst of a numerous assembly of all the best society, and all en grande toilette for a large assembly given at Northumberland House. Mr. Canning entered, giving his hand to a large black woman more than six feet high, and broad in proportion, muffled up in a striped gauze dress with short sleeves, leaving uncovered enormous black arms, half covered again with white gloves; an enormous gauze turban upon her head; black hair, not curled, but very short; a small bag in her hand, and I do not know what upon her neck, where there was no gauze. It was with difficulty that the Minister and his company could preserve a proper gravity for the occasion. The Queen was followed by a lady in waiting as tall as herself, and with a gayer and more intelligent countenance. Then came the King, accompanied by three of his subjects, all dressed, like him, in European costume; and a fourth, whose office I did not know, but he wore over his ordinary coat a scarlet and yellow feather cloak, and a helmet covered with the same material on his head. The King was shorter than his four courtiers, but they all looked very strong, and, except the King, all taller than the majority of those who surrounded them. The two ladies were seated before the fire in the gallery for some time.

"Mrs. Canning was presented first to them, and then the Duke and Duchess of Gloucester and the Prince Leopold. The Queen took the Duchess of Gloucester by the arm and shook it. One should have pitied them for the way in which all eyes were turned upon them, and for all the observations they occasioned; but it seemed to me that their minds are not sufficiently opened, and that they are not civilized enough, to notice or to suffer from it. From the gallery Mr. Canning, still holding the Queen's hand, conducted them through the apartment and under the verandah of the garden, where the band of the Guards' regiment, in their full uniform was playing military airs. Her savage Majesty appeared much more occupied by the red-plumed hats of the musicians than by the music. She ought to have been pleased to see that the officers' helmet of her Court surpassed them as to color. From there they were conducted into the dining room, where there was a fine collation. The two ladies were seated alone at a table placed across the room, and ate some cake and drank wine. They appeared awkward in all their movements, and particularly embarrased in their walk; there was nothing of the free step of the savage, being probably embarrassed by the folds of the European dress."

The King and Queen and their suite were wantonly charged with gluttony and drunkenness by persons who ought to have known better. "It is true," observes Lord Byron, in his "Voyage to the Sandwich Islands," "that, unaccustomed to our habits, they little regarded regular hours for meals, and that they liked to eat frequently, though not to excess. Their greatest luxury was oysters, of which they were particularly fond; and one day, some of the chiefs having been out to walk, and seeing a gray mullet, instantly seized it and carried it home, to the great delight of the whole party; who, on recognizing the native fish of their own seas, could scarcely believe that it had not swum hither on purpose for them, or be persuaded to wait till it was cooked before they ate it." The best proof of their moderation, is however, that the charge at Osborne's Hotel, in the Adelphi, during their residence there, amounted to no greater an average than seventeen shillings a head per day for their table; as they ate little or no butcher's meat, but lived chiefly on fish, poultry, and fruit, by no means the cheapest articles in London, their gluttony could not have been great. So far from their always preferring the strongest liquors, their favorite beverage was some cider, with which they had been presented by Mr. Canning.

The popular comic song of "The King of the Cannibal Islands" was written apropos to the royal visit.

A COUNTRYMAN recently visited Paris, and had his pocket picked. This so annoyed him, (he was a Norman, the "Yankee" of France,) he determined to punish the next pickpocket who robbed him. He contrived a sort of slip-knot, which should arrest the thief's hand. Whilst visiting the Louvre, he felt a pickpocket's hand in his pocket, and saw that he had caught the thief. He determined to enjoy his vengeance before delivering the rogue to the police. So he quietly walked from picture to picture, dragging the pickpocket after him, for the thief did not say a word. He had enjoyed the rogue's torments for an hour, when he determined to deliver him to a policeman about thirty yards off. When he got near the policeman, he turned round to collar his prisoner—there was nobody! The robber had cut the Norman's whole coat-tail and made off with it.

THE New Bedford Mercury tells a story of a witty "Colonel B——," who, when on his death-bed, and near his demise, assured his friends that he could not possibly survive many hours. "Nonsense! Colonel," encouragingly remarked one; "your feet are warm, and no one ever died till the extremities became cold." "Don't tell me that," squealed out the sufferer; "do you think John Rogers' feet were cold just before he died?"

THE Rev. C. H. Spurgeon is about to have his choice sayings served up under the head of Anecdotes and Stories.

A LEGEND FOR SWEARERS.

GREAT excitement has been caused, both in strongly religious and strongly cursing and swearing circles, by the report of a very remarkable incident alleged to have taken place at Brightou last Sunday but one. Indeed, nothing so remarkable has taken place since the famous death of Earl Godwin, who, having exclaimed to King Edward, "If I contributed even indirectly to your brother's death, may the God of heaven grant that this piece of bread may choke me," put the bread into his mouth, and immediately fell back, strangled. "The vengeance of the Almighty," the report began, with an excess of dramatic power, "was visited in the most awful and sudden manner on a youth named Richards."

The reader's interest is for a moment stayed until the author of the legend has given an elaborate account of the game of "cat and dog"—"a game in which a piece of wood pointed at both ends and called a cat is tipped by a short, stout stick, and while in the air is knocked away by the stick." After some further details have been supplied of the laws and regulations of "cat and dog," we are introduced to the youth named Richards, quarrelling with his companions. "High words and bad language were freely used on both sides. Each boy accused the other of falsehood, and at length Richards, failing to convince his companion of the truthfulness of his statement, flew into a violent rage, and emphatically shouted, 'May God strike me blind if I haven't made more than twenty.'"

A paltry verbal critic would detect a slight discrepancy to begin with. The narrative first depicts Richards as contending with a multitude of "opponents," and then in the next sentence reduces them to one: "Each accused the other"—"his companion." But, in the face of a marvellous and striking manifestation of this kind, verbal criticism is evidently out of place. We must look at such events in a large and liberal way. On such occasions the hair-splitting German rationalist is a nuisance. Richards "had scarcely uttered the adjuration before he let the 'dog' fall out of his hands, and, throwing up his arms, exclaimed, 'Oh dear, I can't see.'" His companions ran up to him, and, finding that what he said was true, took him home, "when it was found that a thick film had overspread each of his eyes."

The sensation caused by such an appalling and instantaneous infliction of the Divine vengeance as this may be imagined. Habitual cursers of the profane kind were struck with awe and terror. Even the cursers of the religious kind, who only call for vengeance upon their neighbors, felt a vague uneasiness. The Sabbatarians were in ecstacies. A boy had been struck blind for playing "cat" on the Sabbath day, and had thus confirmed the solemn lesson of the immortal young lady who, being guilty of sewing on a Sunday, pricked her finger, and died the very same evening. A niche was prepared in Sabbatarian households for the reception of the youth Richards, close to that where the young lady has been installed these many years. And he might perhaps in time have put the young lady's nose out. The wicked rationalists of the nursery want details, and there are none about the pricked finger. But, in the new case, we know the boy's name. And, moreover, people have seen the very place where he was playing. You cannot have better evidence than that.

Besides the Sabbatarians, hosts of popular and unpopular preachers were filled with a lively delight. Here was a mighty stick with which to hurl the pipe out of the mouth of that grotesque and inhuman Aunt Sally whom they set up in their pulpits every other Sunday, and label the Skeptic or the Atheist. A boy had called upon God to strike him blind, and God had forthwith struck him blind. In the hundreds of sermons which are probably being prepared to improve the occasion, one can imagine the diverse but powerful styles in which it will be handled.

One preacher will begin with a florid picture of a summer morning, and will recount how from the azure sky the sun shot down his brightest rays over God's earth, and shone upon fields clad in their robe of grassy verdure or yellow with the golden waving corn; how the dewdrop trembled on the spray, and the voices of a thousand birds exulted in the gladness of the earth. It may be noticed cursorily that, as a matter of fact, on the day in question there was no sunshine at all, and there was an uncommonly cold and cutting wind, and further, that the corn is neither very golden nor very waving at present.

We should have scrupulously refrained from this slight critism if there had been any chance of its interfering with the oratorical effect. But the charm of this kind of oratory is, that utter discrepancy with fact is no drawback at all in the eyes of the people who are partial to it. Provided the language is lovely and poetic, the most appalling defects of applicability are not worth noticing. Perhaps, as the scene of the legend is laid at Brighton, the clerical scene-painter will not bring his golden corn and grassy verdure into the foreground, but will talk instead of the blue ripplings of the wave, or the booming thunders of the abysmal deep. He will ask whether the man who has lived all his life within sight and sound of the eternal ocean, "on whose brow time writes no wrinkle," without believing that it had a Creator, will persist in his wickedness in the face of the youth Richards and his frightful fate.

Of course there is nobody at Brighton who has any disbelief of the kind, but it is a customary thing to assume that the world is entirely made up of such dreadful people. The more reasonable kind of preacher will argue, and, if the circumstances were other than they are, might argue with fair plausibility, that such an extraordinary event cannot be a mere coincidence, and that it is easier to believe in the special and miraculous interference of Providence in mortal affairs than that a child should have actually been struck at the moment, by mere chance and accident, with the curse which he had blasphemously called down upon himself. A philosopher would probably in no case have been shaken from his conviction that the Creator of the universe works by general laws, which are not to be suspended because a little boy uses bad language. He would have begun by investigating the testimony on which the story had been received, and, if the story had proved true, would still have found consolation in reflecting how many thousands of persons every day call the divine vengeance upon themselves without being immediately taken at their word.

If all the people who invoke mischief upon their eyes, in less solemn phrase than that of the supposed boy Richards, were to get what they ask, the blind asylums would have to be considerably enlarged. But though the philosopher would not have allowed both the teaching of common sense and a high conception of the nature of the working of Providence to be overthrown by a single coincidence, a good many people would have been shaken and made exceedingly uncomfortable.

Fortunately, however, the human testimony to the miracle breaks down. The youth Richards who was dramatically introduced to us in connection with "the vengeance of the Almighty" does not exist. The game of cat unhappily does exist, and is very likely to be made the instrument of people being struck blind—simply, however, on the most natural and intelligible principles. But nobody who played at cat at Brighton on the Sunday in question is known to have been struck blind, or to have seen anybody else struck blind, either by a cat or by the divine vengeance. Indeed, there is no evidence that the sun shone upon any cat-playing at all in Brighton that Sunday morning, or that the dog was uplifted within earshot of the booming of the abysmal deep. The miraculous legend is simply a lie, but, like all miraculous legends, and a good many lies, is not without a little germ of truth. There is no Richards, no "cat and dog," no quarrel with companions, no imprecation to God, no being struck blind. But there is a boy who went out from Brighton with his comrades on the Sunday, on a bird-nesting expedition. They walked about all day, when the boy Jeffery—the imaginary "youth Richards" of the legend—complained that he could not see, and apparently he could not. His friends took him to an inn, where he stayed till he was put in the train for Brighton, quite blind. Of course, the Sabbatarian breaks in; he was struck blind, not for cursing, but for bird-nesting and travelling by rail on the Sabbath day. Possibly; only his punishment was scarcely worth inflicting, because, by the time he got to Brighton, he could see as clearly and distinctly as anybody else. He can see now perfectly. The legend emerged fatherless out of a chaos, and first appeared in the Brighton Gazette. The Brighton Times copies it. The Brighton Observer, with sweet fidelity, copies it. The London papers, with amiable credulity, copy it from the Brighton Observer. Preachers and moralists are copying it out of the London papers into their sermons and their note-books. And it is a simple fable all the time. He that is filthy, let him be filthy still, and people who use bad language, let them use bad language still. Swearers are rehabilitated—unless, indeed, "the youth Richards," though acquitted, and even dissolved into space, is warned that, if he is innocent this time, he must be careful not to do it again.

We are not sure that the public exposure of this legend will not be deplored by many people as rather a mistake. If the story was not true, at least it was ben trovato. It would have made an unspeakably useful bugbear for domestic and religious purposes, and in a sceptical age we cannot afford to lose a handy bugbear of this sort. How many little boys might have been deterred from bad language and Sabbath-breaking, and even playing at cat, by the fate of the youth Richards! How many grown-up men might have been converted to righteousness, and a belief that the world is really under moral government, by this incident of swift vengeance! It is more than doubtful, by the way, whether men's sense of justice would not have been revolted, rather than their good opinion of the government of the universe conciliated, by the fearful punishment of one little boy who had never been taught any better, while so many people in purple and fine linen are allowed to go on cursing with impunity. Apart from this, the people who use bugbears with which to terrify their neighbors into being good have such an abundant supply already that they ought not to grudge the sacrifice of this little one to the cause of plain truth and fact. As Mr. Carlyle says of a larger myth, "The thing a Lie wants, and solicits from all men, is not a correct natural history of it, but the swiftest possible extinction of it, followed by entire silence concerning it."

SKETCH OF EDWIN FORREST.

[The Philadelphia correspondent of the Round Table furnishes the following interesting sketch of the great actor now in our city.]

EDWIN FORREST, the actor, according to all biographical notices, was born on March 9, 1806, and therefore is (or should be) little more than a sexagenarian now. He is an instance of the "fatal facility" with which the public get impressed with the idea that a man must be very old because they recollect him a great many years. There are many playgoers who say of Forrest, "Looks well for his age. Must be seventy, at least, for I recollect his acting forty-five years ago." All this is very true. Forrest is only sixty, but made his actual début at a small theatre in South street, Philadelphia, as far back as 1818, being then twelve years old. He then performed female parts, but was advanced to male parts in the following year. His actual first appearance on the boards of a regular theatre was in November, 1820—he playe the character of 'Young Norval" in Home's tragedy of Douglas, the same part in which, exactly seven years later, Charles Kean made his début in Drury Lane Theatre. Mr. Forrest appeared in the Walnut street Theatre, then managed by Wood & Warren—the present house, corner of Walnut and Ninth streets, originally built with a view to circus purposes, but adapted to theatrical performances in consequence of the destruction (April, 1820) of the original Walnut street Theatre by fire. Mr. Wood, in his autobiography, has recorded with what difficulty Forrest's family consented to his becoming an actor, adding that though he played well—successively as "Young Norval," "Frederic" (in Lover's Vows,) and "Octavian" in The Mountaineers—the public did not think so, while the principal actors did. He went to the West to obtain that stage-practice which is indispensable to success, and after six years of this apprenticeship successfully returned as a "star," first in Philadelphia and then in New York—his great fame being created, still later, by his creation of the parts of "Metamora" and "Spartacus." In England, where he first played thirty years ago, it was as "Othello" and not as "Spartacus" that he obtained greatest renown. To this day, "Othello" is by far his best Shakspearian character.

Little is known of Forrest's career during the five or six years he was in the West. In Sol. Smith's Theatrical Apprenticeship, published in 1848, there is a whole chapter on "The Early Days of Edwin Forrest." In 1822, at which time Edwin Forrest would have been only sixteen if born in 1806, he was a member of the stock company at the Cincinnati theatre, and played "Young Malfort," in The Soldier's Daughter, on the opening night of the season. The character is slight enough, but was well played, and Sol. Smith predicted Forrest's future greatness from the ability which he exhibited as "Richard," for his own benefit. That year Forrest played "Othello" and some other leading characters, for the first time; but, Smith says, "with scarcely any knowledge of the text—his taste leading him to prefer the low comedy characters! I recollect seeing him play 'Blaise' and 'Lubin'—and very well he played them, too." At Cincinnati, Forrest played the part of a negro in a farce called The Tailor in Distress, and the part of a dandy in a petit comedy called Modern Fashions. In the concluding pantomime he appeared as "Sancho Panza"—three parts in one night, "all for the sum of two dollars!" Mr. Smith, who records the fact and the payment, shrewdly adds, "He has learned how to charge for his services since." The same authority says that though soon after engaged by Mr. Caldwell, the New Orleans manager, Forrest was loth to leave the West, and actually engaged with the proprietors of a circus "to go with them as a rider and a tumbler for a year," at the rate of $12 a week. He was induced to go to New Orleans, from which time his celebrity begins to date.

I have been seduced into all this gossip about Edwin Forrest by seeing it noticed in the newspapers that he had arrived in California—of course to play there, though not money nor "the fleeting breath of popular applause," but pursuit of health, was the object of his journey thither. This is his first visit to the land of gold, though he has had splendid offers, over and over again. Mr. Forrest has been the victim, for several years, of rheumatic gout, and though when acting his intense will subdues the physical pain and keeps the nerves and muscles under entire command, he is often helpless as childhood or advanced age, at other times—literally unable to move a limb without pain, which sometimes rises to the heighth of torture.

Attached to his mansion in Broad street (Philadelphia's "Fifth Avenue,") is a beautiful little theater, in which it is Mr. Forrest's intention to have acting regularly taught, by himself and other competent persons, to a certain number of the youth of both sexes, who exhibit talent and taste for the stage. Not long ago, Mr. Forrest, who is very wealthy, purchased a fine landed estate, in the northern part of the city, on the banks of the Delaware. It is said that his purpose is to establish and endow, in that locality, a home for retired actors. It is doubtful whether Mr. Forrest will ever again study a new character; if he should, let me predict that it will be "Timon," in Timon of Athens, with the concluding portion altered so as to make it a better acting play, or in Cromwell, a new tragedy, written for him in America by a very able and practiced dramatist. R. S. M.

NOTICE.

*The publication of "The Californian" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.*

White & Bauer, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for The Californian in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

All letters relating to the Business, Editorial or other Departments of the paper should be addressed to the Publishers of The Californian, No. 532 Merchant street, San Francisco.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despotch, at reasonable rates.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JULY 7, 1866.

Full volumes of The Californian, from the commencement, can be obtained at the office, 532 Merchant street. Price, in muslin, $4 per volume; two volumes (one year) bound together, $7. Unbound, per volume, $3.

THE RECENT CELEBRATION.

THE celebration of the Fourth of July is generally distinguished by petty spites arising from a struggle for precedence. These usually are very harmless, and are soon forgotten. But the recent anniversary of our nation's birthday, was marked by dissensions and jealousies of more than usual gravity. The war and Congressional action have introduced this year new causes of dispute and ill feeling; mere personalities are lost in serious controversies of caste, and the claims of a recently servile race to mix with the dominant and governing class, are made with an energy and persistenee, as if there existed a constitutional provision giving to all colors the right to a share in all public parades. The Civil Rights law is all well enough so far as it proposes to protect the black man from spoliation and oppression. Practically such a law was perhaps necessary. It was the inevitable result of the contest which has just closed, being indispensable in view of the cruel excesses engendered by the circumstance of war, and the utter impossibility of reconciling those who had never known any other relation than that of master and slave, and the influence of which must continue for generations to come. This remark is equally true of all classes in the whole country; for with the exception of the visionaries of the Sumner school and those who are infected with absurd and impossible theories of political equality, they will not accept the colored race as comparable to themselves in the moral or intellectual qualities. The bayonet and legislation extend to the negro the rights of protection and redress: they may even admit him to the polls; give him a place in the jury box, and make him eligible to public office; but beyond these, law and steel are inoperative; they will not in this century or perhaps in a half dozen, destroy the Helotism which has separated the two races in all historic times. Independent of prejudice and hereditary antagonism, nature has made the white man the superior of the negro, and this inequality is not simply true as an ethnological fact, but since the foundation of our government has been an element in our political and social organization. These we conceive to be facts of impossible denial; they are obvious as matters of history and universal experience.

But a little more than a year has elapsed—a period too minute for measurement in the advance of civilization—since the rebellion ended. The laws of war unfettered those slaves found within the circumvallation of our camps; but, as slavery was recognized by the fundamental law, nothing short of constitutional inhibition could destroy the relation of master and slave. This was done, and man ceased to exist as a chattel only on the adoption of the constitutional amendment. The true friends of humanity and progress should have been satisfied with this civil triumph, taken in connection with the laws passed to protect the negro; they should have been content to let the freedmen advance only, as all progress is made, through an enlightened opinion, and that conscience which is the unerring concomitant of a high civilization. They should teach him that the eradication of prejudice is the growth of years, and that a semi-barbarous negro race could not ask equality from a white civilization to which it had not only contributed nothing, but was unable to appreciate, much less aid in exalting. In one word, he should be taught that when he equalled the white man, then and only then could he claim political equality, for we conceive an equal social freedom and intercourse to be impossible in this country. Without appreciation of his true position, believing that the moment his shackles were riven, he was eo instante not only free, but by some peculiar process raised morally and intellectually to the plane of the whites; confirmed in his belief by the impolitic, injurious, and insincere conduct and declarations of bigots and theorists, the negro has, since the close of the war, by acts and speech, asserted an equality, if not superiority, which will not only retard the advancement of the colored race, but positively make his political elevation impossible. There are other probabilities growing out of this condition of things, which conservative men see and fear. With prejudices lying too deep for eradication while this generation lasts, passions inflamed by the imprudent assumptions and conduct of the negro, and the antagonisms arising from the present and previous condition of the two races—in all these premonitions the keen vision of thinkers sees, on the political and social horizons, gathering clouds, which portend a storm. Will the negro patiently labor to fit himself for the privileges he asks—fit himself for them by moral and intellectual culture—or will he impatiently attempt to seize them by force, from an extravagant and presumptious estimate of his position and capacity? In this question lies the future of the African race in this country. If its white advisers are wise and patriotic, and itself as loyal as its leaders claim it to be, then will it wait with patient fortitude for the coming of that tranquil, but irresistible Right, which is ever moving the world forward to a condition of final happiness, and which sooner or later corrects error, and vindicates good, whether of races or individuals.

INIGOINGS.

New York, June 2, 1866.

IS anybody surprised at hearing from me here? perhaps I should say in this quarter of this hemisphere? Surely no one need be, for San Francisco is but a step from anywhere. From the Golden Gate to Hurlgate the voyage is as easy as sliding down hill. And what magnificent sleds those steamers of the Pacific Mail line are! Coasting along—the smooth-keeled Sacramento—a conviction comes to one that she is furnished with runners instead of wheels, and that those runners are greased.

But it was nothing about the trip home that I started out to write. That chronicle is already written and published at such length that my sympathies lie with those condemned to read it—few, fortunately, for the proof-reader and myself probably constitute the entire number. It is only of New York that I purpose to write. It is simply my intention to give the impressions of a new-comer on first landing, contrasting the new New York with the old one of a former resident's recollections.

Present friends and former fellow-citizens were surprised when I said to them, with uplifted hands, How New York has changed! In like manner when I remarked to an aunt: How Bella has grown! No one could see that she had until I attempted to kiss the young lady, and she drew back with the conservatism of sixteen—widely different from the radicalism of eleven when she always had her arms round my neck. So with New York: those who have been living all this while in the family do not notice its stature and embonpoint, nor can one who has been absent for the past four or five years appreciate the change until he undertakes to embrace her. Take a carriage, for instance, and skirt about Central Park. You find one solid wall of masonry and brick where then was only empty lots or unsightly excavations. "Up town" now means any street this side of Harlem. It seems as though all the houses that formerly were headed off by 42d street, had suddenly taken up a line of march and crowded and jostled each other as far out into the country as they could, without actually trespassing upon the lines of another city. Ten thousand dollars invested five years ago anywhere between Central Park and Harlem would have made a man independently rich, did he avail himself at the present time of the ruling prices of property. and if he "held in" for five years to come, and property still advanced in the same ratio, he would have to get a mining secretary or two from your country to enable him to count his money or even to estimate his wealth.

Sometimes I ask myself, in the silence of the night: Why did I not invest there? And in the gray of the morning the answer comes, a small, still voice replying: Because, my dear fellow, you had nothing to invest.

To guard homeward-bound Californians against being unduly surprised. Let me tell them that the New York which they will find is not at all the New York which they are looking for, and is the most different thing in the world from the New York they left. Everything has gone up—even some of the heaviest mercantile houses—and the cost of living is doubled, tripled. Hotel fare, for instance, five dollars a day. The same rooms that I once had for ten dollars a week now twenty-five. Drinks—formerly three for a quarter—now twenty cents each; for old brandy, not particularly good, forty cents a "nip." As for cigars, nothing smokeable is obtained at a less price than "four for a dollar." A box that I brought from the Isthmus caused my room to be in a state of siege until the last one was gone. A friend told me of a place where very good ones could be had, "three for a half." We walked around to explore: Locality, the beginning of the Bowery. Biting off the end of one, I soon discovered that my mouth was filled with chips. They were actually stuffed like sausages, pine shavings and small shreds of boot-legs taking the place of forced-meats, while a wrapper of cabbage leaf did duty for the envelope of the genuine Bologna. House-rent—mention it not! Furnished houses range from four hundred to a thousand dollars a month; at less than the former rate nothing decent can be had, and the latter one by no means brings a house any too good to live in.

Yet, with all this, people do live and laugh and grow fat. Indeed, they seem to be doing better than ever. Friends of mine who formerly thought they were doing a generous thing by asking you into a cheap saloon to "lager" at four cents a glass, now invite you to their rooms and open a bottle of champagne—and nothing but Napoleon, Cabinet, Carte d' Or, or Green Seal, serves to content their vinous ambition. I ask them why is this thus, and whence cometh such muchness, and by way of answer get a nod and a wink, and a mysterious intimation that there is some balm in Gilead and much corn in Egypt, and that I must not think of returning to California. Not think of it—indeed, it requires an income of a hundred dollars a minute to live here; and to go to Saratoga this season, or to the sea side, one would want about that amount every breath he drew. The law of compensation, however, asserts itself in some degree, for, on settling up with a journal for which I had done a good deal of corresponding, ten dollars a column was paid me, five formerly being the maximum. But what puzzles me through it all, is how the price of gold affects not the prices of commodities at all. Gold, as you know, has been as high as two hundred and eighty during the war. On my landing in New York it was only at thirty premium, and yet the prices of everything are about as high as they have ever been. Manufacturers explain this on the score of the high rates of labor, scarcity of material, etc. But their favorite excuse is "duties." The principal duty they seem to adhere to, is that of tacking on the most exorbitant price to everything that the range of figures will allow. It is unfortunate for us Californians that we had not struck this side when gold was better appreciated. for, at two hundred and eighty, a suit of clothes would only have cost some thirty-five dollars against the seventy-eight that it stands one in now.

At the present writing gold is up to forty—consequent upon the news of a panic in England and a fall of consols. If I had had any gold to sell when I came on here, and had sold it at twenty-eight—the rate on the day of my arrival—how chagrined I should now feel! On the whole I'm glad I didn't have any to sell, for certainly I should have sold with my usual luck, and my present feeling would be one of intense mortification. I hear people talk of "selling short." Some day I intend to go down into Wall street and try my hand at it, for, if you hear me, I'm a little shorter and willing to sell more of it than any other man in the country. Were I only as tall as I'm short, I'd be another Anak.

One thing that troubles one here is the currency. It is fearful. They wad out your pockets with paper representative of all values between three cents and the moiety of a dollar. Bad enough when they are clean, they become perfectly disgusting after having been in circulation a year or two. Talk of "shin plasters"—these in the course of time come to look like plasters from the shins of the scurvy lazaroni of Naples or St. Giles. Inconceivably filthy, carrying disease from hand to hand; I do not see why government doesn't issue ivory chips like a decent dealer, if it wants to play on credit. Pewter medals, tin tokens, brass checks—anything would be preferable to these torn, dirty, stinking substitutes for money. They are the cause of unbounded extravagance with us who are accustomed to a different currency. Tired of carting them around, wearied of their grease and exhalations, and not able to realize that they have indeed a value, and are to all intents and purposes money, one gives them away and throws them away, rather glad to get rid of them than otherwise. If you attempt to pay your fare with them in an omnibus the chances are that a whole hatful blows out of the window.

Apropos of omnibuses, fare in these wooden inconveniences, formerly six cents, is now raised to ten, and it is "Pay immediately on entering." You get in and sit in quiet unconcern, wondering what the driver keeps ringing his bell and looking down for, until some mild-mannered, benevolent-looking old gentleman explains to you that Jehu wants you to pass up your postage stamps, for that is the costumbre del pais. In the cars the fare is six cents—what do the opponents of an increase of fare in San Francisco city railways say to that? And, in addition to oats and hay, and drivers' and conductors' wages, being cheaper here than in San Francisco, the travel is immense—the cars running full, day and night. "Don Guzman," on taking her first omnibus ride, tells me that she was as much opposed to an increase of fare as ever the Bay Bulletin was. The driver charged her ten cents; she remembered what the price of a ride was before the war, and felt highly indignant that they should attempt to play a Californienne for a Chinaman. So she pulled the check-strap and got out, threatening to report the driver to the "office of the company," and he not stopping quite so soon as she wished, she gave the strap another jerk that nearly pulled him through the little hole at which the fare is passed up. It is surprising, though, how far one can ride for a little money. From Fulton Ferry to Central Park cannot be less than five or six miles, and you can have it all for six cents. Riding at that rate is so much cheaper than taking lodgings, that I wonder people don't ride up and down in the cars all night.

Another thing that I didn't like in New York is the exhibit that ladies make of their legs. A little leg now and then does well enough, but there is such a thing as crowding the mourners. And the last thing in hoops seems specially contrived for making an exhibit. It is bell-shaped—little at the top and big at the bottom. Leaning over and looking into a shop window at the wonders there displayed, more of the stern realities of feminine life are revealed than is either modest or proper—I am sorry I cannot say "more than the law allows," but, unfortunately, this same law of ours, which strains at a gnat of impropriety, stands with mouth agape to swallow a whole camel of indecency. Indeceney! the word is not a harsh one, for none other is fitting. At every tilt which the dress makes against a passer-by, up flies the hoop like the lid of a box, showing precisely the things which it is commonly thought clothes are worn to conceal. Young men were formerly fond of such exhibitions, but now their taste is satiated. Enough, besides being always as good as a feast, is sometimes a great deal better. There is such a thing as glutting the market. The ladies are perfectly well aware of the exposures that are made, for the comic papers have been caricaturing the new fashion ever since it came in, and papas, husbands and brothers are candid and familiar enough to advise. But still the mania rules. If it be the intention of the ladies to captivate swains and secure husbands by such displays, they certainly show a singular lack of judgment. For the proprietor of a caravan is not accustomed to exhibit his principal animals outside the tent, when he wishes persons to step in; nor does the fruit merchant chuck cherries gratis down the throats of passers-by, if he is anxious to secure paying customers.

The style of bonnets, too, is another absurdity, to call it by nothing worse. Bonnets, did I say? The bonnet is an institution of the past; it is no longer known, it is no longer worn—and would not be recognized if it were. The most fashionable substitute at present is a plait of straw, felt—or something which ought to be felt, inasmuch as it can scarcely be seen—looking like a pancake, and lying flat upon the top of the head, precisely like that griddle accompaniment to a well-ordered breakfast. It has neither grace, sense, nor economy to recommend it; for a duck's foot in the mud would make quite as pleasant an impression on the observer; it offers no shade from the sun, and costs quite as much as a full-grown bonnet. What girls wear such things for, unless they want young men to pour a little molasses on their heads and swallow them without butter, like veritable slap-jacks, I do not see!

My letter has already reached a length which may be wearisome to the reader, however pleasant the task of composition to my accustomed pen. But I cannot close without saying something further about the recent great fire, to which I alluded in my last letter to THE CALIFORNIAN. The Saturday Press says it was then and there demonstrated how well firemen can "play on a piano."

Curiously enough, the flames leaped over a block and a half, and caught the steeple of St. James' English Evangelical Lutheran Church, on East Fifteenth street, completely gutting the whole edifice. In like manner the church of the Rev. Stephen Tyng, not very distant, was served in November last. Mr. Tyng's church was completely riddled, but, viewing it from the Park, one would not know that any change had come over it, for there stand the walls, solid as ever, the steeple tall and defiant, the clock pointing to the hour at which the fire occurred; but an approach to the side reveals all, the sashless, paneless windows, the absence of a roof, and the emptiness and blackness of the charred interior speak of destruction. When a church burns, I always think of the Dutchman who, having subscribed handsomely to build a church, was asked to contribute to buying a lightning-rod. "No, no," said Hans, "I have pay to build a house for te Lord, and now, if he knock it town, tat is his own lookout!"

During the progress of the fire I looked around, half expecting to see Maratzek and Grau emulate Nero, by ordering out their orchestras to play an accompaniment to the roar of the flames. But no fiddling was done in Irving Place that night. Grau looked disconsolate and distressed, and Maratzek appeared far from memory.

Well, it was not much of a joke for either of these two gentlemen, nor is it probable that many of the employées of the concern will see the fun, for all their occupations are gone for a season—certainly for the present season. Grau, however, promises to be in the field soon again, and Muratzek advertises that all his contracts and engagements with artists for the coming season hold good.

Manager Platt, of San Francisco, who, as you already knew is bringing the Buislay troupe here under an expensive engagement, is out and injured decidedly, as he had engaged the Academy for sixty nights, and some portion of the wardrobe of the troupe was already stored there. The loss of the latter is a small item, but the loss of a place to play in is a very different affair, for theatres are not picked up now like potatoes. I have not seen him since the accident, and so cannot speak by the card, but the only theatre I know of open for lease is the Lucy Rushton one, and that is dark, dingy, and unpropitious to a degree. He may get the Winter Garden, for that is not doing a very lucrative business just now, they say. After all, the fire may have been a good thing for Mr Platt, for the Academy was very large, a terribly expensive place to run; the opening, fixed for the 11th of June, was between seasons—so, taking all in all, I do not know but that the California manager has cause to congratulate himself, rather than otherwise.

And, were it not for the four gallant lives—firemen—lost in the building, New York would not have much cause to regret the burning of the Academy. For it was unmistakably a failure for the purpose for which it was built. It only accommodated about half the persons it was intended to seat, and not more than half of them could see the stage. Accoustically the Academy was a success, but optically it was a failure. Three hundred and eighty-five thousand dollars was a good deal to lay out on an experiment, but from this deduct the value of the ground, which fortunately did not burn, the insurance upon the building of $150,000, and the rents that have been received, and the loss, I apprehend, will be found to be but trifling. The directors will do better next time. The principal sufferers, aside from the impressarios and the employées, are those of the public who will be at a loss where to spend their evenings. Fitz James Augustus can no more lounge indolently in of evenings, suck his cane in the lobbies, and lorgne the dress circle from the balconies. And Araminta Wilhelmina Japonica Brownstoneica will have to display her languid eyes, superb bust and shoulder, and overpowering back hair, in some other temple of fashion and art. But the jeunesse dorée and the vieillesse adorée must stand it for a time—I don't see as any other alternative is open to them—and await that good time coming, when another Academy shall be built, surpassing in greatness, adaptedness, and everything else in which an Academy should excel, the one on Irving Place, of which ashes and blackened walls now alone remain.

It is said that the fire was the work of an incendiary. More, the World hints that James Gordon Bennett, editor of the Herald, was at the bottom of it, and throws out mysterious hints about a cock-eyed man with a cloth cap on, and a carpet-bag (supposed to contain phosphorous or nitroglyceriue) in his hand, being seen in the vicinity immediately before the alarm was given. But this scandal is not believed by

INIGO.

[For the Californian.]

SUNDRIES.

GIVING alms, regularly and systematically, is part of the duty one owes, if success attend him, his less fortunate fellows; and far be it from me to question motives where want is actually relieved. It is, therefore, with a view merely to illustrate how literally children construe promises made them, that I mention an impression made upon my mind by reading in a school-book, years ago, "The Old Man's Prayer":

> "O! give relief, if but the shortest span,
> Give relief, and Heaven will bless your store."

I at once determined that if ever I should attain the proud position of merchant, Heaven's blessing—in the shape of a rushing business—should be fully and fairly earned by devoting a certain proportion of the profits of my "store" to "relief" purposes. I did not add the clause—"even if the expenses of some of my best customers should be increased thereby," until a much more mature period.

IT must be quite a honor to lodge in the seventh story of one of our high-toned hotels. The cream of society is, of course, always on top.

THE editor of a paper a long way from San Francisco received a communication some parts of which were rather indelicate. The writer apologized for its length, which he feared would cause it to be rejected. In returning the MS., the editor remarked that it was fully as broad as it was long, and must therefore be declined.

THE Evening Tribune and many other journals have copied "Silent Wooing," a poem by "Clytie," without crediting THE CALIFORNIAN. Credit in such cases is capital, gentlemen.

An English punster once asked his servant, "Which one of my puns do you consider the best?" "The pun' ye gave me last birthday," was the reply.

A CARELESS friend of mine who always has an excuse ready for not fulfilling his engagements, had promised me an article of jewelry which was in a bureau at his house. "Why don't you bring it up?" I asked, after long waiting. "I haven't had time yet to make an overhaul of the drawers," he answered. I gave up all hope of ever seeing the trinket, for how can a man make an over'all of a smaller garment?

A NEW language has sprung into existence, and to our city belongs the honor of its paternity. A few days ago a beggar asked me to give him "sometings for charity." I inquired if he had been to the office of the San Francisco Benevolent Association, on Pine street. "No," said he, "me no speak San Francisk Benevolensashun language."

AS "TOASTS" usually accompany regrets sent for inability to attend banquets, a student of domestic economy asks if it would not be well for committees to honor with invitations a great number of people obviously unable to be present. The same practically-inclined young man also thinks something might be saved by bottling the w(h)ines of those who are not invited.

"As busy as an old hen with one chicken," may still do duty elsewhere as a simile; but in this city we may change it slightly, thus:—"As busy as one chicken with a dozen old hens." The game young Chronicle seems to think itself equal to the task of managing a whole hennery—hence, perhaps, its continued attentions to the absent Charles Henry, of THE CALIFORNIAN. "'Tis said that absence conquers love," but the cordial affection born of literary intercourse in San Francisco is apparently proof against the obliterating influence of time and distance.

MARK TWAIN'S "steed Oahu" (Waw-hoo) bids fair to become as famous as "Old Whitey." Should the Humorist bring "Oahu" with him from the Islands, we may have another "woolly-horse" exhibition, for Mark is continually "lamming" the beast.

ACCOUNTS which reach us from Europe indicate that Austria and Prussia will accept no arbitration but that of the sword. A friend of peace tells me he has but one hope left, viz., that the "accounts" are "overdrawn." His banker assures him that such a thing is possible.

"BE kind to the brute—he is feeble—the weight of 'ears is upon him," said a bystander to a cartman who was giving an obstinate, though not unmusical, animal a severe beating.

A MAN on Battery street recently broke several panes of glass by throwing stones at the window of a liquor saloon. When remonstrated with, he said he had attended the "Public Roll Call" of the Temperance Legion, and had heard dramshops called cradles of vice; as he hadn't "rocked" a cradle for a long time, he thought he would try his hand on that one.

EMSTADT.

AMUSEMENTS.

THE new attractions at the Opera House—Miss Kate Denin and Mr. John Wilson—made their first appearance on Monday evening, as the Japonica-loving heroine, and the Camille-loving Armand, of that most Frenchy of all French plays—Camille. Miss Denin possesses a fine stage presence, with a natural and graceful style of acting; a full, clear voice, almost too masculine in its volume, but capable of yielding to the various intonations of modulated passion and pathos; and a manner of reading quite emotional and impressive, without being exaggerated. The lady withal has excellent taste, as displayed in her make-up and the half-dozen dresses worn as "Camille," who is as exacting in the way of dress as Miss Flora McFlimsey, and, doubtless, causes as many reiterations of "I've nothing to wear!" when the part is cast. With such qualities, Miss Denin could not fail to make a very favorable impression, which has not been weakened by her subsequent impersonations of "Julia" in The Hunchback, "Rosalind" in As You Like It, and "Lady Isabel," in East Lynne.

Mr. Wilson, on the contrary, lacks the requirements of a star actor, in the parts in which we have seen him, which were of a sentimental character. He appears young to the stage, and is still crude in his acting and reading. We judge, from the delivery of some of his vehement passages, that he has considerable ability in the melo-dramatic line, and would appear to advantage in the delineation of passionate characters. For instance, as "Armand," in the fourth act of Camille, where that young Frenchman foolishly showers money and curses at the same time on the head of the girl that has jilted him, he was quite dramatic and effective, and warmed the audience up to general applause. The gentleman evidently possesses power, but is lacking in polish.

Courtaine's "Gaston" and Mrs. Judah's hungry "Madame Prudence"—both proverbially good—lost nothing by their representations on this occasion. Mr. McCullough played "Master Walter" to Miss Denin's "Julia," in The Hunchback, on Tuesday evening, very effectively. Mrs. Jackson's "Helen" was particularly good, and was ably seconded by the "Harry Modus" of the bashful Courtaine.

The attendance has improved with the week's progression. East Lynne, on Thursday, drew a regular Forrest house. The play will be repeated this afternoon. This evening Oliver Twist will be given, for the first time in a long period. Brougham's sparkling burlesque of Pocahontas, and Charles Read's dramatic version of his novel, Never Too Late to Mend, are in rehearsal, and will probably form the attractions for the coming week.

THE new opera season, by the Howson Troupe, will open on Monday evening at the Academy of Music, with every prospect of success. Bellini's charming opera of La Sonnambula will constitute the opening attraction, to be followed on Thursday evening by Wallace's Maritana, and by Gounod's grand opera of Faust on the Monday evening succeeding, to be given in English for the first time in the United States. The operas have been in preparation and rehearsal for more than a week past, and all the aid that scenery and choral effects can render to their successful representation will be secured. The ladies of the troupe are said to be young, petite and pretty, and gifted with musical qualifications of a high order.

DISTANCES FROM SAN FRANCISCO
To various points:

To Fort Point, 4 miles, by omnibus, four trips a day.
Lone Mountain, 3, street railway.
Seal Rock, 6, cars and omnibus, two trips a day.
Mission Dolores, street railways; Ocean House 8.
San Mateo, 20, railroad.
Crystal Springs, 23, railroad and stage
Half-Moon Bay, 29, do. do.
Redwood city, 30, do.
Mountain View, 38, do.
Santa Clara, 47, do.
San Jose, 50, do., or steamer and stage, 54.
Alviso, 46, steamer, daily.
Almaden mines, 67, steamer and stage; or by railroad and stage, 64.
Santa Cruz, 78, railroad and stage.
Oakland, 8, steamer and railroad, six trips a day.
Alameda, 11, steamer, three trips a day.
San Leandro, 15, steamer and railroad.
Mission San Jose, 34, steamer, railroad and stage.
Warm Springs, 37, do. do.
Benicia, 30, steamer leaves at 4 P. M. daily.
Sacramento, 117, do. do.
Stockton, 117, do. do.
Martinez, 33, do.
Pacheco, 38, steamer and stage.
Diablo Coal Mines, 44, steamer and stage.
Suisun, 50, steamer, or 54 by steamer and stage
Vallejo, 28; Mare Island, 37; Napa city, 50
White Sulphur Springs, 67, stage from Napa.
Geyser Springs, 118, do. do.
Sonoma, 52, steamer, tri-weekly.
Petaluma, 48, steamer, daily.
Healdsburg, 80, stage daily from Petaluma
San Quentin, 12, steamer; Farallone Islands, 20.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,
1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, situated on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

It was built expressly for a Hotel, with all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

LARGE READING ROOM

Attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge.

JOHN KELLY, Jr.,
my6-3m Proprietor.

DO YOU WANT ANY Printing?

IF YOU DO, GO TO

411 CLAY STREET,

BETWEEN SANSOME AND BATTERY.

PRINTING OF EVERY DESCRIPTION DONE ON short notice and in the best style, by

M. D. CARR & CO.

jc30-3m

DRY GOODS.

FOR CHOICE STYLES IN

Dress Goods,

THE VERY BEST MAKES OF

IRISH LINEN,

And superior French and English

Calicos,

Go to

S. MOSGROVE,
222 Third st.,
jc23 Colton's Building.

PISCO!

G. & F. MARTELL'S COGNAC;
JAMES HENNESSY'S Cognac;
STEAMBOAT GIN;
OLD TOM GIN;
IRISH WHISKY,
from Bond direct.

For sale by V. SQARZA,
my28 Lied street, San Francisco.

STOCKDALE HOUSE,
Corner Main and Oak streets, Petaluma.
mar24 6m H. STOCKDALE, Proprietor.

ALLEN'S
LUNG BALSAM!

A CERTAIN CURE FOR

COUGHS, COLDS, INFLUENZA, NIGHT SWEATS, BRONCHITIS, SPITTING OF BLOOD, ASTHMA, WHOOPING COUGH,

CONSUMPTION,

And all Diseases of the

CHEST AND LUNGS

This celebrated Cough Remedy effects a speedy cure by producing a free and easy expectoration, heals abscesses of the lungs, prevents unhealthy secretion of the bronchial tubes, and removes from them those accumulations of morbid matter which cause oppression of the breast, difficulty of breathing, etc, soothes irritation of the respiratory organs which produces cough

PRICE.....ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE.
Sold by all Druggists.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
401 Battery corner of Clay,
ap27-3m San Francisco.

DR. HUMPHREYS'
Homœopathic Specifics

Have proved, from the most ample experience, an entire success—simple, prompt, efficient and reliable. They are the only Medicines perfectly adapted to popular use—so simple that mistakes cannot be made in using them; so harmless as to be free from danger, and so efficient as to be always reliable. They have received the highest commendation from all, and will always render satisfaction.

No. 1	cures Fevers, Congestion, Inflammations.	0 25
" 2	cures Worms, Worm Fever, Worm Colic,	25
" 3	cures Crying Colic, or Teething of in-
" 4	cures Diarrhœa of children or adults...	25
	fants.....	25
" 5	cures Dysentery, Griping, Bilious Colic,	25
" 6	cures Cholera Morbus, Nausea, Vomiting,	25
" 7	cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis.....	25
" 8	cures Neuralgia, Toothache, Faceache.	25
" 9	cures Headaches, sick-Headache, Vertigo,	25
" 10	cures Dyspepsia, Bilious Stomach.....	25
" 11	cures Suppressed, or Painful Periods..	25
" 13	cures Croup, Cough, difficult Breathing,	25
" 14	cures Salt Rheum, Erysipelas Eruptions,	25
" 15	cures Rheumatism, Rheumatic Pains...	25
" 16	cures Fever and Ague, Chill Fever, Agues	50
" 17	cures Piles, blind or bleeding.....	50
" 18	cures Opthalmia, and Sore or Weak Eyes,	50
" 19	cures Catarrh, acute or chronic, Influenza	50
" 20	cures Whooping-Cough, violent coughs.	50
" 21	cures Asthma, oppressed Breathing.....	50
" 22	cures Ear Discharges, impaired Hearing	50
" 23	cures Scrofula, Enlarged Glands, Swellings.....	50
" 24	cures General Debility, Physical Weakness.....	50
" 25	cures Dropsy, and scanty Secretions....	50
" 26	cures Sea-Sickness, sickness from Riding,	50
" 27	cures Kidney Disease, Gravel.....	50
" 29	cures Sore Mouth, Canker.....	50
" 31	cures Painful Periods, even with Spasms	50
" 32	cures Sufferings at change of life.....$1	00
" 33	cures Epilepsy, Spasms, St. Vitus' Dance. 1	00
" 34	cures Diphtheria, Ulcerated Sore Throat,	50

FAMILY CASES.

35 vials, morocco case, and book.....	$10 00
28 vials, morocco case, and book.....	8 00
20 vials, morocco case, and book.....	6 00

These Remedies, by the case or single box, are sent to any part of the country, by Mail or Express, on receipt of the price.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
ap27-3m San Francisco.

A BEAUTIFUL COMPLEXION!

Secret of Beauty!

USE GEO. W. LAIRD'S

BLOOM OF YOUTH,

OR

LIQUID PEARL!

See that the name,

GEO. W. LAIRD,

is stamped

ON THE BOTTLE.

No other is Genuine.

The best article in the world for Preserving and Beautifying the Complexion and Skin.

This magnificent Toilet Article is prepared only, by GEO. W. LAIRD, 74 Fulton street, New York, formerly 483 Broadway.

Sold by Druggists everywhere.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
ap27-3m San Francisco.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

MARY SMITH, Plaintiff,
vs.
WILLIAM SMITH, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to WILLIAM SMITH, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court, dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and that one half of the Defendant's property, if he have any, be awarded to Plaintiff, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 27th day of June in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty six.

Seal. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cts., cancelled. WM. LOEWY, Clerk.
By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.

A. WILLIAMS, Plaintiff's Attorney, 535 Clay street. jc30 3m

HEUSTON,

HASTINGS

& CO.

The Fashionable Clothiers

OF

SAN FRANCISCO,

Are now engaged in enlarging their already extensive European connections, and are offering the LARGEST, FINEST, AND MOST COMPLETE

STOCK OF

CUSTOM-MADE CLOTHING,

GENTS' FURNISHING GOODS,

TRUNKS, BAGS, VALISES, ETC.,

ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

AT REDUCED PRICES.

je17-3m

A CARD.

M. Howard's Hair Restorative,

NO. 315 MONTGOMERY STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO.

THE ABOVE PREPARATION, which has been recently discovered and patented, is purely a Vegetable Extract

The undersigned are fully aware of the many unsatisfactory and useless preparations for restoring hair that have been introduced to the public, and how little confidence is to be placed in any pretensions to restoring the hair to bald heads, but,

HAVING TRIED MR. HOWARD'S PREPARATION,

we are able to state that it not only prevents the Hair from falling out, but absolutely reproduces it, and that we now have good suits of Hair growing where we were entirely bald. Therefore, as a matter of justice to Mr. Howard, and of consolation to bald heads, we tender him this testimonial Mr H. keeps the article for sale in bottles, with directions for its use, or applies it himself, as may be desired.

San Francisco, April 6, 1866.

Frank M. Thayer,	R. A. Redman,
W. S. Davis,	J. O. Romiree,
T. A. Hall,	G. W. Gamble,
A. C. Knox	J. W. Miller,
Bradbury Sanborn,	E. C. McComb,
George Wells,	D. C. Ross,
Joseph Wells,	jy7

THE CALIFORNIAN.

TERMS—FIVE DOLLARS PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE

A PAPER FOR THE TIMES

DEVOTED TO LIVE TOPICS,

THE DISSEMINATION OF A PURE LITERATURE, DEVELOPMENT OF HOME TALENT,

AND THE

BEST INTERESTS OF CALIFORNIA

Published

EVERY SATURDAY MORNING

AT

532 MERCHANT STREET,

BY THE CALIFORNIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY.

A. A. STICKNEY, J. P. BOGARDUS, W. J. BINGHAM, C. H. WEBB.

No effort will be spared to enable THE CALIFORNIAN to appeal to the Public for support, not only as the

BEST JOURNAL ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

But also as being

THE EQUAL OF ANY ON THIS CONTINENT

THE BEST TALENT OF THE STATE is employed upon THE CALIFORNIAN.

The voluntary notices bestowed by the press of the Eastern cities have been no less warm and congratulatory than those which we have received at the hands of our cotemporaries of the Pacific. Their verdict is unanimously in favor of

THE CALIFORNIAN

and all join in pronouncing their unqualified approval of its unequalled merits.

Its reputation is now fully established. It is not

EXCELLED BY ANY LITERARY JOURNAL

on the Continent.

THE TERMS OF THE CALIFORNIAN are $5 per year, mailed to subscribers, invariably in advance; 50 cents per month served by carriers.

All communications and correspondence must be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN,

No 532 Merchant street,
SAN FRANCISCO.

FULL SETS

FROM THE COMMENCEMENT OF THE CALIFORNIAN

TO THE CLOSE OF VOL. IV.

Can be procured at the Office. Price, bound in muslin, per volume, $4. Two volumes bound together, $7. Unbound, per volume, $3.

CARRINGTON & CO'S
GENERAL PURCHASING AGENCY,
No. 40 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

IF YOU WANT

Books, Prints, Clothing, Instruments, Music, Tools, Weapons, Sporting Implements, Fancy Stock, Jewelry, Silver or Plated Ware, Wines, Cigars, Fine Groceries, Furniture; in short, any Article, large or small, singly or in quantity, for Ladies' or Gentlemen's use or wear.

or for Dealers' Supplies, from a seal ring to a steam engine—a Cameo or a Cashmere; lace or leather,

SEND ON YOUR ORDERS.

Orders may be given in French, Spanish or German.

COMMISSION CHARGE, - - - FIVE PER CENT.

Address:

CARRINGTON & CO.,
40 Broadway, N. Y.

RATES OF POSTAGE.

Valuable letters may be registered on application at the office of mailing, and the payment of 20 cents registration fee.

Transient newspapers, periodicals, blanks, proof-sheets, book manuscripts, pamphlets, and all mailable printed matter, except circulars and books, 2 cents for each and every 4 ounces. Double these rates are charged for books.

Seeds, cuttings, roots, etc., 2 cents for each 4 ounces or less quantity.

All packages of mail matter not charged with letter postage must be so arranged that the same can be conveniently examined by Postmasters; if not, letter postage will be charged.

Unsealed circulars, to one address, not exceeding three in number, 2 cents, and in the same proportion for a greater number.

No package will be forwarded by mail which weighs over 4 pounds.

All postage matter, for delivery within the United States, must be prepaid by stamps (except duly certified letters of soldiers and sailors;) otherwise, double the above rates will be charged on delivery.

Weekly newspapers (one copy only) sent to actual subscribers within the county where printed and published, free.

Letters to Canada and other British North American Provinces, when not over 3,000 miles, 10 cents for each ½ ounce. When over 3,000 miles, 15 cents. Prepayment optional.

Letters to Great Britain or Ireland, 24 cents. Prepayment optional.

THE

AWARDED THE HIGHEST PREMIUM

AT THE

State Fair of California,

The only Fair on the Pacific coast at which any two double-thread Machines were exhibited in competition in 1865.

If there is a FLORENCE SEWING MACHINE within one thousand miles of this office that is not working well, it will be attended to if I am informed of it, without expense to the owner. SAMUEL HILL,

General Agent,

111 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

THE

FLORENCE

SEWING MACHINE

RECEIVED THE FIRST PREMIUM, A GOLD MEDAL, at the Great Exhibition of the AMERICAN INSTUTE, - - - New York,

1865.

my10-3m

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS

CREATE A HEALTHY APPETITE!

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa and Constipation.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Invigorate the System and enliven the mind.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Overcome the effects of Drunkenness and Late Hours.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure all Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Are Palatable to the Taste.

They are the

BEST BITTERS IN THE MARKET,

And when once used will always be called for again.

They are made in the most careful manner

From Pure Old Wheat Whisky, Medicated from

Roots and Herbs

Especially adapted for the cure of all Stomachic Diseases and Liver Complaints.

Try Them and You will be Satisfied.

For sale everywhere by Druggists and Liquor Dealers or by

N. B. JACOBS & CO.,
423 Front street,
my11-6m San Francisco

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL

Confectioners,

111 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter.

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double-refined Sugar, and to be qual to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods livred to any part of the city free of charge. my24-3m

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,

WHOLESALE

DRUGGISTS,

IMPORTERS OF

Drugs, Chemicals, Herbs,

PATENT MEDICINES,

PAINTS, VARNISHES,

ACIDS, DYE STUFFS,

OILS, PERFUMERIES,

TOILET ARTICLES,

BRUSHES.

We are just receiving, direct from Spain, a complete assortment of

CORKS! CORKS! CORKS

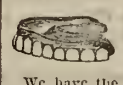
which we offer at lower prices than usual

DUSTING, PAINT, VARNISH, SHOE, SCRUB, HAIR AND TOOTH BRUSHES:

We have a splendid stock, which we offer at extremely low prices.

HERBS.

We have received, direct from the Shakers, all kinds of fresh Herbs, and intend to keep every article used of this description.



TILDEN'S SOLID AND FLUID EXTRACTS, PILLS, AND CONCENTRATED PREPARATIONS.

We have on hand, and shall keep a full assortment of the above celebrated preparations, which we offer to the trade at such prices as will defy competition.

FLAVORING EXTRACTS.

A great variety, not to be equalled in the market as to quality and price.

Parties about purchasing would do well to give us a call and examine prices and goods before purchasing elsewhere.

PLAIN AND GUM TEETH.

We have the largest assortment of any house on the Pacific coast.

GOLD FOIL.

We are manufacturing Foil which we can recommend to the profession as being a superior article. We also have on hand a full assortment, of all the various makers

VULCANIZERS,

DENTAL CHAIRS AND LATHES

FILES,

VULCANITE AND GUTTA PERCHA,

FORCEPS,

BURRS, DRILLS AND EXCAVATORS,

MIRRORS, ETC.

We have, besides the above, every article used by the Dentist, and are daily in receipt of all the new inventions in use.

Dentists will find it to their interest to call and examine our stock and prices before purchasing elsewhere.

R. H. McDonald & Co.,

CORNER SANSOME AND PINE STREETS,

SAN FRANCISCO.

AND

J STREET - - SACRAMENTO.

ap28-3m

TRY LE COUNT'S INK.

CORNER OF

Sacramento and Montgomery streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

Post Office Address: Lock Box No 1477. je30 3m

THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD.

DR. MAGGIEL'S

Pills and Salve.

These Life-giving remedies are now, for the first time, given publicly to the world. For over a quarter of a century of private practice the ingredients in these

LIFE-GIVING PILLS!

Have been used with the greatest success. Their mission is not only to prevent disease, but to cure. They search out the various maladies by which the patient is suffering, and re-invigorate the failing system. To the aged and infirm a few doses of these valuable PILLS will prove to be

A VERY FOUNTAIN OF YOUTH,

For in every case they add new life and vitality, and restore the waning energies to their pristine state. To the young and middle-aged, they will prove most invaluable, as a ready, specific, and sterling medicine. Here is a dream realized, that Ponce-de-Leon sought for three hundred years ago, and never found. He looked for a fountain that would restore the old to vigor and make youth ever

AN ETERNAL SPRING!

It was left for this day and hour to realize the dream, and show in one glorious fact, the magic that made it fair.

THESE FAMOUS REMEDIES

Cannot stay the flight of years, but they can force back, and hold aloof, diseases that might triumph over the aged and the young. Let none hesitate then, but seize the favorable opportunity that offers. When taken as prescribed—

FOR BILLIOUS DISORDERS

Nothing can be more productive of cure than these Pills. Their almost magic influence is felt at once; and the usual concomitants of this most distressing disease are removed. These remedies are made from the purest

VEGETABLE COMPOUNDS.

They will not harm the most delicate female, and can be given with good effect in prescribed doses to the youngest babe.

FOR CUTANEOUS DISORDERS

And all eruptions of the skin, the SALVE is most invaluable. It does not heal externally alone, but penetrates with the most searching effects to the very root of the evil!

Dr. Maggiel's Pills

Invariably cure the following diseases:

Asthma,
Bowel Complaints,
Coughs,
Colds,
Chest Diseases,
Costiveness,
Dyspepsia,
Diarrhœa,
Dropsy,
Debility,
Female Complaints, Fever and Ague
Headache,
Indigestion,
Influenza,
Inflammation,
Inward Weakness,
Liver Complaint,
Lowness of Spirits,
Ringworm,
Rheumatism,
Salt Rheum,
Scalds,
Skin Diseases.

NOTICE.—None genuine without the engraved trade-mark around each pot or box, signed by Dr. J. Maggiel, 43 Fulton st., New York, to counterfeit which is felony.

☞ Sold by all respectable Dealers in Medicines throughout the United States—at 25 cents per box or pot. ap14-1y

FRANKLIN PRINTING OFFICE,

509 CLAY STREET, (near Sansome,)

SAN FRANCISCO,

"The oldest and most complete Book and Job printing establishment in California. All descriptions of work neatly executed at low rates."

ja FRANK EASTMAN, Proprietor.

J. PEIRCE,

FURNITURE AND

Bedding Warerooms.

Nos. 415, 417, AND 419 CALIFORNIA STREET, NEAR MONTGOMERY.

THIS STOCK OF FURNITURE, etc., was selected with great care, and special attention given to the wants of this market, ENTIRELY AT THE EAST. It is NOT COMPOSED OF REFUSE GOODS, ODDS AND ENDS OF OTHER HOUSES that have lately closed out here, but CONSISTS ENTIRELY OF NEW GOODS, made after the latest patterns and in the most durable manner.

The present Stock is fully TWICE as large as that of any other house here. Parties having any doubts of this, or that the assortment is not superior to any in the city, can easily satisfy themselves by calling.

The stock of Case Goods is larger than ever before.

J. PEIRCE,
Ware-rooms 415, 417 and 419 California street,
je16-3m SAN FRANCISCO.

B. F. STERETT, 533 Clay St., a few doors below Montgomery, continues to print all kinds of Books, Bills, Circulars, Cards, etc. in superior style, and at reasonable prices.

T. RODGERS JOHNSON,

ODD FELLOWS' HALL, 329 Montgomery street,
je30 3m San Francisco.

NATHANIEL GRAY,

UNDERTAKER,

CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,

641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB

Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

je17 3m

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,

PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,

517 CLAY STREET,

Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,

SAN FRANCISCO.

SCHOOL FURNITURE.

RANKIN'S PATENT SCHOOL DESK;
Liquid Slating for Blackboard;
ARITHMETICAL FRAME;
Babbitonian System of Writing—the Best System know

W. HOLT,
de9 305 Montgomery street, Room No 2.

THE BROTHERS.

FEW who make any prolonged stay at Spa, a watering-place in Belgium, fail to visit the grotto of Remouchamps. On the roadside, about half a mile beyond the grotto, may be seen the Church of Dieupart, the architecture of which is superior to that of most of the country churches in that district. The following legend is connected with its erection about five hundred years ago:

At that time there stood upon a height above where the church is now seen, a chateau, the lord of which, at the date of our story, was a bold and wicked man, the terror of the neighborhood. He had lived for about fifteen years with his wife, who had borne him no offspring, and who had come with him from some foreign land, where he had spent his youth, rumor said, in a most disreputable manner. One day there came to the chateau a youthful Minnesinger, one of those minstrels who passed from town to town, from castle to castle, delighting the ears of their denizens with romantic ballads, sung to the accompaniment of the harp, and receiving in return bed and board for a short time, and wherewithal to support them on their journey to their next halting-place. He was admitted to the presence of the lord and lady of the castle, and forthwith began his lay. At the first stanza a deadly palor overspread the features of the baroness, and with a trembling voice she demanded whence he came, and from whom he had learned that ballad.

"I come from Trieves," was the reply, "and the ballad was taught me by an aged man with whom I dwelt, and who, when I was sufficiently well skilled in the art of music, sent me forth and bade me sing it in every town and castle which I should enter."

The seigneur of Monjardin, observing that his wife's agitation was becoming more and more visible and intense, ordered the minstrel to quit the chamber, but to await in the castle his farther orders. When he was gone, the baroness exclaimed:

"Those words! that air!-methought they were known but to myself and to my father."

"The minstrel is without doubt a spy," said the suspicious baron, "whose object is to discover our abode, and give information thereof to some enemies; but he shall not return to give intelligence to those who have sent him."

"Oh! slay him not," said the baroness; "add not the murder of this innocent youth to a list of crimes already too long."

"Well, well," answered the baron, "I shall not deprive him of life, but it were dangerous to give him his liberty; I will confine him in one of the chambers of the castle."

So saying he went forth to execute his design, but the Minnesinger had disappeared, and could not be found. A few days elapsed, and the young minstrel again appeared at the castle. He was taken by the baron to a secret chamber known only to himself, in a remote part of the castle.

"Now," asked the baron, "tell me wherefore thou hast come to this castle? I know well, thou art here on some secret errand, and if it be not revealed, thy days are numbered."

But the minstrel gave no other answer than that which he had given before.

"Thou art obstinate, then! 'Tis well that thou shouldst know what punishment awaits thee; neither food nor drink shall pass thy lips until thou shalt tell me all I desire to know. The place whence thou comest, the ballad thou hast sung, are tokens that some hidden design brings thee here; 'tis my will that thou disclose it. I will return to-morrow and give thee one more chance for life; if thou art still obstinate, I will leave thee here to perish."

The baron then departed, carefully fastening the door of the chamber.

The next day found the brave minstrel as determined as before to make no further revelations, and so the cruel baron left him to his fate, informing his wife that he was merely keeping him in custody, as he was more than ever convinced that the minstrel plotted mischief.

Three days had elapsed since he was imprisoned, when an aged man arrived at the chateau, wearied and footsore, and having craved and obtained an audience of the baron, demanded if he knew aught of a youthful minstrel, who, he heard, was last seen at the castle.

"Thou dost not remember me," continued the stranger: "I am thy wife's father. Thou didst carry off, at the head of thy robber band, my daughter from her home at Trieves, and ever since I have made fruitless effort to discover thine abode. At length I bethought me of a means which has proved successful; I knew a sweet ballad which my daughter had composed in her youth; this I taught to a boy, who, neglected from his infancy by his own relatives, lived under my care. Him I bade go forth, and sing this lay in every town and castle until he should find my daughter, and then send me intelligence where she was, that I might see her ere I die. This youth came here; thou didst not recognize him, doubtless; he is thy brother——"

The baron stayed to hear no more; he hastened in an agony of terror to the secret chamber, flung open the door, and beheld extended on the ground the body of his brother. He caught up the lifeless form in his arms, intending to convey it where remedies might be applied; but—horror!—in his confusion he had closed the door, and it could be opened only from without. His cries were unavailing; none knew of the secret chamber but himself.

For some time the disappearance of the baron caused the greatest excitement; but at length, while some repairs were being executed in the masonry of the castle, the workmen discovered the secret chamber, the half worm-eaten, yet still recognizable, corpses of the two brothers, and a written document containing the confession of the baron.

The lady of Monjardin, struck with horror, caused the chateau to be pulled down, and the present Church of Dieupart to be built with its stones.

A PEOPLE TOO BUSY TO READ.

THERE are signs not a few in the world of literature—or at least in that portion of it which belongs to this country—which are ominous. Once we promised to be a nation of book-buyers and book-readers. The sale of standard works was steady and very large. Publishers dared to attempt great ventures, sure of finding patrons and ample support. Professional men everywhere welcomed a scholarly publication as conferring honor upon the country. Then Irving and Cooper were greater favorites than Josh Billings and Mrs. Southworth. In fact it was disreputable for a publisher to lend his name to a sensation work of any kind. But since the war the bright promise of a dignified and well-sustained literature has been gradually but rapidly vanishing. Books are not bought as they were. The people do not read as they did. Libraries are freely offered for sale, and, what is most significant of all, the leading publishers complain that the demand for really sterling books is constantly diminishing. We hear every week of one or more most worthy literary ventures which publishers refuse to undertake, simply because they have lost their faith in the willingness of the people to support an honorable literature. Hence discreditable books are on nearly every bookseller's counter, and American publishers are content that English houses should bring in their long lists and offer fine editions of standard works at prices less than they can afford them. We say these signs are ominous—portending the greatest evil.

We believe the secret of the whole matter to be simply that our people are too busy with money-making to read books that require any application. The disturbance and excitement of the war disarranged habits of study and quiet, and finally the universal mania for speculation—for making speedy fortunes—intruded upon almost every household in the land. Our people are money mad. Extravagance is the watchword of the hour, and while this fever is raging it is in vain to hope for a healthier literary tone. Probably there are many of our own readers who will appreciate the change to which we refer. Once they found it comparatively easy to devote at least a portion of their time to quiet reading. They felt a pride, too, in sustaining good works. When a publisher announced a book of permanent value they felt it to be their duty to encourage it by actual support. They would no more think of selling their libraries than they would of pawning their clothes. Nor would they allow a silly, sensation story to be placed upon their table. But the wild rush of war and all its excitements have swept away too many good things. The cry for money has swallowed up every other, and the publishers look on with wonder and disgust as the old-time taste and scholarly aspiration seem abandoned at the altars of Moloch and Mammon. The country is full of opportunities for acquiring wealth, and now that the red hand of speculation has swept down in all its infernal power, the old paths are too narrow—the old ways too slow. Who would be poring over books when there are chances to be millionaires?

Of course, there are some good and true who do not yield to the fascinations of the hour. There are book publishers who can recite their names with no hesitation—so prompt and faithful are they in maintaining whatever is good. These men read. If all the fortunes of the world were at their disposal, they would shut to their library doors and give themselves to study. Such names are honored indeed. The publishers of critical journals know them well. What little money they have is given to the liberal and hearty support of good books, good papers, and good scholars. But the rich men of the land, where are they? Building palatial houses, founding erratic institutions, giving themselves to everything and anything but to the generous support of an honorable literature. That which should be their pride is utterly neglected by them. Nor books nor papers get much aid from their abundance. They will give largely to build a public edifice, but will not think that with a mere bagatelle they may aid in giving to a whole nation a book that will be valuable for all time. Surely their neglect must be from forgetfulness—we cannot think that it arises from pure lack of appreciation or disregard of a national literary reputation.

While we have no great hope for the immediate future in regard to this matter, yet something can surely be done for the correction of the evil. Not only can wealthy gentlemen aid materially, but those of small means who love good books and who once found time for reading can do a vast deal by betaking themselves to quiet study again. Women, too, can do much by making an effort to check the extravagance of the hour, which, it must be said, is largely inspired by their demands. The publishers can also help in the matter by permitting only good books to go forth with their names. But the main trouble is in the wild recklessness of the times, which causes only unrest, and unfits for reading. We are rushing ahead at too high speed, and from present appearances shall awake from the dream to find our national literature despoiled and our taste degenerated.—Round Table.

CAUSES OF SUDDEN DEATH.—Very few of the sudden deaths which are said to arise from diseases of the heart do really arise from that cause. To ascertain the real origin of sudden deaths, an experiment has been tried in Europe, and reported to a scientific congress at Strasburg. Sixty-six cases of sudden death were made the subject of a thorough post mortem examination; in these cases only two were found who had died from disease of the heart. Nine out of sixty-six had died from apoplexy, while there were forty-six cases of congestion of the lungs—that is, the lungs were so full of blood they could not work, not being room enough for a sufficient quantity of air to enter to support life. The causes that produce congestion of the lungs are—cold feet, tight clothing, costive bowels, sitting still until chilled after being warmed with labor or a rapid walk, going too suddenly from a close room into the air, especially after speaking, and sudden depressing news operating on the blood. These causes of sudden death being known, an avoidance of them may serve to lengthen many valuable lives, which would otherwise be lost under the verdict of heart complaint. That disease is supposed to be inevitable and incurable; hence, many may not take the pains they would to avoid sudden death, if they knew it lay in their power.—Exchange.

A YOUNG man who has great respect for the revenue laws, and aspires to be a leader of fashion, has introduced a new and decidedly nobby style of collar in Poughkeepsie—a two-cent revenue stamp being pasted on each of the long corners.

A NEW AND GRAND EPOCH IN MEDICINE.—Dr. Maggiel is the founder of a new medical system. The quantitarians, whose vast internal doses enfeeble the stomach and paralyze the bowels, must give precedence to the man who restores health and appetite with from one or two of his extraordinary pills, and cures the most virulent sores with a box or so of his wonderful and all-healing salve. These two great specifics of the Doctor are fast superseding all the stereotyped nostrums of the day. Extraordinary cures by Maggiel's Pills and salve have opened the eyes of the public to the inefficiency of the so-called remedies of others, and upon which people have so long blindly depended. Maggiel's Pills are not of the class that are swallowed by the dozen, and of which every boxfull taken creates an absolute necessity for another. One or two of Maggiel's Pills suffice to place the bowels in perfect order, tone the stomach, create an appetite, and render the spirits light and buoyant. There is no griping, and no reaction in the form of constipation. If the liver is affected, its functions are restored, and if the nervous system is feeble it is invigorated. This last quality makes the medicines very desirable for the wants of delicate females. Ulcerous and eruptive diseases are literally extinguished by the disinfectant power of Maggiel's salve. In fact, it is here announced that Maggiel's Bilious, Dyspeptic and Diarrhea Pills cure where all others fail. While, for Burns, Scalds, Chilblains, Cuts and all abrasions of the skin, Maggiel's Salve is infallible. Sold by J. MAGGIEL, No. 11 Pine street, New York, and all Druggists, at 25 cents per box. R. H. McDonald & Co., Agents for Pacific coast, corner Sansome and Pine streets, San Francisco. e14

TROUBLE WITH TURKEY.—A serious embroglio in our relations with the Divan has arisen, as follows: Sarkis Minasian, who has for many years acted as the resident agent in Turkey for the sale of Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co.'s medicines, driven by the increase of his business to a necessity for more room, built his warehouse in Constantinople several stories higher, after having obtained the necessary permit from the authorities. The Imans of a neighboring mosque, which overlooked the premises, demanded a large present in money, which was refused. They then applied to the Grand Vizier for the enforcement of an obsolete law, which had been disregarded two hundred years, requiring him to take down the building to eighteen feet, which was granted, and they commenced the work of demolition. Minasian then applied to the American Minister, who notified the Sublime Porte that American property could not be thus trifled with, and that the demolition must cease. Then commenced the usual course of Mussulman prevarication and promises, but no real redress. Finally, Minister Morris informed them that if their depredations continued, he should order the U. S. ships of war to enter the Bosphorus and Messrs. Ayers' medical warehouse would not be alone roofless. A stroke of his pen could have laid the whole city under the sweep of American cannon, backed by men who are not schooled in the lessons of fear. This brought them to their senses and speedy redress. Minasian has now arrived in this country, to present the case to our State Department for indemnity. At length it is something to say among the peoples of the earth, "I am an American citizen!"—]Columbia Republican

A YOUNG and lovely daughter of a distinguished gentleman of this city acknowledges that for embellishing the complexion and skin, Davidson's Circassian Bloom, is by far the most excellent in perfume, innocent in effects, and gives a more heightened lustre to the toilet, than other preparation of the kind in use.

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.

A toilet delight. Superior to any cologne. used to bathe the face and person, to render the skiu soft and fresh, to allay inflammation, to perfume clothing, for headuche, etc. It is manufactured from the rich Southern Magnolia, and is obtaining a patronage quite unprecedeuted. It is a favorite with actresses and opera singers. It is sold hy all dealers, at $1.00 in large hottles, and hy DEMAS BARNES & Co., New York, Wholesale Ageuts.

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.—The prettiest thing, the "sweetest thing," und the most of it for the least money. It overcomes the odor of perspiration; softens and adds delicacy to the skin; is a delightful perfume; allays headache und inflammatiou, and is a necessary companion in the sick room, in the nursery und upon the toilet sideboard. It can be ohned everywhere at oue dollar per hottle.

LYON'S MAGNETIC INSECT POWDER is instant death to Fleas, Ticks, Roaches, and everything of the insect species. It is one of the few articles that cuu he relied upon, and for a mere wo hits we cun save the bites and hills of these little pests. None is genuine unless signed by E. Lyon, and hearing the private stamp of Demas Darnes & Co., New York.

S—T—1860—X. DRAKE'S PLANTATION BITTERS.

They purify, strengthen and invigorate.
They create a healthy appetite.
They are au antidote to chauge of water and diet.
They streugthen the system and enliven the miud.
They prevent miasmatic and intermitteut fevers.
They purify the hreath and acidity of the stomach.
They cure Dyspepsia und Constipation.
They cure Liver Complaint and Nervous Heudache.

They are the hest Bitters in the world. They make the weak strong, and are exhausted nature's great restorer. They are made of pure St. Croix Rum, the celebrated Culisaya Bark, roots and herhs, and are taken with the pleasure of u heveruge, without regard to age or time of day. Particularly recommended to delicate persons requiring a gentle stimulaut. Sold hy ull Grocers, Druggists, Hotels and Saloons. Only genuine when Cork is covered hy our private U. S. Stamp. Beware of counterfeits and refilled hottles.

D. H. DRAKE & CO., New York.

"In lifting the kettle from the fire I scalded my self very severely—one hand almost to a crisp. The torture was unhearable. * * * The Mexican Mustang Liniment relieved the pain almost immediately. It healed rapidly, und left very little scar.

"CHAS. FOSTER, 420 Broad street, Philada."

This is merely a sample of what the Mustang Liuiment will do. It is iuvaluahle in all cases of wounds, swellings, sprains, cuts, hruises, spavins, etc., either upon man or heast.

Beware of counterfeits. None is genuine unless wrapped in fine steel-plate engravings, hearing the signature of G. W. Westhrook, Chemist, and the private stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., New York.

ALL WHO VALUE A BEAUTIFUL HEAD OF HAIR, and its preservation from premature baldness and turning gray, will not fail to use Lyon's Celebrated KATHAIRON. It makes the hair rich, soft, and glossy, eradicates dandruff, and causes the hair to grow with luxuriant beauty. It is sold everywhere. E. THOMAS LYON, Chemist, N. Y.

LYON'S EXTRACT OF PURE JAMAICA GINGER, for Indigestion, Nausea, Heartburn, Sick Headache, Cholera Morhus, &c., where a wurming, genial stimulant is required. Its careful preparatiou and entire purity make it a cheup and reliahle article for culinary purposes. Sold everywhere, at 50 cents per bottle. ap7-1y

NO FORFEITING.—Heretofore, if a person holding a Life Policy hecame unfortuuate, und could not raise the sum of money required to pay his next premium, his policy was declared forfeited. The BROOKLYN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK has decided to make EVERY POLICY it issues NON-FORFEITABLE, giving a PAID-UP POLICY to the party if unable to continue his payments of premiums. The dividends of the Brooklyn Life Insurance Company are settled annually in cash. This plan is far more acceptable to insurers than at the end of three or five years, as in other compauies. The Brooklyn Life Insurance Company allows thirty days grace in the payment of premiums. Its policies are incontestable, and its losses are promptly paid. The Brooklyn Life Insurance Company offers every known plan of Life and Endowment Insurance. Get a pamphlet at the office, 240 Montgomery street, southeast corner of Pine, from Stephen T. King, General Manager, or David B. Arrowsmith, Local Agent.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is hecoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, hut without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, hecause the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not hy defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is ahle to do, hecause he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on ohedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

E. GOLDSMITH & Co., at No. 646 Sacramento street, three doors below Kearny, have just received some heautiful new style Garihaldis und Zouave Jackets, that for taste and stylo ure particularly worthy of the atteution of our lady readers. They have also a fine assortment of Ladies' Furnishing Goods of the choicest description. French corsets for one dollar. A great variety of French toilet and fancy articles, the newest styles of huttons and dress trimmings, may always be found at Goldsmith's 646 Sacramento street.

RHEUMATISM.

Throughout this coast a great deal of suffering is experienced from Rheumatism. Weeks and even months of protracted and aggravated misery is endured hy the victims of medical inefficiency and ignorance, which could be cured just as speedily as was Mr. Sparrow, whose testimony is given helow, and is only the echo of hundreds of other cases. Dr. Bourne cures without medicines, which accounts for his extraordinary success. No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street entrance:

SAN FRANCISCO, September 6, 1861.

Dr. Bourne: Last Winter I was nearly dead, hy an attack of inflammatory rheumatism. I suffered the most excruciating pains for about five weeks, without any hope of relief, when a friend, hearing of my illness, called to see me, and assured me that if I would stop "drugging and dosing," and go to you, that you would have me walking about the streets in three days. Sure enough, although I was utterly helpless, and conveyed to your house in a carriage, and carried into it hy three stout men, and was hy them lifted into the hath, yet, on coming out of the hath I was ahle to largely assist myself, doing much toward dressing, and without assistance walked from the hath to the carriage. On the fourth day, I discharged my carriage and walked with a friend's aid the entire distance to your house (nearly a mile) and home again, and so on until cured; and I had not taken more than twelve haths when, all pain and swelling having ceased, I felt myself a well man. And now I am happy to do this little service of publicly certifying to the simple truth, leaving it to do its own work among such of my friends and acquaintances as may chance to see this. Your friend, JOSEPH SPARROW.

DAINTY WORK.—About the dainticst work we ever saw were specimens of hair jewelry at the establishment of Mrs. C. Cook, 645 Clay street, hetween Montgomery and Kearny streets, yesterday. This lady manufactures all sorts of jewelry—watch-chains, earrings, finger rings, hreastpins, and various other kinds of ornaments—from human hair. We wit uessed the process of manufacture, and it is intricate and ingenious in the highest degree.—S. F. Examiner.

A SUMMER AND WINTER MEDICINE.

"Great oaks from little acorns grow."

The worst diseases known to the human race spring from causes so small as to almost defy detection. The volumes of scientific lore that fill the tahles and shelves of the medical fraternity only go to prove and elaborate these facts.

Then guard yourselves while you may. The smallest pimple on the skin is a tell-tale and indicator of disease. It may fade und die away from the surface of the hody, hut it will reach the vitals, perhaps, at last, and death he the result and final close. Maggiel's Bilious, Dyspeptic and Diarrhœa Pills cure where all others fail. While for Burns, Scalds, Chilhlains, Cuts, and all ahrasions of the skin, Maggiel's Salve is infallible. Sold hy J. Maggiel, 43 Fulton street, New York, and all Druggists, at 25 cents per hox.

WANTED—Agents to sell, by subscription only the most popular work ever written: "GRANT AND SHERMAN; their Campaigns and Generals." By the world renowned historian, Hon. J. T. Headley, author of Washington and his Generals, Sacred Mountains, etc. Agents are taking as high as thirty subscribers per day, and all agree in pronouncing it the most saleable work they ever took hold of. The people want Headley's illustrated "GRANT AND SHERMAN," etc. For terms and territory, address E. E. SHEAR, No. 8 Montgomery Street, and Box 1,430, San Francisco, California

FRAGRANT SOZODONT FOR THE TEETH

READ the Testimony of a few of the many Eminent Clergymen and their Families of New York city, who, having used the Sozodont for a long time past, are convinced of its excellent and invaluable qualities, and give it their cordial commendation:

Rev. THOMAS DEWITT, Pastor Collegiate Ref. Dutch Church, Lafayette Place.
Rev. J. W. ALEXANDER, D. D., Presbyterian Church, Fifth Avenue.
Rev. J. B. WAKELEY, M. E. City Missionary.
Rev. W. F. MORGAN, D. D., Rector St. Thomas Church, Broadway.
Rev. E. H. CHAPIN, D. D., Pastor Fourth Universalist Church, Broadway.
Rev. SAMUEL COOKE, D.D., Rector St. Bartholomew's Church, Lafayette Place.
Rev. SAMUEL OSGOOD, D.D., Pastor Church of Messiah, Broadway.
Rev. B. M. ADAMS, M. E. Church, Duane street.
Rev. HEMAN BANGS, late Pastor Centenary M. E. Church, Brooklyn.
Rev. W. S. MIKELS, Pastor Baptist Church, Sixteenth street.
Rev. GEO. POTTS, D.D., Pastor Presbyterian Church, University Place.
Rev. E. E. RANKIN, Pastor Presbyterian Church Forty second street.
Rev. T. E. VERMILYE, D. D., Pastor of Co. Dutch Reformed, Lafayette Place.

FROM G. F. J. COLBURN, DOCTOR DENTAL SURGERY, NEWARK, N. J.

The Popular Dentrifice known as Van Buskirk's "SOZODONT," besides being a very pleasant addition to the toilet, contains ingredients that, if used according to the directions, will prove of the greatest utility to the health of the mouth and teeth.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS!

Sold by all Druggists and Perfumers.

HALL & RUCKEL,
NEW YORK.
je2 4m

HALL'S SARSAPARILLA,
YELLOW DOCK AND IODIDE POTASS,
THE
Best Blood Purifier Known.

Persons that are troubled with Rheumatism, Scrofula, Neuralgia, Morbid Liver, Salt Rheum, Pimples, Boils, or any of the many diseases that originate from Impure Blood, would find it much to their advantage to give this justly celebrated article a trial. One or two bottles are quite sufficient to convince the most skeptical of its merits. It contains neither Spirit, ARSENIC nor MERCURY which cannot be truly said of any other preparation called "Sarsaparilla."

SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,
ap7 3m N. W. cor. Sansome and Commercial streets

FARRAND'S OSCILLATING
Amalgamator.

THIS UNRIVALLED IMPROVEMENT FOR THE REduction and amalgamation of Gold and Silver Ores, is now running daily at No. 206 Commercial street, between Front and Davis.

THIS AMALGAMATOR INVOLVES
NO COMPLICATED MACHINERY

And possesses the following advantages over all thers now in use:

1st. It is capable of doing double the amount of work of the ordinary Pans, at a saving of more than one-half the power.

2d. It reduces the pulp finer, thereby producing a better result.

3d. It requires less quicksilver by one-half at a charge, whilst the loss by trituration is comparatively nothing.

4th. As an Amalgamator for gold contained in sulphurets, as also for very fine or flour gold, it has no equal.

5th. This Amalgamator involves no complicated machinery, and is less liable to get out of order than any of the pans.

DESCRIPTION OF FARRAND'S AMALGAMATOR.

In offering this Amalgamator to the public the inventor does not claim any new or scientific method of extracting the precious metals from the ores; he merely claims a new and simple combination of mechanical principles, whereby a great saving of power (full one-half in amount) is effected. The capacity of the machine varies with its size. The smallest, or prospecting size, will reduce 400 lbs. in three hours, and can be easily worked hy the power of one man. The largest size will work 1,500 lbs in three hours, or six tons in 24 hours, with an application of a trifle more than one-horse power. This saving of power, as all mill-men are aware, is an important consideration particularly where fuel is scarce. The power so saved in running the Amalgamators may be advantageously employed to an increase of stamps, and thus proportionally increasing the work of the mill. This machine consists of a semi-cylindrical, trough-shaped vessel, in the interior of which is furnished with moveable concave dies, to he replaced when worn out, as in ordinary pans. The mullers are convex, and attached to a substantial rock shaft, by which they are moved back and forward by crank or eccentric motion. The mullers are held to their places by springs of moderate strength, the pressure of which may he easily regulated. The oscillating motion of the mullers serves to keep the pulp in a constant state of agitation, thoroughly mixing it, and passing it under the mullers without resort to any of the various expedients employed in Pans where a circular motion is maintained.

The peculiar construction of this superior machine admits of its heing worked with a much smaller charge of quick ilver, to any given amount of pulp than the flat-bottomed Pans. The spiral springs greatly assist in the work of reduction, hy allowing the free admission of the pulp between the mullers and dies, so that the pulp is made to actually work upon itself—as the dust of the diamond is made to reduce the gem itself.

Trials made with this machine in the presence of experts, during the last six months, have been pronounced highly satisfactory. It is peculiarly well adapted to employment by small mining operators in distant localities, as it can readily be taken to pieces and packed upon mules.

A large size machine is construeted without dies or mullers, hut simply with arms to act as stirrers, to he used in connection with several of the Amalgamators as a "Separator," as it is found that the peculiar motion given to these arms, in connection with the concave shape of the hody of the machine, renders it most effectual for such a purpose.

W. D. FARRAND

BREWSTER & CO.'S
Carriage Manufactory,
372 Broome steet, New York.

We desire to announce to our California friends that we have made extensive arrangements by increasing our works for the coming season, and with a view to

SUPPLYING THE
WANTS OF CALIFORNIA,

will manufacture a style of work particularly adapted to city and country use, and in view of the destructive effects of city railroads on all light work, will give

CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, PHAETONS, COUPES, and Vehicles of every description, of our own manufacture, on hand and made to order.

Orders or communications should be addressed to
BREWSTER & CO.,
Of Broome street,

The firm of Brewster & Baldwin not being in any way connected with
BREWSTER & CO.,
Of No. 372, Broome street,

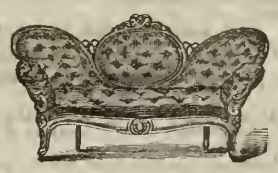
COMMERCIAL EDUCATION.

Pacific Business College,
751 MARKET STREET,
(BETWEEN THIRD AND FOURTH,)
SAN FRANCISCO.

An Institution designed to prepare Young and Middle aged men for an active and successful BUSINESS LIFE.

This is the largest, most complete, and thorough Institution of the kind on the coast, and

THE ONLY



Commercial College which is conducted on Actual Business Principles. Its great system of Business Training is endorsed by the Most Eminent Financiers and Business Men of the Nation.

REGULAR BANKS AND BUSINESS OFFICES have been introduced, by which we are enabled to fit our Students in the best possible manner, and shortest possible time, for active Business Life.

Those in pursuit of a
PRACTICAL BUSINESS EDUCATION
should examine the merits of this College. Send for the COLLEGE REVIEW, giving full particulars of the College, besides containing other important and interesting matter. Sent free to all desiring it.

Further particulars can be had by calling at the College, or addressing M. K. LAUDENSLAGER, President fe17 Business College, San Francisco.

FURNITURE
AND BEDDING!

LARGEST STOCK!
LATEST STYLES!
The Best Workmanship,
AND LOWEST PRICES!
AT
Goodwin & Co.'s
FURNITURE WARE-ROOMS,
Nos. 508, 510, 518 and 528 Washington-st.
ja16 SAN FRANCISCO.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,
IMPORTERS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS
IN FINE CLOTHING,
AND
Gent's Furnishing Goods,
TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,
Nos. 200 and 202 Montgomery street,
Corner of Bush, - - - San Francisco.

JOS. WINTERBURN & CO.

J. WINTERBURN, V. A. TORRAS, W. HOFFSCHNEIDER.
(Successors to W. P. Harrison.)
Printers and Electrotypers,
413 TO 417 CLAY ST., (Below Sansome.)
SAN FRANCISCO.

ALL KINDS OF JOB PRINTING
Neatly and Promptly Executed.

ELECTROTYPING
Done at the shortest notice.
Stamps of all kinds made to order.
Printing in Spanish, French, German and Italian Languages, executed with correctness.
A "Mammoth" and two No. 3 Hand Presses FOR SALE very cheap. my3-3m

SMOKE
THE PATENT
RUSSIAN CIGARETTES,
MANUFACTURED BY
GIBB & STAHL,
S.W. COR. KEARNY AND SACRAMENTO STREETS,
SAN FRANCISCO.

For sale at all Cigar Stores. ap28 3m

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,
No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,
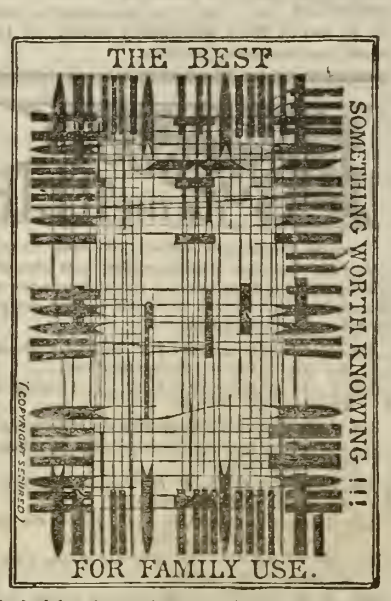
SAN FRANCISCO.

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Meta Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship Work o all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.
All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.
Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.
JOHN P. GALLAGHER,
JOSEPH H. WEED.
je10 3m

MONEY TO LOAN!
MONEY TO LOAN



On City Real Estate, Dwellings, Factories, Shipping and Merchandise, for such time as may be agreed for. Deposits received in small or large sums, at interest, by the CALIFORNIA BUILDING, LOAN AND SAVINGS BANK,
53 California street, (one door from Sansome street.)
my THOMAS MOONEY, Pr sident.

SPRING AND SUMMER STYLE

SILK HAT,
1866,
INTRODUCED - - - - - - MARCH 3
BY
McGANN & CO.,
FASHIONABLE HATTERS,
No. 654 Washington street,
Two doors below Kearny.

SPRING AND SUMMER STYLES.—Silk, Felt, Beaver, and other HATS for sale at the lowest prices.
CAPS of every description, suitable for all ages, made to order.
McGANN & CO., being experienced and skilled in all the branches of the manufacture of Hats, feel confident of giving entire satisfaction to their patrons. Every description of Hats and Caps made to order.
Remember, McGANN & CO., Practical Hatters, 654 Washington street, two doors below the Plaza.
☞ New Goods by every steamer. mar10

To decipher, lower the top of the paper to an angle of forty-five degrees; then close one eye, and read at your ease.

THE NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE INSURANCE CO
OF LONDON AND EDINBURGH.
ESTABLISHED, 1809.

Capital, - - - - -	$10,000,000
Accumulated Funds, March 6, 1865, -	11,522,500
Annual Income, - - -	2,827,290
Deposit in California under State law, -	$75,000

GENERAL AGENCY FOR THE PACIFIC STATES AND TERRITORIES,
Cor. Sansome and California streets, San Francisco

Insurances effected at the lowest rates on buildings of both Brick and Wood, throughout the State, whether occupied as Stores, Dwellings, or Warehouses, together with their contents.
Also, VESSELS in port, with or without their Cargoes.
Also, QUARTZ MILLS and MACHINERY.
LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN immediately on adjustment.
WM. H. TILLINGHAST, Agent.
my19

CALIFORNIA
Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS. CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA.....CAPT. W. BROMLEY.
" JULIA.....CAPT. E. CONCKLIN.

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.
Steamships PACIFIC, ORIZABA, CALIFORNIA, ACTIVE, and SENATOR, leave as advertised, for Portland, Oregon, New Westminster, British Columbia, Victoria, (V. I.,) Santa Barbara, San Pedro, and San Diego.
Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets,
mar23 B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

TO FARMERS, MINERS, LABORERS
And all those wishing to secure themselves a portion of
THE MOST VALUABLE AGRICULTURAL AND MINERAL LANDS OF MEXICO,
With an equal interest in the Profits of the Plantations of
THE MEXICAN SEA ISLAND COTTON COMPANY.

HOMES FOR THE POOR AND COMPETENCY FOR ALL.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The Mexican Sea Island Cotton Company, having reserved from their final Subscription List a Limited Number of Unassessable Shares, (the remaining shares of the Company having been taken up by the stockholders,) hereby offer the same for sale at the original subscription price of Sixteen Dollars each, payable in cash. Every holder of a share will be entitled to a portion of the Company's lands, having the privilege to settle thereon and participate in all the advantages and profits of the enterprise, and special privileges granted to this Company by an Imperial Decree of Maximillan, dated 9th January, 1866, without being subjected to the conditions of regular Government emigrants, this Company setling upon their own lands, secured by private purchase, and held under indisputable Spanish titles.
Shareholders becoming actual settlers will also have the privilege of any employment upon the Company's plantation. Portions of land will be allotted to settlers, to be held by them until a final division makes it their property.
For the purpose of increasing the value of the Company's land, and to create all the comforts of a home and society, it is the intention of the company to form a regular settlement and to lay ont a town adjoining their present plantation into building lots, which will likewise be fairly divided between the 8,000 shares which comprise the total number of the company.
A large number of shareholders will settle upon the company's lands after the rainy season in October next. Many of them may then be employed by the company, or by others able to plant for themselves, or in developing the mineral resources of the adjoining mountains, etc., etc.
Men of all trades and professions, desiring to emigrate to Mexico, will have great advantages as shareholders of this company. They will find the lands already purchased for them at a rate equivalent to a free gift, to be held by each shareholder as his property, protected by the best Spanish titles, and the good will of all political parties now contending for the reins of government; the climate the most salubrious, and the land rich and fertile beyond description; every kind of game abounding; the rivers full of fish and with extensive beds of large oysters; altogether, a country where it is easy to procure a livelihood and the comforts of a home with less labor and less capital than in any other part of the world.
The extensive placer diggings, veins of silver, and solid quartz ledges, which are to be found in the immediate vicinity, and acknowledged to be rich and very extensive, can, by the presence of a number of settlers, be profitably developed. Many of these mines are to be found within the limits of the company's grant. The Sierra Madre or Mother Mountain of Mexico, situated only within about twenty miles from the coast, can be reached and developed with much greater facility than the more remote mines in the interior, and will therefore make the company's lands the most desirable to locate upon.
For Maps and Survey, and further information, apply at the office of the MEXICAN SEA ISLAND COTTON CO., Beige's Book Store, Russ House, Montgomery street, between the hours of 11 and 1 o'clock.
☞ All the assessable stock having been taken up by mutual subscription of stockholders, the company will have no more shares to offer after the limited number of unassessable shares have been placed, and shall prefer to sell these to actual settlers—a single share of which will be sufficient to entitle them to a large portion of the lands.

WE, THE UNDERSIGNED shareholders in the Mexican Sea Island Cotton Company, having investigated and satisfied ourselves of the importance of the enterprise, recommend the same to the public. We are convinced that under the management of the present officers of the company, with their efforts to induce industrious parties to locate upon the land, that the enterprise must become very profitable to all parties interested, and most beneficial to actual settlers.

S. R. Kettlewell, Blacksmith, 264 First street.
W. C. Mead & Son, 224 Sansome street.
M. O'Neil, Proprietor New Branch Hotel, 12 Sutter street.
Winall & Clapp, 505 Market street.
R. A. S. Repiton, M. D., 816 Montgomery street.
Wm. Rudolph, Gunsmith, 216 Pacific street.
G. Burkhardt, Jeweller, No. 209 Pacific street.
E. Keil, East India Tea Co., 631 Washington-st.
P. D. O'Regan, People's Bakery, corner Fourth and Jessie streets.
Wm. Meyer, Provision Dealer, 258 Third street.
John Duff, Painter and Paper Hanger, 642 Clay street.
A. E. Mylott, Importer and Dealer in Cigars and Tobacco, 305 Battery street
M. M. Baldwin, Jeweller, 433 Montgomery-st.
S. Baysen, Hatter, No. 346 Kearny street.
Mathew McCloskey, 644 Howard street.

San Francisco, March 20th, 1866. mar24

MR. AND MRS. COGILL
AND SONS,
Teachers of Dancing,

CONGRESS HALL,
On Bush-st., adjoining Russ House.

SCHOOL.—MONDAYS AND WEDNESDAYS. Ladies at 2 P. M. Gentlemen and Ladies at 7 1-2 P. M. Soirees every Friday Evening. Hall to rent. my5 3m

AMERICAN HOTEL,
Main street. - - - Petaluma.
mar24 6m EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors.

OCCIDENTAL
INSURANCE COMPANY,
S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

CHRISTOPHER CHRISTIANSEN, President.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary. mh25-tf

GREAT TRIUMPH!!
STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.
The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European makers."
A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,
M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.
PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York. my25

AYER'S
AGUE CURE,
FOR THE SPEEDY AND

Certain Cure of Intermittent Fever or Chills and Fever, Remittent Fever, Chill Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical Headache or Bilious Headache, and Bilious Fevers; indeed, for the whole class of diseases originating in biliary derangement, caused by the malaria of miasmatic countries.

This remedy has rarely failed to cure the severest cases of Chills and Fever, and it has this great advantage over other Ague medicines, that it subdues the complaint without injury to the patient. It contains no quinine or other deleterious substance, nor does it produce quinism or any injurious effect whatever. Shaking brothers of the army and the West, try it and you will endorse these assertions.
Prepared by J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco,
my26 2m and all Dealers.

OPPOSITION STEAMER-DAY,
SATURDAY, JULY 14, 1866.
GREAT REDUCTION IN RATES,
VIA NICARAGUA!

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN TRANSIT COMPANY will despatch the favorite Steamship
AMERICA,
ON SATURDAY, - - JULY 14TH,
From Mission street Wharf, at 10 o'clock, A. M., precisely
Connecting at GREYTOWN with the splendid Steamship
SANTIAGO,
2,500 TONS, FOR NEW YORK.
☞ For Passage and Freight, and Insurance on Treasure, at greatly REDUCED RATES, apply to
I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets
Up stairs, San Francisco.

THE ONLY LIVING ASTROLOGER,
PROF. COHEN,

530 California street, San Francisco,
THROUGH HIS NATURAL GIFT, can give correct information on the Past, Present and Future, on any subject that may be required so as to avoid trouble. As evidence of his reputation, he has received over 18,000 consultations during his residence of six years in San Francisco! Consultation fee, $2. By letter, $3. Letter box, 104. It is not necessary to give the age. Office, 530 California street. Hours from 8 A. M. to 11 P. M. mar15 3m

COME AND SEE ME!

DR. JOHN HEALD,
DENTIST,
HAS REMOVED TO THE
CORNER KEARNY AND CALIFORNIA STS,
Where he will be pleased to see all old friends, and plenty of new ones. Every variety of Dental Operations performed in the best manner, and at prices that shall suit all persons. ☞ENTRANCE ON CALIFORNIA SREET.
ap28 3m.

UNITED STATES STAMP DUTIES.

AS AMENDED MARCH 3, 1865.

CAREFULLY REVISED AND CORRECTED FOR THE CALIFORNIAN.

PENALTIES.

Penalty for making, signing, or issuing any instrument, document, or paper of any kind whatsoever, without the same being duly stamped, for denoting the duty hereby imposed thereon, $50; and the instrument shall be deemed invalid and of no effect; or for counterfeiting stamps or dies, $1,000, and imprisonment to hard labor not exceeding five years. For making, signing, issuing, accepting, or paying any bill of exchange, draft, order, or note without stamp, $200. For selling proprietary cosmetics, matches, photographs, etc., without proper stamps, $10. For removing stamps on these articles, $50.

STAMP DUTIES.

Agreement Contract or Appraisement, not otherwise specified, each sheet or piece of paper..$0 05
Assignment of Mortgage, Lease, or Policy of Insurance, same as original instrument. Assignment of Patent Right..... 05
Bank Checks, Drafts or orders, exceeding $10, at sight or on demand..... 02
Bills of Exchange, (inland,) or draft otherwise than at sight or on demand, or promissory note except bank notes for circulation,) or any memorandum, check or receipt, or any evidence of an amount of money payable on demand or at a designated time, for a sum not exceeding $100..... 05
Every additional $100, or fractional part... 05
Bill of Exchange, (foreign,) or letter of credit, drawn in, but payable out of the U. S., if drawn singly, the same rates as inland bills of exchange, or promissory notes.
If drawn in sets of three or more, for each bill of the set, where the sum shall not exceed $100 or its equivalent in any foreign currency in which such bill may be expressed, according to the standard value fixed by U. S. 02
Every additional $100, or fractional part... 02
Bill of Lading, or receipt for any merchandise or effects, to be exported to a foreign port or place..... 10
Bill of Sale, conveying any ship or vessel, or any part thereof, where the consideration does not exceed $500..... 50
For every additional $500, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Bill of Sale of personal property other than ships or vessels..... 05
Bond, indemnifying any person for the payment of money, where the amount recoverable is $1,000 or less..... 50
For every additional $1,000, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Bond for the due performance of the duties of any office..... 1 00
Bond of any other description, except such as may be required in legal proceedings, or used in connection with mortgage deeds, and not otherwise charged in this schedule..... 25
Charter-Party, ship, vessel or steamer, not over 150 tons, $1; 150 to 300 tons, $3; 300 to 600 tons, $5; over 600 tons.....10 00
Certificate of Profits, or any memorandum showing an interest in property, or accumulations of any incorporated company, for a sum not less than $10 nor exceeding $50..... 10
Exceeding $50 and not $1,000..... 25
For every additional $1,000 or fractional part 25
Certificate of Damage, and all other certificates or documents issued by Port Wardens or Marine Surveyors, or other persons acting as such 25
Certificate of Deposit, not exceeding the sum of $100, 2 cents; exceeding $100..... 05
Certificate of stock in any incorporated comp'y, 25
Certificates, other than specified..... 05
Contract, broker's note or memorandum of sale of goods, stocks, bonds, exchange notes of hand, real estate, or other description of property, issued by any person acting as a broker, for each note or memorandum of sale..... 10
Deed or Conveyance of Real Estate, value not over $500, 50c.; every additional $500, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Entry of Goods at any custom-house, value not over $100, 25c.; over $100 and not over $500, 50c.; over $500.....1 00
For the withdrawal of goods from bonded warehouse..... 50
Ganger's Returns, quarterly, for quantity not over 500 galls. gross, 10c.; over 500 galls. gr. 25
Insurance (Marine, Inland and Fire) policy or renewal, premium not over $10, 10c.; $10 to $50, 25c.; over $50, 50c.; Life policy, under $1,000, 25c.; $1,000 to $5,000, 50c; over $5,000.1 00
Lease of lands or tenements, rent not over $300 per annum, 50c.; each add'l $200 or fraction. 50
Manifest, cargo to foreign port, registered tonnage not over 300 tons, $1; over 300 and not over 600, $3; over 600 tons.....5 00
Measurer's Returns, for quantity not over 1,000 bushels, 10c.; over 1,000 bushels..... 25
Mortgage, Trust deed, or personal bond for payment of money, $100 to $500, 50c.; each additional $500..... 50
Each assignment of mortgage, lease or policy of insurance, or renewal of the same, is subject to same duties as the original.
Medicines or Preparations, Perfumery and Cosmetics—Every package, box, bottle, etc., retailing for 25c. or less..... 01
Each additional 25c. or fractional part thereof, up to $1, 1c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof, over $1..... 02
Playing Cards—Each pack, price not over 18c., 2c.; from 18 to 25c., 4c.; 25 to 50c., 10c.; 50c. to $1, 15c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof..... 05
Photographs, Ambrotypes, Daguerreotypes or Sun Pictures, upon each, retailing for 25c. or less, 2c.; over 25 and not over 50c., 5c.; over 50c. and not over $1, 3c.; each additional $1 or fractional part thereof..... 05
Passage Ticket to foreign port, cost not over $35, 50c.; over $35 and not over $50, $1; every additional $50 or fractional part thereof.....1 00
Power of Attorney to sell or transfer stock, scrip, bonds, or collect dividends or int. thereon 25
To vote for officers of incorporated comp'y or society not religious, charitable or literary, or public cemeteries..... 10
To receive or collect rents..... 25
To sell, convey, rent or lease real estate.....1 00
For any other purpose..... 50
Probate of Will, or letters of administration, estate not over $2,000, $1; each additional $1,000 or fractional part thereof..... 50
Protest of note, bill, acceptance, check or draft, 25
Promissory Note—See Bill of Exchange, inland.
Receipt for payment of money or debt over $20, not being for satisfaction of mortgage, judgment or decree of Court, and receipt for the delivery of property..... 02
Warehouse, for property stored, not over $500 in value, 10c.; $500 to $1,000, 20c.; every additional $1,000..... 10
For any goods held in storage, and not otherwise provided for..... 25
Weigher's Returns, up to 5,000 lbs., 10c.; over 5,000 lbs..... 25
Writs, or original process, for commencing suit in Court of record, and in Court not of record, when amount claimed is $100 or over, except before Justices of the Peace, or in court of no greater jurisdiction as to damages, or in suit commenced by the United States or any State..... 50
Upon every confession of judgment, or cognovit, for $100 or over, except where tax for a writ has been paid..... 50
Writs or process on appeal from Justice's courts and other courts of inferior jurisdiction to courts of record..... 50
Warrant of distress—rent claimed under $100, 25c.; over $100..... 50

BRITISH PERIODICALS.

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW (Conservative.)
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW (Whig.)
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW (Radical.)
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW (Free Church.)
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE (Tory.)

The interest of these Periodicals to American readers is rather increased than diminished by the articles they contain on our late Civil War, and though sometimes tinged with prejudice, they may still, considering their great ability, and the different stand-points from which they are written, be read and studied with advantage by the people of this country, of every creed and party.

TERMS FOR 1866.

For any one of the Reviews, per annum.....$4
For any two of the Reviews, per annum.....7
For any three of the Reviews, per annum.....10
For all four of the Reviews, per annum.....12
For Blackwood's Magazine, per annum..... 4
For Blackwood and one Review, per annum.... 7
Blackwood and any two of the Reviews, per an...10
Blackwood and three of the Reviews, per annum.13
Blackwood and the four Reviews, per annum....15

CLUBS.

A discount of twenty per cent. will be allowed to clubs of four or more persons. Thus, four copies of Blackwood, or of one Review, will be sent to one address for $12 80. Four copies of the four Reviews and Blackwood, for $48, and so on.

POSTAGE.

When sent by mail, the Postage to any part of the Union will be but Twenty-four Cents a year for Blackwood, and but Eight Cents a year for each of the Reviews

REDUCED PRICES FOR PREVIOUS YEARS.

Subscribers may obtain the Reprints immediately preceding 1866, as follows, viz:

Blackwood from September, 1864, to December, 1865, inclusive, at the rate of $2 50 a year.

The North British from January, 1865, to December, 1865, inclusive; the Edinburgh and the Westminster from April, 1864, to December, 1865, inclusive, and the London Quarterly for the year 1865, at the rate of $1 50 a year for each or any Review.

A few copies yet remain of all the Four Reviews for 1863 at $4 a set, or $1 50 for any one.

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., Publishers,
38 Walker street, New York.

TYLER BROTHERS,

NO. 632 WASHINGTON STREET,

AND 691 MARKET STREET, - - - - CORNER THIRD,

SAN FRANCISCO,

IMPORTERS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN

SCHOOL BOOKS,

STATIONERY,

PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,

BLANK BOOKS,

PORTFOLIOS,

JUVENILE BOOKS,

FANCY ARTICLES,

CHILDRENS' PICTURE BOOKS, Etc.

Especial attention given to

LADIES' STATIONERY,

Which we stamp with

INITIALS,

In COLORS or PLAIN.

WEDDING AND VISITING CARDS

ENGRAVED, WRITTEN, OR PRINTED.

je23

BOWMAN & CO.,
Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware,
mar24 6m Main street, Potaluma.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S
Through Line to New York.

CARRYING THE U. S. MAIL!

Leave Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.

On the 16th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.

On the 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.

When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 19th connects with French Transatlantic company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamer for Southampton, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America.

Departure of 30th connects with English steamer for Tumaco, the port of the new mines.

STEAMERS FOR JULY:

The following steamships will be despatched from San Francisco on the date given:

JULY 10th, - - - - SACRAMENTO,
Captain J. M. Cavarly,
(Connecting with the HENRY CHAUNCEY, Capt. Gray

JULY 19th, - - - - GOLDEN AGE,
(Connecting with the NEW YORK, Captain Bradbury.)
Captain W. F. Lapidge,

JULY 30th, - - - - CONSTITUTION,
Captain E. S. Farnsworth,
(Connecting with the ARIZONA, Captain Maury.)

An experienced Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

Cabin Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Messrs. Wells, Fargo & Co.

The steamer will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

RING'S

VEGETABLE AMBROSIA

IS THE MIRACLE OF THE AGE!

Gray-headed People have their locks restored by it to the dark, lustrous, silken tresses of youth, and are happy!

Young People, with light, faded or red Hair, have these unfashionable colors changed to a beautiful auburn, and rejoice!

People whose heads are covered with Dandruff and Humors, use it, and have clean coats and clear and healthy scalps!

Bald-Headed Veterans have their remaining locks tightened, and the bare spots covered with a luxuriant growth of Hair, and dance for joy!

Young Gentlemen use it because it is richly perfumed!

Young Ladies use it because it keeps their Hair in place!

Everybody must and will use it, because it is the cleanest and best article in the market!

For Sale by Druggists generally.

For sale, wholesale and retail, by

JOHN F. SNOW,
Sole Agent for the Pacific Coast, 24 Post street,
je23 San Francisco.

THE PACIFIC
INSURANCE COMPANY,

HAVING ADDED

MARINE INSURANCE

TO THEIR BUSINESS, ARE NOW PREPARED TO ISSUE POLICIES ON

Marine, Inland Navigation, and Fire Risks,

ON THE MOST FAVORABLE TERMS.

Office, 436 California street.

J. HUNT, President
A. J. RALSTON, Secretary. my5-3m

OCCIDENTAL
HOMESTEAD
Association,

OFFICE, - - - 305 MONTGOMERY STREET.

CAPITAL STOCK, $33,600.

102 SHARES.....$330 EACH.

THIS ASSOCIATION was formed to enable its members to obtain desirable homestead lots in this city at a cheap and easy rate, paying for the same by regular monthly instalments.

For this purpose they have purchased Blocks 409, 500, and 501, in the Western Addition to this city, bounded by Devisadero, Pine, Broderick and Clay streets.

Subscribers will pay an initiation fee of $5 on each share taken, to form a fund for defraying current expenses, and $11 per month for thirty months, commencing in April, 1866.

The property is within three blocks of the

TURK STREET RAILROAD,

IS NEARLY ALL ON THE GRADE,

and is most desirably located for Homestead purposes.

It is directly east from the lands of the California Association.

The property has been purchased on very reasonable terms, and offers a rare opportunity for investment.

A number of fine houses are in process of erection, and streets are being graded near this property, which will greatly increase its value.

When twelve monthly payments have been made, the property will be divided among the members in the usual manner, and each shareholder will receive a contract for a deed to the lot or lots to which he may be entitled, and have the privilege of taking immediate possession of the same.

The lots average 27 feet in front by 120 feet in depth. The whole amount due upon any lot may be paid at any time, and discount at the rate of one and one-half per cent. per month will be deducted therefrom.

Persons wishing to visit the lands of this Association will take the Turk street cars to Devisadero street, and thence go northerly along Devisadero to Pine street.

Twenty thousand dollars of the capital stock is taken, and the books are open for subscription to the balance at the office of the Secretary, where the Official Map of the Association can be seen, and full particulars obtained.

The Title to this Property is Perfect.

J. S. LUTY, Secretary,
Office, 305 Montgomery street, corner of Pine,
my19-3m Rooms 2 and 6.

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME!

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17
Have received a Large Stock of GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING
—AND—
FURNISHING GOODS,
Which they are selling
AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.
ja1 624 Clay street, San Francisco.

PACIFIC OCEAN HOUSE,
SANTA CRUZ, CAL.

THIS NEW AND COMMODIOUS HOTEL, built and furnished in accordance with the most modern and improved plans, and with a view to the comfort and convenience of its patrons, is now open for the reception of guests.

To those who have visited Santa Cruz, it is unnecessary to speak of its beauties and its natural advantages over all other places of Summer Resort.

To those who have not, the Proprietor can only say COME AND JUDGE FOR YOURSELVES—giving all who may come the assurance that his earnest endeavors shall be to make the Hotel, in all its appointments, equal to the surroundings of this delightful Sea side Resort.

GEO. T. BROMLEY,
Santa Cruz, April 4, 1866. Proprietor.

MARKET STREET RAILROAD

CHANGE OF TIME TABLE.

ON AND AFTER AUGUST 1, 1865, Trains will start from the City and the Mission every hour instead of every forty minutes, as heretofore.

Trains from the City will start at the odd hour, commencing at 6:30 A. M. and every hour thereafter until 11.30 P. M.

mh25 F. McCOPPIN, Superintendent

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE - - - - - - - - PROPRIETOR.
C. L. GRAVES - - - - - - - STAGE MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON - - - - - - - TREASURER.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, JULY 7, 1866.

Miss Kate Denin

AND

Mr. John Wilson

SUPPORTED BY THE OPERA HOUSE COMPANY,
will appear in the play of

EAST LYNNE.

SATURDAY EVENING:
MISS KATE DENIN,
MR. JOHN WILSON,
AND
THE OPERA HOUSE COMPANY,
IN Oliver Twist.

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Dress Circle and Orchestra, - - - - - - - $1 00
Parquet, - - - - - - - - - - 50
Upper Circle, - - - - - - - - - - 25

ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

THOMAS MAGUIRE, - - - Sole Proprietor and Manager.
CHARLES TIBBETTS, - - - - - - Stage Manager.
J. B. MARSHALL, - - - - - - - - - Treasurer.

MONDAY EVENING.....JULY 9TH, FIRST APPEARANCE OF
The Howson English and Italian Opera Troupe,
In Bellini's Grand Opera in English, entitled LA SONNAMBULA.

Amina.....Miss Emma Howson
Lisa.....Miss Clelia Howson
Elvino.....Mr. Henri Herberte
Count Rodolpho.....Mr. Frank Howson
Conductor.....Mr. F. A. Howson

Enlarged Chorus and Orchestra. New Scenery painted by Mr. A. Torning.

THURSDAY EVENING, JULY 12—
Wallace's Great Opera of MARITANA.

MONDAY EVENING, JULY 16—
First time in the United States of the English version of Gounod's great opera of FAUST.

☞ Box Office now open. Seats may be secured for the week. Books of the Opera for sale at the Box Office.

Dress Circle and Orchestra.....$1 00
Reserved Seats.....50 cents extra
Family Circle.....50 cents
Gallery.....25 cents
Private Boxes.....$10 and $5

LOW PRICES

IN

Gents' Furnishing Goods,

AT

WARD'S SHIRT STORES,

323 MONTGOMERY STREET,

CORNER OF MARKET AND THIRD STREETS,

SAN FRANCISCO.

P. S.—Printed directions for self-measurement for Shirts and Price Lists of Goods sent free by mail.
ap21-3m

BEER AND WINE SALOON.

Faust Cellar.

Southeast corner of Clay and Montgomery streets.

A. L. THIELE.....Proprietor

WESTPHALIA HAMS, RUSSIAN CAVIAR, SARDINES, Anchovies, Swiss and Limburg Cheese, etc.; the finest Brands of Liquors, Wines, Cigars, and Seltzer Water, Wholesale and Retail.

☞ Fishing and Hunting Parties fitted out at the shortest notice.

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE
Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
ja27-tf between California and Pine.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S
SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

AUCTIONEERS.
Olney & Co., removed to 418 Montgomery street.

BUSINESS AND PROPERTY AGENCY.
S. P. Whitman, 313 Montgomery st.

BATHS.
Dr. Bourne's, (Medical,) 10 Post, near Montgomery

BOWLING ALLEYS.
Wholers & Steil, Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.)

BOOKS.
A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street.
I. M. Wentworth & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine st

COLLECTOR.
B. Pulverman, 614 Montgomery—Office hours, 1 to 3 P.M.

CLOTHING.
H. M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.
Dell, Cranna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.

COPPER CRUSHER AND SAMPLER.
S. W. Howland, 24 California street, (at Thomas' Mil,)

DRESS TRIMMINGS, WORSTEDS, ETC.
Mrs. Norcross, 5 Montgomery street (Masonic Temple.)

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Dr. A. N. Clark (late Knowles & Clark) removed to 410 Kearny.
Dr. Wm. B. McAllister, 221 Third street.
Whitcomb & Dyer, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.
Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.
Buyce & Reich, S W corner Jackson and Stockton.

DRUGGISTS.
R. H. McDonald & Co., (Wholesale) Sansome, cor. Pine
Shepardson & Gates, (successors to R. Hall & Co.,) corner Sansome and Commercial.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.
Cal. Collegiate Institute, Miss M. Lammond, 68 Silver.
Miel Institute, Miss Florence James, 55 South Park.
Pacific Business College, 751 Market street, above Third

FURNITURE.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
J. Peirce, 415, 417 and 419 California street.

GROCERS.
N. Boschen, corner Fifth and Minna.
Slosson & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
J. J. Miller, corner Sutter and Leavenworth.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market
W. M. Noble & Co., cor Howard and Twelfth streets

HATTER.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street,

HOTELS.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.

INSURANCE.
Mutual Life Ins. Co., H. S. Homans, Agent, 609 Clay.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Ag'ts, 206 Front, cor. Cal.
National Ins. Co., N.E. cor. Montgomery and California.
Occidental Ins. Co., S.W. cor. Montgom'y and California.
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.
Brooklyn Life, S T King, agent, S E cor Montg'y & Pine

RESTAURANTS.
Bivalve, Notting & Spragen, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Eureka, C. H. Brickwedell & Co., Clay, near Montgom'y
Magnolia, 143 Third street.
Market, by Felix and Gustave Bosson, 520 Merchant.
Philadelphia, Jacob Weiss, 308 Montgomery street.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Saulmann's, 506 Montgomery street.

SALOONS.
Russell & Holding's Exchange, 622 Market street
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N E. cor Third and Howard
Razzetti & Co.'s, 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
S. Myers, 332 Montgomery street.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street.
Sun Burst, Carolin & McArdle, cor. Second and Market.
Coates & Henderson, 37 Sutter street.

SCALES.
Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scales 334 Montgomery street.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, R. ' . Browo, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento

TOYS, ETC.
Feldbush & Co., 207 Montgomery street.
A. Kohler, 620 Washington street.

UPHOLSTERER.
T. McAllister, corner Sutter and Leavenworth.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

LIVERY AND SALE STABLE.
Philip Morshead, removed to Howard, near Fifth.

MAPS.
Pacific Map Depot, A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.

MERCHANT TAILORS.
J. H. Hammond removed to 328 Montgomery.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
M. Gray, 613 Clay street.

PIANO SCHOOL.
Mr. Gustave A. Scott, at Miel Institute, 55 South Park.
W. S. Pierce, removed to 534 Market, opposite second

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

FRANKLIN PRINTING OFFICE,

509 CLAY STREET, (near Sansome,)
SAN FRANCISCO,

"The oldest and most complete Book and Job printing establishment in California. All descriptions of work neatly executed at low rates."

ja1 FRANK EASTMAN, Proprietor.

DRY GOODS

AT

REDUCED PRICES!

Meagher, Taaffe & Co.

ARE OFFERING

AT RETAIL:

COTTONS—

6 4, 7-4, 8-4, 9-4, and 10-4 Super Cotton Sheetings;
New York Mills Bleeched Muslins;
Wamsutta Bleached Muslins;
White Rock Bleached Muslins;
Masonville Mills Bleached Muslins;
Lonsdale and Slater's Bleached Muslins;
Brown Cotton sheetings and shirtings;

All at Reduced Prices.

LINENS—

6-4, 7-4, 8-4, 9-4, 10-4, and 11 4 super Barmesty and Scotch Linen sheetings;
Pillow and shirting Linens, Diapers, Lawns;
Towels and Towelings of every description;
Napkins, Doylies, etc., etc.;
Barnsley and Scotch Table Damask;

☞ ALL AT REDUCED PRICES.

DRESS GOODS—

Poplins, Mohairs, Melange, Cashmeres, Barege de Laines, Empress Cloth, Prints, Lawns, Organdies, Alpacas, Linseys, Winseys, Black and Colored silks.

☞ ALL AT REDUCED PRICES.

SHAWLS—

India Cashmere Shawls;
French Cashmere shawls;
Paisley Cashmere shawls;
Broché and Plaid Wool shawls;
Black Embroidered Cashmere shawls;
Chantilly and Lama Lace shawls;
Cloaks, Basques, saques, Talmas;

☞ ALL AT REDUCED PRICES.

HOSIERY—

Ladies', Children's and Gentlemen's Hose and Half Hose, in Cotton, Merino and Lambs' Wool;
Children's and Gentlemen's Under-garments, in Merino, Silk and Lambs' Wool.

☞ ALL AT REDUCED PRICES.

FLANNELS—

Welsh, English, and American Flannels;

All at Reduced Prices.

LACE AND MUSLIN CURTAINS—

☞ ALL AT REDUCED PRICES.

9 Montgomery Street,

LICK BLOCK.

WHOLESALE HOUSE,

107 BATTERY ST., BET. PINE AND CALIFORNIA.

jy7

CARPETS.

Removal! Removal!

KENNEDY & BELL

HAVE REMOVED TO

BUSH STREET,

Below Montgomery,

Store lately occupied by the Franco-American Commercial Company.

ap21-3m

A. ROMAN & CO.,

417 AND 419 MONTGMERY STREET,
BOOK-SELLERS, PUBLISHERS,
AND IMPORTERS,
Offer for sale the following list of

PARLOR GAMES,

AT WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

The Garison Game, two styles;
The Magic Wheel, four kinds;
The Game of Authors, different kinds;
Noted People and Places;
The Old Curiosity Shop; Extant Authors;
Tipsy Philosophers; Peggy;
Anybody and Everybody, Somebody and Nobody;
Originations of Shakspeare;
Fun for Winter Evenings; Game of Letters;
The Game of Events;
The Showman; The Commanders of our Forces;
The Game of Familiar Quotations;
Protean Cards, or the Box of 100 Games;
The Game of Great Truths;
The Game of Courtship and Marriage;
The Shakspearian Game;
The Game of Battlefields of our Fathers;
The Game of Young Peddlers;
The Laughable Game of Red, White and Blue;
The Game of School in an Uproar;
The Game of Old Pamphleezle;
The Game of Comical Dominoes;
The Game of Gipsy Fortune Teller;
The Game of Squail, two styles;
Colton's Series of Dissected Maps, viz.:
The World, North America, South America, Africa, Asia, Europe.

We are receiving by Every Steamer,

All the New Publications

OF THE DAY.

Our stock of Books in every branch of LITERATURE
is very complete, which we offer at the lowest rates.

PUBLIC AND PRIVATE LIBRARIES SUPPLIED, ON FAVORABLE TERMS.

A. ROMAN & CO.,
417 and 419 Montgomery street.
Je19 San Francisco.

SUMMER MEDICINE.

PURIFY THE BLOOD

AND

Constitution,

WITH

LE DOYEN'S

SARSAPARILLA,

YELLOW DOCK,

IODINE ALTERATIVE.

CRANE & BRIGHAM, Agents,
my19 1m SAN FRANCISCO

NATURE UNVEILED,

AT THE
PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
ja27-tj between California and Pine.

The California.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME V., No 8. OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET. | SAN FRANCISCO, JULY 14, 1866. | TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE. 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

PROSE.

To and Fro—No. 1.—By Kuzzilbash.
Mountain Travel.—By J. Jackson Jones.
Home Charities.
Our Book-Table.
Amusements.
Dust to Dust.—By Henry George.
The Steward's Story.
Summer Head-Dresses.
The Facts in Regard to "Locksley Hall."
Men in Armor.
Mrs. Brown Coming Home from the Derby.
California Landscapes.
The Grave of Charles Lamb.
The Last Air-Ship.
Dresden China.
A Golden Wedding—By C. H. Webb.

POETRY:

What Does it Matter?—By Emilie Lawson.
Lines.—By a Practical Sentimentalist.

A GOLDEN WEDDING.

FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF THE NUPTIALS OF BISHOP HOPKINS, OF VERMONT.

BURLINGTON, Vt., June 7, 1866.

IN an age in which iron and brass so closely meet and blend that it is almost impossible to tell where the one ends and the other begins, a bid to any golden wedding is not to be slighted. And you may be sure that an invitation to attend the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the nuptials of Right Rev. J. H. Hopkins, D. D., LL. D., Bishop of the Diocese of Vermont, did not in my case fall upon sluggish ears.

(In conformity with established usage and in deference to a certain formality generally expected in print, I bestow upon the Bishop all the titles which are his of right, though under the more familiar address of "Bishop Hopkins," a man eminent not only as a scholar and divine, but also combining in himself the accomplishments of the poet, the painter, the musician, the orator, and the architect, he is widely known and quite as widely esteemed and beloved.)

The occasion promised to be an eminently interesting one. The Bishop has resided at Burlington—the pleasantest little city in Vermont—for many years, and his house has been, in a measure, the Mecca of travellers. It is beautifully situated, overlooking the bright blue waters of the beautiful bay, dotted with the white sails of passing vessels. Married in Old Harmony, Batter County, Penn., May 8, 1816, thirteen children—nine boys and four girls—have been born to the Bishop, nine of whom are now living. And so with grand-children and great grand-children there was enough material for a capital celebration, even shutting out the world outside his own hearthstone, but the Bishop issued a general invitation to his parish, and a multitude of friends availed themselves of the opportunity to pay their respects to the venerable bride and bridegroom of fifty years ago, hale and vigorous enough in their green old age to inspire the hope that both may be spared to celebrate in another golden wedding, the happiest epoch of their lives.

The annual Convention of the Diocese of Vermont being now assembled in Burlington, the most distinguished clergymen of the Episcopal Church were present, and besides these visitors came from San Francisco, New Orleans, Montreal, Pittsburgh, Boston, New York, and many other distant cities. At a meeting of the clergy of the diocese on the morning of the 6th, the usual routine was broken by the presentation of a pastoral staff or "crook"—emblematical of his office as shepherd of the fold—to the Bishop. This was of oak, beautifully carved, and seven feet in length. Near the middle of the staff there was an ornamental knob of silver, the panels of which contained pictures representing the five wounds of Christ, St. Paul, Archbishops, and Bishop White, who confirmed Bishop Hopkins—an idea of the Apostolic succession. The crook at the end of the staff was elegantly carved and gilded, the centre containing a statuette in gold of the good shepherd, with lambs in his arms, surrounded by sheep in silver. The cost of the staff was $300. It was presented by Rev. Mr. Hale, Rector of Arlington, with an appropriate address.

In accordance with the rule of the week it commenced showering in the morning, and the drops seemed to grow with the day, until in the afternoon their size and volume assumed proportions almost phenomenal. For nigh upon two hours the rain fell in a perfect sheet of water—bringing to mind that "wet sheet" of which the song makes mention, while in the streets surged and swelled the "flowing sea" of lyric memory. Nevertheless, the Bishop's house was thronged throughout the day by callers who availed themselves of the privileges of old friends, setting aside the fact that the invitations were issued for 7:30 in the evening, in their desire to evade the crowd which they expected would then have possession of the house. Evening found the house full at the appointed hour—not unpleasantly so, however. The dampness of the grass cheated those who expected a dance on the lawn, but the grounds laid out under the guidance of the Bishop's own exquisite taste—with all his gettings he has got a thorough knowledge of landscape gardening—showed to excellent advantage, the shrubbery and flowers coming up all the greener in leaf and brighter in blossom for their great douché. As the evening grew darker and the winding paths became indistinct to the unassisted eye, lanterns were suspended in the trees, while several large locomotive lamps, sifting their powerful light through the grounds, made them so light that guests were not at all inconvenienced in going to and from their carriages. Over the front door, in quaint old letters of variously colored lights, this legend was blazoned, or rather blazed, "Golden Wedding." The large drawing-room and three large rooms adjoining, the walls covered with paintings from the Bishop's brush and decorated with evergreens and flowers, were thrown open for the reception of guests. At one end of the drawing-room the wall bore a large cross, in evergreen, with the legend "1816 and 1866;" beneath sat the Bishop and she who half a century ago became his bride. It was a beautiful sight, and if any one doubted that a well-spent life brings its certain and sure reward, certainly that doubt must have been dispelled. Most of the sons and daughters living, thirty grandchildren, and four great-grandchildren, were present. The days of the patriarchs seemed revived, and in the venerable bishop we beheld a Jacob—a Jacob untroubled by the memories of a brother Esau unkindly dealt with. At 8 o'clock the cadets of the Vermont Episcopal Institute marched in, led by their officers, and accompanied by the Rev. Theodore A. Hopkins, President of the Institute, and the assistant teachers. Standing in the centre of the room, they sung a song, "The Golden Thread," the words and music written by Rev. J. H. Hopkins, Jr., several years ago. The cadets made a fine appearance in their neat and well-fitting uniforms of gray, acquitting themselves musically as well as manfully. The next song was a great surprise to the Bishop and Mrs. Hopkins, who looked wonderingly at each other as its chorus rose and swelled, as though to ask how it could be, or how it came to be, composed and rehearsed without their knowledge. This was "The Golden Wedding Song," the composition (both words and music) of the first-born son, John Henry. Sung by the whole family standing around the two from whom all had sprung, it may well be imagined that it brought tears to the eyes of those to whom it was addressed, while the assembled company could but share in the emotion. This was the chorus:

"At home, Father! home, Mother!
All, all at home!"

Several other songs, of the Bishop's own composition, were sung, the Bishop and Mrs. Hopkins uniting in the choruses. The former aged 74 and the latter 71, their voices show still fewer wrinkles than their brows, seeming to have mellowed rather than hardened and cracked with age.

On or near a table in an adjoining parlor the presents were displayed, and this table naturally was one of the chief centres of attraction during the evening, drawing crowds only rivalled by the one which thronged around the Bishop and Mrs. Hopkins. I was never very good at enumeration, but allow me to tell as nearly as I can what these presents were: First, there was a new carpet, costing $300, presented by the lady members of St. Paul's Church. (The carpet, however, was on the floor, and not upon the table.) A silver pitcher, salver and goblet, from the older members of the Institute. About $350 from the laity of the diocese, and a few others. I am sorry to say that all of this was not in gold. The Rev. Dr. Balch, canon of the Montreal Cathedral, gave a fine oaken prayer desk and several large pictures. Members of the family contributed every little article that affection could prompt. For the Bishop—oh, ye condemners of the Virginian weed, hold up your hands in horror, for know that he smokes—there was tobacco and a magnificent meerschaum pipe, mounted in gold. A gold watch and chain. There was also a gold watch and chain for Mrs. Hopkins. And as I can no longer pretend to distinguish or remember for which of the parents the presents were, let me tell them off all together: Lace curtains, lace shawl and set, a case of Farina cologne, a large afghan, a set of furs, a silver caster, cups, cigar holders, portmonnaies, pipes, gold pencils, brooches and sleeve buttons, silver knives, china ware, toilette vessels, a silver card case, worsted lamp mats, a tete-a-tete for tea, gold thimbles, inkstands, a large picture of the Bishop on porcelain, a carved book rack, two large easy chairs, and many other articles of comfortable furniture, and a large family Bible—one of the chef d'œuvres of the English press, costing $100. My attention was particularly attracted by a chain, made from the Bishop's hair, for Mrs. Hopkins. It was white as silver. And I fancy that what the mother will value quite as much as any other of the treasures given her is a necklace of all her children's hair, beautifully braided and studded with gold.

Refreshments were served during the evening, and in social converse and the exchange of congratulations appropriate to the occasion the hours wore away. At about 10 o'clock the whole company sang the Evening Hymn, the Bishop pronounced the benediction, and the company began to disperse. Probably many who read this article have seen the Bishop pronounce the blessing in church, and will remember his appearance as he stands in his robes, with uplifted hands, the softened sunbeams streaming through the richly-stained glass of the great window, and falling upon his head—a blessing from Heaven upon the blesser. Those who have will little wonder that among the other Bishops he is called "the Apostle," for certainly there never was on earth, in human form, a nearer approach to the ideal Apostolic appearance. But never, even when surrounded with all the accessories of office, have I heard the benediction so affectingly spoken as by that white haired Priest of God, in the bosom of his own family, his children, his grandchildren, his great-grandchildren, the clergy, members of his parish, and friends among whom so many years of his life and labors have been passed, standing around him as he implored for all present "the peace of God which passeth all understanding." And by his side stood the partner of so many years of joy—for, looking upon the placid, contented countenances of both, it is impossible to realize that either has known sorrows—still able to sing and play upon organ, harp and piano. To-day, the family united in a dinner at the Bishop's house, on which occasion the Bishop presented each member with his Autobiography in verse—one hundred copies of which were printed for the family only. Thirty or forty sat down to dinner. To-morrow they all partake of the Holy Communion together—and so will end the most interesting and impressive family reunion ever I witnessed, or in all probability ever shall see.

New York Times.] C. H. WEBB.

HIS Majesty the King of Bavaria, instead of attending to the increase of his army, and signing important orders, rode incognito with his groom to Zurich and celebrated Richard Wagner's birthday at the composer's house, while his ministers were almost in despair to know where their beloved king was. It is stated that the President of the Cabinet, Von der Pfordten, and also the celebrated Pfistermeister intend to resign their offices in consequence of this occurrence.

OLE BULL has been giving concerts in Russia, with great success, at the time when he was deplored as having died at Quebec.

MRS. BROWN COMING HOME FROM THE DERBY.

WELL, I says to Mrs. Maddick, I certainly should like to see 'em a-comin' home, as is a fine sight, with their shay carts, po' shays, four in hands, and all manner; but as to them parties as throws the flour and eggs, if they comes my way I'll settle their 'ash, pretty quick, with the perlice, for I'm sure the sight as I were through a standiu' by Mile End Gate five year ago, to see them a-comin' back from Fairlop Fair, I never shall forget. I was whiteuin' and heggs from top to toe, and everythin' I had on regularly spoiled, as was a lovely black welvet bonnet trimmed with red ribbons, as looked that cheerful in the morning, and was batter puddiug at night, and a new shawl, leastways as good as new, through 'avin' been cleaned, as brought the colors out as fresh as paint, as were orange and green, with a mauve ground.

Well, it was agreed as I should go and take tea with Mrs. Maddick, as lived just agin "The Swan," at Stockwell, as were a bit of a country inn, when I was a gal, but now swep away into a fine lookin' house, but not like the old place a bit.

A kinder creature than Mrs. Maddick never drew breath, though a woman as has her faults, for she will let her tongue run that fast, as carries her off her legs, as the sayin' is, and the things as she told me about that young Bartleman a carryin' on with Lucy Bond a knowin' him to be a married man, and yet a dancin' and a flirtiu' with him, as is goiu's on as I don't hold with, and so I said, but when she come to say a lot more about everybody, a runnin' down one and takiu' up another, till at last I says, "Mrs. Maddick, mum, excuse me, but, I says, 'the dog as can fetch can carry,' as the sayin' is, and I don't see as we're doing any good to ourselves uor anybody else for that matter in talkin' about their faults, as p'raps had better look at home as there's none of us as is without faults ourselves."

She says, "If you're a talkin' about me in speaking of faults, I certainly never had uone like them as I'm speakin on."

"Well, then," I says, "I dare say you'd others, as is p'raps as bad."

She was up in a minnit and asks me what I means a talkin' like that to her, and we was driftiu' into words, as the sayin' is, when Mr. Maddick he come in, and so the subject dropped, and we had tea quite early for to be ready to set out for Clapham Common, as Maddick said was the best place for to see the company.

Of all the rough characters as I ever see out of town it was along that road. Aud the scrougin' and the pushin' as there was, made it very unpleasant, particular to me as had a pair of shoes that big that they wouldn't keep on comfortable, and Maddick is a man as walks like a railway, and all up-hill was tryin' to the breath, and boys comin' along a shovin' and a drivin' till at last I was obliged for to stop and put my back agiu some railins, for to recover my breath and pull my shoes on proper.

Well, I was a takin' on it easy, when all of a sudden I gets a drive from behind as ketched me in the bend of the knees, and down I sat, as anyone nat'rally would, and it's a mercy as it were a prambulator caught me, though I did sit on the children's legs as didn't hurt them, though nat'rally terrified. But of all the low-lived costers as was drivin' that prambulator I never did see, and the female as was with him the abuse as they gave into.

"Come out of the prambulator," hollers he; "you'll smash the kids!"

I says, "It was you as throwed me on 'em, as ought to be ashamed on yourself, a-acting that serreptitious behind my back, as might have ended serious through me a fallin' 'eavy."

Says the female, for a woman I won't call her, "It's my belief as you sit down malicious, a-thinkin' for to get taken up the 'ill."

"What," I says, "me ride in your rubbishin' prambulator as yo've made out of a old dust cart, by the look on it," for it wasn't a regular prambulator, but a rough handbarrow like. So says he:

"It's lucky as it's pretty tough, or you'd have smashed it, and I'd a made you pay; as ought to stand a pot as it is."

Well, Maddick come up aud took me away just then as they was a-gettin' downright nasty over it, and the children a-roarin' like bulls though not hurt, as how should they be, me only just a-settin' light by their feet, as whipped up again in no time by their mother as strong as a horse, as the sayin' is.

I was glad when we got to the Common, though crowded up a good deal. I'm sure the shay-carts as was overtook in liquor was enough to make any one stare, with parties dressed out in 'em, as you might have expected carriages aud pairs at the very least.

I'm sure them Greenwood gals looked that bold in their father's cart, with the name in gold letters, as I would not have gone out in myself, and a-drinking ale at a public house door with their clothes reg'lar ruined with dust and their hair regularly powdered. And as to old Greenwood, as is a butcher, he couldn't set straight though a holdin' the reins as was a downright farce, not as the horse was likely to run away, for if ever I see a animal dead beat, as the sayin' is, he was standin' in them shafts as the weight behind made stick up to above his head, and seemed to be a-liftin' him off his legs.

We was a-standin' quiet a-lookin' at the four-horse coaches and other conveniences as was comin' ou that thick as soon made 'em pull up, and the way parties was a-goin' ou made me downright stare, with wails over their 'ats and little Dutch dolls stuck in 'em.

Well, there was a large party in a open carriage as was stopped, a-laughin' rather wild, aud I must say, though dressed elegant seemed to me a little on. I was a-standin' on a heap by the roadside as brought me on a level with that carriage.

"I'm sure they've 'ad enough," I says in a whisper to Mrs. Maddick, as couldn't 'ave been laudable in their ears, when I see them take more wine out of a basket and begin to drink free. So says a bold gal, "You'd like a drop, wouldn't you?"

I didu't make no answer, but only give her a look as made her burst out a-laughin', and speak to one of the men as was with her. So he looks at me and says, "Rather! Why she's a reg'ral old woodcock for suction." I couldu't stand that, so I says, "You may jeer, but," I says, "when I do want to drink I can get it, and houest too."

I hadn't hardly got the words out when I got a shower of peas right in my face as thick as hail peltin'. I was blinded for the moment, but soon recovered my presence of mind so as to see the fellow as had done it and was up in the dickey. So I nps with my umbreller and give him one for hisself as sent him sprawlin' over, and just then all the carriages began to move on. Of all the shriekin' as ever you heard it was downright drownin' to the senses, and I'm sure I screamed as loud as any through 'avin' been the cause; but, bless you, he'd fell light, as them in liquor always does, and Maddick he caught hold of me and hurried me away, a-sayin,' "'Pon my life, Mrs. Brown, you'll get yourself into serious trouble if you will make that free with your umbrella." I says, "Do you think as I'm a-goin' to be insulted like that, and no one to take my part, as if I'd had a man with me would a done it."

"Who are you a-sayin' is no man?" says Mrs. Maddick, a-bristliu' up.

I says, "Never you mind what I'm a-sayin,' as dou't concern you," and turus away from her.

I'm sure the dust and the noise was that unpleasant as I wished myself home, and bein' hurt with the Maddicks' remarks I walks on by myself, and who should come up but Barnes and Jane, as is Brown's sister, in a four-wheeled shay.

"Who'd a-thought of seein' you here?" says they, "as we were a-goiu' to call ou in our way home, through 'avin' lots of cold meat in the basket, and thought as we'd take supper with you." Well, I was that hurt with the way as the Maddicks had treated me that I says, "Do so."

"Well, theu," says they, "you'd better get into the seat behind."

I was that tired as I wasn't sorry for the chance. So in I got, though dreadful squeezy work, through the basket not a-leavin' room for my legs, aud the seat that was small as I were more outside than in. If I'd had the least cousumption of what I should have had to suffer, nothin' in this world would have got me into the back of that shay; for, bless you, what, with the boys a-flickin' at me with whips, a-jumpin' up behiud and a-bonnetin' me, and rough characters a-peltin' at me, I never had such a ride. My bonnet was reg'lar smashed, I was hollered at and pelted shameful, parties a-shoutin' out as I should be the death of the horse. One fellow bawls out, "Here's a sack of fat." Another says to Barnes, "Hold hard, there's the back of your shay a-comin' off," as he treated derisive, when just then if the pole of a carriage didn't come right over my shoulder. I gives a wioleut wrench for to save myself, and the seat give such a crack as made me ketch hold of Barnes' coat collar, and pulled him sudden, as made the horse back on to some roughs in a tilt cart, as whipped their horse and got locked in our wheel, and in tryin' to extricate it took the wheel cleau off. I felt I was a-goiu' gradual, and screamed for help through bein' that terrified as I should have the shay on me, as the basket was quite enough of a good thing ou my chest, particularly as the bottles had broke, and I felt all the liquor ruunin' over me. They picked me up, but really Jane and Barnes was that unpleasant as when on my legs I walked myself home, as wasn't far off, and haven't seen nothin' of Barnes and Jane since, nor yet spoke to Mrs. Maddick, as was offended in me a-goin' away, not as I considers her conduct friendly, and the best way for them as can't agree is to keep separate, aud such is my intention, for the world's wide euough for us all, as the sayiu' is.—London Fun.

THE THREE DEGREES OF COMPARISON.—An excellent turn was made a few days since at dinner-table by Judge Hoar, of Massachusetts, too good to be lost.

A gentleman remarked that ——, who used to be given to sharp practice, was getting more circumspect.

"Yes," replied Hoar, "he has reached the superlative of life—he began by seeking to get on, then he sought to get honor, and now he is tryiug to get honest."

THE FACTS IN REGARD TO "LOCKSLEY HALL."

["COUSIN AMY" contributes to London Fun the following amusing explanation of Tennyson's well-known poem. It is worthy of Thackeray:]

I MAY as well begin by telling you that I never cared very much for Alfred; except, of course, as a cousin. Our mode of living at Locksley Hall was now and then a trifle dull, you see; and I found it a pleasant relief to get verses written in my album, or to have the leaves of my music-book turned over when I chose to play the "Harmonious Blacksmith with Variations," the march in Blue Beard, and the Minuet de la Cour. At the age of sixteen I could perform these three pieces with great fluency and expression; it was, therefore, much to be regretted that I could perform no others. The composition of the "Harmouious Blacksmith" has been attributed, by the general voice of mankind, to Handel; and that of the march in Blue Beard is assigned, with equal unanimity, to Michael Kelly; but the authorship of the "Court Minuet" remains veiled in the mists of obscurity. But I will now resume the history of my unfortunate misunderstanding with young Alfred, beginning at the beginning:

This poor boy's father was killed in the Mahratta war; and my beloved parents—the kindest parents that ever breathed—took charge of the orphan. It was no easy task, I should think, to superintend the education of such a vain, forward, self-willed, aud passionate child. The earliest thing I remember about him is that he caught a severe iufluenza through standing at the open staircase window several nights in succession, to watch the great Orion sloping slowly to the west. Nobody with a grain of common sense would have selected for these nocturnal experiments a coustellation which is only visible duriug the coldest months in the whole year. My cousin's temper was not improved by illness, as you may imagine and it was upon my devoted head that his displays of petulance usually fell. I persevered in my attentions to the wayward invalid nevertheless; and ultimately had the satisfaction of seeing him arrowrooted into health again.

Years rolled by in alternate quarrels aud reconciliations, until I reached the age of seventeen. My cousin Alfred was about a twelvemonth older; it was consequently high time that he should select some trade or profession. Any lad with an atom of spirit would, long before that age, have preferred earning an honest livelihood by his own exertions to living in dependence upon his relatives; bnt the notion of hard work was distasteful to this impetuous youth. He must needs become a poet—a resolve which was confirmed by my thoughtless approval of some verses he had lately written. I could scarcely help laughing outright on his confessing to me that he entertained serious hopes of being made Poet-Laureate after the death of Mr. Wordsworth. Such presumptiou would have beeu inexpressibly comical had it not beeu inexpressibly painful. Auother proof of this young man's modesty may be found in the fact of his proposing that I should become his wife. Excessively probable, forsooth, that Miss Amy Locksley, the future chatelaine of Locksley Hall, would unite her destiny to that of a penniless and obscure scribbler! I returned an evasive answer, which saved me, I have no doubt, from a terrific outburst of abuse and vituperation. Certainly I told no falsehood in saying that I loved him; for I did love him—as a cousin. Anything beyoud that was, of course, entirely out of the question.

About a month after this occurrence, Alfred went up to Londou to seek his fortune at the poiut of his pen. I need hardly say that his matrimonial intentions had not been confided to my parents. With all his faults (and they were many) my cousin was not sufficiently heartless to inflict that pang upon his benefactors; and the love-passages between us were kept a profouud secret. We corresponded regularly for some time; but our letters very soou began to decrease in length and interest. Alfred was evidently absorbed in the society of artists, musicians, and men of letters; and I was equally absorbed in preparations for my approaching marriage. The match was in every respect a good one, and I have never yet found cause in it for one moment's regret, after twenty-five years of unalloyed happiness. My dear husband's tastes are simple; and his chief interests, apart from those which concern my own comfort and the education of our children, appear to be centred in his dog and his horse. I am thankful that my father and mother were spared to witness our domestic felicity before they were borne away to sleep their last sleep in the family vault of the Locksleys.

Of Alfred I have seen and heard nothing since a year after my marriage. At that period he was discovered prowling about our park by one of the footmen. On being invited by the man to step into the servants' hall and take some refreshment, he angrily declined. He was shortly afterwards seen at the Locksley Arms, down in the village, in the company of several dissolute authors, who amused themselves by blowing on the bugle-horn, and drinking considerably more than was good for them.

By the way, I have heard it vaguely rumored that my cousin has lately thought proper to publish a tissue of misrepresentations and calumuies respectiug myself, my parents, and my husband. I can assure him that he is at liberty to make whatever use he pleases of our names; and, at the same time, I regret that he is unable to earn a dinner by more honest and reputable means. My intimate friend, Lady Clara Vere de Vere, has informed me that I am not the only sufferer from these vindictive attacks. Should their author ever attain, as he once fondly hoped, the dignity of the Laureateship, I trust that he will, at least, pay to the highest lady in the land the compliment of confining his personalities in future to offenders of his own sex.

SUMMER HEAD-DRESSES.

CORDONS of flowers are the newest style of head-dresses, and are extremely pretty for youthful wearers, and those who possess an abundance of hair. Very small flowers only are used for this purpose. We will suppose that the wreath was of apple blossoms, the flowers would be arranged with a leaf or two each at intervals on a thick green stem composed of India-rubber, which renders it pliant and elastic. The length is about a yard, and is placed once round the head, and then arranged round the chignon in loops, or it may be adjusted as three bands a la Grecque. In fact, almost any fancy may be carried out by the cordon, which is arranged at will, and simply fastened by hair-pins. Another cordon may be of gold or silver, with pompon roses arranged at distances. Tiny scarlet carnations, japonicas, jessamines, etc., are used. Other cordons, composed of lilies of the valley or forget-me-nots, or any minute blossom, are arranged with the flowers close together, all round the stem and the entire length, like a cowslip chain.

A charming set of wreaths for the drawing-room has been lately prepared. The set consisted of a sheperdess wreath for the head; a chatelaine ending in a ring wreath, and commencing in a bouquet, for the petticoat; a bouquet for the berthe, and twenty-four tiny ring wreaths to be arranged round the tulle bouillonnés, which trimmed the train of white silk. The flowers were all apple blossoms, with their pale green leaves.

A pretty trimming for an evening dress is composed of the flowers of the stephanotis and a scarlet berry resembling branches of coral. The wreath is Spanish, with a white feather in front. On either side of the skirt three crescents of flowers, graduated in size, are arranged. The berthe is distinguished by a large crescent, and two very small ones in the shoulder knots.

Many of the cordons for the hair have a raised bouquet in the centre, which can be adjusted over the forehead or on one side of the chignon, and the end of the cordon can be placed a la Benoiton. Most wreaths now have the Bénoiton chain in flowers appended; but though very fashionable, it is not indispensable. Coronets and combs in gilt metal with Benoiton chains attached are in vogue.

A very new-shaped wreath resembles the tiny bonnets which are now so fashionable. It is round, converging from a centre like a palm-leaf, and a Benoiton chain hangs beneath the chin, attached on either side to the flat bouquet at the top. A head of endives spread out exactly gives the form of these. They are not at all unbecoming to many faces. One for a bride, formed of white lilac with orange blossom in the centre, and the chain composed of white lilac flowers studded closely together, is effective; and it would look well with a veil.

A very tasty shepherdess wreath was composed of turquoise blue velvet, and silver chains; the ends were of velvet, and a white feather rested over the forehead of the wearer.

A different style of head-dress, and suited for a less youthful face, was a double flat band of gold mingled with a few fern leaves, and having a feather butterfly at the side.

Another head-dress consists of a bandeau of pink velvet crossed behind, and ornamented with tufts of white marabout feathers, and chains of pearl, not Benoiton, but looped round.

A pretty head-dress, with long Bénoiton chains of pearl, was simply composed of blue ribbon.

Among many pretty novelties for the hair are a pair of silver daggers as pins for the chignon, with a long chain of gold and coral pendent behind. The dagger heads are also of coral. A smaller chain of fine silver hangs above the coral. Round silver pins, with fine silver chains, ornamented with filigree silver nobs are pretty. Combs of silver and pearl, and others with cameos, are very new. A pretty kind of hair net is made of broad stripes of ribbon velvet, scarlet or blue, linked together with open work of gold beads.—Boudoir.

An unusual number of female violin-players have of late been heard; and two of these, Mdlle. Lebouys and Mdlle. Castellan, have been among the late givers of concerts. M. Léonard, the Belgian violinist, is about to settle in Paris. From every side, rumors reach us of the present unsatisfactory state of the Conservatoire Concerts, M. George Hainl, the new conductor, being, unless report be more scandalous than usual, unequal to his position. The post is one to which M. Berlioz might fairly have succeeded—did appointments, in this vale of tears, go by merit.—Review.

CALIFORNIA LANDSCAPES.

IN one of his later letters from California, Bayard Taylor observed that monotony was characteristic of the landscape in this State. The eminent word painter, of whom Humboldt remarked that he had travelled further and seen less than any man he ever knew, came as near the truth in this instance as the susceptible Tupper did when he described the scenery of Niagara Falls as "pastoral." Let a man plant himself on a ranch on the interior plains and there await the circling of the year, and he will undoubtedly have good reason to condemn the sameness of both climate and scenery. If an Eastern man, he will miss the "frolic architecture of the snow," spring's awakening of nature from a frosty shroud, the rich bloom of June and the pomp of October woods, as well as the varied prospect of hill and dale, meadow and grove. And if he should then sit down to describe the climate and landscapes of the Golden State, he would convey as correct an impression of both as the fast traveller whose books are multiplied more rapidly than his facts. The truth is that the scenery, like the climate of California, is more diversified than that of any other section of the American Union. As was said of the charms of the Egyptian Queen,

> Age cannot wither, nor custom stale,
> Her infinite variety.

While almost every feature of Eastern landscapes has its counterpart somewhere within our borders, there is much beyond of beauty and sublimity which vainly challenges rivalry. If one objects to sun-scorched plains, and yearns, like Captain Hall's Esquimaux, for the chill enjoyment of wintry scenes, he has not very far to journey to find himself among a Canadian expanse of snow, trees decorated with frostwork, and ice that will bear a skater. If the images of verdant valleys, purling brooks and wood-crowned uplands about an Eastern home haunt his memory, and the white oak and the cottonwood offend his taste, a day's travel will carry him among scenes which will match those he regrets, and trees of such variety, symmetry and height as he has not known before. If he remember Lake George and Winnipiseogee, he will be consoled by Lake Tahoe and Clear Lake. If he thought the White Hills sublime, will he feel no enthusiasm when the white cone of Shasta looms up before his vision? If he admired the wild beauty of the Adirondacks, can he fail to find their parallel in the middle ridges of the Sierra? Artists have been employed to paint the lovely landscapes and mountain views at famous points on the New York and Erie, Pennsylvania Central, and Baltimore and Ohio railroads, and their pictures adorn the Eastern galleries, inviting tourists to visit those attractive scenes. But are there no features of scenery on the route of the Central Pacific railway surpassing in sensational charm the most celebrated of the railway attractions in the Atlantic States?

In order to appreciate the "monotony" of our landscapes we have but to follow the path of the iron horse from Sacramento to his temporary stopping-place three thousand feet above. Speeding away at sunrise, we leave the shady avenues and blooming gardens of the City of the Plains, which contrast refreshingly with the tawny desert beyond. We cross the American, meekest of rivers now, with a terrible power in reserve, and soon pass out upon the prairie, not long since carpeted with flowers, now a brown, scorched, cheerless waste, bordered by gnarled and wierd-looking white oak. Here is a fat soil, capable of yielding many a golden harvest, but the eager vegetation withers and dies because there is no Moses to smite the rock and call forth a fertilizing stream, and also because there is no rock to smite. Leaving the verdureless plain, we enter park-like groves of oak, with no underwood, and note the gradual heaving of the earth like the first swells that precede the mountain waves. Then comes a gently rolling country, studded with pleasant sites for the villas of the future; and still further on, real rocks, shaded by the spreading boughs of the nut pine and bordered by the thick-growing buckeye. In the cool shade of the foliage are some of the wild flowers which the sun banished from the Plains in May.

At Newcastle Gap we are fairly in the foothills of the Sierra, with deserted diggings on either hand—whose treasures are in the vaults of foreign banks—miners' cabins, ditches full of muddy but precious water, vineyards and orchards on the hillsides, marking the transition period of industry in this region. And here there is a grand view of the Sacramento Valley, the "meeting of the waters" at the City of the Plains, the western wall called the Coast Range—a view of immense breadth and varied interest on a clear day. Here, also, is seen the beginning of the real work of railroad building in the Sierra, for we have ascended a thousand feet without any noteworthy effort. Hence to the summit of the snowy range, making a railway means blasting out "deep cuts," building huge embankments of the scrapings of a shallow soil, bridging ravines with lofty trestle-work, skirting high, precipitous knobs, and finding a way to cross great chasms a thousand feet in depth! Continuing to ascend—and the peculiar feature of this railroad route is that it is always going up, in spite of some awful descents in the formation of the country—we meet the black oak, the live oak, the cedar, the sugar-pine—king of the mountain forests—and the purple-boughed manzanita. On the slopes we see flowers growing in wild luxuriance that are treasured in Eastern gardens, such as the tiger-lily and the larkspur. The frequent gaps open a series of mountain views as charming as any that may be seen in the Alleghanies or the Blue Ridge. And yet "the blasted heath" of the plains, the slimy slough, the cottonwood, and the white oak are hardly three hours behind!

We remember having been impressed with the grandeur of the view at the Horseshoe Bend of the Pennsylvania Central Railroad, on the Alleghany Mountains. At that point the road curves round a ravine, perhaps three hundred feet in depth, and about five miles of rugged, woody wilderness is seen from the track. The citizen of the Keystone State who is awed by that tremendous union of art and nature should see Cape Horn and die.

When the locomotive reached Colfax, it appeared to persons who were not familiar with the located line that there the track must end. Directly in front yawned Long Ravine, about twelve hundred feet in depth, the north fork of the American river flowing at the bottom, while on either side of this chasm towered steep hills—mountains they would be called in the Atlantic States. But the eye of the engineer had detected the single point at which the ravine could be passed by a trestle-work one hundred and fifteen feet high, and then, by curving round the rugged eminence christened Cape Horn, and building a road on its precipitous side, he found he could reach a point two miles above Colfax. This work is thus far the chief wonder of the route.

In going "round the Horn," the traveller may look down twelve hundred feet, while above the train the rock rises quite three hundred feet. There could be no more thrilling sensation in running along the edge of the cliffs of Dover. The American river, far below, is dwarfed to the size of a mining ditch. The bridge spanning the river is as small as a cigar-box. The road winding up the steep sides of the hills on the other side of the ravine looks like a little garden path, and a man on a mule seems to be a native of Lilliput. The sight of a train passing round the Horn, from the bridge below, gives even a more striking impression of the grandeur of this work than can be obtained on the road itself. From this point to the summit the mountain scenery along the route of the railway will excite the admiration of thousands of tourists in the future, and after journeying from the Sacramento to the region of summer snows, we fancy there will be few to deny that the landscapes of California are as infinitely varied as they are affluent in sublimity and beauty.—Union.

OVERWORKED AMERICANS.—The Round Table thus discourses: "As a people we try to do too much. There is one constant strain and effort to go higher—further, to be greater—richer. Young men are brought forward into places of responsibility that are too much for them. Their ambition is excited by every possible motive, and they grow gray and old when they ought to be fresh and light-hearted. Young women are hurried into society and to the use of its wretched artifices long before they are ready to sustain so much care and anxiety. Instead of freshness and buoyancy, they are weighed down with discontent and peevish repining, and they are old five years before they ought to have any place in society. And not only is this contagion of work and progress the curse of the young, but it bears down with intensified force upon those who have been longer in the harness. The struggle is to get rich at thirty-five and then "retire." So far in this country those men who have "retired" early have generally carried with them a broken-down constitution, a disarranged physical condition which no rest, no money, can repair.

The remedy for this state of things is the suggestion of plainest sense. The English have learned it most fully, and, as a consequence, they live better, longer, and happier. What is needed is more moderation in work, and more intermingling of daily labor with pleasant recreation. The physical part of our being must be attended to as we go along, not once in a year at some resort of fashion. We must be satisfied with less, and thus shall we have more real happiness. We need more quiet, less chafing and worry. In this way will all the forces of life have a better opportunity to perform their varied functions, and we shall be a nation of happier, healthier, and more buoyant men and women. There may not be so many societies for the diffusion of universal knowledge, but there will be a better development of the individual."

FASHION is never over-fastidious, or, at least, has not been so in this day and generation, but she has laws that her true votaries never violate. As regards the revealing of bust and arms, she prohibits it at night, in the morning, and in public places; hence, night dresses, toilet robes, morning dresses, and suits for promenade, are always high-necked and long-sleeved.—Boudoir.

A CLERGYMAN, on reading the 27th verse of the 18th chapter of the First Kings, incorrectly placed the emphasis, rendering the verse an absurdity. "And he spake to his sons, saying, saddle me the ass, and they saddled him."

[For the Californian.]

WHAT DOES IT MATTER?

WHAT does it matter, dear, though I go soon,
Before the golden cups are gathered all;
Before the burning heat of Summer noon,
Or the cold storm of Autumn-time shall fall;
What does it matter? If I sooner go
Wearing unfaded violets on my breast,
With loaded wains, the reapers, tired and slow,
Will sighing pass the grasses o'er my rest,
And sighing, drop a tear—
What will it matter, dear?

What will it matter, sweet, if I grow old,
And Summer's pleasant fields grow black and bare;
A few brief days of sunshine or of cold,
A few short hours of pleasure or of care?
What will it matter if I wearier stay
To reap the fruitage of the sober Fall,
To put the earlier gathered flowers away;
What is the gain or loss, if after all,
A little longer stray my feet—
What will it matter, sweet?

What matters it, dear heart, if far or near,
Waits the Death-Angel—noiselessly and dumb;
For if I stay, love-fetters bind me here,
And if I go, dear voices whisper, Come!
Though dark and thick the shadows intervene,
The clouds are sometimes rifted, and I see
The beautiful dim vale, that lies between
The world that is, and that which is to be—
Only a step apart—
What matters it, dear heart?

EMILIE LAWSON.

THE GRAVE OF CHARLES LAMB.

[A CORRESPONDENT of the New York Tribune gives the following description of the house in which Charles Lamb died, and the tomb where he now lies:]

EDMONTON is about ten miles out of London, lying on the southeast; you reach it by the Great Eastern Railway, starting from Shoreditch. A journey, mostly over the housetops of a dingy neighborhood, brings you through the outskirts of the giant metropolis and heterogeneous blending of town and country common to all suburbs, to fields and the little town in question; the "station" where one alights being partly over "the wash," or pond, celebrated in Cowper's immortal ballad of "John Gilpin." Church lane, leading to the churchyard, is close behind; five minutes will bring you to the latter. I inquired my way of a fellow-traveller, who resembled a retired military officer, wearing the cap, beard, and moustache appropriate to one. He professed himself an inhabitant of Edmonton and civilly asked me if he could be of any service in directing me more minutely, when I told him my object. "Charles Lamb!" said he, "I recollect the old gentleman very well! I helped to bury him." I stared and questioned him, when he proved to be the sexton of the place. He could give me no live memoranda of Elia, beyond the fact that "he always dressed in black" (which I knew before) but pointed out the house where he died—we were close to it—and subsequently guided me to the grave. I shall speak of the house first: it has not been described in any of the publications about Lamb, nor, so far as I am aware of, been put in print at all.

It is in Church lane, and known as Bay Cottage (then as now,) a modest little tenement, approached by a narrow strip of garden, and shouldered into the background by more pretentious neighbors—one a "villa," with a lion ramping in stone, or at least in plaster, on each side of the carriage entrance. Down this strip runs a central grass-plot, margined by trim flower fleds, a walk of neat whitened flagstones leading to the low, old-fashioned door. The house is a decidedly small one, two stories in height, evidently of brick, plastered, with warm yellow-brown stains upon it, a blue slate roof, of two different angles, divided by a horizontal line. The adjoining houses rise above it, as well as squeeze it into the rear. One old-fashioned window, opening centrally, with sixteen small panes of glass to it, affords light to the ground floor; there are two above. In this upper room Charles Lamb died. The neatest, humblest, quietest of retiring places, Bay Cottage—it may take its name from a clump of greenery near the door—must have looked just the same during his residence as it does now—as it did on the mild, dull April afternoon that I stood gazing through the rails at it, listening to the reedy thrill of a thrush singing in the trees next door, and fancying that "quaint figure in black" emerging over the threshold, and coming with "a bland sweet smile" toward me.

A very brief space brought us to the churchyard. It is a large, irregular-shaped one, with many perpendicular white tombstones in it, fewer flat ones, and numerous green mounds of the ordinary form; there are trees environing it. The church, built of white stone, with some handsome windows of the "decorated" and "perpeudicular" styles, and here and there well massed with ivy, is above the average. Lamb's grave lies away to the left, as you enter from Church lane, between two gravel paths, not far from the tarred fence of a large garden, which makes a sharp angle in the churchyard. It has a tallish stone at the head, with the inscription and well-known lines written by "Dante" Carey, cut entirely in Italic capital letters (two lines overrunning, the redundaut words are inserted below on the right-hand side of the stone like a refrain,) and a small one at the foot containing simply the initials of those beneath. Betwcen is a neatly, and, I think, newly-turfed mound. The adjaccnt monament of "Gideon Rippon of Eagle House, Edmonton, and the Bank of England," on the right, is not a "hideous erection of the fluted order of village nrchitecture," invidiously described in the Saturday Review four years ago, but a peatish tomb of the modern Greek style, with quadrupled pedimeut, Soaneau ornaments and a low iron rail surrounding it.

Neither is Lamb's grave now "overgrown with nettles and long grass," as then was probably the disgraceful truth (though, by the way, the sexton denied it,) for one could see by the discoleration of the headstone that at least one foot niue inches of earth had, not very long ago, bcen removed from it; while that at the foot must have needed all but excavation. At present the grave and its belongings look decent enough—thanks, perhaps, to that irascible Saturday reviewer. It was no less than sixteen feet deep—on the sexton's authority, corroborated by that epithet applied to it by Talfourd. He also confirmed the biographer's statement that, wheu the grave was re-opened to admit the body of Mary—thirteen years after that "afternoon wintry walk, on which about a fortnight before his death he had pointed out to his sister the place where he wished to be buried"—the coffin of Charles Lamb appeared quite sound. "So dry," says Talfourd, "is the soil of the quiet churchyard, that the excavated earth left perfect walls of stiff clay, and permitted us just to catch a glimpse of the still untarnished edges of the coffin in which all the mortal part of one of the most delightful persons who ever lived, was contained, and on which the remains of her he had loved with love 'passing the love of womau' were henceforth to rest. They were lovely in their lives, aud in death they are not divided.

MEN IN ARMOR.—Buckstone, the London comedian and manager, at a recent theatrical gathering, gave the following account of an embarrassing situation in which his company were one placed:

I had once occasion to represent "Richard the Third" at the Haymarket Theatre, but being unaccustomed at the house to warlike tragedies, we had no suits of mail to engage the captains and soldiers of York and Lancaster. In this difficulty, I applied to the manager of Astley's Amphitheatre for the loan of some armor, when almost immediately afterward a van-load arrived at my stage door. I sent my thanks to the manager for his kind and prompt compliance with my request, and experienced to him an indescribable feeling of friendship, mingled with gratitude. The only drawback to this generous action was that the armor was very dirty, and required cleaning. To accomplish this my men were occupied for two or three days in brightening it up.

The night came for the performance of Richard the Third. The armor was donned by the actors, who went into the battle certainly, but under difficulty. My "Earl of Richmond," on lifting up his arm to strike at "Richard" could not get it down again, but continued in that striking attitude to the end of the play. "Catesby" and "Ratcliffe" wandered about like two animated Dutch ovens, and being unable to see through their vizors where they were going, came into collision with each other; some of the helmets having been forced on the heads of some of the soldiers, could not be got off again till long after the tragedy was over; while one disgusted super, who had been laughed at by the audience, and had also experienced a tumble or two, was heard to say, "If this armor dodge goes on I shall leave the profession."

THE LAST AIR SHIP.—The experiments which have been made by Dr. Solomon Andrews at New York and his aerial voyage recently, have aroused fresh interest in aerial navigation. The doctor makes no prediction, which is a favorable portent, but he is sanguine that, with the lengthening and some modifications of his machine, he will be able to steer it with certainty. His air ship is thus described:

"The ærostal of the apparatus, instead of being pear-shaped, like that of the common balloon, more resembles a long lemon terminating in a sharp point at either end. This floats horizontally in the air, and by means of a strong netting passing over the whole bag, supports the car, shaped like a cradle, of wicker-work, about eight feet in length by two in width. A strong leather strap passing along the top and bottom of the balloon, and drawn together by cords, forms a deep groove in the upper and under sides. The principle of its operation is that, owing to its peculiar form, it will move much more easily in the direction of its length than in any other, and consequently when it is rising through the air or sinking toward the earth, if one of its points be turned partially in the direction in which it is pointed, and thus by alternately rising and sinking in slanting directions, the machine will be propelled ahead. Dr. Andrews' present ship is about 86 feet in extreme length and 42 feet in diameter in the middle. It contains, when fully inflated, about 60,000 cubic feet of gas, and is estimated to be able to sustain a burden of 1,800 pounds"

AMUSEMENTS.

CHARLES MATHEWS' lively little two act combination of farce and comedy, under the queer title of Who Killed Cock Robin? was produced very successfully at the Opera House on Tuesday evening. Though it has but four characters and but slight material for plot, yet the piece is so full of fun, sparkle, and action, and the dialogue so clever and amusing, it is no wonder that it should make a hit, and be the theatre-talk of the town—especially when its chief parts were so ably represented as in the present case. The plot has been printed and reprinted in the dailies—which must serve as an excuse for our not repeating it here.

The two principal characters, "Satanella" and "Jack Ragget," were taken by Miss Kate Denin and Harry Courtaine, and were both capitally given. Miss Denin's acting of her part was very artistic; the rendering of the mock heroic portion of it was a gem in its way. Courtaine's "Jack Ragget" was very Courtainish, indeed too much so. This excellent actor's tendency to exaggeration is a growing fault. If "Jack Raggett" had not been made so extremely nervous and flighty he would have presented his points more effectively. It does not need a constant strain of nerve and muscle, and the throwing of salient points—like those which enliven this piece—nt the audience, to make them catch them—a quiet and artistic toss would serve better. Mr. Courtaine's ability and versatility have gained him a just popularity, and if he will but study a more calm and composed manner of rendering even eccentric characters, we are sure it will tend to his present, and more particularly to his ultimate advantage. Fred Franks as the "father" of the piece, acted his little part notably well.

Pocahontas, introduced with local hits, accompanied Who Killed Cock Robin? on Thursday's and Friday's bill. Both pieces will be played again this afternoon and evening. "The Sphinx," a clever little piece of optical illusion, has shown its head on the stage, apparently without any body, and talked, smoked, and drank, to the wonderment of the uninitiated. This feat of jugglery will be added to this afternoon and evening's bill.

THE BIANCHI ITALIAN OPERA SEASON.—The new artists engaged to complete this troupe having arrived yesterday, on the Golden Age, the season will be inaugurated at the Metropolitan theatre with Verdi's favorite opera of Ernani, on Tuesday evening next. The merits of the resident members of this company, Signor and Signora Bianchi and Signorina Brambilla, are well known to our readers. The stranger artists are not unknown to fame. Signor J. Mancusi, has ranked as Primo Baritone at the La Scala of Milan, and at El Liceo of Barcelona; which is a sufficient guarantee of musical and vocal ability of high order. Signor S. Milleri was Primo Basso of her Majesty's Theatre, London, and held the same position at the Tacon Theatre, Havana, during the last winter. He made his dèbut at the Academy of Music, New York, on May 10th, and we clip two notices from the New York press as the most satisfactory way of placing his qualifications before the public. The New York Tribune of May 11th, in a critique on Faust, says: "The débutante basso, Milleri, effected by his 'Gold Song' and serenade a positive control of his first public here." And adds: "There is material in that basso for a grand dramatic singer." The New York Times, of the same date, says: "Signor Milleri was the Mephistopheles, making his début in that trying role. The gentleman has a fine bass voice, particularly clear and ringing in the upper register. He made a highly favorable impression." About a week subsequently, the New York Academy burnt down, and his next début will be before a San Francisco audience as "Silva," on Tuesday evening next.

The new season opens very propitiously. The box sheet is fast filling up. The operas will be produced with excellent leading artists, large and efficient chorus, and a full orchestra under the leadership of Mr. R. Herold; and are pledged to be placed very effectively on the stage. A new drop scene for the theatre has been painted, representing the famed Bay of Naples, and Mount Vesuvius in eruption.

THE Howson Opera Troupe, at the Academy of Music, did not escape the usual penalty of unacclimated singing birds. They were rendered incapable of singing their parts by hoarseness early in the week, after giving two performances. The Misses Howson suffered quite severely from attacks of influenza upon encountering our summer winds after a three-month voyage through the tropics. These drawbacks materially affected their success in the rendering of La Sonnambula, and the house was necessarily closed. But antidotes and steam baths have conquered in the interval, and to-night the troupe essay Maritana with clear voices and unfettered throats. We think Wallace's opera, being an English one, will be very effectively rendered.

THE bath for beauty is an application of that elegant, innocent, and delightful toilet gem—Davidson's Circassian Bloom. It is far above all other dressings, so nicely does it adapt itself to every skin. It never injures or roughens the complexion.

DUST TO DUST.

BY HENRY GEORGE.

We copy the following sketch—written by an occasional contributor to The Californian—from the Philadelphia Saturday Night.]

When the wheels, whose tireless beat brought us to these Pacific shores, made their first plunge in the brine, and for the last time flung from their floats the spray of the noble Delaware, how much of life and hope did our little barque contain—what bright pictures were painted for the future! We were nearly all young, and looked to our voyage as a pleasure excursion. That which alone is certain has already come to many—in battle or storm, by the Indian arrow, or by fell disease, death has called; yet for the first that went we grieved the most, and there were circumstances connected with his death and burial that none of us will ever forget.

We had lived through the northwester off Hatteras, when many a stout barque went down; we had entered three fever ports unscathed, but as we steamed past the Sugarloaf and bade the beautiful bay of Rio farewell, we knew there was one on board who had not begun the voyage with us—a frightful shipmate, the scourge of the tropics, the personified demon of the sailor—"Yellow Jack."

And of all that crew, the one whose hopes seemed brightest, whose prospects in life were most to be envied, seemed marked by the destroyer. This young fellow, scarce twenty-one, the son of a man of wealth and high position who could help him over the most difficult rounds of the ladder; with every promise of a bright career, and all that nature and fortune could give to make life desirable, lingered while others recovered. Fore and aft, he was loved by all for his genial nature and generous spirit, and anxiously we watched and prayed for his recovery. The crisis seemed past, and if his strength would only last until he neared the Cape, all would be well.

Our prow pointed to the cool south, to the path of the breezes of life. Every plunge of our wheels sent us farther from the sun. Each night we watched the Southern Cross take a higher station, as the returning voyager, who has doubled the great capes, watches the rise of the Dipper and North Star, and the familiar constellations that deck the heavens of his home. The majestic sweep of the albatross on the horizon we would have greeted as the bird of promise, and the furious wind of the Southern ocean would have been welcome as the soft breeze of spring in the frozen Arctic. We hoped for the best, yet those who were superstitious shook their heads, as before us, day by day, in the clear blue water underneath our bows swam the striped pilot-fish, and now and again above our seething track the fin of the following shark might be seen to rise. Only one port remained to be passed before we would hail the rain and fog, and strengthening winds—Montevideo. But when we entered that great basin, more sea than river, the mighty La Plata, on which the city is situated, young N—— was dying.

Slowly his life ebbed away, and the scene, as he breathed his last, I shall never forget. On our right were the low hills of the shore, to the left only the broad expanse of the river. The wild sky, the black clouds seemed big with the dreaded pampero; the wind whistled past, the waves dashed in foam. On board stood hushed and waiting, for we knew a soul was parting. There was a stir at the cabin hatchway, a sailor man came up, his face covered with his hands—we knew all was over. Then at that instant, as, spite of belief and education, a prayer for the freed soul rose from our hearts, the black clouds opened in a perfect circle, out streamed the light of the sun upon the heaving water and wild scene, and, as if against the darkness, the bow of everlasting promise sprang into the sky.

For some time, in intervals of consciousness, young N—— had been aware of his approaching end, and the only thing that seemed to trouble him was the idea of dying so far from home he loved, and of being buried where affection might never mark his resting-place. It was his last and earnest request, that his grave might be made on shore, where his friends could be recognized by his friends, and not committed to the waves; and though it was very doubtful if the privilege would be granted, yet the captain resolved to take the ship into the harbor, and try to obtain permission to bury it there.

And when night came, sadly we talked in little groups upon the deck, while the sound of hammer and plane from the gangway told that the "last house" of one of us was being built. Though no star shed its light, still it was not all blackness. The "river of silver" beamed with a lustre of its own. Not only the furrows our prow threw aside, or the broad wake we left behind, but the whole surface of the water glowed with phosphorescent brightness, and we seemed to force our way through a sheet of molten silver.

All night long we steamed up the river, and when the sun rose it showed us the harbor of Montevideo. Out before the other shipping lay a stately frigate, the Stars and Stripes of the great republic streaming from her peak in the morning breeze—the old St. Lawrence, flagship of the squadron. She was the first national vessel we had seen since leaving our own shores, and as we neared her we gazed with pride upon her trim aspect and noble proportions. We were bringing them news and letters from home, and every port of the great ship was thronged with faces eager to see the comer from the land they loved. Running up under her quarter we were hailed and answered, and after the usual inquiries, our captain mentioned the death of young N——, and his wish to have him buried on shore; but was told that it was impossible; that we would infringe the quarantine rules by even entering the port with the corpse; and was directed to steam back some miles and commit the body to the waves, before entering the harbor.

The shrill whistle of the boatswain sounded; a boat dropped from the frigate's davits, reached our side, took letters and papers, and our little steamer turned slowly round to retrace her path. We had felt sad while coming up, but a darker gloom hung over all while going down the river. It seemed so hard that the last and only request of the poor boy could not be complied with.

But swiftly down the current, in the bright, fresh morning, dashed our little boat, and when the lofty frigate was hull down behind us, we turned and stopped for the last sad rites.

Upon the quarter-deck, in reverential silence, all hands were gathered. The large box-like coffin, in which we had hoped to commit our dead to mother earth, bored full of holes, and filled up with heavy materials, was placed by the side, covered with the flag. The beautiful burial service was commenced, its solemn sentences sounding doubly solemn under such mournful circumstances—there was a pause—a voice that I know, years afterwards, sounded clear and full through the death storm of the Mississippi forts, trembled and faltered a moment—then came the words, "We, therefore, commit his body to the deep!" and with a surge the waves closed above the dead.

Hardly a word was spoken as the wheels again took up their task, and we began to ascend the river, but every eye was fixed on the spot we were leaving, and at the same instant an exclamation sprang from every lip as the coffin was seen to rise! The engine was quickly stopped, a boat lowered, and taking a small anchor and some heavy chain, started to secure and sink the box. But it was no easy task in the fresh breeze and short, chopping sea, and the coffin seemed almost instinct with life and striving to elude their efforts. Again and again they were foiled in their attempt to fasten the weights, but were at last successful, and once more the water closed above the corpse.

After waiting some time, to make sure that it could not float again, we started once more up the river, and this time awe was mingled with our grief. Most men who follow the sea have a touch of superstition; there is something in the vastness with which Nature presents herself upon the great waters which influences in this direction even minds otherwise sceptical, and as we steamed up the river, it was more than hinted by many among us that the strong desire of the dying man had something to do with the difficulty of sinking his body.

This time we passed the frigate, saluting, but not stopping, and entered the port. It was war time; on the Pampas some phase of the interminable quarrels of this Southern federation was being fought out, and the harbor was crowded with men-of-war. Nearly all the Brazilian navy was there, watching the progress of events; and besides these, and the numerous merchantmen, the ensign of almost every nation was displayed above some armed vessel. By direction of the officer who boarded us, we proceeded past them all, to the farther side of the harbor, where we were ordered to lay in quarantine seven days before being allowed to coal.

The new scene, the various objects of interest around, and the duties of clearing up, conspired to make us forget the events of the morning, but the sun was yet some distance above the western horizon when a startling circumstance occurred to recall them to our minds.

Nearly all hands were busily engaged below, only two or three loitering around the deck, when the quartermaster, sweeping the harbor with his glass, noticed something floating in, which riveted his attention. Again and again he looked at it; then, with surprise and dismay in his face, called the officer of the deck. The whisper spread through the ship, and in a few minutes all were watching in silence the object that seemed drifting toward us. Onward it came, through all the vessels that lay beyond us—now lost to our view, now coming in sight again—turning and tacking as though piloted by life, and steadily holding its course for our steamer. It passed the last ship, and came straight for us. It came closer, and every doubt was dispelled—it was, indeed, the coffin! A thrill of awe passed through every heart as the fact became assured.

Right under our bows came the box; it touched our side; halted a moment, as if claiming recognition, and then drifted slowly past us towards the shore.

There was an excited murmur forward, a whispered consultation in the knot of officers aft; then one advanced—"Man the quarter boat, boys; take picks and spades; tow the coffin ashore, and bury the body!"

It was the work of a moment—the boat shot like an arrow from our side, the ashen oars bending with the energy of the stroke. Reverently and gently they secured the box, and with slow, solemn strokes towed it to the foot of the desolate-looking hill that skirts the bay. There, breaking it open, they bore the corpse, covered with the flag, a little distance up the hillside, and, making in the twilight a grave among the chaparral, laid it to rest, marking the spot with a rude cross, which, concealed from observation by the bushes, would yet serve as a mark of recognition, and secure the grave, should it be noticed, from the intrusion of vandal hands.

And so, spite of all, that dying wish was gratified, and the body which the waters refused to receive was laid to rest in its mother earth.

[For the Californian.]

LINES.

BY A PRACTICAL SENTIMENTALIST.

Sometimes at eve, when the lamp burns low,
And Day recedes, and Night with its flow
Comes bitter and black about me,
I see the lights in the city wake,
And moved by the night-wind shiver and shake
With a tremor that seems to flout me.

But I watch and wait through the twilight gray,
Till the lamps are lit in the Milky Way
And the golden squares of the Lion,
Till the keys of the Lyre sparkle fair
And the tremulous, misty moonlit air
Is faint with the glow of Orion.

Then the dreams of my youth before me pass
And the cherished visions and hopes, alas!
And the words that were gaily spoken,
And the forms I loved that are gone away,
And the kindly hearts that are turned to clay,
And the vows that are long since broken.

Then I rise and enter a secret door,
As marshalled by one who had gone before
With a dim and ghostly truncheon;
And, finding pickles, and beer, and cheese—
Through filled with unutterable thoughts like these—
I eat my midnight luncheon.

Exciting Scene at Wombwell's Menagerie.—The Dundee (Scotland) Courier, of May 18, says: On Saturday night an alarming incident occurred at Wombwell's menagerie, which is now visiting Dundee. The place was crowded to excess by visitors. During one of the performances, while the keeper, Mr. Mack, was causing the leopards and panthers, which are confined in one large caravan, to go through various evolutions, a large male panther suddenly showed unmistakable signs of insubordination. With the rest of his companions he was ordered by the keeper to leap through a large brass ring held up for that purpose. Instead, however, of doing this, the animal suddenly turned upon Mr. Mack, and, throwing his powerful paw on the head of the latter, produced a deep scalp wound, from which the blood instantly began to flow profusely, covering the face and clothes of the daring keeper with a crimson stream. Mr. Mack was completely taken by surprise, as this was the first occasion on which the panther had dared to make an open attack; but, quickly recovering his self possession, he struck his infuriated assailant several severe blows with the butt end of the heavy whip he usually carries about with him when going through his dangerous performances. Blinded and maddened with the blows of the whip, the panther let go his hold and bounded round the cage in a frantic manner, then, retiring to the further corner, crouched down as if preparing for a spring, while his gleaming eyes and gaping jaws, from which he emitted the most terrible growls, showed plainly enough that, had he been allowed to make his leap, it would have closed forever the career of the fearless lion-tamer. But, happily, the latter followed up his advantage with energy and promptitude, and gave the animal such an unmerciful beating as fairly to cow him into an unwilling and threatening submission. He compelled him to finish the performance so unexpectedly interrupted, and was loudly applauded by the audience on making his exit from the exciting scene in which he had showed so much cool daring and decision. It may be readily supposed that the visitors were wrought to the highest pitch during the time the affair lasted.

A picture in Punch called "Rather Cute," represents a man at a ticket office. "Look here!" he says, "you didn't give the right change just now!" Clerk—"Too late, sir. You should have spoken when you took your ticket!" Passenger—"Should I? Well, it's of no consequence to me; but you gave me a half-sovereign too much!" Exit.

Suggestive.—The Napa Register suggests that the cars running from Napa to the landing below town be provided with cow-catchers behind as well as in front, as there is nothing to prevent cows from running into the cars from the rear, while in motion. Very good.—Cal.

THE STEWARD'S STORY.

ABOUT twelve years ago, I was steward of the Dryad, Robert Harrison, commander. She was a fine fast little ship of four hundred and fifty tons, and bound from Shanghai to London, with a cargo of teas and silk. A Clyde-built ship, called the Planet, a great favorite in the trade, completed her loading at the same time that we did, so we sailed together and passed through the Straits of Sunda in company.

Now, you must know, that to bring the first of the season's teas into market, was then, and is now, a very great object; and of course there is considerable rivalry among the first ships loaded. Moreover, part of our cargo was on account of the owner of the ship, which made Captain Harrison doubly anxious to make a rapid passage. I do not know whether he understood he was to receive a present in case the Dryad should be the first ship into London, though that is likely enough; but I do know that he had made a bet of five-and-twenty pounds with the captain of the Planet, for I heard the bet made one day when old Sandilands was taking tiffin on board our ship.

Well, we parted company off Java Head, and you may depend that there was not much rest for the officers and crew of either ship from that time forward—at least, I know that there was none on board our ship. Our skipper carried sail on her very hard, day and night the same: indeed, he would be on deck at all hours of the night, not that he need have been afraid of either of the mates taking in canvas before they were absolutely compelled; for though they were perhaps not so much concerned personally in the matter of a smart passage as he was, yet they seemed to consider it for the credit of the ship that she should beat the Planet, and carried sail as hard as was safe, and occasionally a good deal harder than was pleasant. A pretty general average they made among my crockery, to be sure, when we had some tolerably heavy weather coming round the Cape. However, we weathered it handsomely, for a stun'sail boom or two, and a split top-gallant sail don't count for much when a ship is bound to make a fast run, and in 27 degrees south we were going free at a great rate with a fine fresh breeze on the quarter, and the skipper and mates were in high glee, for they made certain we were beating the Planet; though, not having seen that ship since leaving Java Head, it was impossible for any one to know anything for certain about the matter.

However, there was no mistake about the fair wind, and the Dryad walked along in great style, bowling off her ten and eleven knots an hour, when one evening when we were getting somewhere to about 26 degrees south latitude, one of our youngsters, who was up in the main-top, stowing away a stun'sail, sang out, "Sail ho!"

"Where away?" called out Captain Harrison and our chief mate both together. You see they fancied that it might be the Planet, and were all alive.

"Right abeam of us to leeward, sir!" answered the lad.

"What do you make her out to be?" again sung out the captain. "Here, Mr. Monsell, he continued, addressing the second mate, "take your glass into the top, and see what she is like."

Up ran Monsell, and in less than a minute hailed the deck with, "She is a large dismasted ship, sir, waterlogged, I think, but you may be able to see her from the deck, right over our lee quarter."

You see, at the rate we were going, we were dropping her fast. At this intelligence Captain Harrison looked very much disturbed and annoyed, and walked the deck for a minute or two, without speaking. Then he called down the companion-hatch for me to bring his glasss, which I did pretty quickly, for, to tell the truth, I was standing with it in my hand at the foot of the stairs, listening to what was going on. Now, I heard what Monsell had said when he hailed from the main-top; so when I came on deck I looked over the quarter. There, sure enough, I picked her out at once with my naked eye, not very plain, to be sure, but plain enough to see that she was a large ship, very deep, rolling heavily. She seemed to have a main-royal or a mizzen-top-gallant sail set on a jury-mast rigged forward. As I could make out all this, you may imagine I was much astonished by hearing the captain say to the first mate, "I can't see her, Mr. Gilbert; I think it must be Mousell's fancy!"

When he said this, I looked round, and was surprised to see he had his glass directed to a point or so abaft the beam. No wonder he didn't see her for the Dryad had not been idle all this time, and we were leaving the wreck well astern; the breeze, too, was freshening into a smart capful of wind. Upon hearing the skipper's remark, the first mate said:

"Bring me up my night-glass, will you, Stedman?"

"And get supper ready, Stedman," added the captain, in a way that sounded like, "What are you doing on deck, when you are not wanted?"

Of course I took the hint, but what with going between the cabin and the galley, and listening at the foot of the companion, I heard and saw all that passed. Mr. Gilbert took the glass, and walking right aft, looked over the taffrail a little to leward. Presently he said:

"I see her quite distinctly, sir—a heavy ship, from Bombay or Calcutta, most likely; rolling very deep, sprung a bad leak, I should say, sir; shouldn't wonder if one of her masts, when they went overboard, had started a butt."

And this Mr. Gilbert said without removing the glass from his eye.

"She's abandoned, I suppose, Mr. Gilbert," said the captain, in a tone which he tried to make unconcerned, and without looking in the direction of the wreck.

"Well, no, sir, I should say not," replied the mate decidedly, as he turned round and looked at his superior with some surprise. "I should say that there were some hands on board of her, if not all the crew; they have rigged that jury mast with that rag of sail forward, and they manage to keep her before the wind pretty well, considering."

"Ah, well, well, Mr. Gilbert, she'll do all right enough; she has a fair wind for St. Helena, and she can fetch that easily, I dare say, if the worst comes to the worst: besides, she is in the regular track of the homeward-bounders, and some ship or other will be sure to pick her up. Whether or no, I can't put the ship's head round now and beat up to windward to her for three or four hours, and then find, after all, that she does not require our assistance. Perhaps the Planet may fall in with her to-morrow or next day—ha! ha!"

This he said with a forced laugh, but neither of the mates seemed disposed to join him in his merriment. On the contrary, they both looked very gloomy, and I can't say that I thought it a subject to be joked about, nor, I dare say, did the crew. Indeed, our captain's behavior surprised me a good deal; for, though he was generally considered a taut hand, and very strict in his notions of duty and discipline, no one on board had ever regarded him as a cruel or bad-hearted man. But, you understand, the Devil was at his elbow in two or three shapes. He was anxious to bring in the first cargo of tea—he was anxious to do well for his owner—he took a pride in the fast passage his ship was making, and then there was his confounded bet with Captain Sandilands, of the Planet.

But it is not for me to judge him, and, what's more, no one on board, officers or men, presumed to express their opinion, whatever they may have thought; only I heard Mr. Gilbert, who went into his cabin shortly after eight bells had struck, muttering something to himself about, "a nice entry to make in the log-book!" It was the second mate's watch from eight to twelve, but Captain Harrison remained walking the deck; and when I announced to him that supper was ready, he sent Mr. Monsell down, saying that he would keep the watch in the meantime. And when Monsell returned on deck, there he still remained, silently pacing fore and aft, and occasionally stopping to look over the taffrail. The moon rose at four bells or thereabouts, and soon afterwards I heard the skipper say:

"Turn the hands up, Mr. Monsell—in stun'sails!"

Upon this, up jumped Mr. Gilbert with "What is the old man up to now?" He was on deck pretty sharply, and I could hear him forward, singing out for his watch.

Then it was—"In main-top-mast and top-gallant stun'sails; fore top-mast and lower stun'sails; and then single reefs in the top sails, fore and aft." Then, "Hands by the braces!" and as the helm was put hard to port, the fore-sheet was dragged aft, the fore-tack boarded, the yards were braced sharp up, and the ship hauled to the wind as close as she would lay.

Then we knew what our captain had been thinking about, while he had been pacing the deck so silently during the last two or three hours; and I, for one, didn't envy him his reflections.

What he could have done a few hours before, very easily, he was going to do now, when it would not only be difficult, but would cause great loss of time into the bargain. Ay, and what was worse, it would probably be too late. For when we first sighted the vessel in distress there was no more than a fresh breeze, and very little sea; now there was a considerable sea running, and the wind had freshened, so that, as we worked to windward, it was like half a gale; and under the canvas we were carrying, our good ship heeled over to it handsomely, and took the seas over her in great style.

Nevertheless, we did not make much way, or at least that was our captain's opinion, for when we were ship at six bells, he said to the mate, "We will get the mainsail on her, Mr. Gilbert."

"Upon my word, sir, she has got as much as she can stagger under, and I don't think she can bear it," replied the mate; the first time I think that I ever heard him offer a remonstrance.

"She must bear it, sir!" was the reply. "Send the people aft to the mainsheet, and let some good hands tend the buntlines."

Well, when she had got the sheet aft and the tack down, I hoped he was satisfied. The ship certainly went faster through the water, and held a better wind, but she careened over, so that our lee chains were under water, and she trembled all over as the seas struck and deluged her deck, fore and aft. Thus we kept carrying on all night, wearing ship about every two hours or so, and mostly with all hands on deck.

The night was tolerably bright, except when the heavy clouds drove across the face of the moon; but no ship did we see. At seven bells in the morning watch, the wind had risen so much that Captain Harrison very unwillingly gave orders to hand topgallant-sails, double reef the topsails, and haul up the mainsail. Under this shortened canvas we still kept beating to windward, and I knew by the constant, anxious look-out kept by the mates, that they calculated we were somewhere near the spot where the distressed ship was last seen; but no, the day dawned, the sun rose, but the clear expanse all around was unbroken. The ship was gone! Without orders, Mr. Monsell took his telescope up into the main-top-mast cross-trees, and there he stayed for a quarter of an hour or more. When he came down, Captain Harrison asked him no questions. There was no need: the grave look of his face told its own story.

All that forenoon we kept stretching to windward, though every soul on board, not excepting the captain, must have known that it was too late; but about mid-day Captain Harrison said to the first mate (and his voice seemed hoarse and strange,) "You can put the helm up, Mr. Gilbert, square the yards, shake out the reefs, and keep her away on her course." With that he came down below, and went, without speaking, into the after-cabin. At first I did not venture to disturb him, but after waiting about a quarter of an hour I fancied that I heard him groan; so, by way of an excuse for intruding upon him, I got him wine, and taking it into the cabin, asked him to take some, saying that I knew he must feel in want of some refreshment. He was sitting with his elbows resting upon the table, and his face hidden between his hands.

When I spoke to him he looked up and stared at me as if he did not rightly understand what I said, and then dropped his head between his hands again; so I laid the wine in the swinging tray and left the cabin. Upon my life I pitied him. A man may make a mistake and rectify it—he may commit a fault and atone for it; but Captain Harrison's case was a terrible one. He had left undone what he ought to have done; and in beating his ship to windward under a dangerous press of sail, we all had witnessed his desperate endeavors to set right what he had left wrong; but who can describe the depth of his sorrow, and the bitterness of his self-reproach, when he found that those efforts were made in vain? Too late! Ah, it is a bitter word to say.

Homeward sailed the Dryad, with tolerable weather and fair winds, and everything on board went on pretty smoothly as before; but the mates began to perceive something peculiar in the captain's conduct. He was usually a very reserved and silent man, and after what had happened it was only natural to suppose that he should be less lively and talkative than usual; but now he scarcely ever spoke to any one. He never had been what is called "a jolly skipper," that is, he never cared much about good eating and drinking, but now he would hardly taste food oftener than once in the twenty-four hours. And from a few slight expressions I heard let fall between the officers, I concluded that they thought their superior was light-headed, or not quite right in his mind.

They might easily consider so, for his conduct was certainly strange. He would be on deck all day, and great part of the night also, his glass always in his hand. This he was constantly using, looking to windward, just as he did when we were working up to the spot where we considered the dismasted ship to be. This, at first, did not attract much attention, but when it became his constant practice all day long, the officers—ay, and the men, too—began to guess how it was. Indeed, Mr. Gilbert, to try him, one day said to him, in a cheery sort of voice, "I don't think you need look out for the Planet, Captain Harrison! Bless your life, sir, she hasn't got legs to travel with us!"

"Planet! what Planet?" asked the poor man, in a bewildered way. It was not the Planet he was looking for: it was the foundering ship, which should never see harbor more, that was constantly floating before his diseased imagination. Did he not fear that, on that day "when the sea shall give up her dead," the lost crew would appear to plead against him before the great judgment-seat?

His grief and remorse had fairly turned his brain. He now never attempted to interfere in the navigation or working of the ship; but the mates did not require his assistance in any way, nor did they trouble him at all beyond occasionally consulting him for form's sake; they were both first-rate seamen, and Mr. Gilbert, as became his position as first officer, was a good navigator, almost as good, it was considered, as the captain himself. But a first mate in Gilbert's situation, with an incapable commander, is decidedly in a false position; he has all the responsibility on his shoulders without being legally in charge of the ship.

So far, however, all had gone on very well, and we hoped that we were going to make a smart passage, and be the first ship of the season, notwithstanding our unhappy delay. But our good fortune was coming to a close. When we were somewhere about 36 degrees north latitude it came on to blow very heavily from the west, and the weather was thick, with a good deal of rain. I know that this made Mr. Gilbert very uneasy, for we were getting close upon the Western Islands, and I had heard him talking to Mr. Monsell about sighting them, and "taking a fresh departure." But in the thick weather and strong westerly gales, there was nothing for it, he considered, but giving them a wide berth, and intended to keep well to windward of Flores. And this, I presume, he considered he had succeeded in doing, for the night after I heard his conversation with Monsell, they both came down below together, to look at the chart.

They had not much opportunity for taking observations, but I suppose Gilbert was satisfied that we had weathered the island, for after pricking off the ship on the chart, he decided on altering her course two points or so, rounding in the weather braces, and shaking a reef out of the topsails. This alteration in our course made almost a fair wind for us, and as we had been hammering away for the last two or three days close-hauled under short canvas in dirty weather, it was good news to all on board. But we were rather premature in our rejoicing. That very night, just as the first mate was turning in (for he had not been in his berth during the last two nights, and now that his mind was at ease he resolved to have four hours' sleep) the lookout on the forecastle shouted, "Breakers ahead!"

Mr. Gilbert was on deck in an instant, and gave his orders promptly and coolly. "Down with the helm, raise tacks and sheets!" But it was too late; the only difference was, that the ship went crashing broadside on to the reef, instead of bows on. A choice of two evils with a vengeance. As she struck, the foremast went over the side at once, dragging with it the main-topmast, and there lay the bonny Dryad almost on her beam-ends, smashing and tearing herself to pieces on a reef off the shore of the island which poor Gilbert had flattered himself he had weathered so cleverly. The ship continued beating very heavily, and the sea broke clean over her waist; but though there was not much shelter anywhere, the quarter-deck was comparatively secure, and there we all, officers and men, hetook ourselves. As she lay with her deck towards the shore, she made a lee for us on that side, and that, so far, was a fortunate circumstance.

To our surprise, the captain seemed to have completely recovered his senses; he was perfectly cool and collected. He blamed himself and no one else, for the loss of the ship, and consulted with the mates as to whether the cutters could swim in the sea that was running, and whether they would be sufficient to hold all the people. It was extremely doubtful whether they would do either one thing or the other; but he ordered them to be seen clear, all ready for lowering, and then said: "My lads, the ship will no doubt stick together until daybreak. If we can manage to hold on till then, we shall have a better chance of getting ashore; by that time, too, the weather may have moderated. It would be more dangerous to attempt to land now than it is to stay by the ship." He then ordered me to go down with the mates into the cabin, to try to lay our hands upon the blue-lights, also some cartridges for two small swivels, which we had on the taffrail. Moreover, he directed me to bring up some wine or spirits, to serve out to the crew. This I managed to effect with some difficulty; and very useful the allowance was to the wet and shivering men. We learned afterwards that our blue-lights and guns certainly gave notice to the people on the island of our whereabouts, but produced no other effect; nor, indeed, did we look for much assistance from shore.

A dreary night we passed, nor when day broke was the prospect much more inspiriting; but that our commander's advice was good in urging the men not to take to the boats during the night was evident, as we could now perceive, what we should probably have missed in the dark, that there was a short stretch of sand and shingly beach, where we might have some chance of running the boats ashore, and even of saving our lives if they chanced to be rolled over in the heavy surf, which we could not help considering was more likely than not. Be that as might happen, the trial was to be made; and Captain Harrison proceeded to tell off the crew of the first cutter, which he placed under the charge of Mr. Monsell. With him she would carry twelve in all. This divided the crew and officers equally between the two boats, with the exception of the captain, who made one over the complement for the second cutter.

This having been arranged, we lowered away the boat, with two hands in her tending the falls, and, thanks to the shelter afforded by the position of the ship, we managed pretty well, and got the people into her without accident. But she swum very deep, even dangerously so. As long as she was under the lee of the wreck, this was not a matter of so much consequence, but it was a ticklish moment when they let go the painter, and put her head round for the shore. We watched her progress for a minute or two, and proceeded to lower the second cutter, the captain saying, "Now, Gilbert, it is your turn."

The boat was successfully lowered, and the hands passed safely over the side, leaving Captain Harrison, Mr. Gilbert, and myself. Then the captain addressed the mate, and said, "Gilbert, I must be the last man on board, step over the side. Stedman, fetch me my glass; it lies on the companion hatch."

I brought it to him, and he ordered me to get into the boat. As he followed me to the ship's bulwarks, I, of course, obeyed him, never dreaming of anything but that he should follow me. But when he saw that I was safe on board the boat, he called out, to the surprise of all:

"Thirteen is an unlucky number, Gilbert; you are too deep as it is, and will do better without me. I shall stay on board to take care of the ship. Give way, my lads!"

Take care of the ship, indeed! God help him! the ship was breaking up fast, and the cargo coming up alongside.

As he spoke, he cast off the end of the painter where it was made fast on board, and we were at once swept twelve or fifteen feet from the wreck, and, if we had not pulled the cutter's bow round, should have been capsized instantly.

We could not have returned to the ship now if we had risked our lives to the utmost in attempting to do so. Had we been able to accomplish it, we most certainly should have been compelled to use force to remove the captain. We saw him wave his hand to us, and walk deliberately to the weather quarter, where he crouched down, and, levelling his glass, looked out to windward.

You see, although he was so cool in taking command when the ship struck, and in arranging for the safety of the men, yet, as soon as the first great excitement was over, his ideas went back to their former channel.

He had no care now for his wrecked ship, for his good men in extreme danger, or even for his own life, fast drawing to a close. No—no; his thoughts were fifteen hundred miles away, with a deserted ship and a lost crew whom he would have given his life to rescue, and for whom he would look until his last hour, and look in vain!

My story is nearly told.

The second mate managed to beach his boat very cleverly, and well for us in the second cutter that he did so; for we were not so lucky. When within three boats' length from the shore, a heavy roller took the cutter under the counter and turned her over, sweeping us, along with the capsized boat, bruised and half-drowned. So that if Monsell's crew and the people on shore had not been on the look-out for us, and ventured boldly into the surf to our assistance, we should inevitably have been carried back by the returning sea, and, in our injured and helpless state, most probably have perished. But, thank God, we were rescued, though not without some casualties.

Among other trifles, Mr. Gilbert dislocated his shoulder, and two of my ribs were broken. Indeed, the whole of us had suffered more or less, and our boat lay on the beach, keel uppermost, and useless for the present. The first cutter, however, was in pretty good order, and the mates consulted together on the possibility of reaching the wreck, and bringing off their commander, whether he would or no. If they had considered it at all feasible, they could have raised half a dozen volunteers in a minute; but it was too clearly a sheer impossibility to launch any boat through the surf which was then on the beach. We hoped, however, against our better judgment, that the Dryad would hold together until the weather moderated.

In the mean while, we were all kindly treated and cared for, and an account of our misfortune was to be conveyed to the British consul, at Fayal, as soon as the weather would permit. I may as well mention here, that by that gentleman we were furnished with needful supplies, and eventually sent home to England by a large steamer that called at Fayal.

When the next morning dawned, however, our hopes as to the weather and the wreck were doomed to disappointment. The Dryad was gone! And what had been only thirty-six hours before a smart, well-built ship was nothing but a mass of smashed and twisted timber, driven about like straw by the breakers, and hove upon the beach. And there we found him! He had lashed himself to the quarter-deck bulwarks, where we had last seen him, and apparently in that position awaited his doom; for he had evidently made no efforts to save himself, either by the hencoops or loose spars which came ashore, and most probably must have been floating alongside. We dug his grave and laid him down with all decency and respect; ay, with sorrowing hearts, too; for to us he had always behaved as a good and just man; and if, in the lamentable instance I have related, he had greatly erred, so also most bitterly he had repented.

One of the peculiarities of the great International Exhibition to be held in Paris next year will be a grand restaurant, or rather series of restaurants, each one to represent the cuisine of a different nationality, and in which the waiters are to have the distinct costume of the country represented. A correspondent, speculating upon these different refreshment rooms, says: "The Englishman will expect to have his roast beef and ale; the Yankee his pork and beans, buckwheat cakes, and green corn; the Dutchman his sauerkraut; the Spaniard his olla caldo and dulces; the Italian his maccaroni; the Esquimaux his blubber; and the Chinaman his rice and bird's nests—perhaps, in a quiet way, a rat or so. As a large space will be devoted to the Polynesians, some very curious culinary preparations from that quarter of the globe may be looked for."—London Review.

[For the Californian.]

MOUNTAIN TRAVEL.

[BY OUR RELIABLE CORRESPONDENT.]

MEADOW LAKE, Nevada County, Cal., July 4, 1866.

LAST March, Hon. N. W. Winston, Capt. Martin White and myself found ourselves at Heaton's station, now Cisco, on the Dutch Flat and Virginia road. We had travelled thus far by stage, but at this point the beauty of the scenery enticed us from this mode of conveyance, and we determined to complete our journey to Meadow Lake on foot, in order that we might have more leisure for observation. We put on overcoats, to protect us from being blistered by the fervid rays of the sun, and covered our boots with barley sacks, which we wound around and tied on to prevent the mosquitoes from biting through the leather into our feet, that insect being of extraordinary size and fierceness in this region.

Indeed, many kinds of animal life seem to be exaggerated into wonderful proportions by hare association with the gigantic mountains. We had cakes for breakfast at Heaton's, and used sugar on them, some of which may have stuck in our whiskers, for we were suddenly attacked by a flock of humming-birds, of such monstrous size that nothing but a vigorous use of our sticks saved us from being knocked down the side of the mountain by their wings, the swift flapping of which resembled the noise made by a hundred-stamp quartz mill.

We noticed many fine varieties of flowers, trees and shades, the like of which we had never seen before, during our walk up the side of Red Mountain, so called because it is composed entirely of copper, with just soil enough over it to support the garden through which we passed. To step half way up and gaze upon the view was delightful. A man would probably climb such a mountain not more than once in his lifetime. Once while we were sitting on the side of the road, enjoying the scene, Pat. Lannan, of Virginia, came down on a cloud. Petrified clouds are much used in the mountains for the conveyance of passengers. There is a certain place on the mountains known only to a few who profit by the secret, where, when the clouds become entangled in the trees, they assume almost immediately a condition of petrifaction, changing into a substance which is hard and firm, but floats in the air in the same manner that another kind of stone called pumice-stone, floats on the water. The parties who collect these singular vehicles, fasten ropes to them before releasing them from the trees, to prevent them from sailing away, and also to lead and guide them down and up the mountain trail. The cause of this peculiar change in the character of the clouds has never been satisfactorily explained, but it is supposed to be owing to some peculiarity in the earth or its exhalations in the particular spot where the phenomenon occurs. Another peculiarity is that all the colors the cloud may have had immediately before the change takes place, remain indelibly fixed. It thus happens that some times these cloud carriages present the brilliant beauties of drab, purple and gold, and all the other sunset hues at once. For a ride on these an extra price is charged. The handsomest one I saw had, in addition to these colors, several very lively rainbows, which had been caught at sunset. Owing to their buoyancy, they can only be taken half-way down the mountain; the balance of the trip is made on mules or on foot. We continued our journey on foot, being unwilling to trust the clouds, as an accident had occurred shortly before; a rope having broken, the passenger was carried to unknown regions, and has never been heard from since.

We continued up the mountain till we arrived at Fredonia, which, in the language of the inhabitants, means enchantment A high, white wall, had been built around the place. From the top of this we descended by a flight of steps, whiter than any marble, into a room in which we found no living soul visible; but a fire was on the hearth, which we suppose it kept perpetually burning, as a part of some ancient superstition or ceremony. Though no hands could be seen, there instantly appeared a table loaded with viands of the utmost variety and most delicious taste, all of which soon disappeared as mysteriously as it came, and was replaced in greater variety and with more abundance than before. We could hear the rattle of the dishes, and see them descend upon the table, but hand or person we could not see. Startled at these phenomena, we re-ascended the steps, but, before leaving the place, visited the wind factory. This is necessary because the wind never blows there, and this establishment was therefore built to supply the demand. When manufactured, it is kept for use in a large reservoir called a blacksmith's bellows. Finding ourselves among the clouds, I tore a strip of "silver lining" from one, and brought it along with me. It is a great curiosity.

From Fredonia we passed on to Enterprise, so called on account of a gigantic project originated and successfully put in operation by its founder, about which I will inform you in my next.

J. JACKSON JONES.

NOTICE.

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch, at reasonable rates.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JULY 14. 1866.

FULL volumes of The Californian, from the commencement, can be obtained at the office, 532 Merchant street. Price, in muslin, $4 per volume; two volumes (one year) bound together, $7. Unbound, per volume, $3.

HOME CHARITIES.

THE meeting recently held for the relief of the Portland sufferers, was characterized by a show of caution, reserve, and prudence quite in contrast to the usual spontaneous enthusiasm and display of previous California meetings for similar purposes. The speakers wanted to know the exact condition of the sufferers; whether the aid of San Francisco was imperatively required; whether temporary relief was only asked; whether the destitution was such as authorized a claim upon the charity of so remote a city. Some thought the condition of the Portland people no worse than that of our own citizens after the great conflagrations of '52 and '54, and, arguing from the fact that we had not received charity from Eastern cities, questioned their right to claim assistance from us. It was urged that, having ourselves recuperated and recovered from the disastrous Sacramento flood which left so many thousand homeless without receiving help beyond the borders of our own State, the like energy might be reasonably expected of an older community. And one gentleman, whose prominent connection with most of the charitable organizations of this city entitle his remarks to some weight, asserted that the number of destitute and suffering people in this city was about equal to that of Portland!

It is to the last statement that we wish to call the attention of the reader, and which we take as the text of this article. The previous arguments, it is unnecessary to say, have no weight with a liberal and enlightened people, or with any community that believes charity to be something more than the hope of reciprocation. But it is certainly worth our serious consideration if a destitute man is more likely to receive our sympathy when in Portland than when in San Francisco, or that the crippled soldier to whose wants—through the Sanitary Commission—we contributed so liberally, is likely to starve to death when he makes a personal appeal on our streets for aid. The fact is that there has been an unpleasant odor of ostentation about most of our popular movements in the way of benevolence and charity, and a disposition to make not only the right hand know what the left had done, but to generally take the rest of the body into the secret. It was pleasant to listen to the trumpetlike praise with which Dr. Bellows spread our munificence throughout the land; it was exceeding good to hear ourselves spoken of as the "wealthy and large-hearted sons of California." There was a reckless and barbaric opulence in our gifts, an unreasoning liberality that had about as much significance as the largess scattered by some tipsy reveller. With this reputation for generosity, there has been more real suffering and unrelieved destitution in this State than in any other community of the same size. With this monument to our liberality, erected by the United States Sanitary Commission, we have not been able to build an alms-house!

The reader who doubts the extent of poverty and suffering in California, has but to reflect upon the thousand predisposing causes which give an epidemic and local character to this form of social complaint. To many who arrive on this coast, California is the dernier resort—the last hope of a luckless and ill-considered life. People forget that here, energy, application, and intelligence are as essential if not really more important to success than elsewhere. The factitious glow given to California life and business by ignorant scribblers and wandering travellers intoxicated by new scenery and people; the enchanting and seductive pictures painted by self interested speculators, attract many here who are unfitted for the harsh realities of our life, and who exhaust their total capital in the attempt to reach these shores. The perils of an adventurous and speculative trade; the sudden reverses of fortune peculiar to the legalized gambling which we call stock-brokering; the mischance of flood, fire, and robbery (greater than in older communities;) and the reckless extravagance of expenditure, make poverty and distress more frequent than competence and wealth. It is time to look to our own poor. While it is true that charity which begins at home often ends there, we believe in applying our generosity, intelligently and mercifully, in relieving those distresses which can be most easily and readily relieved, whether they be in Portland or San Francisco.

OUR BOOK-TABLE.

AMONG the works recently sent us we select the following for notice at this time. Others will receive attention next week:

Clarke's New School Geography; forming the Third Part of Bancroft's Geographical and Historical Series. By Chas. Russell Clarke, A. M. San Francisco: H. H. Bancroft & Co.

The characteristics of this work, which are urged as its claim to superiority over ordinary text-books, are—First, the prominence given to the Pacific group of the United States; and, second, a habit of instruction through a priori and a posteriori induction. In regard to the first, it is questionable whether in the abstract the best interests and purposes of the geographical study are served by allotting so much space and discussion to a locality which is comparatively unimportant in the general sweep of geographical survey. It is quite as important that California youth should learn something of the power and magnitude of older civilizations and countries as to be taught the subdivisions of townships in their own county. The practical advantage of this local information is overbalanced by the loss of that comparative knowledge which experience shows liberalizes and enlightens the understanding. The second characteristic of Mr. Clarke's work is certainly ingenious and of considerable practical utility, although it is somewhat too material, and leads the author often into amusing statements. Thus we are told (page 29.) that "Santa Clara is situated four miles from San José, and is the seat of the University of the Pacific and the Female Collegiate Institute under Protestant control, and of Santa Clara College, under Catholic supervision, and the importance of these places to one another"—here we have the a priori deduction—"has led to the construction between them of a fine causeway, shaded with beautiful trees." Here Mr. Clarke's haste to get to his favorite conclusion leads him to unintentional misstatement. While it is not clearly proven why Santa Clara, even with its formidable array of learning, should be so important to San Jose as to justify the making of the causeway with its beautiful trees the real fact, with its far greater historical significance, viz: that the road called "the Alameda" was built and the trees planted by Jesuit Fathers over fifty years ago and before these colleges were in existence is completely lost sight of. Again, in reference to Benicia we are told that "it enjoys a high degree of accessibility from every quarter. This circumstance fits it to serve as an educational centre, in which character accordingly it is well known"—quod erat demonstrandum. "And the fact that distribution can be easily effected from this point fits it to be the seat of a United States Arsenal which accordingly it possesses." Q. E. D. This remarkable bleuding of ideas we fear will only produce in the youthful mind a cloudy impression that arsenals and educational centres are a good deal alike, and that Benicia enjoys a capacity for being doubly offensive, which certainly entitles her to some distinction. In speaking of the Russian settlement in Sonoma, our author has a clever idea. He tells us that the Greek and Roman Catholic churches, after many centuries divergence, here finally met. The point of nearest approximation was singularly enough at Pluto or Devil's lake, on what might be termed a brimstone basis. Our author evidently lost a fine opportunity for orthodox illustration in his own peculiar manner. "Hence, the sulphurous odor, etc."

The volume has been adopted by the Board of Education as a text-book for the public schools, and has received the general commendation of the teachers.

Shakspeare's Delineations of Insanity, Imbecility and Suicide. By A. O. Kellogg, M. D., Assistant Physician State Lunatic Asylum, Utica, N. Y. New York: Hurd & Houghton. San Francisco: A. Roman & Co.

Another tribute to the universal genius of Shakspeare. It is a series of essays written "at various intervals between 1859 and 1864." The author intimates, in his preliminary notice, that in the light of his professional education he had written certain strictures upon the apparent errors of Shakspeare in the delineation of several characters in his dramas, and now with great frankness confesses that "a better acquaintance with the delicate shades of mental disease, as seen in the wards of a large hospital for the insane, has tended to modify the earlier views of the writer respecting some of Shakspeare's insane characters, and enabled him better to appreciate the fidelity of the great dramatist's delineations."

The volume is one of very considerable interest to the student of Shakspeare, in that it is the free and generous testimony of a medical student to the truth of the delineations of those very characters which in life it is his constant labor to observe and minister unto. He is singularly outspoken in his admiration and wonder at the extent and accuracy of the medical, physiological and psychological knowledge displayed in the works of the dramatist. He testifies to Shakspeare's information in regard to those subjects which "are regarded as strictly professional and special," and attributes it solely to the peculiar force of his great genius, its power of "close observation, and an acute perception of the nature and relations of all things which come up before the eye and mind," and "of calling up at will from the recesses of the memory, with great distictness, every perception there recorded;" for the knowledge he displays is very far in advance of that of his age, and "was not possessed by any one in his time, however eminent in any special department of science to which he might be devoting himself." In regarding the singular degree of intelligence displayed in the departments of physiology and psychology, Dr. Kellogg enthusiastically remarks: "In fact, we believe a very complete physiological and psychological system could be educed from the writings of Shakspeare—a system in complete accordance, in almost every essential particular, with that which we now possess, as the result of the scientific research and experience of the last two centuries." The author passes in brief review the display of the poet's knowledge in these two departments of science; takes "a cursory view of some of the conflicting physiological doctrines maintained by eminent physicians not only of Shakspeare's time, but long after, even down to the present century, when they were overthrown by modern scientific research;" declares that Shakspeare contended for "truth, not for the establishment of a moral theory," and could have derived no assistance from the physiology of his own times; that, "after two centuries and a half, we have little to add to what Shakspeare appears to have known of these intricate subjects," and that "there is scarcely a department of scientific knowledge that he has not enriched." He asserts, in illustration of the great knowledge displayed, that, in spite of the credit having been given to Harvey of the discovery of the circulation of the blood, "many passages from his dramas seem to indicate a pre-exisient knowlege on the part of the writer of this great physiological fact," and quotes Falstaff, who, speaking of the influence of a good "sherris-sack" upon the blood, says:

"The second property of your excellent sherris is—the warming of the blood; which before, cold and settled, left the liver white and pale, which is the badge of pusillanimity and cowardice; but the sherris warms it, and makes it course from the inwards to the parts extreme."

The author of this volume treats in his first essays upon the characters of Lear, Macbeth, and Lady Macbeth, and afterwards, separately, upon Hamlet, Ophelia, Jaques, and Cordelia, the characters laboring especially under the infirmity of mental aberration, though in different manifestations. He treads here upon ground that has been trodden over many times during the last century, and will doubtless meet with critics who, while giving him great credit for an impartial and learned investigation, in the light of his professional knowledge, into the mental characteristics of each, will nevertheless be loth to yield their early interpretations in favor of his. This will apply especially to the character of Hamlet, over which learned critics have differed essentially. He believes that, with his professional study and experience, he can and does herein solve that which "some of the most profound critics of the last century, and down to the present time, have found an enigma which they have by no means been able to solve, and which has been to them a stumbling-block and perpetual rock of offence." He cites the remarks of Schlegel, "one of Shakspeare's most able critics," concerning "this enigmatical work," as Schlegel calls it, in order to "illustrate how vain are all efforts to solve the 'enigma,' and to unlock the profound mystery with which the poet has surrounded the character of his hero, without the true key, which is at once furnished by the supposition of the real madness of Hamlet, which to the experienced medical psychologist is quite as evident, notwithstanding what he himself says about 'putting on an antic disposition,' as that of Ophelia or Lear."

Part Second of the volume is taken up with essays upon the Imbeciles of the Dramatist, specifying Bottom, Dogberry, Elbow, Shallow, Malvolio, Bardolph, Nym, Pistol, Launce and Caliban. There follows a single essay upon Shakspeare's suicides, as illustrated by Othello, "the noble Moor."

In his essays upon such characters as are afflicted with mania, and are subject to medical treatment, the author is learnedly critical and persuasive, and sheds the light of a valuable experience upon the delineations of the dramatist in illustration and confirmation of the poet's wonderful truth to nature. In the essays upon those whom he calls Imbeciles, not diseased in mind, but afflicted only with natural infirmity of the brain, and not the subjects of curative remedies, Dr. Kellogg appears as a less learned and able critic, and being not so much under the criticism of the professional reader, is less dignified and sober in his style and treatment. In his interpretation of the character and final action of "Othello," he will find perhaps the most severe, though perhaps not the most intelligent opponents, in those who believe there is no question existing whether that state of mind is "healthy and normal or unhealthy and abnormal," which leads an individual to the commission of self-murder, and who always render, in the case of suicides, the stereotyped verdict, "committed when in a state of mental derangement."

The volume is a pleasingly attractive one, and will prove a valuable addition to Shakspearian literature.

[A notice of the Poems of Sarah E. Carmichael will be found on the 12th page.]

[For the Californian.]

TO AND FRO.

NUMBER ONE.

I AM in the employ of the house of B. C. & Co. I have been with them since '54, and as I have honestly tried to do my duty, I now sit on a higher stool than any of my associate clerks. This firm is not on Front street, neither does its business justify any one of the partners renting a house on Taylor street or making annual trips to Europe. It is not a wholesale concern, and yet its retail trade is steady and, in a certain way, lucrative. My employers are modest men, whose names are never seen on committees or complimentary benefit cards; they stick closely to their business; they are regularly patented as voters on the "Great Register;" and they attend church every Dominical day. If the occasion should arise which, Heaven forbid! when they would find it necessary to ask "accommodation of the Bank of California," the shrewd cashier—a fellow who seems to know all the contents of the "Hall of Records," and the extent of the collaterals of every impecunious loan solicitor—would certainly have to go to the directory to find the names of my employers. And he would require responsible signatures on the back of their paper.

Counting the errand boy, there are three of us in our store—two behind the counter, the other, seated on a high revolving stool, in a sort of pilot-house, whose days are passed in the mysteries of stock books and ledger—is myself. I am on very good terms with my co-employes; my situation and seniority, as well as being the confidence man of the partners, accredit me with an influence which loses nothing, I can say it with a pardonable pride, taken in connection with my personal character. I am in the receipt of a moderate salary, on which I manage to support my family and to pay a small sum for the tuition of my eldest boy. Yet I am sometimes, particularly when the foot of the surgeon is heard in my little hall, pushed to saddest alternatives to make my mouthy stipend cover ordinary and extraordinary expenses. Before my last boy was born, my wife Betty and I had a little margin from which we sometimes had a frolic—say a picnic, and again we could be seen on extraordinary nights enjoying a back seat at the Opera House—crying over Colleen Bawn or hysterical with laughing at the Bull in a China Shop. I enjoy a good play, I love music too, and amiable as I am I cannot at times but feel a grudge at that aforesaid boy that he didn't delay his coming some few years later, at least until Forrest is out of the way. I shall always remind him, when he is older, of his inopportune advent, and of the hundred little disappointments he has caused Betty and me. But as I have good reason to anticipate an increase of salary on my next birthday, I may yet forgive baby—we call him baby yet, although he will be seven next September—all these annoyances. My employers instead of keeping their clerks beyond hours, frequently, when business will permit it, send us off by turns before the usual time of closing. They honestly act on the good principle of creating and fostering with their clerks an attachment to their interests and persons; and while they require on our part steadiness, punctuality, and alacrity, they, at the same time, by kindness and by honest inquiries and inquisition into our welfare, excite and keep warm with each of us not only zeal in business matters, but an honest affection for them individually.

I thought it but fair to give this little history of myself by way of prologue; that is, some account of my circumstances of life, so that I will seem not entirely a stranger to my reader.

A day or two before the Fourth I held a family council at which the single question was discussed, whether we should remain in town to see the procession, or take stage, boat or car and have a rural feast in some place where trees can be found. As at councils of war, the junior was called upon first for his vote—a small, plump, big-headed youngster; one of those slow but sure fellows who rarely exhibit an impulse; reflective for his years, and at times philosophical even. He was in favor of the country, stating at the same time he didn't believe the procession would be such a great thing, as he heard that the soldiers with the bare legs had gone to Sacramento. "I think it will be jolly," said he, "to lie under the big trees and roll on the grass—if there is any." These last words had an interrogative deflection, for, young as he is, he knows the summers in California are dry and arid, and that, instead of green verdure and flowers, we have a cracked and adobe soil; when the grass is seen in tufts—yellow and gone into hay. He turned and examined me as to physical characteristics of the country where I was going; and when I described the live oaks which grow about San Mateo and beyond, bearded with moss, and full of shining leaves; at this season of the year all hung with little balls; that sometimes, too, he could see the bright-eyed lizards warming themselves on the fallen trees or gliding among the fallen leaves; and if we stayed over night could see the glimmer of the glow-worm in the tufts of grass; and that we could get a horse and ride over the foot-hills of the Coast Range of mountains, and from there could gaze on the broad bay and watch the white-winged vessels glide along—when I told him of these things, he voted for the country—at the same time shying his straw hat within an inch of my new spectacles that Lawrence had extolled as not only excellent in quality but really becoming to me, giving me quite a noticeable air—"decidedly," said he, stammering a little, from modesty, I am sure, "decidedly like a professor—indeed, I may say with strong points of resemblance to that clever scholar, Dr. Wadsworth." Now, I am susceptible to flattery—rather, to such fair words as my optician had used—perhaps I may say quite feminine in this weakness. I cannot exactly say I would esteem a compliment sincere that meant to convey the idea that I am good looking; but when one ingenuously suggests that I have the mien of one of that respectable class of divines who deliver anniversary orations and such Christian addresses as I hear every Sunday, and whose lives are in such humble imitation of the "Son of Man," I am sure to be touched. I know no class of citizens who are so polite and truthful as shop-keepers. Let me add, lest any of my readers should expect here scholarly pretensions—Latin, Greek and Irish quotations—that I am one who is compelled to labor hard at the store, except on holidays of admitted universality, or the half days B. C. & Co. sometimes give me, and that it is not until I get home and the children have been tucked away in cradle and crib, I can give any time to books. My library is not extensive: it contains not above twenty volumes; and yet, as my and Betty's intellectual wants go beyond our literary possessions, we are compelled to go to Boyd's Circulating Library, where, for a small consideration, we get the last new novel—a year old. I cannot afford the luxury of the Mercantile Library, in view of the fact of coming taxation to build and support the new edifice proposed; and, besides, I am not a merchant. It is true I saw that Lawyer Barnes was elected President—defeating a genuine descendant of a signer of the Declaration of Independence, and a merchant withal; and then I wondered, and Betty wondered, too, at the incongruity of an attorney being the head of a mercantile library. This town is full of eccentricities and oddities, and I suppose I must accept these things as singular only because I am a quiet man, and all unused to the ways of the world.

The elder of my two boys is far beyond his brother in educational acquirements—indeed, I might with propriety say that he is in advance of myself. In statistics of population, staples, names of capitals of States, height of mountains and length of rivers, and in his Latin studies, why, bless me! he can pose his less fortunate parent. When I was a boy, there were no Nivinses, over whose epitaph pundits quarreled and grew wroth; no Peltons and learned Educational Boards; no Knowltons who educated muscle with brain; no such school houses as this city erects in every district; no Sunday schools, where young and pretty misses taught the catechism and the twelve commandments, and who read to us the tale of the luckless, lucky Joseph with just enough vibration of tone and moisture of the eye to give piquancy and authenticity to the narrative. Ah! with all these advantages—with red lips, and peach blossoms on the cheek, black orbs with moistened lashes, and youth, girl youth in its most splendid and endearing phase—no wonder the boys of to-day are brimful of knowledge; are so jaunty and beauish; so wise in all worldly ways, and so economical of papa's means. Let me, right here, while I am reminded of it, ask why it is one never sees, now-a-days, boys in jackets and neat turn-over collars? Is there a generation lost from this town? The question is appropriate and suggestive, and can be asked only in the United States—for elsewhere the parlor lies beyond the nursery, with school house and college between.

The elder boy is a strange and alarming contrast to his brother—impetuous, thoughtless, and quick-brained. With these qualities are the kindred ones of generosity and frankness. As I look along the future—away into the strange days which are coming to us—I feel much solicitude as to these two boys, so opposite in all their physical and intellectual qualities. Reverently and hopefully do I look up to the Power which lights both glowworm and star, and ask its blessing on both the hairns.

While my council swayed and was agitated with the importance of the matter before it, Betty kept silent—whether because she was indifferent where we spent the Fourth, or from the conscious power of the veto she alone exercised in the family congress, I cannot say. I only know that, as she sat in the corner of the chamber of our little home, darning a sock, and singing a sweet old air which seemed to come up from the past, half sadly, half merrily, she gave no sign of her interest in our discussion, and yet she must have seen how impatiently we watched for some expression of her preference. I was too wise to press her on to speech. I have been taught patience by rubs and disappointments, and while I am naturally impulsive, yet twelve years on one counting room stool, and immeasurable goings backwards and forwards over ledger and stock books, have taught me calmness. But soon Betty ceased her self-lullaby, and dropped her darned sock. I knew then—the children, too, educated in all the habits of the maternal ways, through a rough discipline of boxings and spankings, knew—that the time had arrived for speech. "I," said she—her I is the most inclusive term in the world, comprehending me, the children, Biddy and the dog Joe—"will spend the Fourth at Menlo Park. We will go by the 5 o'clock train on Tuesday." Our family constitution provides for no action beyond her approval or veto but obedience. The children, and even I, the man by sacred authority set up as the head of the household, would just as soon have thought of protest or remonstrance as a Turk would dare to deny a firman, even though it was to bowstring him, and so the family accepted Betty's imperialism as irrevocable and unchangeable.

At 4:30 P. M., although the train was advertised to start at five o'clock, we reached the depot. Betty took charge of the two boys, while I perspired under the burden of a carpet-bag, a basket of cold meats and homemade gingerbread, and a big blanket shawl. Betty is an excellent woman. She is and has been a true and good wife to me; but, somehow, when she starts on these semi-annual excursions, she does all the dignity of the family establishment—I am the useful member, the work-horse of the concern—the fellow who has to carry all the packages. And it is I who have to get up first in the morning, to bed last, up when the children cry, and at bed-time it is I who collect the few pieces of silver we have, hide them away; look under the beds, in the closets, and up the chimney for trespassers. I have been doing these things for so many years, and they have become so much a matter of habit, that, indeed, if Betty were less infirm than she is, and even willing to put these tasks on herself, I should not be satisfied with it. Besides, I have begun to believe that it is I alone who can save the silver from jeopardy, and, if any other hands than my own attempted to put them away, I verily believe it would cost me the night's sleep. No, I shall pursue these habitual ways until— Well, well, I am not appalled as I see at the end of the road the mattock and the bier.

This reminds me of Accidental Life Insurances, which I think capital post obits for the benefit of widows and orphans in view of the not infrequent accidents and risks peculiar to our American life. When one remembers that our people are most fertile in expedients for breaking necks, conservative folks—those who are foolish and peculiar enough to desire a peaceful going out in a natural way—had better avoid travelling by railroad; or, if this impossible, let them take out a life policy in an Accidental Insurance Company. As the train started, I felt an irresistible impulse to get out and find my friend A. D. Smith and have my life insured for at least one thousand dollars. This I thought would be a nice little sum for Betty to start life with anew in the event of my being thrown down a fifty-feet embankment or dashed with the velocity of an eight-inch shell through a car window. I have a strangely neglectful way in too frequently putting off matters of a personal or household nature; and half of my domestic infelicities arise from Betty's scoldings on the occasion of any such default. I tell her—at least I have told her—that I have graver thoughts to occupy me than in remembering that the coffee-pot is to go to the tin-shop, or that the glazier must be sent for to put in a pane of glass. This and lectures on my extravagance are the only true sources of my sometimes depression of mind. Sometimes I stop at the fruit-stands and get strawberries when perhaps they are forty cents per pound; and then again on my way home from the store—for with me sentiment has the floor oftener than prudence—I pause at the basket of an itinerant bouquiste and invest two dimes in a gleaming parcel of rosebuds. Once I had the temerity—it was on the anniversary of our wedding day, and I was going along thinking of the time when, years ago, Betty laid her hand in mine, her blue eyes placid with her quiet trust and love; her head adorned with a wreath of rosebuds, for we were too poor for orange blossoms—I say with all these dear memories in my head, the dearer as I grow older—I met a flower-girl who, under the influence of some acute perception of my thoughts, thrust before me a half-blown camelia, framed in violets. They looked my thoughts, the very shape and purity they would assume if they could take form and expression; and so, without thinking that the very money I had in my pocket was to pay the butcher's bill, I bought the bouquet, and when I reached home I laid it on Betty's bosom while I kissed her with humid eyes.

Five o'clock came; there was a cry of "All on board!" then a puff, and we moved slowly away. KUZZ'LBASH.

CURIOUS ORIENTAL CUSTOMS.—There are many traits of character and custom in which the Arabs and Turks are our antipodes. They shave the head, but not the chin, and we the reverse. With us the uncovering of the head in the presence of another is a mark of respect; with them a mark of disrespect. When they go into a place of worship, they keep on the hat and take off the shoes and slippers; we do the opposite. They mount on the right side of a horse, and we on the left. They write from right to left, and we from left to right. We show our good breeding by taking the outside when we pass persons on the street; they by passing nearest to the wall. They do the honors of the table by serving themselves first; we serve ourselves last. If a friend inquires after your wife, you regard it as a compliment; to inquire after theirs is an insult. Their morning dress is white; ours black. They finish their wooden houses from the top downward; and we from the foundation up. The men wear frocks and the women pantaloons. We wash the hands by dipping them in water; they by having water poured upon them.—Bausman's Siani and Zion.

UNITED STATES STAMP DUTIES.

As Amended March 3, 1865.

CAREFULLY REVISED AND CORRECTED FOR THE CALIFORNIAN.

PENALTIES.

Penalty for making, signing, or issuing any instrument, document, or paper of any kind whatsoever, without the same being duly stamped, for denoting the duty hereby imposed thereon, $50; and the instrument shall be deemed invalid and of no effect; or for counterfeiting stamps or dies, $1,000, and imprisonment to hard labor not exceeding five years. For making, signing, issuing, accepting, or paying any bill of exchange, draft, order, or note without stamp, $200. For selling proprietary cosmetics, matches, photographs, etc., without proper stamps, $10. For removing stamps on these articles, $50.

STAMP DUTIES.

Agreement Contract or Appraisement, not otherwise specified, each sheet or piece of paper..$0	05
Assignment of Mortgage, Lease, or Policy of Insurance, same as original instrument. Assignment of Patent Right	05
Bank Checks, Drafts or orders, exceeding $10, at sight or on demand	02
Bills of Exchange, (inland,) or draft otherwise than at sight or on demand, or promissory note except bank notes for circulation,) or any memorandum, check or receipt, or any evidence of an amount of money payable on demand or at a designated time, for a sum not exceeding $100	05
Every additional $100, or fractional part	05
Bill of Exchange, (foreign,) or letter of credit, drawn in, but payable out of the U. S., if drawn singly, the same rates as inland bills of exchange, or promissory notes.
If drawn in sets of three or more, for each bill of the set, where the sum shall not exceed $100 or its equivalent in any foreign currency in which such bill may be expressed, according to the standard value fixed by U. S.	02
Every additional $100, or fractional part	02
Bill of Lading, or receipt for any merchandise or effects, to be exported to a foreign port or place	10
Bill of Sale, conveying any ship or vessel, or any part thereof, where the considerationdoes not exceed $500	50
For every additional $500, or fractional part thereof	50
Bill of Sale of personal property other than ships or vessels	05
Bond, indemnifying any person for the payment of money, where the amount recoverable is $1,000 or less	50
For every additional $1,000, or fractional part thereof	50
Bond for the due performance of the duties of any office	1 00
Bond of any other description, except such as may be required in legal proceedings, or used in connection with mortgage deeds, and not otherwise charged in this schedule	25
Charter-Party, ship, vessel or steamer, not over 150 tons, $1; 150 to 300 tons, $3; 300 to 600 tons, $5; over 600 tons	10 00
Certificate of Profits, or any memorandum showing an interest in property, or accumulations of any incorporated company, for a sum not less than $10 nor exceeding $50	10
Exceeding $50 and not $1,000	25
For every additional $1,000 or fractional part	25
Certificate of Damage, and all other certificates or documents issued by Port Wardens or Marine Surveyors, or other persons acting as such	25
Certificate of Deposit, not exceeding the sum of $100, 2 cents; exceeding $100	05
Certificate of stock in any incorporated comp'y,	25
Certificates, other than specified	05
Contract, broker's note or memorandum of sale of goods, stocks, bonds, exchange notes of hand, real estate, or other description of property, issued by any person acting as a broker, for each note or memorandum of sale	10
Deed or Conveyance of Real Estate, value not over $500, 50c.; every additional $500, or fractional part thereof	50
Entry of Goods at any custom-house, value not over $100, 25c.; over $100 and not over $500, 50c.; over $500	1 00
For the withdrawal of goods from bonded warehouse	50
Gauger's Returns, quarterly, for quantity not over 500 galls. gross, 10c.; over 500 galls. gr.	25
Insurance (Marine, Inland and Fire) policy or renewal, premium not over $10, 10c.; $10 to $50, 25c.; over $50, 50c.; Life policy, under $1,000, 25c.; $1,000 to $5,000, 50c; over $5,000	1 00
Lease of lands or tenements, rent not over $300 per annum, 50c.; each add'l $200 or fractiou.	50
Manifest, cargo to foreign port, registered tonnage not over 300 tons, $1; over 300 and not over 600, $3; over 600 tons	5 00
Measurer's Returns, for quantity not over 1,000 bushels, 10c.; over 1,000 bushels	25
Mortgage, Trust deed, or personal bond for payment of money, $100 to $500, 50c.; each additional $500	50
Each assignment of mortgage, lease or policy of insurance, or renewal of the same, is subject to same duties as the original.
Medicines or Preparations, Perfumery and Cosmetics—Every package, box, bottle, etc., retailing for 25c. or less	01
Each additional 25c. or fractional part thereof, up to $1, 1c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof, over $1	02
Playing Cards—Each pack, price not over 18c., 2c.; from 18 to 25c., 4c.; 25 to 50c., 10c.; 50c. to $1, 15c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof	05
Photographs, Ambrotypes, Daguerreotypes or Sun Pictures, upon each, retailing for 25c. or less, 2c.; over 25 and not over 50c., 5c.; over 50c. and not over $1, 3c.; each additional $1 or fractional part thereof	05
Passage Ticket to foreign port, cost not over $35, 50c.; over $35 and not over $50, $1; every additional $50 or fractional part thereof	1 00
Power of Attorney to sell or transfer stock, scrip, bonds, or collect dividends or int. thereon	25
To vote for officers of incorporated comp'y or society not religious, charitable or literary, or public cemeteries	10
To receive or collect rents	25
To sell, convey, rent or lease real estate	1 00
For any other purpose	50
Probate of Will, or letters of administration, estate not over $2,000, $1; each additional $1,000 or fractional part thereof	50
Protest of note, bill, acceptance, check or draft,	25
Promissory Note—See Bill of Exchange, inland.
Receipt for payment of money or debt over $20, not being for satisfaction of mortgage, judgment or decree of Court, and receipt for the delivery of property	02
Warehouse, for property stored, not over $500 in value, 10c.; $500 to $1,000, 20c.; every additional $1,000	10
For any goods held in storage, and not otherwise provided for	25
Weigher's Returns, up to 5,000 lbs., 10c.; over 5,000 lbs	25
Writs, or original process, for commencing suit in Court of record, and in Court not of record, when amount claimed is $100 or over, except before Justices of the Peace, or in court of no greater jurisdiction as to damages, or in suit commenced by the United States or any State	50
Upon every confession of judgment, or cognovit, for $100 or over, except where tax for a writ has been paid	50
Writs or process on appeal from Justice's courts and other courts of inferior jurisdiction to courts of record	50
Warrant of distress—rent claimed under $100, 25c.; over $100	50

BRITISH PERIODICALS,

The London Quarterly Review (Conservative.)
The Edinburgh Review (Whig.)
The Westminster Review (Radical.)
The North British Review (Free Church.)
Blackwood's Edinburgh Magazine (Tory.)

The interest of these Periodicals to American readers is rather increased than diminished by the articles they contain on our late Civil War, and though sometimes tinged with prejudice, they may still, considering their great ability, and the different stand-points from which they are written, be read and studied with advantage by the people of this country, of every creed and party.

TERMS FOR 1866.

For any one of the Reviews, per annum	$4
For any two of the Reviews, per annum	7
For any three of the Reviews, per annum	10
For all four of the Reviews, per annum	12
For Blackwood's Magazine, per annum	4
For Blackwood and one Review, per annum	7
Blackwood and any two of the Reviews, per an.	10
Blackwood and three of the Reviews, per annum.	13
Blackwood and the four Reviews, per annum	15

CLUBS.

A discount of twenty per cent. will be allowed to clubs of four or more persons. Thus, four copies of Blackwood, or of one Review, will be sent to one address for $12 80. Four copies of the four Reviews and Blackwood, for $48, and so on.

POSTAGE.

When sent by mail, the Postage to any part of the Union will be but Twenty-four Cents a year for Blackwood, and but Eight Cents a year for each of the Reviews

REDUCED PRICES FOR PREVIOUS YEARS.

Subscribers may obtain the Reprints immediately preceding 1866, as follows, viz:

Blackwood from September, 1864, to December, 1865, inclusive, at the rate of $2 50 a year.

The North British from January, 1865, to December, 1865, inclusive; the Edinburgh and the Westminster from April, 1864, to December, 1865, inclusive, and the London Quarterly for the year 1865, at the rate of $1 50 a year for each or any Review.

A few copies yet remain of all the Four Reviews for 1863 at $4 a set, or $1 50 for any one.

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., Publishers,
38 Walker street, New York.

TYLER BROTHERS,

NO. 632 WASHINGTON STREET,

AND 691 MARKET STREET, - - - - CORNER THIRD,

SAN FRANCISCO,

IMPORTERS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN

SCHOOL BOOKS,

STATIONERY,

PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,

BLANK BOOKS,

PORTFOLIOS,

JUVENILE BOOKS,

FANCY ARTICLES,

CHILDRENS' PICTURE BOOKS, Etc.

Especial attention given to

LADIES' STATIONERY,

Which we stamp with

INITIALS,

In COLORS or PLAIN.

WEDDING AND VISITING CARDS

ENGRAVED, WRITTEN, OR PRINTED.

je23

BOWMAN & CO.,
Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware.
mar24 6m Main street, Petaluma.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S

Through Line to New York.

CARRYING THE U. S. MAIL!

Leave Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.

On the 16th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.

On the 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.

When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 19th connects with French Transatlantic company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamer for Southampton, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America.

Departure of 30th connects with English steamer for Tumaco, the port of the new mines.

STEAMERS FOR JULY:

The following steamships will be despatched from San Francisco on the date given:

JULY 19th, - - - - GOLDEN AGE,
(Connecting with the NEW YORK, Captain Bradbury.)
Captain W. F. Lapidge,

JULY 30th, - - - - CONSTITUTION,
Captain E. S. Farnsworth,
(Connecting with the ARIZONA, Captain Maury.)

An experienced Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

Cabin Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Messrs. Wells, Fargo & Co.

The steamer will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

RING'S

VEGETABLE AMBROSIA

IS THE MIRACLE OF THE AGE!

Gray-headed People have their locks restored by it to the dark, lustrous, silken tresses of youth, and are happy!

Young People, with light, faded or red Hair, have these unfashionable colors changed to a beautiful auburn, and rejoice!

People whose heads are covered with Dandruff and Humors, use it, and have clean coats and clear and healthy scalps!

Bald-Headed Veterans have their remaining locks tightened, and the bare spots covered with a luxuriant growth of Hair, and dance for joy!

Young Gentlemen use it because it is richly perfumed!

Young Ladies use it because it keeps their Hair in place!

Everybody must and will use it, because it is the cleanest and best article in the market!

For Sale by Druggists generally.

For sale, wholesale and retail, by

JOHN F. SNOW,
Sole Agent for the Pacific Coast, 24 Post street,
je23 San Francisco.

THE PACIFIC

INSURANCE COMPANY,

HAVING ADDED

MARINE INSURANCE

TO THEIR BUSINESS, ARE NOW PREPARED TO ISSUE POLICIES ON

Marine, Inland Navigation, and Fire Risks,

ON THE MOST FAVORABLE TERMS.

Office, 436 California street.

J. HUNT, President
A. J. RALSTON, Secretary. my5 3m

OCCIDENTAL

HOMESTEAD

Association,

OFFICE, - - - 305 MONTGOMERY STREET.

CAPITAL STOCK, $33,000.

102 SHARES.....$330 EACH.

This Association was formed to enable its members to obtain desirable homestead lots in this city at a cheap and easy rate, paying for the same by regular monthly instalments.

For this purpose they have purchased Blocks 499, 500, and 501, in the Western Addition to this city, bounded by Devisadero, Pine, Broderick and Clay streets.

Subscribers will pay an initiation fee of $5 on each share taken, to form a fund for defraying current expenses, and $11 per month for thirty months, commencing in April, 1866.

The property is within three blocks of the

TURK STREET RAILROAD,

IS NEARLY ALL ON THE GRADE,

and is most desirably located for Homestead purposes.

It is directly east from the lands of the California Association.

The property has been purchased on very reasonable terms, and offers a rare opportunity for investment.

A number of fine houses are in process of erection, and streets are being graded near this property, which will greatly increase its value.

When twelve monthly payments have been made, the property will be divided among the members in the usual manner, and each shareholder will receive a contract for a deed to the lot or lots to which he may be entitled, and have the privilege of taking immediate possession of the same.

The lots average 27 feet in front by 120 feet in depth. The whole amount due upon any lot may be paid at any time, and discount at the rate of one and one-half per cent. per month will be deducted therefrom.

Persons wishing to visit the lands of this Association will take the Turk street cars to Devisadero street, and thence go northerly along Devisadero to Pine street.

Twenty thousand dollars of the capital stock is taken, and the books are open for subscription to the balance at the office of the Secretary, where the Official Map of the Association can be seen, and full particulars obtained.

The Title to this Property is Perfect.

J. S. LUTY, Secretary,
Office, 305 Montgomery street, corner of Pine,
my19-3m Rooms 2 and 6.

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17
Have received a Large Stock of GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING
—AND—
FURNISHING GOODS,
Which they are selling
AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.
ja1 624 Clay street, San Francisco.

PACIFIC OCEAN HOUSE,

SANTA CRUZ, CAL.

THIS NEW AND COMMODIOUS HOTEL, built and furnished in accordance with the most modern and improved plans, and with a view to the comfort and convenience of its patrons, is now open for the reception of guests.

To those who have visited Santa Cruz, it is unnecessary to speak of its beauties and its natural advantages over all other places of Summer Resort.

To those who have not, the Proprietor can only say COME AND JUDGE FOR YOURSELVES—giving all who may come the assurance that his earnest endeavors shall be to make the Hotel, in all its appointments, equal to the surroundings of this delightful Sea side Resort.

GEO. T. BROMLEY,
Santa Cruz, April 4, 1866. Proprietor.

MARKET STREET RAILROAD

CHANGE OF TIME TABLE.

ON AND AFTER AUGUST 1, 1865, Trains will start from the City and the Mission every hour instead of every forty minutes, as heretofore.

Trains from the City will start at the odd hour, commencing at 6:30 A. M. and every hour thereafter until 11.30 P. M.

mh25 F. McCOPPIN, Superintendent

OCCIDENTAL
INSURANCE COMPANY,

S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

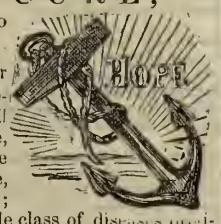
THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

CHRISTOPHER CHRISTIANSEN, President.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary. mh25-tf

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.



The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York. my25

AYER'S AGUE CURE,

FOR THE SPEEDY AND Certain Cure of Intermittent Fever or Chills and Fever, Remittent Fever, Chill Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical Headache or Bilious Headache, and Bilious Fevers; indeed, for the whole class of diseases originating in biliary derangement, caused by the malaria of miasmatic countries.

This remedy has rarely failed to cure the severest cases of Chills and Fever, and it has this great advantage over other Ague medicines, that it subdues the complaint without injury to the patient. It contains no quinine or other deleterious substance, nor does it produce quinism or any injurious effect whatever. Shaking brothers of the army and the West, try it and you will endorse these assertions.

Prepared by J. C. AYER & CO, Lowell, Mass., and sold by

CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco,
my26 2m and all Dealers.

OPPOSITION STEAMER-DAY,

SATURDAY, JULY 14, 1866.

GREAT REDUCTION IN RATES,
VIA NICARAGUA!

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN TRANSIT COMPANY will despatch the favorite Steamship

AMERICA,

ON SATURDAY, - - JULY 14TH,

From Mission street Wharf, at 10 o'clock, A. M., precisely

Connecting at GREYTOWN with the splendid Steamship

SANTIAGO,

2,500 TONS, FOR NEW YORK.

☞ For Passage and Freight, and Insurance on Treasure, at greatly REDUCED RATES, apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,
Up stairs, San Francisco.

THE ONLY LIVING ASTROLOGER,

PROF. COHEN,

530 California street, San Francisco,

THROUGH HIS NATURAL GIFT, can give correct information on the Past, Present and Future, on any subject that may be required so as to avoid trouble. As evidence of his reputation, he has received over 18,000 consultations during his residence of six years in San Francisco! Consultation fee, $2. By letter, $3. Letter box, 104. It is not necessary to give the age. Office, 530 California street. Hours from 8 A. M. to 11 P. M. mar15 3m

COME AND SEE ME!

DR. JOHN HEALD,
DENTIST,

HAS REMOVED TO THE
CORNER KEARNY AND CALIFORNIA STS,

Where he will be pleased to see all old friends, and plenty of new ones. Every variety of Dental Operations performed in the best manner, and at prices that shall suit all persons. ☞ENTRANCE ON CALIFORNIA SREET.
ap28 3m

TO FARMERS, MINERS, LABORERS

And all those wishing to secure themselves a portion of THE MOST VALUABLE AGRICULTURAL AND MINERAL LANDS OF MEXICO,

With an equal interest in the Profits of the Plantations of

THE MEXICAN SEA ISLAND COTTON COMPANY.

HOMES FOR THE POOR AND COMPETENCY FOR ALL.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The Mexican Sea Island Cotton Company, having reserved from their final Subscription List a Limited Number of Unassessable Shares, (the remaining shares of the Company having been taken up by the stockholders,) hereby offer the same for sale at the original subscription price of Sixteen Dollars each, payable in cash. Every holder of a share will be entitled to a portion of the Company's lands, having the privilege to settle thereon and participate in all the advantages and profits of the enterprise, and special privileges granted to this Company by an Imperial Decree of Maximilian, dated 9th January, 1866, without being subjected to the conditions of regular Government emigrants, this Company settling upon their own lands, secured by private purchase, and held under indisputable Spanish titles.

Shareholders becoming actual settlers will also have the privilege of any employment upon the Company's plantation. Portions of land will be allotted to settlers, to be held by them until a final division makes it their property.

For the purpose of increasing the value of the Company's land, and to create all the comforts of a home and society, it is the intention of the company to form a regular settlement and to lay out a town adjoining their present plantation into building lots, which will likewise be fairly divided between the 8,000 shares which comprise the total number of the company.

A large number of shareholders will settle upon the company's lands after the rainy season in October next. Many of them may then be employed by the company, or by others able to plant for themselves, or in developing the mineral resources of the adjoining mountains, etc., etc.

Men of all trades and professions, desiring to emigrate to Mexico, will have great advantages as shareholders of this company. They will find the lands already purchased for them at a rate equivalent to a free gift, to be held by each shareholder as his property, protected by the best Spanish titles, and the good will of all political parties now contending for the reins of government; the climate the most salubrious, and the land rich and fertile beyond description; every kind of game abounding; the rivers full of fish and with extensive beds of large oysters; altogether, a country where it is easy to procure a livelihood and the comforts of a home with less labor and less capital than in any other part of the world.

The extensive placer diggings, veins of silver, and solid quartz ledges, which are to be found in the immediate vicinity, and acknowledged to be rich and very extensive, can, by the presence of a number of settlers, be profitably developed. Many of these mines are to be found within the limits of the company's grant. The Sierra Madre or Mother Mountain of Mexico, situated only within about twenty miles from the coast, can be reached and developed with much greater facility than the more remote mines in the interior, and will therefore make the company's lands the most desirable to locate upon.

For Maps and Survey, and further information, apply at the office of the MEXICAN SEA ISLAND COTTON CO., Betge's Book Store, Russ House, Montgomery street, between the hours of 11 and 1 o'clock.

☞ All the assessable stock having been taken up by mutual subscription of stockholders, the company will have no more shares to offer after the limited number of unassessable shares have been placed, and shall prefer to sell these to actual settlers—a single share of which will be sufficient to entitle them to a large portion of the lands.

WE, THE UNDERSIGNED shareholders in the Mexican Sea Island Cotton Company, having investigated and satisfied ourselves of the importance of the enterprise, recommend the same to the public. We are convinced that under the management of the present officers of the company, with their efforts to induce industrious parties to locate upon the land, that the enterprise must become very profitable to all parties interested, and most beneficial to actual settlers.

S. R. Kettlewell, Blacksmith, 264 First street.
W. C. Mead & Son, 224 Sansome street.
M. O'Neil, Proprietor New Branch Hotel, 12 Sutter street.
Winall & Clapp, 505 Market street.
R. A. S. Repiton, M. D., 816 Montgomery street.
Wm. Rudolph, Gunsmith, 216 Pacific street.
G. Burkhardt, Jeweller, No. 209 Pacific street.
E. Keil, East India Tea Co., 631 Washington-st.
P. D. O'Regan, People's Bakery, corner Fourth and Jessie streets.
Wm. Meyer, Provision Dealer, 258 Third street.
John Dulf, Painter and Paper Hanger, 642 Clay street.
A. E. Mylott, Importer and Dealer in Cigars and Tobacco, 305 Battery street
M. M. Baldwin, Jeweller, 433 Montgomery-st.
S. Baysen, Hatter, No. 346 Kearny street.
Mathew McCloskey, 644 Howard street.

San Francisco, March 20th, 1866. mar24

MR. AND MRS. COGILL
AND SONS,

Teachers of Dancing,

CONGRESS HALL,

On Bush-st., adjoinin Russ House.

SCHOOL—MONDAYS AND WEDNESDAYS. Ladies at 2 P. M. Gentlemen and Ladies at 7 1-2 P. M. Soirees every Friday Evening. Hall to rent. my5 3m

AMERICAN HOTEL,
Main street. - - - Petaluma.
mar24 6m EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors.

SPRING AND SUMMER STYLE

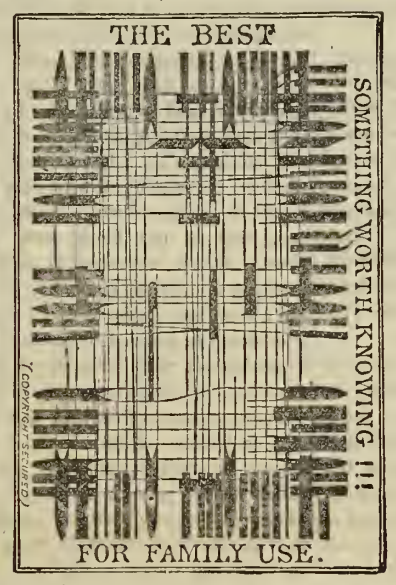
SILK  HAT,

1866,

INTRODUCED - - - - - - - MARCH 3

BY

McGANN & CO.,
FASHIONABLE HATTERS,
No. 654 Washington street,
Two doors below Kearny.



SPRING AND SUMMER STYLES.—Silk, Felt, Beaver, and other HATS for sale at the lowest prices.

CAPS of every description, suitable for all ages, made to order.

McGANN & CO., being experienced and skilled in all the branches of the manufacture of Hats, feel confident of giving entire satisfaction to their patrons. Every description of Hats and Caps made to order.

Remember, McGANN & CO., Practical Hatters. 654 Washington street, two doors below the Plaza.

☞ New Goods by every steamer. mar10

To decipher, lower the top of the paper to an angle of forty-five degrees; then close one eye, and read at your ease.

THE NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE INSURANCE CO

OF LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

ESTABLISHED, 1809.

Capital, - - - - - -	$10,000,000
Accumulated Funds, March 6, 1865, - -	11,522,500
Annual Income, - - - -	2,827,290
Deposit in California under State law, -	$75,000

GENERAL AGENCY FOR THE PACIFIC STATES AND TERRITORIES,
Cor. Sansome and California streets, San Francisco

Insurances effected at the lowest rates on buildings of both Brick and Wood, throughout the State, whether occupied as Stores, Dwellings, or Warehouses, together with their contents.

Also, VESSELS in port, with or without their Cargoes.

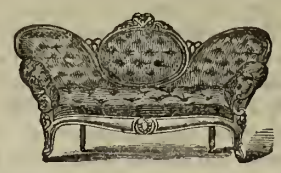
Also, QUARTZ MILLS and MACHINERY.

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN immediately on adjustment.

WM. H. TILLINGHAST, Agent.
my19

CALIFORNIA Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.....	CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS.	CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA....	CAPT. W. BROMLEY.
" JULIA.....	CAPT. E. CONCKLIN.



One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.

Steamships PACIFIC, ORIZABA, CALIFORNIA, ACTIVE, and SENATOR, leave as advertised, for Portland, Oregon, New Westminster, British Columbia, Victoria, (V. I.,) Santa Barbara, San Pedro, and San Diego.

Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.

mar23 B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

FURNITURE AND BEDDING!

LARGEST STOCK!

LATEST STYLES!

The Best Workmanship,

AND

LOWEST PRICES!

AT

Goodwin & Co.'s

FURNITURE WARE-ROOMS,

Nos. 508, 510, 518 and 528 Washington-st.

ja16 SAN FRANCISCO.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,
IMPORTERS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS
IN FINE CLOTHING,
AND
Gent's Furnishing Goods,
TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,
Nos. 200 and 202 Montgomery street,
Corner of Bush, - - San Francisco.

JOS. WINTERBURN & CO.

J. WINTERBURN, V. A. TORRAS, W. HOFFSCHNEIDER.
(Successors to W. P. Harrison.)

Printers and Electrotypers,

413 TO 417 CLAY ST., (Below Sansome,)
SAN FRANCISCO.

ALL KINDS OF JOB PRINTING
Neatly and Promptly Executed.

ELECTROTYPING
Done at the shortest notice.

Stamps of all kinds made to order.

Printing in Spanish, French, German and Italian Languages, executed with correctness.

A "Mammoth" and two No. 3 Hand Presses FOR SALE very cheap. my3-3m

SMOKE THE PATENT RUSSIAN CIGARETTES,

MANUFACTURED BY

GIBB & STAHL,
S.W. COR. KEARNY AND SACRAMENTO STREETS,
SAN FRANCISCO.

☞ For sale at all Cigar Stores. ap28 3m

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,

No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,
SAN FRANCISCO.

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Meta Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship Work of all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.

All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.

Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.

JOHN P. GALLAGHER,
JOSEPH H. WEED.
je10 3m

MONEY TO LOAN!

MONEY TO LOAN

On City Real Estate, Dwellings, Factories, Shipping and Merchandise, for such time as may be agreed for. Deposits received in small or large sums, at interest, by the CALIFORNIA BUILDING, LOAN AND SAVINGS BANK,

53 California street, (one door from Sansome street.)
my THOMAS MOONEY, President

DRESDEN CHINA.

THE time spent by the tourist in Germany in an excursion to the little town of Meissen is time well spent. Not only is there to be seen along the Elbe from Dresden the finest scenery north of the Alps—the "Saxon Switzerland," it is called—but there is also at Meissen itself the highest development of the potter's art outside of the Orient, perhaps in the world, the manufactory of the famous Dresden china.

At an early hour in the morning one takes a boat at Dresden, a queer, narrow, sharp affair, such as ply in these swift, crooked streams, and in two hours reaches his destination. The boats on the Elbe are like our American canal-boats, only much longer and modelled after a pike instead of a perch. They shoot through the water at an amazing rate. As in so many other instances, here also the Germans entirely reverse the American methods, and unlade and receive passengers and freight aft instead of forward, landing with the bow out in the stream.

We are reminded here, as on all German rivers, that James Watt was an Englishman, and that England has dominion over steam as well as over water. Hear the words of command which the captain sends down through the speaking-trumpet to the engineer: "Vorwarts," "Stoppe," "Backwarts," "Halte." These are the stock forms of command, two of them German and two of them unmistakably English, learned from English engineers sent here to teach the use of the engine years ago, and handed down by constant use almost unchanged.

We meet and overtake scores of long scows heavily loaded with timber and produce, tediously propelled by poles, with the aid of occasional flurries of wind. One huge vessel ascending the stream is pulled by a rope attached to its mainmast, seventy-five feet above the water, and reaching eight hundred feet up stream. Ten men are tugging at it, each leaning heavily against a wide band that passes over one shoulder and under the other, keeping time together in a lazy swing back and forth, supporting themselves by a stick held in both hands. Put an ass in their place with a crabbed curmudgeon for a driver, and we should have looked on the scow for Horace going to Brundusium. The spectacle is a common one.

The buildings in which the famous porcelain is made are situated in a narrow, deep valley, a hundred rods from the Elbe, and are built in the form of a quadrangle, and finely stuccoed. You register your name not far beneath that of George B. McClellan, and pay thirty cents admission fee, which procures you a guide who speaks indifferent English.

The porcelain earth is found in mines near Meissen, and is called kaolin. It is of dingy white color, and contains seventy-five per cent of sand, which has all to be washed out. The earth is mixed with water and passes through numerous vats, sieves, and troughs in which the sand is precipitated, the water containing the pure earth in solution being drained off, and the earth settling to the bottom. It is then packed in small sacks and slightly pressed until it hardens somewhat, when the sacks are removed and the lumps thrown into large boxes, where they must remain six months. It is then ready to be mixed with the other ingredients. These are a pure quality of quartz from Bohemia and feldspar from Norway, which are ground many times under water to reduce them to perfect fineness. Ask the guide in what proportions these are mixed with the earth, he gives his shoulders the peculiar German shrug, and solemnly informs you that it is a profound secret. It is the only secret in the whole process. When the doughty mass is ready to be moulded, it is singularly tough, and is of a light dun color, which disappears entirely under a white heat.

Most solid articles, such as busts, crucifixes, animals, shrubs and leaves are cast in ordinary moulds of plaster of Paris. The minuteness of the division of the pieces is very great; for instance, to cast a statue, each arm, hand, leg, foot, and the head must be a separate casting. There are moulds accumulated in the buildings to the weight of thousands of tons. Round dishes are turned on an ordinary wheel; all other articles are moulded by hand. Lace and filigree work is made by girls, and is formed drop by drop from a pointed stick, each drop being no larger than half a pin-head. The articles are baked in pans of fire-clay, in huge ovens three stories in height. In the first baking, they are set in the second and third stories, which are brought only to a red heat; afterwards in the lower one, where the heat is white. Every baking lasts twenty-four hours. After the first baking, all the parts of the vessels that are to be blue or green are painted with preparations of cobalt and chrome green respectively. They are then dipped in the glazing, which is a thin solution of feldspar, quartz, lime, and old china ground fine. So porous is the material that in two seconds after it is out of the liquid it is dry, though a sufficient deposit has been left to conceal all the painting, which only reappears after the second baking. Those portions of "biscuit china" which are unglazed are covered, when dipped in the liquid, with a paint which prevents the glazing from adhering, but remains colorless.

After the second baking all those vessels that are simple in their decorations and require few colors, receive their finishing coats, and are baked a third and last time. Others, more elegant and more complicated, are baked a fourth, fifth, and even sixth time, not to harden the vessel still more, but to melt the paints and allow the artist to give it additional finishing touches. All the paints are made of metals dissolved in their respective chemical solvents, and applied with ordinary fine brushes. The yellow, for instance, is produced by gold which is twenty-four carats fine, made of ducats, and dissolved in the sulphate of iron. The heat of the furnace is so intense as to melt all these metals and give them a lustre, except gold and silver, which come forth dull as they entered, and are polished with agates. If the article has escaped cracking by heat, it is now finished and ready for market.

The loss from cracking is very great. Three-fifths of all the vessels are spoiled in the baking, many of them splitting in the fifth and sixth heating, after a vast amount of labor has been expended on them. This adds much to the cost of porcelain. Every piece shrinks one-fifth in heating, and yet remains of the same weight throughout. All the laborers work by the piece, so that whatever is broken after the first heating they receive no pay for unless it is broken in heating.

There are over four hundred workmen employed in the establishment, among whom are a large number of girls and women. Great steadiness of nerve and accuracy of sight are required, quite incompatible with drinking habits. In every department except that where the glazing is conducted, the workmen are not exposed to injurious vapors, and consequently have good health and look fresh. At least one-fifth of them have impaired their eyes; though they do no work after night, they are obliged to use shades or glasses. The greatest quietness prevails throughout, amid perfect cheerfulness and apparent contentment. Every workman is allowed a whole window, to which he sits very close, and you will not notice a window whether belonging to man or woman, that is not filled with pot-plants or climbing vines. Every workman is first drilled three years in exercises of drawing, moulding, and a general study of forms and colors, then passes through an apprenticeship of six years, after which he proceeds by gradual promotion from the lowest to the highest grade in his department. Promotions are not made from one department to another, each one giving his exclusive attention from first to last either to painting, moulding, or baking. Even the best artists get no more than seventy-five thalers per month (about the same number of dollars in our present currency.) There are painters here whose talent is manifestly of a high order. Passing through their rooms we see the walls hung with classical engravings, and scattered about are portfolios of the same, from Italy, from France, from all parts of Germany, ancient and modern, and after the greatest masters, such as Raphael, Guido, Durer, Holbein, Cranach, etc. Debate with them about the proper form of Nereids, the length of Neptune's trident, the breadth of Achilles' beard, or the folds of Tully's toga, and they may put us to confusion. Their workmanship, too, bespeaks a skill of no mean sort; as every one knows who has seen the exquisite portraits and the delicate, almost gossamer, tracery of the Dresden china.

There are now in preparation, and have been for months, several magnificent vases and some representations of ancient mythology and Grecian history for the approaching World's Fair at Paris. One beautiful vase, on which one of the best artists had labored five months, perfecting a series of portraits representing a triumphal march of Alexander the Great, was broken by the heat. With indefatigable perseverance he has begun another and brought it within two perilous months of completion. In the most favorable conditions the length of time required to complete the finest work is very great. First, the clay lies in lumps, "fermenting" six months; then a fine vase will require seven weeks in which to be moulded, to which add four months for baking and painting. The Nation.

SWINBURNE.—The Springfield Republican says: We get from Mr. M. D. Conway, who seems to have found his true field of labor in a literary life in England—writing of American things in British magazines and journals, and of English literature and litteratcurs for American journals, with lecturing some, and preaching in independent British Unitarian pulpits occasionally—this sketch of the new British poet: "It was enough to see Swinburne's face—especially with his cheek and eye kindled—and I shall never forget it. A small, young, even boyish man; with handsome, regular features and smooth skin; with eyes that glitter; with thin flexible lips, whose coldness is in strange contrast to the passionate intensity of his eyes; with a great deal of reddish hair that surrounds his face like a halo—he seemed to me like some wild bird of rare and beautiful plumage which has alighted in our uncongenial climate, and who is likely to die before it is acclimatized. No one who has ever looked upon Algernon Swinburne's face would ever doubt but that he is a man of genius. As to the poet, his vices no less than his splendors attest the fact that he is the latest inheritor in England of that high laureateship of genius which only the gods can bestow."

POEMS BY SARAH E. CARMICHAEL.

WE learn by the title-page that this charming little sheaf of poems claims the kind indulgence that belongs to a volume intended only for private circulation. But it deserves a broader and more public approbation than is modestly asked. To say that it is clever for the locality is but cheap praise; it is creditable to an older and higher civilization than that in which the lot of the fair authoress is cast. Like her California sisters in song, Miss Carmichael is not dependent for inspiration upon an uninspiring and material climate and society; her verse is mostly introspective and retrospective in character. When local scenery becomes her theme, she clothes it with an imagery and suggestion which, while it lacks the simplicity and naturalness that belong to immediate inspiration, has all the grace and dignity of experience and innate refinement. This is by no means a peculiarity of Miss Carmichael; it is the attribute of the best verse written on this side of the continent. The following poem, of which we have omitted the introduction, is a fair example of the poetic insight and felicity of expression which distinguishes her genius, and is the best allegorical fancy of the origin of gold that we have ever met:

The Fallen looked ton the world and sneered;
"I guess," he mutered, "why God is feared;
For eyes of mortals are fain to shun
The midnight heaven, that hath no sun.
I will stand on the height of the hills and wait
Where the day goes out at the western gate,
And reaching up to its crown will tear
From its plumes of glory the brightest there;
With the stolen ray I will light the sod,
And turn the eyes of the world from God."

He stood on the height when the sun went down—
He tore one plume from the day's bright crown;
The proud orb stooped till he touched its brow,
And the marks of that touch are on it now,
And the flush of its anger forever more
Burns red when it passes the western door!
The broken feather above him whirled,
In flames of torture around him curled,
And he dashed it down from the snowy height
In broken masses of quivering light.

Ah! more than terrible was the shock
Where the burning splinters struck wave and rock;
The green earth shuddered, and shrank, and paled,
The wave sprang up and the mountain quailed.
Look on the hills—let the scars they bear
Measure the pain of that hour's despair.

The Fallen watched while the whirlwind fanned
The pulsing splinters that ploughed the sand;
Sullen he watched, while the hissing waves
Bore them away to the ocean caves;
Sullen he watched while the shining rills
Throbbed through the hearts of the rocky hills;
Loudly he laughed: "Is the world not mine?
Proudly the links of its chain shall shine;
Lighted with gems shall its dungeons be;
But the pride of its beauty shall kneel to me!"
That splintered light in the earth grew cold,
And the diction of mortals hath called it 'GOLD!'"

The volume is prettily gotten up by Towne & Bacon, somewhat in the style of Whittier's Snow-Bound.

A NEW AND GRAND EPOCH IN MEDICINE.—Dr. Maggiel is the founder of a new medical system. The quantitarians, whose vast internal doses enfeeble the stomach and paralyze the bowels, must give precedence to the man who restores health and appetite with from one or two of his extraordinary pills, and cures the most virulent sores with a box or so of his wonderful and all-healing salve. These two great specifics of the Doctor are fast superseding all the stereotyped nostrums of the day. Extraordinary cures by Maggiel's Pills and salve have opened the eyes of the public to the inefficiency of the so-called remedies of others, and upon which people have so long blindly depended. Maggiel's Pills are not of the class that are swallowed by the dozen, and of which every boxfull taken creates an absolute necessity for another. One or two of Maggiel's Pills suffice to place the bowels in perfect order, tone the stomach, create an appetite, and render the spirits light and buoyant. There is no griping, and no reaction in the form of constipation. If the liver is affected, its functions are restored, and if the nervous system is feeble it is invigorated. This last quality makes the medicines very desirable for the wants of delicate females. Ulcerous and eruptive diseases are literally extinguished by the disinfectant power of Maggiel's salve. In fact, it is here announced that Maggiel's Bilious, Dyspeptic and Diarrhea Pills cure where all others fail. While, for Burns, Scalds, Chilblains, Cuts and all abrasions of the skin, Maggiel's Salve is infallible. Sold by J. MAGGIEL, No. 11 Pine street, New York, and all Druggists, at 25 cents per box. R. H. McDonald & Co., Agents for Pacific coast, corner Sansome and Pine streets, San Francisco. c14

TROUBLE WITH TURKEY.—A serious embroglio in our relations with the Divan has arisen, as follows: Sarkis Minasian, who has for many years acted as the resident agent in Turkey for the sale of Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co.'s medicines, driven by the increase of his business to a necessity for more room, built his warehouse in Constantinople several stories higher, after having obtained the necessary permit from the authorities. The Imams of a neighboring mosque, which overlooked the premises, demanded a large present in money, which was refused. They then applied to the Grand Vizier for the enforcement of an obsolete law, which had been disregarded two hundred years, requiring him to take down the building to eighteen feet, which was granted, and they commenced the work of demolition. Minasian then applied to the American Minister, who notified the Sublime Porte that American property could not be thus trifled with, and that the demolition must cease. Then commenced the usual course of Mussulman prevarication and promises, but no real redress. Finally, Minister Morris informed them that if their depredations continued, he should order the U. S. ships of war to enter the Bosphorus and Messrs. Ayers' medical warehouse would not be alone roofless. A stroke of his pen could have laid the whole city under the sweep of American cannon, backed by men who are not schooled in the lessons of fear. This brought them to their senses and speedy redress. Minasian has now arrived in this country, to present the case to our State Department for indemnity. At length it is something to say among the peoples of the earth, "I am an American citizen!"

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.

A toilet delight. Superior to any cologne. used to bathe the face and person, to render the skin soft and fresh, to allay inflammation, to perfume clothing, for headache, etc. It is manufactured from the rich Southern Magnolia, and is obtaining a patronage quite unprecedented. It is a favorite with actresses and opera singers. It is sold by all dealers, at $1.00 in large bottles, and by DEMAS BARNES & Co., New York, Wholesale Agents.

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.—The prettiest thing, the "sweetest thing," and the most of it for the least money. It overcomes the odor of perspiration; softens and adds delicacy to the skin; is a delightful perfume; allays headache and inflammation, and is a necessary companion in the sick room, in the nursery and upon the toilet sideboard. It can be obtained everywhere at one dollar per bottle.

LYON'S MAGNETIC INSECT POWDER is instant death to Fleas, Ticks, Roaches, and everything of the insect species. It is one of the few articles that can be relied upon, and for a mere wo hits we can save the bites and bills of these little pests. None is genuine unless signed by E. Lyon, and bearing the private stamp of Demas Barnes & Co., New York.

S—T—1860—X. DRAKE'S PLANTATION BITTERS.

They purify, strengthen and invigorate.
They create a healthy appetite.
They are an antidote to change of water and diet.
They strengthen the system and enliven the mind.
They prevent miasmatic and intermittent fevers.
They purify the breath and acidity of the stomach.
They cure Dyspepsia and Constipation.
They cure Liver Complaint and Nervous Headache.

They are the best Bitters in the world. They make the weak strong, and are exhausted nature's great restorer. They are made of pure St. Croix Rum, the celebrated Calisaya Bark, roots and herbs, and are taken with the pleasure of a beverage, without regard to age or time of day. Particularly recommended to delicate persons requiring a gentle stimulant. Sold by all Grocers, Druggists, Hotels and Saloons. Only genuine when Cork is covered by our private U. S. Stamp. Beware of counterfeits and refilled bottles.

P. H. DRAKE & CO., New York.

"In lifting the kettle from the fire I scalded myself very severely—one hand almost to a crisp. The torture was unbearable. * * * The Mexican Mustang Liniment relieved the pain almost immediately. It healed rapidly, and left very little scar.

"CHAS. FOSTER, 420 Broad street, Philada."

This is merely a sample of what the Mustang Liniment will do. It is invaluable in all cases of wounds, swellings, sprains, cuts, bruises, spavins etc., either upon man or beast.

Beware of counterfeits. None is genuine unless wrapped in fine steel-plate engravings, bearing the signature of G. W. Westbrook, Chemist, and the private stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., New York.

ALL WHO VALUE A BEAUTIFUL HEAD OF HAIR, and its preservation from premature baldness and turning gray, will not fail to use Lyon's Celebrated KATHAIRON. It makes the hair rich, soft, and glossy, eradicates dandruff, and causes the hair to grow with luxuriant beauty. It is sold everywhere. E. THOMAS LYON, Chemist, N. Y.

LYON'S EXTRACT OF PURE JAMAICA GINGER, for Indigestion. Nausea, Heartburn, Sick Headache, Cholera Morbus, &c., where a warming, genial stimulant is required Its careful preparation and entire purity make it a cheap and reliable article for culinary purposes. Sold everywhere, at 50 cents per bottle. ap7-1y

NO FORFEITING.—Heretofore, if a person holding a Life Policy became unfortunate, and could not raise the sum of money required to pay his next premium, his policy was declared forfeited. The BROOKLYN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK has decided to make EVERY POLICY it issues NON-FORFEITABLE, giving a PAID-UP POLICY to the party if unable to continue his payments of premiums. The dividends of the Brooklyn Life Insurance Company are settled annually in cash. This plan is far more acceptable to insurers than at the end of three or five years, as in other companies. The Brooklyn Life Insurance Company allows thirty days grace in the payment of premiums. Its policies are incontestable, and its losses are promptly paid. The Brooklyn Life Insurance Company offers every known plan of Life and Endowment Insurance. Get a pamphlet at the office, 240 Montgomery street, southeast corner of Pine, from Stephen T. King, General Manager, or David B. Arrowsmith, Local Agent.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

E GOLDSMITH & Co., at No. 646 Sacramento street, three doors below Kearny, have just received some beautiful new style Garibaldis and Zouave Jackets, that for taste and style are particularly worthy of the attention of our lady readers. They have also a fine assortment of Ladies' Furnishing Goods of the choicest description. French corsets for one dollar. A great variety of French toilet and fancy articles, the newest styles of buttons and dress trimmings, may always be found at Goldsmith's 646 Sacramento street.

RHEUMATISM.

Throughout this coast a great deal of suffering is experienced from Rheumatism. Weeks and even months of protracted and aggravated misery is endured by the victims of medical inefficiency and ignorance, which could be cured just as speedily as was Mr. Sparrow, whose testimony is given below, and is only the echo of hundreds of other cases. Dr. Bourne cures without medicines, which accounts for his extraordinary success. No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street entrance:

SAN FRANCISCO, September 6, 1861.

Dr. Bourne: Last Winter I was nearly dead, by an attack of inflammatory rheumatism. I suffered the most excruciating pains for about five weeks, without any hope of relief, when a friend, hearing of my illness, called to see me, and assured me that if I would stop "drugging and dosing," and go to you, that you would have me walking about the streets in three days. Sure enough, although I was utterly helpless, and conveyed to your house in a carriage, and carried into it by three stout men, and was by them lifted into the bath, yet, on coming out of the bath I was able to largely assist myself, doing much toward dressing, and without assistance walked from the bath to the carriage. On the fourth day, I discharged my carriage and walked with a friend's aid the entire distance to your house (nearly a mile) and home again, and so on until cured; and I had not taken more than twelve baths when, all pain and swelling having ceased, I felt myself a well man. And now I am happy to do this little service of publicly certifying to the simple truth, leaving it to do its own work among such of my friends and acquaintances as may chance to see this. Your friend, JOSEPH SPARROW.

DAINTY WORK.—About the daintiest work we ever saw were specimens of hair jewelry at the establishment of Mrs. C. Cook, 645 Clay street, between Montgomery and Kearny streets, yesterday. This lady manufactures all sorts of jewelry—watch-chains, earrings, finger rings, breastpins, and various other kinds of ornaments—from human hair. We witnessed the process of manufacture, and it is intricate and ingenious in the highest degree.—S. F. Examiner

A SUMMER AND WINTER MEDICINE.

"Great oaks from little acorns grow."

The worst diseases known to the human race spring from causes so small as to almost defy detection. The volumes of scientific lore that fill the tables and shelves of the medical fraternity only go to prove and elaborate these facts.

Then guard yourselves while you may. The smallest pimple on the skin is a tell-tale and indicator of disease. It may fade and die away from the surface of the body, but it will reach the vitals, perhaps, at last, and death be the result and final close. Maggiel's Bilious, Dyspeptic and Diarrhœa Pills cure where all others fail. While for Burns, Scalds, Chilblains, Cuts, and all abrasions of the skin, Maggiel's Salve is infallible. Sold by J. Maggiel, 43 Fulton street, New York, and all Druggists, at 25 cents per box.

WANTED—Agents to sell, by subscription only the most popular work ever written: "GRANT AND SHERMAN; their Campaigns and Generals." By the world-renowned historian, Hon. J. T. Headley, author of Washington and his Generals, Sacred Mountains, etc. Agents are taking as high as thirty subscribers per day, and all agree in pronouncing it the most saleable work they ever took hold of. The people want Headley's illustrated "GRANT AND SHERMAN," etc. For terms and territory, address E. E. SHEAR, No. 8 Montgomery Street, and Box 1,430, San Francisco, California

FRAGRANT SOZODONT FOR THE TEETH

READ the Testimony of a few of the many Eminent Clergymen and their Families of New York city, who, having used the Sozodont for a long time past, are convinced of its excellent and invaluable qualities, and give it their cordial commendation:

Rev. THOMAS DEWITT, Pastor Collegiate Ref. Dutch Church, Lafayette Place.
Rev. J. W. ALEXANDER, D. D., Presbyterian Church, Fifth Avenue.
Rev. J. B. WAKELEY, M. E. City Missionary.
Rev. W. F. MORGAN, D. D., Rector St. Thomas Church, Broadway.
Rev. E. H. CHAPIN. D. D., Pastor Fourth Universalist Church, Broadway.
Rev. SAMUEL COOKE, D.D., Rector St. Bartholomew's Church, Lafayette Place.
Rev. SAMUEL OSGOOD, D.D., Pastor Church of Messiah, Broadway.
Rev. B. M. ADAMS, M. E. Church, Duane street.
Rev. HEMAN BANGS, late Pastor Centenary M. E. Church, Brooklyn.
Rev. W. S. MIKELS, Pastor Baptist Church, Sixteenth street.
Rev. GEO. POTTS, D.D., Pastor Presbyterian Church, University Place.
Rev. E. E. RANKIN, Pastor Presbyterian Church Forty-second street.
Rev. T. E. VERMILYE, D. D., Pastor of Co Dutch Reformed, Lafayette Place.

FROM G. F. J. COLBURN, DOCTOR DENTAL SURGERY, NEWARK, N. J.

The Popular Dentrifice known as Van Buskirk's "SOZODONT," besides being a very pleasant addition to the toilet, contains ingredients that, if used according to the directions, will prove of the greatest utility to the health of the mouth and teeth.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS!

Sold by all Druggists and Perfumers.

HALL & RUCKEL,
NEW YORK.
je2 4m

HALL'S SARSAPARILLA,
YELLOW DOCK AND IODIDE POTASS,
THE
Best Blood Purifier Known.

Persons that are troubled with Rheumatism, Scrofula, Neuralgia, Morbid Liver, Salt Rheum, Pimples, Boils, or any of the many diseases that originate from Impure Blood, would find it much to their advantage to give this justly celebrated article a trial. One or two bottles are quite sufficient to convince the most skeptical of its merits. It contains neither Spirit, ARSENIC nor MERCURY which cannot be truly said of any other preparation called "Sarsaparilla."

SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,
ap7-3m N. W. cor. Sansome and Commercial streets

FARRAND'S OSCILLATING
Amalgamator.

THIS UNRIVALLED IMPROVEMENT FOR THE REduction and amalgamation of Gold and Silver Ores, is now running daily at No. 206 Commercial street, between Front and Davis.

THIS AMALGAMATOR INVOLVES
NO COMPLICATED MACHINERY
And possesses the following advantages over all others now in use:

1st. It is capable of doing double the amount of work of the ordinary Pans, at a saving of more than one-half the power.

2d. It reduces the pulp finer, thereby producing a better result.

3d. It requires less quicksilver by one-half at a charge, whilst the loss by trituration is comparatively nothing.

4th. As an Amalgamator for gold contained in sulphurets, as also for very fine or flour gold, it has no equal.

5th. This Amalgamator involves no complicated machinery, and is less liable to get out of order than any of the pans.

DESCRIPTION OF FARRAND'S AMALGAMATOR.

In offering this Amalgamator to the public the inventor does not claim any new or scientific method of extracting the precious metals from the ores; he merely claims a new and simple combination of mechanical principles, whereby a great saving of power (full one-half in amount) is effected. The capacity of the machine varies with its size. The smallest, or prospecting size, will reduce 400 lbs. in three hours, and can be easily worked by the power of one man. The largest size will work 1,500 lbs in three hours, or six tons in 24 hours, with an application of a trifle more than one-horse power. This saving of power, as all mill-men are aware, is an important consideration particularly where fuel is scarce. The power so saved in running the Amalgamators may be advantageously employed to an increase of stamps, and thus proportionally increasing the work of the mill. This machine consists of a semi-cylindrical, trough-shaped vessel, in the interior of which is furnished with moveable concave dies, to be replaced when worn out, as in ordinary pans. The mullers are convex, and attached to a substantial rock shaft, by which they are moved back and forward by crank or eccentric motion. The mullers are held to their places by springs of moderate strength, the pressure of which may be easily regulated. The oscillating motion of the mullers serves to keep the pulp in a constant state of agitation, thoroughly mixing it, and passing it under the mullers without resort to any of the various expedients employed in Pans where a circular motion is maintained.

The peculiar construction of this superior machine admits of its being worked with a much smaller charge of quicksilver, to any given amount of pulp than the flat-bottomed Pans. The spiral springs greatly assist in the work of reduction, by allowing the free admission of the pulp between the mullers and dies, so that the pulp is made to actually work upon itself—as the dust of the diamond is made to reduce the gem itself.

Trials made with this machine in the presence of experts, during the last six months, have been pronounced highly satisfactory. It is peculiarly well adapted to employment by small mining operators in distant localities, as it can readily be taken to pieces and packed upon mules.

A large size machine is constructed without dies or mullers, but simply with arms to act as stirrers, to be used in connection with several of the Amalgamators as a "Separator," as it is found that the peculiar motion given to these arms, in connection with the concave shape of the body of the machine, renders it most effectual for such a purpose.

W. D. FARRAND

BREWSTER & CO.'S
Carriage Manufactory,
372 Broome steel, New York.

We desire to announce to our California friends that we have made extensive arrangements by increasing our works for the coming season, and with a view to

SUPPLYING THE
WANTS OF CALIFORNIA,

will manufacture a style of work particularly adapted to city and country use, and in view of the destructive effects of city railroads on all light work, will give

CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, PHAETONS, COUPES, and Vehicles of every description, of our own manufacture, on hand and made to order.

Orders or communications should be addressed to
BREWSTER & CO.,
Of Broome street,

The firm of Brewster & Baldwin not being in any way connected with
BREWSTER & CO.,
Of No. 372, Broome street,

COMMERCIAL EDUCATION.

Pacific Business College,
751 MARKET STREET,
(BETWEEN THIRD AND FOURTH,)
SAN FRANCISCO.

An Institution designed to prepare Young and Middle aged men for an active and successful BUSINESS LIFE.

This is the largest, most complete, and thorough Institution of the kind on the coast, and

THE ONLY

Commercial College which is conducted on Actual Business Principles. Its great system of Business Training is endorsed by the Most Eminent Financiers and Business Men of the Nation.

REGULAR BANKS AND BUSINESS OFFICES have been introduced, by which we are enabled to fit our Students in the best possible manner, and shortest possible time, for active Business Life.

Those in pursuit of a

PRACTICAL BUSINESS EDUCATION

should examine the merits of this College. Send for the COLLEGE REVIEW, giving full particulars of the College, besides containing other important and interesting matter. Sent free to all desiring it.

Further particulars can be had by calling at the College, or addressing M. K. LAUDENSLAGER, President fe17 Business College, San Francisco.

RATES OF POSTAGE.

Valuable letters may be registered on application at the office of mailing, and the payment of 20 cents registration fee.

Transient newspapers, periodicals, blanks, proof-sheets, book manuscripts, pamphlets, and all mailable printed matter, except circulars and books, 2 cents for each and every 4 ounces. Double these rates are charged for books.

Seeds, cuttings, roots, etc., 2 cents for each 4 ounces or less quantity.

All packages of mail matter not charged with letter postage must be so arranged that the same can be conveniently examined by Postmasters; if not, letter postage will be charged.

Unsealed circulars, to one address, not exceeding three in number, 2 cents, and in the same proportion for a greater number.

No package will be forwarded by mail which weighs over 4 pounds.

All postage matter, for delivery within the United States, must be prepaid by stamps (except duly certified letters of soldiers and sailors;) otherwise, double the above rates will be charged on delivery.

Weekly newspapers (one copy only) sent to actual subscribers within the county where printed and published, free.

Letters to Canada and other British North American Provinces, when not over 3,000 miles, 10 cents for each ½ ounce. When over 3,000 miles, 15 cents. Prepayment optional.

Letters to Great Britain or Ireland, 24 cents. Prepayment optional.

THE

AWARDED THE HIGHEST PREMIUM

AT THE

State Fair of California,

The only Fair on the Pacific coast at which any two double-thread Machines were exhibited in competition in 1865.

If there is a FLORENCE SEWING Machine within one thousand miles of this office that is not working well, it will be attended to if I am informed of it, without expense to the owner. SAMUEL HILL,

General Agent,

111 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

THE

FLORENCE

SEWING MACHINE

RECEIVED THE FIRST PREMIUM, A GOLD MEDAL, at the Great Exhibition of the AMERICAN INSTUTE, - - - New York, 1865.

my10-3m

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS

CREATE A HEALTHY APPETITE!

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa and Constipation.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Invigorate the System and enliven the mind.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Overcome the effects of Drunkenness and Late Hours.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure all Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Are Palatable to the Taste.

They are the
BEST BITTERS IN THE MARKET,

And when once used will always be called for again.

They are made in the most careful manner

From Pure Old Wheat Whisky, Medicated from

Roots and Herbs

Especially adapted for the cure of all Stomachic Diseases and Liver Complaints.

Try Them and You will be Satisfied.

For sale everywhere by Druggists and Liquor Dealers or by

N. B. JACOBS & CO.,
423 Front street,
my11-6m San Francisco

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL

Confectioners,

111 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter.

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double-refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge. my24-3m

J. PEIRCE,

FURNITURE AND

Bedding Warerooms.

NOS. 415, 417, AND 419 CALIFORNIA STREET, NEAR MONTGOMERY.

THIS STOCK OF FURNITURE, etc., was selected with great care, and special attention given to the wants of this market, ENTIRELY AT THE EAST. It is NOT COMPOSED OF REFUSE GOODS, ODDS AND ENDS OF OTHER HOUSES that have lately closed out here, but CONSISTS ENTIRELY OF NEW GOODS, made after the latest patterns and in the most durable manner.

The present Stock is fully TWICE as large as that of any other house here. Parties having any doubts of this, or that the assortment is not superior to any in the city, can easily satisfy themselves by calling.

The stock of Case Goods is larger than ever before.

J. PEIRCE,
Ware-rooms 415, 417 and 419 California street,
je16-3m SAN FRANCISCO.

B. F. STERETT, 533 Clay St., a few doors below Montgomery, continues to print all kinds of Books, Bills, Circulars, Cards, etc. in superior style, and at reasonable prices.

T. RODGERS JOHNSON,

ODD FELLOWS' HALL, 329 Montgomery street,
je30 3m San Francisco.

NATHANIEL GRAY,
UNDERTAKER,
CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,
641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB
Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.
je17-3m

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,

PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,

517 CLAY STREET,

Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,

SAN FRANCISCO.

SCHOOL FURNITURE.

RANKIN'S PATENT SCHOOL DESK;
Liquid Slating for Blackboard;
ARITHMETICAL FRAME;
Babbitonian System of Writing—the Best System know

W. HOLT,
de9 305 Montgomery street, Room No 2.

TRY LE COUNT'S INK.

CORNER OF

Sacramento and Montgomery streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

Post Office Address: Lock Box No 1477. je30 3m

THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD.

DR. MAGGIEL'S

Pills and Salve.

These Life-giving remedies are now, for the first time, given publicly to the world. For over a quarter of a century of private practice the ingredients in these

LIFE-GIVING PILLS!

Have been used with the greatest success. Their mission is not only to prevent disease, but to cure. They search out the various maladies by which the patient is suffering, and re-invigorate the failing system. To the aged and infirm a few doses of these valuable PILLS will prove to be

A VERY FOUNTAIN OF YOUTH,

For in every case they add new life and vitality, and restore the waning energies to their pristine state. To the young and middle-aged, they will prove most invaluable, as a ready, specific, and sterling medicine. Here is a dream realized, that Ponce-de-Leon sought for three hundred years ago, and never found. He looked for a fountain that would restore the old to vigor and make youth ever

AN ETERNAL SPRING!

It was left for this day and hour to realize the dream, and show in one glorious fact, the magic that made it fair.

THESE FAMOUS REMEDIES

Cannot stay the flight of years, but they can force back, and bold aloof, diseases that might triumph over the aged and the young. Let none hesitate then, but seize the favorable opportunity that offers. When taken as prescribed—

FOR BILLIOUS DISORDERS

Nothing can be more productive of cure than these Pills. Their almost magic influence is felt at once; and the usual concomitants of this most distressing disease are removed. These remedies are made from the purest

VEGETABLE COMPOUND.

They will not harm the most delicate female, and can be given with good effect in prescribed doses to the youngest babe.

FOR CUTANEOUS DISORDERS

And all eruptions of the skin, the SALVE is most invaluable. It does not heal externally alone, but penetrates with the most searching effects to the very root of the evil!

Dr. Maggiel's Pills

Invariably cure the following diseases:

Asthma,
Bowel Complaints,
Coughs,
Colds,
Chest Diseases,
Costiveness,
Dyspepsia,
Diarrhœa,
Dropsy,
Debility,
Female Complaints, Fever and Ague
Headache,
Indigestion,
Influenza,
Inflammation,
Inward Weakness,
Liver Complaint,
Lowness of Spirits,
Ringworm,
Rheumatism,
Salt Rheum,
Scalds,
Skin Diseases

NOTICE.—None genuine without the engraved trade-mark around each pot or box, signed by Dr. J. Maggiel, 43 Fulton st., New York, to counterfeit which is felony.

☞ Sold by all respectable Dealers in Medicines throughout the United States—at 25 cents per box or pot. ap14-1y

FRANKLIN PRINTING OFFICE,

509 CLAY STREET, (near Sansome,)

SAN FRANCISCO,

"The oldest and most complete Book and Job printing establishment in California. All descriptions of work neatly executed at low rates."

jal FRANK EASTMAN, Proprietor.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,

WHOLESALE

DRUGGISTS,

IMPORTERS OF

Drugs, Chemicals, Herbs,

PATENT MEDICINES,

PAINTS, VARNISHES,

ACIDS, DYE STUFFS,

OILS, PERFUMERIES,

TOILET ARTICLES,

BRUSHES.

We are just receiving, direct from Spain, a complete assortment of

CORKS! CORKS! CORKS

which we offer at lower prices than usual

DUSTING, PAINT, VARNISH, SHOE, SCRUB, HAIR AND TOOTH BRUSHES:

We have a splendid stock, which we offer at extremely low prices.

HERBS.

We have received, direct from the Shakers, all kinds of fresh Herbs, and intend to keep every article used of this description.

TILDEN'S SOLID AND FLUID EXTRACTS, PILLS, AND CONCENTRATED PREPARATIONS.

We have on hand, and shall keep a full assortment of the above celebrated preparations, which we offer to the trade at such prices as will defy competition.

FLAVORING EXTRACTS.

A great variety, not to be equalled in the market as to quality and price.

Parties about purchasing would do well to give us a call and examine prices and goods before purchasing elsewhere.

PLAIN AND GUM TEETH.

We have the largest assortment of any house on the Pacific coast.

GOLD FOIL.

We are manufacturing Foil which we can recommend to the profession as being a superior article. We also have on hand a full assortment, of all the various makers

VULCANIZERS,

DENTAL CHAIRS AND LATHES

FILES,

VULCANITE AND GUTTA PERCHA,

FORCEPS,

BURRS, DRILLS AND EXCAVATORS,

MIRRORS, ETC.

We have, besides the above, every article used by the Dentist, and are daily in receipt of all the new inventions in use.

Dentists will find it to their interest to call and examine our stock and prices before purchasing elsewhere.

R. H. McDonald & Co.,

CORNER SANSOME AND PINE STREETS,

SAN FRANCISCO.

AND

J STREET - - SACRAMENTO.

ap28-3m

DISTANCES FROM SAN FRANCISCO
To various points:

To Fort Point, 4 miles, by omnibus, four trips a day.
Lone Mountain, 3, street railway.
Seal Rock, 6, cars and omnibus, two trips a day.
Mission Dolores, street railways; Ocean House 8.
San Mateo, 20, railroad.
Crystal Springs, 23, railroad and stage
Half-Moon Bay, 29, do. do.
Redwood city, 30, do.
Mountain View, 38, do.
Santa Clara, 47, do.
San Jose, 50, do., or steamer and stage, 54.
Alviso, 46, steamer, daily.
Almaden mines, 67, steamer and stage; or by railroad and stage, 64.
Santa Cruz, 78, railroad and stage.
Oakland, 8, steamer and railroad, six trips a day.
Alameda, 11, steamer, three trips a day.
San Leandro, 15, steamer and railroad.
Mission San Jose, 34, steamer, railroad and stage.
Warm Springs, 37, do. do.
Benicia, 30, steamer leaves at 4 P. M. daily.
Sacramento, 117, do. do.
Stockton, 117, do. do.
Martinez, 33, do.
Pacheco, 38, steamer and stage.
Diablo Coal Mines, 44, steamer and stage.
Suisun, 50, steamer, or 54 by steamer and stage
Vallejo, 28; Mare Island, 37; Napa city, 50
White Sulphur Springs, 67, stage from Napa.
Geyser Springs, 118, do. do.
Sonoma, 52, steamer, tri-weekly.
Petaluma, 48, steamer, daily.
Healdsburg, 80, stage daily from Petaluma.
San Quentin, 12, steamer; Farallone Islands, 20.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,
1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, situated on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,
SAN FRANCISCO.

It was built expressly for a Hotel, with all the modern conveniences attached to it.
Gas and water are supplied throughout the House.
Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

LARGE READING ROOM

Attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge.

JOHN KELLY, Jr.,
Proprietor.
my6-3m

DO YOU WANT ANY Printing?

IF YOU DO, GO TO

411 CLAY STREET,

BETWEEN SANSOME AND BATTERY.

PRINTING OF EVERY DESCRIPTION DONE ON short notice and in the best style, by

M. D. CARR & CO.
je30-3m

DRY GOODS.

FOR CHOICE STYLES IN Dress Goods,
THE VERY BEST MAKES OF
IRISH LINEN,
And superior French and English
Calicos,
Go to
S. MOSGROVE,
222 Third st.,
Colton's Building.
je23

PISCO!

G. & F. MARTELL'S COGNAC;
JAMES HENNESSY'S Cognac;
STEAMBOAT GIN;
OLD TOM GIN;
IRISH WHISKY,
from Bond direct.

For sale by V. SQARZA,
my28 Lied street, San Francisco.

STOCKDALE HOUSE,
Corner Main and Oak streets, Petaluma.
mar24 6m H. STOCKDALE, Proprietor.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

TERMS—FIVE DOLLARS PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE

A PAPER FOR THE TIMES

DEVOTED TO LIVE TOPICS,

THE DISSEMINATION OF A PURE LITERATURE, DEVELOPMENT OF HOME TALENT,

AND THE

BEST INTERESTS OF CALIFORNIA

Published

EVERY SATURDAY MORNING

AT

532 MERCHANT STREET,

BY THE CALIFORNIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY.

A. A. STICKNEY, J. P. BOGARDUS, W. J. BINGHAM, C. H. WEBB

No effort will be spared to enable THE CALIFORNIAN to appeal to the Public for support, not only as the

BEST JOURNAL ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

But also as being

THE EQUAL OF ANY ON THIS CONTINENT

THE BEST TALENT OF THE STATE

Is employed upon THE CALIFORNIAN.

The voluntary notices bestowed by the press of the Eastern cities have been no less warm and congratulatory than those which we have received at the hands of our cotemporaries of the Pacific Their verdict is unanimously in favor of

THE CALIFORNIAN

and all join in pronouncing their unqualified approval of its unequalled merits.

Its reputation is now fully established. It is not

EXCELLED BY ANY LITERARY JOURNAL

on the Continent.

THE TERMS OF THE CALIFORNIAN are $5 per year, mailed to subscribers, invariably in advance; 50 cents per month served by carriers.

All communications and correspondence must be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN,

No 532 Merchan street,
SAN FRANCISCO.

FULL SETS

FROM THE COMMENCEMENT OF THE CALIFORNIAN

TO THE CLOSE OF VOL. IV.

Can be procured at the Office. Price, bound in muslin, per volume, $4. Two volumes bound together, $7. Unbound, per volume, $3.

CARRINGTON & CO'S
GENERAL PURCHASING AGENCY,
No. 40 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

IF YOU WANT
Books, Prints, Clothing, Instruments, Music, Tools, Weapons, Sporting Implements, Fancy Stock, Jewelry, Silver or Plated Ware. Wines, Cigars, Fine Groceries, Furniture; in short, any Article, large or small, singly or in quantity, for Ladies' or Gentlemen's use or wear, or for Dealers' Supplies, from a seal-ring to a steam engine—a Cameo or a Cashmere; lace or leather,
SEND ON YOUR ORDERS.
Orders may be given in French, Spanish or German.
COMMISSION CHARGE, - - - FIVE PER CENT.
Address:
CARRINGTON & CO.,
40 Broadway, N. Y.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.
MARY SMITH, Plaintiff,
vs.
WILLIAM SMITH, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to WILLIAM SMITH, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court, dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and that one-half of the Defendant's property, if he have any, be awarded to Plaintiff, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 27th day of June in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six.

Seal. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cts., cancelled.
WM. LOEWY, Clerk,
By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.

A. WILLIAMS, Plaintiff's Attorney,
535 Clay street.
jc30-3m

HEUSTON,
HASTINGS
& CO.

The Fashionable Clothiers

OF

SAN FRANCISCO,

Are now engaged in enlarging their already extensive European connections, and are offering the

LARGEST, FINEST, AND MOST COMPLETE

STOCK OF

CUSTOM-MADE CLOTHING,

GENTS' FURNISHING GOODS,

TRUNKS, BAGS, VALISES, ETC.,

ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

AT REDUCED PRICES.

je17-3m

A CARD.

M. Howard's Hair Restorative,
NO. 315 MONTGOMERY STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO.

THE ABOVE PREPARATION, which has been recently discovered and patented, is purely a Vegetable Extract

The undersigned are fully aware of the many unsatisfactory and useless preparations for restoring hair that have been introduced to the public, and how little confidence is to be placed in any pretensions to restoring the hair to bald heads, but,

HAVING TRIED MR. HOWARD'S PREPARATION,

we are able to state that it not only prevents the Hair from falling out, but absolutely reproduces it, and that we now have good suits of Hair growing where we were entirely bald. Therefore, as a matter of justice to Mr. Howard, and of consolation to bald heads, we tender him this testimonial Mr H. keeps the article for sale in bottles, with directions for its use, or applies it himself, as may be desired.

San Francisco, April 6, 1866.

Frank M. Thayer, R. A. Redman,
W. S Davis, J. O. Rountree,
T. A. Hall, G. W. Gamble,
A. C. Knox, J. W. Miller,
Bradbury Sanborn, E. C. McComb,
George Wells, D. C. Ross,
Joseph Wells,
jy7

ALLEN'S
LUNG BALSAM!

A CERTAIN CURE FOR
COUGHS, COLDS, INFLUENZA, NIGHT SWEATS, BRONCHITIS, SPITTING OF BLOOD, ASTHMA, WHOOPING COUGH, CONSUMPTION,
And all Diseases of the
CHEST AND LUNGS

This celebrated Cough Remedy effects a speedy cure by producing a free and easy expectoration, heals abscesses of the lungs, prevents unhealthy secretion of the bronchial tubes, and removes from them those accumulations of morbid matter which cause oppression of the breast, difficulty of breathing, etc, soothes irritation of the respiratory organs which produces cough.

PRICE.....ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE.
Sold by all Druggists.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
401 Battery corner of Clay,
ap27-3m San Francisco.

DR. HUMPHREYS'
Homœopathic Specifics

Have proved, from the most ample experience, an entire success—simple, prompt, efficient and reliable. They are the only Medicines perfectly adapted to popular use—so simple that mistakes cannot be made in using them; so harmless as to be free from danger, and so efficient as to be always reliable. They have received the highest commendation from all, and will always render satisfaction.

No. 1	cures Fevers, Congestion, Inflammations.	0 25
" 2	cures Worms, Worm Fever, Worm Colic,	25
" 3	cures Crying Colic, or Teething of infants	25
" 4	cures Diarrhœa of children or adults	25
" 5	cures Dysentery, Griping, Bilious Colic,	25
" 6	cures Cholera Morbus, Nausea, Vomiting,	25
" 7	cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis	25
" 8	cures Neuralgia, Toothache, Faceache.	25
" 9	cures Headaches, sick-Headache, Vertigo,	25
" 10	cures Dyspepsia, Billious Stomach	25
" 11	cures Suppressed, or Painful Periods	25
" 13	cures Croup, Cough, difficult Breathing,	25
" 14	cures Salt Rheum, Erysipelas Eruptious,	25
" 15	cures Rheumatism, Rheumatic Pains	25
" 16	cures Fever and Ague, Chill Fever, Agues	50
" 17	cures Piles, blind or bleeding	50
" 18	cures Opthalmia, and Sore or Weak Eyes,	50
" 19	cures Catarrh, acute or chronic, Influenza	50
" 20	cures Whooping-Cough, violent coughs.	50
" 21	cures Asthma, oppressed Breathing	50
" 22	cures Ear Discharges, impaired Hearing	50
" 23	cures Scrofula, Enlarged Glands, Swellings	50
" 24	cures General Debility, Physical Weakness	50
" 25	cures Dropsy, and scanty Secretions	50
" 26	cures Sea-Sickness, sickness from Riding,	50
" 27	cures Kidney Disease, Gravel	50
" 29	cures Sore Mouth, Canker	50
" 31	cures Painful Periods, even with Spasms	50
" 32	cures Sufferings at change of life	$1.00
" 33	cures Epilepsy, Spasms, St. Vitus' Dance.	1.00
" 34	cures Diphtheria, Ulcerated Sore Throat,	50

FAMILY CASES.

35 vials, morocco case, and book.....$10 00
28 vials, morocco case, and book..... 8 00
20 vials, morocco case, and book..... 6 00

These Remedies, by the case or single box, are sent to any part of the country, by Mail or Express, on receipt of the price.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
ap27-3m San Francisco.

A BEAUTIFUL COMPLEXION!

Secret of Beauty!

USE GEO. W. LAIRD'S

See that the name, GEO. W. LAIRD, is stamped ON THE BOTTLE. No other is Genuine.

BLOOM OF YOUTH,
OR
LIQUID PEARL!
The best article in the world for Preserving and Beautifying the Complexion and Skin.

This magnificent Toilet Article is prepared only by GEO. W. LAIRD, 74 Fulton street, New York, formerly 483 Broadway.

Sold by Druggists everywhere.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay
ap27-3m San Francisco

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE - - - - - - - - PROPRIETOR.
C. L. GRAVES - - - - - - - STAGE MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON - - - - - - TREASURER.

THIS AFTERNOON AND EVENING, JULY 14.

Miss Kate Denin,

SUPPORTED BY THE OPERA HOUSE COMPANY, will appear in

Who Killed Cock Robin?

Satanella.....Miss Kate Denin
Jack Raggett.....Harry Courtaine
Abel Tinkel.....Fred Franks
Hannah.....Mrs. Smitten

After which, the Operatic Extravaganza entitled POCAHONTAS!

Pocahontas.....Miss Denin
Captain John Smith.....Harry Courtaine
Powhattan.....H. D. Thompson
Mynheer Rolff.....Fred Franks
Wee-cha-en-daw.....Mrs. Judah

To conclude with the world-renowned Sphinx!

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Dress Circle and Orchestra, - - - - - - $1 00
Parquet, - - - - - - - - - - 50
Upper Circle, - - - - - - - - - - 25

METROPOLITAN THEATRE,

Montgomery street.

Bianchi's Grand Italian Opera Troupe.

THE GREAT ARTISTS,

GUISEPPE MANCUSI, Primo Baritone,

AND

STANISLAUS MILLERI,

Primo Basso Profundo,

Will make their debut on Tuesday evening next, in Verdi's great Opera, ERNANI!

Elvira.....Signorina Elvira Brambilla
Ernani.....Signor Eugenio Bianchi
Carlo Quinto.....Sr. Guiseppe Mancusi
Silva.....Sr. S. Milleri
Ricardo.....Sr. Cammani
Iago.....Mons. Rouconviero
Grand Chorus of Soldiers, Banditti, Masks, etc.

Full and select Orchestra. The whole under the direction of MR. RUDOLH HEROLD.

PRICES OF ADMISSION.

Dress Circle and Parquette.....$1 00
Reserved seats, 50 cents extra.
Gallery.....50

☞ The Box Office is open from 9 A. M. for the securing of reserved seats for season tickets.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

THOMAS MAGUIRE, - - - Sole Proprietor and Manager.
CHARLES TIBBETTS, - - - - - - Stage Manager.
J. B. MARSHALL, - - - - - - - - Treasurer.

SATURDAY EVENING.....JULY 14TH,

THIRD APPEARANCE OF

The Howson English and Italian Opera Troupe,

Wallace's English, Opera of

MARITANA.

Maritana.....Miss Emma Howson
Lazarillo.....Miss Clelia Howson
Don Cæsar De Bazan.....Mr. Henri Herberte
King Charles.....Mr. John Howson
Don Jose Santarum.....Mr. Frank Howson

Enlarged Chorus and Orchestra. New Scenery painted by Mr. A. Torning.

IN REHEARSAL:

First time in the United States of the English version of Gounod's great opera of

FAUST.

☞ Box Office now open. Seats may be secured for the week. Books of the Opera for sale at the Box Office.

Dress Circle and Orchestra.....$1 00
Reserved Seats.....50 cents extra
Family Circle.....50 cents
Gallery.....25 cents
Private Boxes.....$10 and $5

BEER AND WINE SALOON.

Faust Cellar.

Southeast corner of Clay and Montgomery streets.

A. L. THIELE.....Proprietor

WESTPHALIA HAMS, RUSSIAN CAVIAR, SARDINES, Anchovies, Swiss and Limburg Cheese, etc.; the finest Brands of Liquors, Wines, Cigars, and Seltzer Water, Wholesale and Retail.

☞ Fishing and Hunting Parties fitted out at the shortest notice.

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE

Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,

Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street, between California and Pine.

ja27-tf

THE CALIFORNIAN'S SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

AUCTIONEERS.

Olney & Co., removed to 418 Montgomery street.

BUSINESS AND PROPERTY AGENCY.

S. P. Whitman, 313 Montgomery st.

BATHS.

Dr. Bourne's, (Medical,) 10 Post, near Montgomery

BOWLING ALLEYS.

Wholers & Stell. Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.)

BOOKS.

A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.

Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street.
I. M. Weutworth & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine st.

COLLECTOR.

B. Pulverman, 614 Montgomery—Office hours, 1 to 3 P.M.

CLOTHING.

H. M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.

Dell, Cranna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.

COPPER CRUSHER AND SAMPLER.

S. W. Howland, 24 California street, (at Thomas' Mill)

DRESS TRIMMINGS, WORSTEDS, ETC.

Mrs. Norcross, 5 Montgomery street (Masonic Temple.)

DENTISTS.

Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Dr. A. N. Clark (late Knowles & Clark) removed to 410 Kearny.
Dr. Wm. B. McAllister, 221 Third street.
Whitcomb & Dyer, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.

Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.

Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.
Buyce & Reich, S W corner Jackson and Stockton.

DRUGGISTS.

R. H. McDonald & Co., (Wholesale) Sansome, cor. Pine.
Shepardson & Gates, (successors to R. Hall & Co.,) corner Sansome and Commercial.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.

Cal. Collegiate Institute, Miss M. Lammond, 68 Silver.
Miel Institute, Miss Florence James, 55 South Park.
Pacific Business College, 751 Market street, above Third.

FURNITURE.

Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
J. Peirce, 415, 417 and 419 California street.

GROCERS.

N. Boschen, corner Fifth and Minna.
Slosson & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
J. J. Miller, corner Sutter and Leavenworth.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market.
W. M. Noble & Co., cor Howard and Twelfth streets

HATTER.

Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street,

HOTELS.

Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sausome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.

INSURANCE.

Mutual Life Ins. Co., H. S. Homans, Agent, 609 Clay.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Ag'ts, 206 Front, cor Cal.
National Ins. Co., N.E. cor. Montgomery and California.
Occidental Ins. Co., S.W. cor. Montgom'y and California.
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.
Brooklyn Life, S T King, agent, S E cor Montg'y & Pine

RESTAURANTS.

Bivalve, Nolting & Speeen, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Eureka, C. H. Brickwedell & Co., Clay, near Montgom'y
Magnolia, 143 Third street.
Market, by Felix and Gustave Besson, 520 Merchant.
Philadelphia, Jacob Weiss, 308 Montgomery street.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Saulmann's, 506 Montgomery street.

SALOONS.

Russell & Holding's Exchange, 622 Market street
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N E. cor Third and Howard
Razzetti & Co.'s, 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
S Myers, 332 Montgomery street.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street.
Sun Burst, Carolin & McArdle, cor. Second and Market.
Coates & Henderson, 37 Sutter street.

SCALES.

Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scales 334 Montgomery street.

SEWING MACHINES.

Grover & Baker, R. ' . Brown, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento.

TOYS, ETC.

Feldbush & Co., 207 Montgomery street.
A. Kohler, 620 Washington street.

UPHOLSTERER.

T. McAllister, corner Sutter and Leavenworth.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.

Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.

Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

LIVERY AND SALE STABLE.

Philip Morshead, removed to Howard, near Fifth.

MAPS.

Pacific Map Depot, A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.

MERCHANT TAILORS.

J. H. Hammond removed to 328 Montgomery.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.

M. Gray, 613 Clay street.

PIANO SCHOOL.

Mr. Gustave A. Scott, at Miel Institute, 55 South Park.
W. S. Pierce, removed to 534 Market, opposite Second

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.

Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

NATURE UNVEILED,

AT THE

PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE

Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street, between California and Pine.

ja27-tf

DRY GOODS AT REDUCED PRICES!

Meagher, Taaffe & Co.

ARE OFFERING

AT RETAIL:

COTTONS—

6-4, 7-4, 8-4, 9-4, and 10-4 Super Cotton Sheetings;
New York Mills Bleeched Muslins;
Wamsutta Bleached Muslins;
White Rock Bleached Muslins;
Masonville Mills Bleached Muslins;
Lonsdale and Slater's Bleached Muslins;
Brown Cotton sheetings and shirtings;

All at Reduced Prices.

LINENS—

6-4, 7-4, 8-4, 9-4, 10-4, and 11-4 super Barmesty and Scotch Linen sheetings;
Pillow and shirting Linens, Diapers, Lawns;
Towels and Towelings of every description;
Napkins, Doylies, etc., etc.;
Barnsley and Scotch Table Damask;

☞ ALL AT REDUCED PRICES.

DRESS GOODS—

Poplins, Mohairs, Melange, Cashmeres, Barege de Laines, Empress Cloth, Prints, Lawns, Organdies, Alpacas, Linseys, Winseys, Black and Colored silks.

☞ ALL AT REDUCED PRICES.

SHAWLS—

India Cashmere Shawls;
French Cashmere shawls;
Paisley Cashmere shawls;
Broche and Plaid Wool shawls;
Black Embroidered Cashmere shawls;
Chantilly and Lama Lace shawls;
Cloaks, Basques, saques, Talmas;

☞ ALL AT REDUCED PRICES.

HOSIERY—

Ladies', Children's and Gentlemen's Hose and Half Hose, in Cotton, Merino and Lambs' Wool;
Children's and Gentlemen's Under-garments, in Merino, Silk and Lambs' Wool.

☞ ALL AT REDUCED PRICES.

FLANNELS—

Welsh, English, and American Flannels;

All at Reduced Prices.

LACE AND MUSLIN CURTAINS—

☞ ALL AT REDUCED PRICES.

9 Montgomery Street,

LICK BLOCK.

WHOLESALE HOUSE,

107 BATTERY ST., BET PINE AND CALIFORNIA.

je7

SUMMER MEDICINE.

PURIFY THE BLOOD

AND

Constitution,

WITH

LE DOYEN'S

SARSAPARILLA,

YELLOW DOCK,

IODINE ALTERATIVE.

CRANE & BRIGHAM, Agents,

je19 1m SAN FRANCISCO.

CARPETS.

Removal! Removal!

KENNEDY & BELL

HAVE REMOVED TO

BUSH STREET,

Below Montgomery,

Store lately occupied by the Franco-American Commercial Company.

ap21-3m

A. ROMAN & CO.'S

LIST OF Late Publications.

Armadale—a Novel—by Wilkie Collins.
The Dove in the Eagle's Nest, by the author of The Heir of Redclyffe.
Shakespeare's Delineations of Insanity, Imbecility and Suicide, by A. O. Kellogg, M. D.
595 Pulpit Pungencies, with a Table of Contents.
Footlight Flashes, by William Davidge, Comedian.
Hidden Depths—12mo.
Lectures on the Study of History; delivered in Oxford, 1859-61—by Goldwin Smith, M. A.
Kate Marstone; or, Happy Hearts Make Happy Homes.
The Mule Singer—a Novel—by Anna Cora Ritchie (Mowatt.)
Poetical Works of Thomas Buchanan Read—New Edition—3 vols.
Devotions of the Ages; or, Collects, Texts, and Lyrics, illustrative of the Christian Year, by Rev. N. G. Allen.
The Adventures of Captain Castagnette (illustrated,) by Gustave Dore.
The Mormon Prophet and His Harem, by Mrs. C. V. Waite.
History of the Gipsies, by Walter Simson.
Josh Billings—His Book.
Beyminstre—a Novel—by the author of The Silent Woman, King's Cope, Mr. Warenne, etc.
Garden Vegetables, and How to Cultivate Them, by Fearing Burr, Jr New Edition.
Brief Biographical Dictionary, compiled and arranged by Rev Chas Hole and W. A. Wheeler.
Poems of Thomas Hood—New Edition. 12mo.
The Maiden and Married Life of Mary Powell.
The Dean's English, by G. Washington Moon.
President Lincoln Self-portrayed, by John M. Ludlow.
Temperance Recollections—an Autobiography—by John Marsh, D. D.
The Masquerade and other Poems, by John G. Saxe.
Life of Benjamin Silliman, by Geo. P. Fisher, 2 vols
Betsy Jane Ward—Better ½ to Artemus.
The Person of Christ, by Philip Schaff, D. D.
Asiatic Cholera, by R. Nelson, M. D.
The Laws of Short Whist, by J. L. Baldwin.
Speeches of Lord Macaulay—a New Edition, 2 vols.
Treasury of Bible Knowledge, by John Ayre.
Martineau's Essays—Philosophical and Theological.
Memoirs of the Right Hon. Richard B. Sheridan, by Thomas Moore.
Gilbert Rugge—a Novel—by the author of A First Friendship.
Short Sermons to Newsboys, by Chas. Loring Brace.
Stanley's History of the Jewish Church, 2d series.
Garden Flowers: How to Cultivate Them, by E. S. Rand, Jr.
Adrift in Dixie, by Edmund Kirke.
The Philosophy of Art, by H. Taine.
Life of Emanuel Swedenborg, by William White.
Baked Meats of the Funeral, by Private Miles O'Reilly.
Recommended to Mercy—a Novel—by the author of Taken Upon Trust, Zoe's Band, etc.

PUBLIC AND PRIVATE LIBRARIES SUPPLIED, ON FAVORABLE TERMS.

A. ROMAN & CO.,

417 and 419 Montgomery street.

jy14 San Francisco.

LOW PRICES

IN

Gents' Furnishing Goods,

AT

WARD'S SHIRT STORES,

323 MONTGOMERY STREET,

CORNER OF MARKET AND THIRD STREETS,

SAN FRANCISCO.

P. S.—Printed directions for self-measurement for Shirts and Price Lists of Goods sent free by mail.

ap21-3m

The California.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME V., No 9.
FFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, JULY 21, 1866.

TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE. 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

PROSE.

To and Fro—No. 2.—By Kuzzilbash.
A California Gifford.
Amusements.
Short Rations.—By "Mark Twain."
The Moleson.
Adventure with a Thug.—An Old Officer's Story.
The Art of Hospitality.
Love's Martyr.
Beethoven.
A Female Fiend.
Hair Dyeing.
Counterfeit Criticism.
Scene at the French Races.
Fearful Courage.
A Tennessee Olympic.
A Necromancer in Paris.
The Zouave Spectre.

POETRY:

Midsummer.—A San Francisco Madrigal —By 'Bret."
On Translating the Divina Commedia—Second Sonnet.
The Organ.

SHORT RATIONS.

"MARK TWAIN," in a graphic letter to the Sacramento Union, describes the sufferings of the shipwrecked crew of the Hornet. Yet he manages now and then to relieve the pathos and dramatic intensity of his narrative by a gleam of his peculiar humor:

On Monday, the thirty-eighth day after the disaster, "we had nothing left," said the third mate, "but a pound and a half of ham—the bone was a good deal the heaviest part of it—and one soup-and-bully tin." These things were divided among the fifteen men, and they ate it all—two ounces of food to each man. I do not count the ham bone, as that was saved for next day. For some time, now, the poor wretches had been cutting their old boots into small pieces and eating them. They would also pound wet rags to a sort of pulp and eat them.

On the thirty-ninth day the ham bone was divided up into rations, and scraped with knives and eaten. I said: "You say the two sick men remained sick all through, and after awhile two or three had to be relieved from standing watch; how did you get along without medicines?"

The reply was: "Oh, we couldn't have kept them if we'd had them; if we'd had boxes of pills, or anything like that, we'd have eaten them. It was just as well—we couldn't have kept them, and we couldn't have given them to the sick men alone—we'd have shared them around all alike, I guess." It was said rather in jest, but it was a pretty true jest, no doubt.

After apportioning the ham bone, the captain cut the canvas cover that had been around the ham into fifteen equal pieces, and each man took his portion. This was the last division of food the captain made. The men broke up the small oaken butter tub and divided the staves among themselves, and gnawed them up. The shell of a little green turtle was scraped with knives and eaten to the last shaving. The third mate chewed pieces of boots and spit them out, but ate nothing except the soft straps of two pairs of boots—ate three on the thirty-ninth day and saved one for the fortieth.

The men seem to have thought in their own minds of the shipwrecked mariner's last dreadful resort—cannibalism; but they do not appear to have conversed about it. They only thought of the casting lots and killing one of their number as a possibility; but even when they were eating rags, and bone, and boots, and shell, and hard oak wood, they seem to have still had a notion that it was remote. They felt that some one of the company must die soon—which one they well knew; and during the last three or four days of their terrible voyage they were patiently but hungrily waiting for him. I wonder if the subject of these anticipations knew what they were thinking of? He must have known it—he must have felt it. They had even calculated how long he would last; they said to themselves, but not to each other, I think they said, "He will die Saturday—and then!"

There was one exception to the spirit of delicacy I have mentioned—a Frenchman, who kept an eye of strong personal interest upon the sinking man and noted his failing strength with untiring care and some degree of cheerfulness. He frequently said to Thomas: "I think he will go off pretty soon, now, sir. And then we'll eat him!" This is very sad.

Thomas and also several of the men state that the sick "Portyghee," during the five days that they were entirely out of provisions, actually eat two silk handkerchiefs and a couple of cotton shirts, besides his share of the boots, and bones, and lumber.

Captain Mitchell was fifty-six years old on the 12th of June—the fortieth day after the burning of the ship and the third day before the boat's crew reached land. He said it looked somewhat as if it might be the last one he was going to enjoy. He had no birthday feast except some bits of ham-canvas—no luxury but this, and no substantials save the leather and oaken bucket staves.

Speaking of the leather diet, one of the men told me he was obliged to eat a pair of boots which were so old and rotten that they were full of holes; and then he smiled gently and said he didn't know, though, but what the holes tasted about as good as the balance of the boot. This man was very feeble, and after saying this he went to bed.

A NECROMANCER IN PARIS.

AMONG the strangest of the many strange people who successively "turn up" in this city is a certain M. de Caston, a man of good family and great acquirements, who came hither from his provincial home about six years ago, and has worked his way from poverty and obscurity to a lucrative profession, and an acquaintance with everybody worth knowing in the capital, by the aid of talent for wonder-working that leaves all rivals in the shade. His feats of prestidigitation are equal to those of the most renowned professors of the art; and in one department, that of tricks performed with a pack of cards, he far surpasses anything accomplished by them.

But the most astonishing of his feats are of an entirely different order, and such as no other wizard ever attempted. For instance, his head tied up in a couple of towels, and then covered with a paletot, he will require one of the audience to go to the farther corner of the room, and there to write on a sheet of paper a mass of cipher arranged in parallel columns, and go through the most complicated operations with them, subtracting, multiplying, dividing, stating the square of such a cipher, and so on—playing as it were with figures written on paper, and apparently reading them as soon as written. At one of his seances he threw a folded paper to a lady friend of mine, who had never seen him, requesting her not to open it, but to at once put it in her pocket, and keep it there until he should ask for it; which the lady accordingly did.

Absorbed in watching the marvelous things done by the performer, the lady had quite forgotten the paper in her pocket when de Caston, turning to her, requested her to name one of the three kingdoms of nature. Thus interrogated, and feeling rather nervous at seeing the eyes of the assembly fixed upon her, the lady hurriedly named the vegetable kingdom. De Caston thereupon singled out another lady with his eyes, requested her to name a class of objects belonging to the vegetable kingdom. "Flowers," replied the lady addressed. Turning to a third lady, the wizard asked her to name a flower. "The rose," said the lady.

Turning to my friend, he requested her to read the contents of the paper in her pocket; on doing so, she found these words: "The Vegetable Kingdom. Flowers. The Rose."

A man of great literary acquirements and reputation here, being invited to a private performance of de Caston's, at which he answered every question written by the persons present, performed the most astounding feats of divination of numbers, stated the events that occurred at an immense number of dates written by them—each paper being folded and held by the writer—went away very much disgusted, regarding the whole affair as a series of tricks produced by the collusion of the parties present.

"How very imprudent," said the gentleman to himself, "a company of thirteen respectable-looking, gentlemanly, and intelligent men, all in league with a charlatan!" A day or two afterwards, he received a note from de Caston, saying that he should do himself the honor of calling on him in the course of a day or two, in order to give him a specimen of his powers in his own house. M. L—— G—— accordingly, being determined to baffle his visitor, got down some rare old historian from one of the shelves of his library, and picked out about twenty dates of little known historic facts, in the annals of several countries, and remote ages. He drew up his paper with great internal satisfaction, feeling sure that he had provided a poser for de Caston, folded it, and put it away in his waistcoat pocket, not showing it to any one, and awaited his visitor. The latter arrived next day, and was shown at once to the study where M. G—— was writing an article for some newspaper.

"Pray don't disturb yourself," said de Caston on entering, "keep your seat and let me place myself here;" and drawing a chair to the opposite side of the table, he took a folded paper from his pocket and gave it to M. G——. "Don't open it until I ask you to do so," said de Caston; and M. G—— placed it unopened in his pocket.

"Have you a pack of cards and a box of dominoes?" demanded the visitor.

"Here are dominoes," replied M. G——, taking a box out of one of the table drawers, and handing it to de Caston, "as for cards, I don't think there are any in the house; but I'll ring for my servant and send for a pack."

"Do nothing of the kind," replied de Caston; "we can do just as well without cards as with them. Now," he continued, holding out his hand, "just imagine I am offering you a pack of cards, of which you select four."

M. G—— extended his hand in turn, feigned to draw four cards, and to place them before himself on the table.

"Be good enough to write on a paper what cards you have chosen, and fold it up as soon as written."

M. G—— did as requested.

"You have chosen the ace of spades, the king of clubs, the knave of diamonds, and the queen of hearts," quietly remarked the wizard, as M. G—— finished folding his paper. Those being the cards of which M. G—— had just written down the names.

After performing several feats, equally inexplicable, with the imaginary cards, and with the dominoes, which came into play next, de Caston asked M. G—— to write a number of historical dates on a piece of paper, fold it up and hold it in his hand.

"I have my list already!" cried M. G—— triumphantly, and produced the paper he had prepared the day before.

"Very good," replied de Caston, with a smile and a bow. "Be so kind as to open the paper I gave you on entering your study."

"Judge of my stupefaction," said M. G——, on recounting this little scene to your correspondent, "when I found that the paper he had given me, on coming into the room, contained an exact duplicate of my list, not one being changed or missing, and the dates following each other in exactly the same order as in mine!"

Now, Sol., said Simon Suggs to Sol. Smith, his intimate friend, I will tell you how the lovely Julia treated me, if you will faithfully promise not to tell it to any person alive. You promise—do you? Well, I had been courting Julia assiduously for a year or more past, and never would bring matters to a close, so I determined to pluck up courage, and have my fate decided at once. I therefore decked myself in my best bib and tucker, had my hair cut, my beard and moustaches trimmed, and called on my dear Julia one bright morning in May, and, after much cooing, I was very desirous of biling, but my heart failed me to make the attempt. I placed my hand on her shoulder, and said, Widow, this is the softest place I ever put my hand in the course of my life. Indeed, Mr. Suggs, said she, I will put it on a softer place, and Sol., now you promise you won't tell anybody. She took my hand from her shoulder in her own soft, delicate, plump little hand, and put it right on the top of my head.

We acknowledge an invitation to the Literary and Social Reunion of the "Hebrew Youths' Literary Association," to be held at Pickwick Hall, Fourth street, on Thursday evening next. This society, formed mostly of Hebrew pupils and graduates of the High School of this city, has already a library of 130 volumes, and it is for the laudable purpose of increasing its library that the association will make an appeal to the public on this occasion.

THE MOLÉSON.

YOU will probably ask. Baedeker, the best tourists' guide to Switzerland (who leads you step by step, over hill and dale, by paths which he has explored himself, and who keeps innkeepers a little in check by the mention he makes of their various prices,) replies in these laconic terms:

"The Moléson (6,172 feet,) a continuation of the Jaman, the most advanced summit of the plateau, the Rigi of western Switzerland, an exceedingly abrupt cone in every direction, surrounded by numerous pastures and forests, possesses a flora of peculiar richness. No habitations are to be found on this eminence, except a few wretched hovels a leagne from the top. Extensive panorama. The paths are impracticable for horses. At Albenve, gnides may be obtained at moderate charges." A more recent edition (the sixth) adds, "The ascent is nsnally made by starting from Bulle (four hours,) from Gruyere (three hours,) from Semsales or from Vandrúz on the western slope (three to three and one-half hours.) We by no means recommend this latter path; because, at the outset, you pass over another steep mountain, which you have to redescend, solely to reach the foot of the Moleson. Refreshments, and four (?) beds, at the chalet Plane, one hour from the summit."

I had already seen a portion of Switzerland. From Zurich I had crossed the Albis, my first and facile acquaintance with mountains. From Zug and Arth I had performed the splendid and comfortable ascent of the Rigi, with beaten paths from the base to the kulm, liberally garnished with chalets, inns, and hotels, offering every necessary and almost every luxury. I had gone over the Brunig (before the carriage road was open,) reached the pure blue glacier of Roseuluui, and yet remained utterly ignorant of the Moléson. As some excuse, allow me to state that, before venturing alone into Switzerland, I had consulted sundry special itineraries, drawn up by experienced hands for the use of persons wanting to see the greatest possible number of remarkable objects in the shortest possible space of time. In none of these was the Moléson even mentioned.

But on the 29th of July, 1861, while travelling by rail from Berne to Fribourg, I had not reached the first station before I found myself conversing with a Fribourg notary. What better companion can you have than a notary, to give you a complete inventory of all and everythiug? It is proverbial that, in diligences, people make acquaintance rapidly; in a railway carriage the same thing is effected still more speedily, because yon understand that you have not a minute to spare, if you want to pick up a little local information. Our conversation, therefore, for me, was both interesting and interested.

As to Fribourg itself, I knew very well what I wanted to see there; so I inquired for no more than the name of the hotel the most advantageous in all respects. But I insisted about the environs worth visiting.

"As you are going to Vevey," he said, "it is quite out of the question that you should omit making the ascent of our beautiful and beloved Fribourgiau mountain, the Rigi of occidental Switzerland,"—you see he talked like Baedaker's book —"and at least the rival, as far as the view is concerned, of the other Rigi, which is so much cried up." And theu he enumerated, with the complacency of a person thoroughly lull of his subject, the long list of his Moleson's merits, until he brought the water into my mouth. But what gave me one of those longings, which lay hold of you aud pursue you wherever you go until they are fully satisfied, was his peroration overflowing with Swiss sincerity.

"I must tell you, however, that my mountain is both steep and savage; that the only shelter it affords are dingy chalets; that the entire ascent must be made on loot; that there is no beaten track to the top, which is somewhat difficult to reach, and may even offer a certain amount of danger, uuless your head is steady and your step sure. But you will be abundantly recompensed at the summit, especially if the sun allows you to witness his levee; besides which you will gather the rarest flowers—pleasure denied by the Rigi's sterile ridge, in spite of its inlerior elevation."

We arrived early at Fribourg, distant only an hour by rail from Berne. We reached the town by the grand suspension-bridge, from which you step almost immediately into the Zahringen hotel. There I took leave of my amiable fellow-traveller. He told me his name; bnt the weakness of my niemory, not the ingratitude of my heart, has caused me to forget it. Immediately on entering the house I begged the landlord, Mr. Russler, to find me up some excursionists bound to the famous Fribourgian hill, whose strongly-marked features I first caught sight of from the Pont de Gotteron, a structure even higher and bolder than the Grand Bridge itself.

On returning to the hotel, mine host presented me to M. Mauron, one of the Cantonal Councillors of State, and to M. Vogt, organist to the cathedral. The former had expressed his intention of scaling the Moleson the following day; the latter was going to perform, that evening, on Aloys Moser's celebrated organ. The artist was worthy of his instrument; he moved his audience even to tears. Nothing but the sacredness of the spot prevented outbursts of applause.

On returning to the inn, the morrow's excursion was our principal topic of conversation; and M. Mauron told me that he would provide not only a guide, but a whole heap of useless articles—a telescope, a map—not to mention provisions. The prospect was all the more delightful, that Councillor Mauron was a highly-educated man, with a lively imagination, an original turn of mind, and, in spite of some sixty years, still in possession of excellent legs. I was, therefore, not surprised to learn that he had been tntor to Prince Nicholas Youssoupoff, a Russiau grandee, immensely rich.

We separated rather late in the evening, intending to meet next morning, the 30th of July, at half-past seven; to breakfast together, and start, at nine, for the little town of Bulle, at the foot of the Moleson. Notwithstanding the latigues of the day, I slept but little that night. The ascension which I was about to make had taken a strange hold on my faucy. And I was much surprised at the circumstance, being now no longer a uovice to the impressions of mountain scenery.

At five in the morniug I wus awake and stirring, and in another hour ready to depart. At half-past seven, as no M. Mauron appeared, I resolved to go and meet him, to calm my impatience. As I went on and on, and at last reached his residence without catching sight of him, I began to feel some apprehensions, which very soon were justified. I found him in bed, with his head tied up in a bandage stained with spots of blood. He had met with an unlucky fall overnight. He was in a fever; his doctor had forbiddeu him to leave the house.

He expressed his deep and sincere regret; I expressed mine with no less depth and sincerity, and returned to the hotel quite taken aback. At a quarter to niue I had finished my sad and solitary breakfast; mine host hud presented his bill "received with thanks" (the accustomed formula of politeness here;) and at nine I mounted the conveyauce for Bulle, determined to venture up the Moléson alone, if needs must, although a little agitated by the thought, I hardly know why.

The road is intoresting all the way to Bulle. From time to time the eye plunges into the valley, through which the Sarine flows tranquilly enough in his broad stony bed. About half-way they point out to you the suspension-bridge of Posieux (one of the countless "Devil's bridges,") thrown with Alpine boldness over a black and frightful ravine; but ever before you, awaiting your attack, stands the giant mountain, with his long and narrow ridge showing itself more and more distinctly conspicuous. At noon, under a scorching sun, I was at Bulle, the depot of the well-known Gruyere cheeses, which, as is less well known, are almost all made at Gessenay. I went to the inn called the Hotel de Ville, and, feeling thoroughly exhausted, threw myself on a bed without undressing, begging them to wake me at three o'clock, or earlier, if any pilgrims to the Moleson should come.

At three precisely my slumbers were interrupted by good news in duplicate: three travellers had arrived, intendiug to start for the Moléson at four, and had ordered a dinner, which dinner was served.

I jumped off the bed and hurried down stairs. In presence of the strangers, already at table, I unhesitatingly solicited the honor and happiness of sharing their repast and their excursion.

My frank request, expressed in few words, was immediately granted with the best grace in the world. They were a Frenchman and two gentlemen of Fribourg, speaking our language (French) perfectly. I did not learn their names and qualities (nor did they mine) till afterwards; but I soon discovered that I was in company with three young and generous spirits.

A bottle of Yvorne, coffee, and kirsch affixed the seal to our engagement. At four we were ready. As we were to return to dine at the hotel next day, we left all of our luggage there which we did not absolutely want, and set off with the brightest of possible skies, restored strength, aud in the best of spirits.

By the route we took, we hud four and a half hours' up-hill walk before reaching the top. But as the afternoon was already too far advanced to complete the ascent that same day, it was agreed that we should make a halt, at rather more than two thirds of the distance, in a chalet known to the two Fribourgians, who had been up the mountain before; that we should spend the early portion of the night there, and theu proceed to reach the summit a little before sunrise—a moment which, amongst the hills, often brings disappointment with it, like many other things in this world. Alas that it should be so!

Each of the Swiss excursionists carried a long and strong alpenstock; my French companion had nothing but a switch; I had only a short and light walking-stick, terminating, however, in an iron point. The long and heavy alpenstocks which I had seen during the course of my journey often appeared a useless piece of affectation, in the hands of either sex, on level ground, and I had taken a dislike to them. I refused to make use of them to the very last, sticking faithfully to my cherry-tree wand, and making it the bearer of the local brands which are a testimonium presentiæ at remarkable spots. I regretted the alpenstock only once; namely, while descending the Moléson: but then, indeed, I did regret it.

We arrived at the lower margin of the wooded belt which surrounds the hill. A stream of water, clear and peaceful (the latter a rare quality with streams in Switzerland,) was the boundary which separated us from the forest. We easily crossed it by means of stepping-stones which reared their mossy heads above the surface of the brook. Deciduous and resinous trees sheltered us from the heat of the sun, which had caused us no little inconvenience. The ascent was already begun.

After walking for nearly an hour, sometimes in the checkered shade, but more frequently across the rich pastures, where the narrow and not always visible path scarcely served to guide us on the way, we reached without difficulty (the slope having hitherto been gentle) a vast extent of buildings, screened by a semi-transparent girdle of trees and hedges. It was La Part-Dieu, a religious house founded in 1307 and suppressed in 1847. To the convent (to which I paid little attention, by reason of its nude and insignificant architecture,) is annexed a farm, which scarcely interested me more; because, in this grand solitude, it was inhabited—nay, all alive with cackling poultry and sturdy children, dirty and wild to your heart's content, and miserably kept.

We did not remain at La Part-Dieu more than a quarter of an hour or twenty minutes, and started again, but this time more slowly and with greater fatigue. The ascent became more and more steep, more and more difficult. Sometimes we had to cross soft and spongy bogs, hidden beneath rank herbage, and made just passable by round stumps of firwood placed close to each other, and forming, after all, a very unstable and wearying causeway.

We were in the region of pines. Not a breath of wind whispered amongst the branches; not a bird twittered or fluttered beneath the foliage; [there are no birds in Switzerland; it is one harmony the less in the grand concert of nature;] only from distance to distance was heard the tinkling of the bell hanging at the neck of a goat or cow, themselves invisible, and the continuous murmur of the waters running along their pebbly channel. It was imposing, but melancholy. We were the only creatures on this desert path, which we followed as it led us ever higher and higher.

At last, after stopping more than once to rest, we reached an extent of table-land whose surface was unlevel and strewn with boulders, and on which we caught sight of a low, long chalet, supremely black, which M. Joanne (who doubtless has never seen it) presumes to call, in his "Guide," a sort of inn. It was our only refuge for the night. We had Hobson's choice; that or the naked wilderness.

It was half-past seven. The sun, who still shone in an unclouded sky, was about to disappear beneath the horizon. While my companions proceeded to the hovel, summoning a remnant of strength, I scaled an eminence to enjoy the spectacle of the fiery orb sinking, in floods of light, behind the long dark-blue wall of the Jura. I then directed my steps to the chalet, having before me the brown and arid peak of the mountain, which overhung our present station at an elevation of five or six hundred yards. This final stage of the ascent would take at least an hour to accomplish, especially as we were to perform it in the darkness of night. The scheme seemed venturesome, if not perilous, and, I confess, made a strong impression on my mind.

At this moment all the cattle were returning home to the chalet. They were a numerous herd of cows, goats, and swine, each with a little bell fastened to its neck. The tinkling of this multitude of bells, soft in sound and diverse in tone, made a singularly harmonious accompaniment to the shadow and silence of the mountain.

I found my companions in a vast and murky shed, settling the conditions of our board and lodging with three or four tall mountaineers, as black as soot, who were keeping up the fire, without any chimney, beneath an enormous caldron, in the midst of pungent smoke, which could only escape by the chinks in the roof. But at the same time I noticed, in this darksome den, rows of large wooden bowls full of milk and cream of immaculate whiteness. The contrast was particularly striking.

One of the black goblins who haunted the place, and who spoke nothing but harsh German gibberish, showed us up a rough, mill-like ladder staircase, into a chamber whose whole furniture consisted of two narrow rickety beds, two benches, and one table, on which he placed a smoky-smelling lamp, a black, compact, and heavy loaf, some little bowls full of milk, and woodeu spoons of the most primitive pattern. The milk was sweet and good, excellent, delicious; but the bread—! Such is the cowhouse and piggery combined which has been promoted to the rank of une espece d'auberge, and which is known in the neighborhood as the Plianney, or Plané. It was lucky for us that we had brought a small reserve of provisions with us.

About half past nine we thought of going to bed; but not being able to make up my mind to share one of the luxurious couches before me, I caused inquiry to be made of our savage hosts whether they could not put me into some out-of the-way corner, garnished with a bundle of straw and a truss of hay. They conducted me, without any light, into a little attic ful of aromatic hay, and with no other opening besides the door and a wicket closed by a solid wooden shutter. My bed was soon made, and I was stretched upon it, undressing no further than my shoes and gaiters. In a few minutes I fell asleep, lulled by the talk of my travelling companions, from whom I was separated only by a thin partition, which allowed the light to glimmer through it from the shrinking of the wood. Weariness had overpowered me.

Unfortunately, I was soon awake again, streaming with perspiration, in a high fever, and with a splitting headache. I was instantly aware that the strong and penetrating odor of the mountain hay had induced the first symptoms of suffocation. Consequently, jumping up, I forced open the wicket to let in fresh air.

Breathing, bareheaded, the cool breeze of night, with half my person thrust outside, I tried to look before and below me. In all directions, impenetrable darkness. But on the horizon, towards the northeast, broad sheet-lightning, unaccompanied by sound, shed a feeble gleam over huge masses of cloud. Overhead, in the north, shone the Great Bear constellation, brighter than ever in its twinklings, and still surmounted by the long-tailed comet which, already pale and small, was plunging almost perpendicularly into the abysses of the firmament.

This spectacle, beheld from such a spot, and under such circumstances, could not fail to produce its soothing effects. Feeling calmed and refreshed, I was preparing to lie down again (but with the window open,) when the chalet's wooden clock, with discordant creakings, struck one in the morning. Sundry lowings and bleatings beneath me responded to the sound, and I gave up all notion of going to asleep again, remembering that, at half past two, we were to begin our climb to the mountain top.

For some time I had been thinking about our imminent and adventurous expedition, when I heard my companions getting out of bed. A few taps on the partition informed them that I should soon be with them. At a quarter to two I was in their chamber. The smoky-smelling lamp had been relighted, and they were making some coffee with the aid of a spirit-lamp. At half-past two our coffee was drunk, our hotel bill paid (the charges were by no means so modest as the accommodation.) and the door of the chalet closed upon us.

To gain the first slopes of the peak, we had only a few hundred steps to set—but, gracious heaveus, what a path! Fancy a black, boggy soil, so trodden by cattle that it was impossible to avoid putting your feet in holes, which frequently were the cause of stumbling. It is true the night was very dark; but this state of things suited me all the less that one of my feet had received a slight hurt, my shoe having grazed the skin a little above the heel. Notwithstanding which, the critical moment soon arrived when the brunt of the ascent was to be grappled with. Our arrangements were speedily made. The two Fribourgians, armed with their alpenstocks, formed the van and led the way. The two Frenchmen, with their small walking-sticks, were in the rear. We marched in Indian file, slowly and prudently, following exactly each other's footsteps.

Moreover, the slope was abrupt and steep, and the rock—a loose sort of pudding-stone—anything but solid under our feet. At a certain elevation, on suddenly hearing some stones rolling down behind me, I instinctively stretched out my hands, clinging firmly to the rocks, and even to the ground. Then, for the first time, I looked back; and, at the sight of that dark chaos of shadows—at the sound of the pebbles leaping down hill, I halted involuntarily. A bar of iron compressed my chest, and a cold sweat burst out upon my forehead. This painful emotion soon passed away, and I speedily rejoined my friends, who continued their march before me, silently and slowly. You see that I have no intention to boast, and that I am not afraid of confessing those few moments of weakness, to which the most resolute temper might temporarily yield.

After some three-quarters of an hour of up-hill toil, we rested ourselves for a few minutes, and then first perceived, S.S.E., the thin, sharp edge of the waning moon, scarcely illumining the sky with a pale and doubtful glimmer. At the same time the darkness of the night appeared to diminish just the least in the world.

We did not reach the much-wished-for summit until very nearly four in the morning. The sky was but slightly paling in the east; it would be three-quarters of an hour before the sun could rise: and the night still veiled the landscape, although with a more transparent shade. We were all excessively fatigued, and, moreover, very cold. So we drew upon the flask of one of our party for a glass of kirschwasser all round. It was our first libation to the Genius of the Mountain.

At that moment—a few paces from us, and on the slope opposite to that which we had just climbed with so much labor—there appeared successively, like shadows rising from the earth, nine or ten persons, amongst whom we could distinguish several females, whose presence, nevertheless, had not revealed itself by any sound of voice or step. We soon learned that we had fallen in with a couple of Vaudoise and Valasian families, who had started at one in the morning from Aibeuve. The ascent on that side is shorter than by the path which we had taken, but steeper and rougher from beginning to end, and thereby impracticable for horses and mules; whereas from Bulle, they can at least get as far as Plané. And yet, here were three ladies, two of them mere girls, amongst the unexpected arrivals! But these women had the constitutions of mountaineers and the legs of chamois (I had nearly written "gazelles" for poetry's sake.)

We were shivering in spite of our drink of kirsch, and were drumming on the ground with our feet to warm them a little, while waiting for the sun's more-than-ever-desired appearance, when we heard the short, snapping noise of twigs being broken close to us. Our Vaudois and Valaisans, knowing what they were about, and loving their ease, had provided themselves with a stock of wood. Soon there cracked and blazed a cheerful fire, whose warmth we were allowed to share without ceremony. And there passed kindly and interesting words on that bare observatory, six thousand feet high, where the love of the beautiful and the unknown had assembled us, strangers to each other, together.

Meanwhile day was dawning. The distant outline of the horizon showed itself more and more sharply defined; the moon faded like a mere remnant of mist about to melt in the azure firmament; while the deep, deep plain, and valleys and gorges deeper still, gently shook off their shroud of darkness.

Suddenly an exclamation burst from several mouths at once. It was a salutation addressed to the great luminary who, rising in an unclouded sky, was gloriously lighting up the whole expanse of heaven. A dazzling ray was shot from the east; and this fiery dart hit at one stroke the heads of Monte Rosa, Mount Cervin, and Mont Blanc—the three great giants of the Valais and Savoy, almost standing in a line, and of almost equal elevation—whose very waist we should not have reached on the top of our pigmy Moléson. Nevertheless, I began to feel ill at ease, being both perched on too lofty a pinnacle, and having too little standing-room on the narrow ridge, which hoisted you, almost astride, between the two abysses of its opposite slopes, of which we had just scaled one, and were soon to descend the other.

It was a young Valaisanne, with a countenance intelligent rather than pretty, who, with a smile upon her lips, told me the names of the three colossi. And she proceeded to tell me plenty of others, her delight and enjoyment still increasing, in proportion as the sun rose higher and brought out every detail of the immense panorama. She addressed her fresh and merry laugh to all quarters of the compass; exactly as the morning lark, excited with air and liberty, scatters his aerial notes to the clouds.

"Look there, Monsieur," she said, stretching her childlike finger into space. "There, in front of the Diablerets, is the Dent de Morcles, the Dent de Corgeon, the Dent Blanche, the Dent du Midi, the Dent de Chaman, the Dent d'Oche."

I expressed my astonishment at her topographical knowledge and at her remembrance of all those names.

"Don't be surprised at that, Monsieur. I have learnt it all from your Joanne; and, as you say, I have a good memory. But that's not all. There, again, is the Dent de Lys, [sharp, jagged, time-worn peaks are styled dents,] the Dent de Vaulion, the Dent de Broc—"

My eye, dazzled, fascinated, followed her finger; and I saw, in my troubled, tired imagination, monstrous tusks, formidable incisors, enormous grinders, pointed fangs, starting in all directions from gigantic jaws of granite. The blood was rushing to my head; I could scarcely keep my equilibrium. I made an effort to resist the weakness; I tried to answer, to continue the conversation, to show how amiable and clever I was—and not a word would come to my lips (I recall it with shame for French intelligence,) but this coarse pleasantry which, nevertheless, was the melancholy truth.

"Much obliged to you for all your Dents, Mademoiselle. My teeth are already set on edge by them—quite enough for once I can assure you!"

The merry maiden laughed in my face, notwithstanding my evident discomfort. And she utterly upset me, by running with her brother to the very verge of the cliff, where they carelessly gathered dead grass and sticks, to keep the fire from going out.

You know the effect produced on nervous persons by the sight of any one leaning too far out of an upper window, or walking on the edge of a lofty wall. You tremble for their safety; you beg them to have a care; you shrink back yourself, as if it were you that was in danger. The sensation is excessively painful.

I was suffering from this feeling to a terrible degree. I called for help, and pointed with horror to the young people who were disporting on the brink of the declivity. The father and mother interfered and called their children away from the dangerous sport, perhaps more out of compassion for me than through any apprehension in regard to them.

"Monsieur has reason for his alarm," said one of their party who was close to me. "At this very place where we now are standing, a frightful accident occurred only two years ago. A young girl from Bulle was gathering flowers, only a few paces away from her family and friends. They saw her lean forwards, and fall on her hands. They heard her laugh as she tried to creep back again. But she could not get back. She slipped, and slipped, still sliding downwards. Then her onward movement increased in rapidity. She called for help; her shrieks became desperate. She rolled over and over. She bounded like a stone hurled from the summit. They heard nothing more; she was a silent corpse, but still dashed along with accelerated velocity, until stopped at last, a broken and shapeless mass. What a scene! What outbursts of grief! What despair! The flowers she had gathered, still clenched in her hand, were shared amongst her playfellows as memorials of her fate."

My juvenile companions laughed no longer, but instinctively nestled close to their parents. As for me, I felt worse than ever. There seemed to be a veil between my eyes and every visible object; the air appeared to boil, as in a mirage. The tragical story I had just heard rang in my ears like a funeral bell. I fancied that some one was uttering cries of distress. And then, do all I could, my eyes would look down to the base of the mountain, involuntarily drawn by the Chateau de Gruyere, perched on its hillock six thousand feet beneath us. This deep, immense, fearful void attracted me painfully, invincibly. At that moment I experienced the strongest and strangest sensation which can possibly seize hold of the human organism. I felt what I never knew before, and hope never to know again. My head was turning with the giddy height. It was dizziness, vertigo, unmistakable, complete, the result of fatigue and feverish watchings, acting on a frame rendered more impressionable by the excitement of travel.

To break the spell, I sat down on the ground, as well as to conceal my deplorable condition. I did not want my fellow-travellers to notice my infirmity, and that I was almost fainting. Nay, I took advantage of the opportunity to assume a most ungraceful position, laying myself on the flat of my stomach, which I felt was the speediest way of rallying.

Nevertheless, I condescended to practice a bit of hypocritical coquetry. I made believe to have found some curious object, and to be examining it closely. And as my head grew gradually calmer, I did, in fact, find something, without having even suspected its presence. I had before my astonished eyes a thick tuft of the little gentian, bearing flowers of the brightest blue, and, to the right and the left, within my reach, tiny plants of myosotis in full bloom. I gathered with delight, a few specimens of each, displayed them with ostentatious affectation, and stored them carefully between the pages of my gulde-book.

These floral gems naturally recalled the thought of the young Bulloise's dreadful end. But strength of mind had returned with repose of body and calmness of thought. I rose with a renewed stock of resolution and philosophy. I believe my companions became aware of what a pitiable condition I had been in. Indeed, I confessed it frankly and humbly. They addressed me with evident sympathy. One of them, holding a pint of champagne in his hand, cordially invited me to take my share. The bottle was speedily uncapped, and our leather goblets filled and emptied twice to the prosperity of Switzerland and France. Unluckily, one of my comrades took it into his head to set the bottle, bottom upwards, at the edge of the grassy slope, and let it go. At first it glided, then rolled, then bounded, and at last was smashed to atoms against the first rock it met with, which was several hundred feet from its point of departure. As you may imagine, every eye followed it until the final catastrophe, and the fate of the maid of Bulle was again brought to mind. With that, and the vertiginous fascination exercised upon me by the Chateau de Gruyere, I was once more obliged, resist it how I might, to resume a ridiculous horizontal position.

They tried to divert my attention by pointing out, at a distance, the white, but no longer the virgin, Jungfrau—the lakes of Morat, Geneva, Bienne, and Neufchatel. But the sun, rising higher and higher above the horizon, made mountain, lake and glacier quiver and tremble in a haze of light. It overcame me with a sickening feeling. They were obliged to let me remain quiet for a while.

But the time for our departure was come. It was then half past five in the morning. The descent would take us three hours to perform: we had to visit the Chateau de Gruyere, and the loss of the Tine; and also to reach Bulle not too late for my friends to return to Fribourg, and myself to sleep at Vevey. Our Vaudois and Valaisans had already bidden us adieu. They disappeared out of sight down the rugged path which led us hither, while we in turn had to descend the slippery slope which they had mounted.

So I stirred up my courage with heart and soul, and vigorously shook myself both morally and physically. The Fribourgians, armed with their alpenstocks, boldly descended the grassy declivity, while we Frenchmen, with only our walking-sticks, followed the crest of the mountain, hoping to meet with a gentler incline. But to go on in that way long was impossible. We were obliged at last to venture and obey the invitation of our friends below, however slowly and painfully at first. I tried going backwards, throwing my whole weight upon my stick; then I let myself slide a little, holding on fast with both hands. Practice, they say, makes perfect; if not perfect, I was at least improved. When once the steepest part of the slope was passed, I was no longer the hindmost of the party. About eight we entered a narrow gorge, full of shadow, foliage, and waterfalls. Then, crossing a meadow bounded by a brook, we got safely to Albeuve at last.

Although excessively fatigued, I would accompany my friends to Gruyere. Melancholy, little, decrepit, deserted town; ancient castle flanked with towers and ramparts. As usual, they preferred showing us abominable remnants of the past, dungeons and instruments of torture, to allowing us to linger amongst its tapestry and furniture, which are at least harmless vestiges of the olden time. The whole is now the property of a Geneva watchmaker. Such are the lessons which history teaches to the great ones of the land.

Not having absolutely the strength to go and see the Tyne disappear in the earth, I went into the hotel de l'Ange, there to await my friends' return. The first thing I saw in it was a comfortable sofa, and the first thing I did was to lay myself upon that sofa and fall asleep for a couple of hours. And then I made a capital breakfast.

About noon the visitors of the Tine's descent underground returned to fetch me in a carriage. I paid my bill, which contained a curious item—"For having reposed on the sofa, one franc." I regretted not having slept on a chair, being curious to know how much they would have charged for that less pretentious place of rest.

At three we reached Bulle, twenty-three hours after leaving it. The same idea struck us all simultaneously; namely, that the best of all things would be a bath. In truth, we had fairly earned it.

At four, we took our last repast together; and before rising from table and separating, we exchanged cards. Then only I knew that I had ascended the Moleson in company with MM. V. de Mutach (of Holligen,) Charles de Chollet (of Fribourg,) and B. Dupuy, engineer, of Lyons; while they were informed that they had vouchsafed that honor to an advocate, once mayor of the town of Calais, for which great kindness I thank them afresh.

Subsequently, passing over the Col de Balme, I visited the valley of Chamounix. Shall I ever write a description of this latter portion of my tour? I think not. The subject has been so often treated, that one is apt to believe it to be exhausted. The Moleson, on the contrary, had the advantage of having been neglected by the pens of travellers. I therefore determined to give the best account I could at least of "the Rigi of Western Switzerland."—London Society.

ADVENTURE WITH A THUG.

AN OLD OFFICER'S STORY.

I WENT out to India in the service of the Company, nearly forty years ago. I was a mere lad at that time, being barely eighteen. I left England with a determination to make something of myself in the land to which I was going; and when I reached my destination, I began immediately to apply myself to the duties of my profession. I labored hard, and soon made progress. I studied closely the manners, customs, and language of the natives, and spared no effort to make myself as thorough an Indian as possible.

It was slow work at first, but I persevered; and when I was forty-three, just fifteen years ago, I was a colonel of cavalry, and I flatter myself that I was the best informed officer in the service, with regard to the country in which I was serving.

About that time, the authorities at Calcutta were making strong efforts to suppress the sect of Thugs, who, as you well know, make murder a part of their religion. They rarely molested a European, on account of the great danger in which it would have placed them; but they carried on a regular system of operations against the natives, and especially against those who were friendly to us.

Certain sections of the country were kept in a state of the most complete terror by them; and their atrocities had increased to so great an extent that the authorities thought it necessary to at once inaugurate the most prompt and decisive measures for their suppression.

In the district of Benares, the trouble was very great, and the Thugs managed their affairs with so much dexterity, that, for a time, they completely baffled the authorities. The command of this district was given me, on account of my knowledge of Indian affairs, and my long experience in the country. I was given a regiment of mounted men, picked for their long experience in the country, and at once set out for my new command, being determined to use no half-way measures when I got there.

Upon reaching the neighborhood of Benares, we halted and encamped near the Ganges, about five miles from the city. I had two reasons for doing this.

One was, that I should be able, by encamping there, to move on the instant when occasion required it; the other, that I would be freer there from observation by the spies of the Thugs than I should be in the city. I said nothing, and permitted my men to say nothing of the cause of our coming, but at once set my spies at work.

Through their instrumentality I learned that my district was infested with a band of Thugs, quite large in number, and under the direction of a leader named Runjheet. He was described to me as the most active of all, and as one of the most dangerous men the country had ever known. I set to work at once. I scoured my district right and left, by day and night, and with good effect, too.

By the time I had been there six weeks, I had sent ten prisoners to Calcutta with their families, had hung twenty caught in the act of strangling their victims, and had destroyed one of their towns and a temple. With my own hand I broke the image of their goddess Kali into a thousand pieces, knowing that this would be a severe blow to them. This act, together with the rest of my career there, came near being fatal to me. The Thugs began to consider me the cause as well as the means of their misfortunes, and at length made me the object of their special vengeance.

When I had been in camp for about two months, my orderly informed me that there was a native waiting at the door of my tent to see me. I had him shown in at once. He was a small, spare man, of about thirty; and my first glance told me that he was possessed of more than ordinary strength. There was something unusually quiet and stealthy about him; and at first I loosened my pistol and regarded him with a suspicious glance. He did not seem to notice this, but saluted me humbly and respectfully. In reply to my demand to know his business, he stated that he wished to enter my service as a spy. He was well acquainted with the country, and was sure that he could make himself useful. He gave as his reason that his father and brother had recently been murdered by the Thugs, and that he desired to avenge them. I looked at the fellow searchingly, but could gain nothing from his countenance, which was fixed and devoid of expression, save a strange and perplexing glitter in his eyes. He told me his name was Ali, and that he was a Mahomedan. I said to him that if he would come back at the same hour the next day, I would give him my answer.

After he left me, I thought long and seriously of his request. I did not like his looks; but I thought he might be of service to me. I felt confident that, if faithful, he would make an excellent spy; and I thought myself competent to the task of watching him so closely that he would have no opportunity to play me false. So, after weighing the matter well in my own mind, I determined to engage him, but not to trust him until he should have been fully tried.

When I gave him my answer the next day, I saw his eyes flash and a smile play around his mouth. In an instant his face resumed its stolid expression. I was startled by this, and was more than ever resolved to watch the man closely.

I gave him simple and easy tasks at first. He performed them with so much skill and celerity, that I began to place more confidence in him, and gave him more difficult and important duties to perform. Thus ten days passed away. At the end of that time, I went out, one day, at the head of a small party, to follow up a scent which Ali had discovered. Toward mid-day, I chanced to be alone, having sent the men away on various errands. The heat was intense, and I dismounted from my horse and stood for a short while under a large tree, to enjoy the shade, which looked so tempting to me. I had been there scarcely ten minutes, when a rustling in the leaves above me caused me to look up. I saw a dark figure leap toward me from the tree, and, from the handkerchief which he held ready in his hand, I knew he was a Thug, and bent upon my assassination. He was so sudden and unexpected in his movements, that he might have succeeded but for a timely interposition. He had hardly sprung from the tree, when I heard the report of a rifle; and the next instant the Thug fell crashing at my feet. I looked around in astonishment to discover whence came this timely aid, and saw Ali running toward me at full speed, with his discharged rifle in his hand. He asked me anxiously, as he came up, if I were safe, and seemed gratified when I assured him I was unhurt. He listened calmly to my expression of thanks, and said he was glad to be able to show me that my suspicions of his fidelity were unjust.

I could not help blushing with mortification as he spoke, and felt heartily ashamed of having suspected him at all. I told him that he should have no occasion to feel hurt at my conduct again, as he had that day given me the best proof of his loyalty that I could desire. I could not see his face as I spoke, for his eyes were bent on the ground, and his head was lowered.

A week passed away after this, and the success which had attended our efforts suddenly deserted us. I could not account for it. My movements were as secret and as energetic as formerly, and I felt sure that we had not yet damaged the Thugs to a sufficient extent to warrant our departure; but each day recorded new failures to us. Somehow I could not help connecting Ali with our want of success, though for the life of me I could not tell why I should do so, and I did my best to banish the suspicion as ungenerous and unjust.

Toward the close of the week I sent out a party with a better prospect of success than had been vouchsafed to us during the past seven days. That night, feeling somewhat worn down by my constant exertions, I retired early, without undressing. Yet, in spite of me, I could not sleep. I was nervous and wakeful; and this state increased every moment.

I have always been a great lover of tobacco, and have found it the best remedy for nervousness I have ever used. Finding that I could not sleep, I took a large mouthful of some excellent tobacco which had been sent me from England before leaving Calcutta. As usual, it soothed me almost instantly, and gradually I fell into a doze, with the liquid which I had been chewing still in my mouth.

I could not have been sleeping very soundly, for I was awakened by a slight rustling in my tent. I endeavored to spring up, but in an instant I was seized by a powerful hand, and a handkerchief, which is the instrument used by the Thugs in their work, was twisted around my neck. I managed to thrust my left hand between the fold of the handkerchief and my throat, and thus prevented the scoundrel from strangling me at once. By a powerful effort I succeeded in gaining my feet, but the fellow hung on to me with almost superhuman strength. I was counted then one of the most powerful men in the army, and I was much larger and heavier than my antagonist; but it was just as much as I could do to keep him from mastering me.

By the dim light of the moon which struggled in through the opening of the tent, I recognized in my adversary my native spy, Ali.

Like lightning it flashed across my mind that the whole affair was a plot. Ali had been sent to win my confidence, and throw me off my guard. The shooting of the Thug, a weeks back, had been simply a part of the plot. I knew that I had a powerful and desperate man to deal with, and I nerved myself to the task before me.

The fellow's grip on the handkerchief was like that of a vice, and it seemed that he would crush my left hand. The strain on my throat was terrible, and I felt that unless it was released very speedily, I would be at his mercy.

A novel and desperate plan presented itself to me in this emergency, and I at once proceeded to put it into execution.

Bracing myself for a mighty effort, I sank back slowly, as if being gradually overcome, and Ali with a triumphant glance tightened his grip on my throat, and bent over me until his flashing eyes were just above my face. With a sudden bound I sprang forward, recovering myself, and throwing Ali backward. At the same instant I spit, with a true aim, a mouthful of tobacco juice straight into his two eyes. Thoroughly astounded and thrown off his guard, he relinquished his hold on the handkerchief, and, with a yell of pain, clapped his hands to his eyes. This was just what I had expected, and in an instant I put him out of the way of doing more harm by sending a pistol bullet through his head. The noise of the shot brought the men to my tent, and I soon found myself the recipient of innumerable congratulations.

The next morning, the expedition I had sent out returned, bringing two prisoners with them. From these I learned that my would-be assassin was no other than the notorious chief of the Thugs, Runjheet, who had sworn to take my life in revenge for the damage I had inflicted upon his sect.

In a month more I returned to Calcutta, having thoroughly accomplished the work assigned me.

THE ZOUAVE SPECTRE.—The Paris Bourse, the spot where merchants "most do congregate," has got a romance. The bill brokers and the money-changers, the bulls and the bears, the "longs" and the "shorts," have got a subject other than the price of stocks, the advance and decline in the market, etc., to talk about. The romance of the Bourse is connected with the tall and ghastly spectre of a Zouave, who, with features pale and motionless, and eyes lacking lustre and fixed, now and then appears from behind the columns, and making its way among the crowd, is seen, but not felt, as it forces a passage through the eager, striving multitude gathered around the corbeille, and then disappears. Those who have seen the figure declare that the countenance bears a strong resemblance to that of the late Duke of Orleans. It was beheld, for the first time since 1859, a short time since, and then all the oldest hands at buying and selling knew well enough that no earthly effort could make the funds go up, but that ruin, despair, and bankruptcy, would be met with on all sides. The last time the Zouave appeared, the season was one of utter despair, disgrace, and suicide, and it was with a terrible pang that the announcement of his reappearance was received! Who would have thought that this superstition, equivalent to the Black Huntsman of the Hartz, or the White Lady of Avenel, could find room to lodge itself in the narrow mind of a boursicotier? But, however improbable it may appear, the rumor has had its effect, and not only a financial panic, but a mystical terror, has seized upon a certain set of men, who could view without the smallest emotion the massacre of whole armies, were it to insure a rise in the funds of the country to which they belonged.

ON TRANSLATING THE DIVINA COMMEDIA.

SECOND SONNET.

I ENTER, and see thee in the gloom
Of the long aisles, O poet saturnine!
And strive to make my steps keep pace with thine.
The air is filled with some unknown perfume;
The congregation of the dead make room
For thee to pass; the votive tapers shine;
Like rooks that haunt Ravenna's groves of pine
The hovering echoes fly from tomb to tomb.
From the confessionals I hear arise
Rehearsals of forgotten tragedies,
And lamentations from the crypts below;
And then a voice celestial that begins
With the pathetic words, "Although your sins
As scarlet be," and ends with "as the snow."

[Atlantic Monthly.

SCENE AT THE FRENCH RACES.

WHILE the English Derby is occupying the whole attention of the horse portion of society in England, the great race at Chantilly is forming the study of the "Sport" (pronounced "Spor") of the French amateurs. The day was unpropitious—the sky gloomy and gray as that sometimes furnished by England on the like occasion of festivity. But notwithstanding this drawback the race-course was crowded with men of every class, and women also. Never was there such a display of saucer bonnets, pearls, spangles, lace, feathers, flowers, long trains, red paint, rice, powder, false hair, and obscenity, as was beheld beneath the weeping clouds on that day. "Mein Gott!" exclaimed Count Medem, "the pieuvres are more numerous than the horses!" (Ever since the publication of Victor Hugo's Travaillers de la Mer, the persons referred to bear the name of pieuvres, from their persistence in sucking every drop of blood out of the veins of the man on whom they have once fastened their suckers. These ladies who have been hooted off the race-course in the Bois de Boulogne, amply revenged themselves by appearing as splendid, if not as wise, as Solomon in all his glory. Nobody could complain of the nakedness of the land on this occasion, for the surface of the wet and muddy earth was covered with trains of the richest silk and flounces of the finest lace. It was evident that the price paid by the wearers was light enough—of less value, indeed, than the soiled and faded rags which were ruthlessly torn and trampled on by every dirty boot parading the narrow space wherein was crowding the greater portion of the vice and the folly of Paris.

The winning horse was a new one, and the betting has brought in to its fortunate owner, Delamarre, the heavy sum of $50,000! The ladies were full of tears, and many a rich lace veil and cobweb crochet handkerchief was torn in shreds by the rage and disappointment occasioned by the unexpected event. Strange to say the lucky winners of the opposite sex laughed and mocked at this despair—never reflecting that they would most assuredly have to pay. Many facetious jokes were practiced as of yore, Chantilly being so privileged a place at the time of the races that its inhabitants are glad to fly from it at that period, and leave it wholly in the hands of the merry crew from Paris. Even when the resident families do not quit their home altogether, it is the custom to send away the young ladies during the corruption of the moral atmosphere, which envelops the place as with a filthy vapor during the few days when that lovely spot, uniting every placid beauty which can charm the sense to peace and purity of thought, becomes a perfect pandemonium.

One of the most pleasant tricks performed on this particular Sunday, was that played off upon the English Marquis, who, having driven over from the chateau he has hired for the season at some little distance from Chantilly, and naturally enough wishing to see a little of the sport he had come to see, was standing eagerly gazing at the race, holding to the side of the carriage, with one foot resting on the narrow step—the other poised in air. The position displaced the basket full of bitter fruit drawn up by the side of the carriage where the Marquis and his friends were quietly gazing on the scene. The ladies, who are but seldom disobeyed, were first of all surprised, then indignant, and finally furious, at finding their summons to move out of the way wholly disregarded by the Englishmen. After having wasted much bad breath in epithets, which sounded strange enough, coming from beneath the rich lace and lovely roses with which her bonnet was adorned, the vixen declared at last that if the intruder did not move at once she would make him. The Englishman laughed at the threat, and seemed highly amused at her impotent rage. She descended from the basket heedless of the contact of the soft mud with her train of rich Lyons silk, and walked to where he stood. She was seen to place some object upon the place against which he was leaning, but, as she was clamoring loudly, and he was laughing all the time, no one thought to examine its nature. No sooner had she re-entered her basket carriage and driven at a rapid pace down the course, than a loud report was heard, followed by a tremendous shout of panic from the carriage from which the Marquis had been blown by one of those gun-cotton crackers now so much in use at the fetes champêtres round Paris, and which are more powerful than those made of powder. The offender paid dearly for his mirth; he was picked up senseless and bleeding and carried to the hotel, where he has been ever since under the doctor's care, unable to sit,, stand or walk, exactly as the fairy fury had declared he should remain as fitting punishment for disobedience to her orders. Such is the tyranny exercised over the Paris world by these Mudases, that none but a simple-minded Englishman, ignorant of their power, and regarding them as of no more account than they are in England, would have dared to dispute the high behests of that peculiar specimen of the class with whom he had the misfortune to come in contact on that day.

A TENNESSEE OLYMPIC.

IF Mr. Burke, when he mourned the departure of the age of chivalry in a celebrated passage the rhetoric of which is worthy of sounder reason, could have foreseen that chivalry would return on the 31st of May, A. D. 1866, to irradiate the State of Tennessee, in the United States of America, the prospect might have mollified the grief of his conservative and apprehensive spirit. We have before us a letter printed in the Louisville Journal, full at once of knightly emotion and grammatical solecisms, reciting the splendors of "a tournament" held at Clarksville, Tennessee, as aforesaid, on the day aforesaid, in the course of which seventeen "knights" tilted for crowns and nosegays. One horse died of a bad fall, and one chevalier was "sprained" by falling with him—an aggregate of bloody noses and cracked crowns at which we fear that Froissart would have turned up his nose and thrown down his immortal pen in contempt. But we must not be hypercritical. If no creature was killed upon this interesting occasion (except the horse) it was arranged beforehand and stipulated that the combats should not be mortal. It was a sort of militia muster, after the fashion of the Middle Ages—a highly refined and romantic kind of sham-fight, bearing about the same relation to the "tournament" which we read of that a modern circus or hippotheatron bears to the Field of Cloth of Gold. The combatants were arrayed not in iron armor but in fancy dresses, some of which, we are told, were "really magnificent," while, as we are further informed, "none were either specious or devoid of neatness." The assumption of character seems to have been a little promiscuous and not without a certain touch of anachronism. If Sir Montgomery Merrit saw fit to appear as "The Black Prince," Sir Henry Herndon was not to be restrained from figuring as "Thaddeus of Warsaw." There was "The Knight of the Fallen Banner," and there was "Sir Walter Raleigh." Mr. Longfellow will be pleased to learn that his "Hiawatha" was impersonated upon the occasion, and stands next in the roll of chivalry to "The Knight of the Silver Moon." But if the costumes were of no age in particular, the speeches—for we defy you to have an American "tournament" or an American any-thing-else without speeches—were decidedly modern, with the true wild raciness of our native eloquence.

After "the fiery horses"—we quote the uncommonly fine language of the correspondent—"after the fiery horses and their proud-crested riders had moved around the circuit two or three times in winsome, all but God like style"—(God like style is good, but it would have been better to have used a small "g")—"after they had made their exit through the western gate," they then came back again, and were "disposed in strict observance of military usage in front of the stand" to listen to the speech-making. It was "General Quarles" who "urged them on to the gentle contest in the most inspiriting terms." He said everything which he could reasonably be expected to say to animate, exalt, stimulate, and encourage these fancy warriors. He likened them to "the manly combatants of ancient Greece;" he compared them favorably with "the solid ranks of the Roman legion;" he conjured them to catch courage from the bright eyes of their fair spectators; and he ended by sublimely exclaiming: "On, then, gallant knights! The whole world is impatient to know who will be our sovereign queen of hearts and of beauty." The "whole world" may not be much interested in knowing the name, but, for the benefit of the curious few, we may state that Miss Molly Boyd was the blushing and beautiful recipient of the royal honors. She received her flowery crown from Gen. Williams, "whose address was replete with everything that the poetry of the moment demanded." The gallant letter-writer affirms that the general "caused the hearts of the young knight and the lovely queen to pulsate hymeneally, and their cheeks to be suffused in blushes." "Ah!" he exclaims, "these ceremonies sent a queer shock to many a surrounding breast." And then came something which they did not have in Athens, nor in Rome—something Bois de Gilbert never enjoyed and the Lady Rowena never presided over—"a rich, rare, and racy barbecue." The knights were hungry—the queen of beauty had an excellent appetite—the king-at-arms was extremely sharp-set—the heralds were as "peckish" as Sancho Panza—"there was more than a sufficiency of edibles, and nobody left the prandial regions unsatisfied." Then the knights, internally fortified, went back to the ring "for sober exercise," and "decapitated a manikin." Then the Chevalier Bayard, Rob Roy, Thaddeus of Warsaw, Hiawatha, and the Black Prince trotted horses "for a pair of silver spurs." After this, and to conclude, there was a ball so magnificent that the despairing correspondent informs us that "the picture could never be justly daguerreotyped save upon the tablet of memory." "We have it there fixed," he adds complacently. Happy correspondent!

But our readers have doubtless had enough of what, after all, must have been a sort of shabby-genteel spectacle, as any "tournament" in the year 1866 must necessarily be. This queer aping of knighthood—this droll resuscitation of mouldy forms—this putting on of the rag-tag and bob-tail of romance—the toy lances and the theatrical lists, the sham combats and the poor decapitated manikin—it is all about as genuine as the assumed "chivalry" which sectional vanity with ludicrous complacency laid claim to, and which common sense soon converted into a nickname.—Nation.

(For the Californian.)

MIDSUMMER.

A SAN FRANCISCO MADRIGAL.

"The air
Nimbly and sweetly recommends itself
Unto our several senses."—Macbeth.

NOW Cancer holds the fiery sun,
And Sirius flames in yonder skies,
Midsummer's languid reign's begun—
Arise, my lady sweet, arise;
Come forth ere evening's shadows fall—
But, dearest, don't forget thy shawl.

For why, methinks these zephyrs bland
Are brisk and jocund in their play.
These tears, thou may'st not understand,
Spring but from joy at such a day;
And dearest, what thou deem'st a frown
Is but to keep my beaver down.

How generous Nature kindly sifts
Her blessings free with liberal hand!
How varied are her graceful gifts;
How soft—(yes, dearest, that was sand,
A trifle—and by Nature thrown O'er this fresh signature—her own!)

Here let us sit and watch, till morn,
The fleecy fog that creeps afar
And, like a poultice, soothes the torn
And wind-bruised face of cliff and scar;
Nor fear no chill from damp nor dew,
Nor—(really! bless my soul—a-tschu!)

A sneeze—'tis nothing—what of that?
Or if I choose, in youthful guise,
To chase this lightly flying hat,
Instead of painted butterflies—
'Tis but the latitude, you know,
The season gives—well, well, we'll go,

And, when once more within our cot,
Where sweetly steams the fragrant tea,
And buttered muffins crisp and hot,
Their welcome spread for you and me;
Then, love, by fires that glitter bright,
We'll sing Midsummer's soft delight. BRET.

FEARFUL COURAGE.—One of the scions of the first families that fought in the rebellion and got "subjugated," is favoring our relatives of England, through the pages of Blackwood's Magazine, with some wonderful prodigies of valor which he performed. It is lucky for the Union cause that there were not many such wonderful charges by Confederate braves, for they would have incontinently "chawed up" our poor boys in blue. If the following exploit isn't enough to make the hair curl, our readers (says an Eastern paper) will have to turn to the pages of the veritable Baron Munchausen or poetical Scherzerade for anything to surpass it:

"Having been refused the General's permission to join in the attack, I galloped on my own account a hundred yards to the right of the road in the direction of the hostile sharp-shooters, whose particular attention I at once engaged, a number of bullets flying round my head unpleasantly quick and near. Having got within about forty yards of their position, I shouted out to them to surrender; but in the fancied security offered by the broad, foaming stream which flowed between them and their assailants, they treated my summons with defiance, and answered it only by a brace of bullets, one of which nearly cut off a lock of my hair.

"Exasperated out of all patience at this, I spurred my horse and dashed with a tremendous leap into the middle of the creek, and for a moment its waters seemed to close over my head; but quickly surmounting the torrent, my brave horse gallantly swam to the opposite shore, and, by a strenuous effort of every sinew, succeeded in scrambling up the steep bank to the high ground above. The boldness and rapidity of this feat seemed to perfectly paralyze the objects of my wrath—a corporal and a private of the Third Indiana cavalry—who, as I pounced upon them with uplifted sword, threw away their arms and begged for mercy, on their knees.

A FEMALE FIEND.

A CORRESPONDENT, writing from Paris, says that the ruffian Philippe, who is now in confinement at the Paris Tombs awaiting trial for the perpetration of eighteen assassinations, is but a parallel, so far as the number of his unfortunate victims is concerned, of a woman who lived in Paris during the rule of the Directory.

One day, at the period mentioned, the proprietor of a furnished hotel in the Rue de l'Universite, appeared before the Minister of Police, and informed that functionary that a murder had been committed in his (the hotel-keeper's) house. On the previous evening, he said, a stranger had taken a room, stating his residence to be Milan, and his purpose to spend two or three days in Paris. After ordering his baggage to be carried to his apartment, the new-comer went out, giving notice that he was going to the Odeon Theatre, and should not return to the hotel until the termination of the performance. Near midnight he reappeared, accompanied by a young and very pretty woman, dressed in male attire, who, he said, was his wife. The next morning, at an early hour, the pretended sposa left the house, requesting that her husband might not be disturbed until her return, which would be in an hour. At noon she was still absent, and, hearing nothing stirring in the room occupied by the gentleman from Milan, the landlord began to feel uneasy and rapped at the stranger's door. Receiving no answer from within, the hotel-keeper sent for a duplicate key of the apartment, upon entering which the unfortunate man was found lifeless in his bed. A doctor was hastily summoned, who, after a brief examination of the body, declared that death had been produced by a blow on the left temple, inflicted by means of a blunt instrument.

It was evident that the assassination had been committed by the woman in male attire, and every effort was made by the police to discover her whereabouts, but ineffectually. A month subsequently, another murder was perpetrated under similar circumstances, except that on this occasion the victim, also a traveller, had gone to his room quite alone. At a later hour, however, an effeminate-looking young man came down stairs, and was let out by the porter of the hotel, who remembered the fact on the following morning, when the crime was discovered. The affair caused great excitement in Paris, and redoubled exertions were made by the police to ferret out the mysterious assassin, but still without result. Eleven days afterwards, a third victim perished in precisely the same manner as the preceding two, and in the course of a few months no less than twenty men lost their lives by means so exactly identical that no doubt was entertained that the murderous blows were all inflicted by the same hand. Stung to the quick, Fouche, the Minister of Police, set all his spies to work, and offered a large reward for the discovery of the author of these unparalleled crimes.

One evening a certain B., a member of the secret police, but who had the appearance of a provincial gentleman, was passing through a narrow street of the Cite, when he encountered a handsome, equivocal-looking youth. B. stopped, turned, and said to himself, "That's a woman in male garb. If it should be she!" At the same moment the handsome stranger also turned, and smiled encouragingly.

"That settles the question," murmured the delighted spy. "Now, if I manage things cautiously, my fortune is made." And retracing his steps, he accosted the unknown:

"I have something very particular to say to you," whispered B., with a knowing leer, "but it is not possible for us to talk freely in the public street. Might I not invite you to accompany me to my hotel?"

"I suppose you take me for a woman?" was the reply, in a soft voice. "You are quite mistaken, my good sir. I don't mind having a chat with you, however; where are you staying?"

"In the Rue de l'Universite."

"Indeed! I am too well known to go there."

"I am on the right track," thought the spy. "Well, then," he said aloud, "we will go wherever you like."

"Come," replied the other. And, crossing the river, the pair presently entered a small hotel on the Place du Chatelet, engaged an apartment, and ordered supper to be served in their room.

"If I am to remain with you during your stay in Paris," said the young woman, who no longer attempted to conceal her sex, "you had better have your baggage brought here." B., overjoyed at the opportunity thus offered to lodge the necessary information at the central police station near by, at once assented to this suggestion, and declared that he would go himself and bring a box of silks he had at the other hotel. After an hour's absence he returned, accompanied by two porters, carrying on their shoulders a large and apparently heavy box, which they deposited in a corner of the room. The supper previously ordered was now served.

"Your walk must have made you thirsty," said the young woman, pouring out a glass of wine for her companion. "But before you sit down, have the kindness to give me my handkerchief, which I have left over on the sofa."

Suspecting some trick, B., while crossing the room, watched his new acquaintance closely, and saw her throw a powder into the glass of wine, which, instead of swallowing, he dexterously managed to spill on the carpet. In a few moments he showed signs of drowsiness and began to murmur incoherent words. Drawing the syren near him, he felt something in her pocket which excited his curiosity. Upon asking what it was, she produced the object—a beautiful little hammer.

"This," she said, "is an opiate of the most powerful description. I will show you presently how it puts people to sleep."

B. had fallen to the floor, in an apparent state of unconsciousness. Stooping over him, the murderess raised her anticipated victim's head, placed it in the most favorable position to render the intended blow effective, and had already raised the pretty little hammer, when suddenly the box in the corner flew open with a loud noise, and a grip of iron seized her uplifted arm. On the trial, which took place shortly afterward, the female assassin alleged, in her defence, that she had been ruined by a villain, and had sworn to be avenged upon the entire male sex. This romantic story, however, did not prevent her conviction and subsequent death on the scaffold.

LOVE'S MARTYR.

PROLOGUE.—Apartment in Lady Belmour's Mansion.

Enter Trevelyan and Edith.

Trevelyan—Edith, you are my daughter!

Edith—And you my fond papa! (They weep.)

Trevelyan—Notwithstanding the magnificence of my name, which was selected at an early age, from the Minerva Press. I am but Lady Belmour's steward!

Edith—And I, notwithstanding the ditto of my ditto, which was dittoed, at an early ditto, from the ditto ditto, am but her companion!

Enter Mrs. Spriggins.

Mrs. Spriggins—Which my Lady is a kickin' of her bucket, as the sayin' is; and hours is the word, so I will keep me awake, make some coffee, as is a drink I holds with, and keeps one's eyes open, as crowbars is a fool to.

Enter Lady Flora Vernon and Marion.

Lady Flora (muses)—My name was taken from a Friendship's Offering.

Marion (her daughter)—And mine from an Affection's Tribute.

Edith—Lady Flora! Marion! I love you both, and would be on intimate terms with you.

Lady Flora—Really, Miss Trevelyan! You are only Lady Belmour's steward's daughter; and though we respect you, we cannot yield our affection on demand.

Edith—Oh, how cruel! (Weeps.)

Enter Redgrave, a Solicitor.

Redgrave (muses)—To a Devotion's Sacrifice I am indebted for my appellation. But no matter. I have come to say that Lady Belmour has made a will, leaving everything to Marion Vernon—disinheriting her nephew, Paul Rylaud, who is her heir-at-law. (At least, it wasn't quite this, but this will do.) (Exeunt Omnes.)

Enter Trevelyan.

Trevelyan—Ha! Paul Ryland disinherited. And he owes me twenty thousand! Quick! the laudanum! (Pours laudauum into coffee-pot.) This will cause Mrs. Spriggins (whose name was certainly not selected from the Minerva Press) to sleep soundly, so that I can obtain access to Lady Belmour's room, murder her, and secure the will.

(Exit, like a bad man, as he is.)

Enter Mrs. Spriggins.

Mrs. Spriggins—Now for my coffee, as is a drink I holds with. (Drinks it, and falls asleep.)

Enter Edith.

Edith—Mrs. Spriggins asleep! Then I will keep awake. (Takes coffee, and falls asleep.)

Enter Trevelyan (like a bad man, as he is.)

(Edith wakes, and sees him enter Lady Belmour's room.)

Edith—Ha! my papa! Gracious goodness, how awful! (Screams heard from Lady B.'s room.)

Enter the Household, in dressing-gowns.

The Household—We heard screams!

Enter Somebody.

Somebody—Lady Belmour is murdered!

Every one (except Edith—Then you are the murderess!

(Exit Edith, quickly. Tablean of every one, except Edith.)

ACT I.—Evelyn's Studio at Hempstead.

(Paul Rylaud, Redgrave, and many others, discovered, having their portraits painted by Frank Mordannt.)

Mordannt—Ryland, has it ever struck you as remarkable that all our friends—Arthur, Evelyn, yourself, myself, Sir Sir Charles Ormond, and Redgrave, should have been christened from a silk-hound annual of thirty years ago?

Ryland (mildly)—Never.

Mordaunt (aside)—Supercilious puppy!

Ryland—Where is Evelyn's wife?

Mordaunt—She never appears. She never leaves the boudoir of the artist's wife, which will form the scene of the third act.

Ryland—Then I will remain until the third act.

Mordaunt—Courageous creature! You over-estimate your powers of endurance.

Enter Mrs. Mordaunt.

Mrs. Mordannt—Pickles. All serene. No flies. Walker. Also Slap-bang. Likewise Over-the-left. And How's-your-poor-feet?

Enter Sir Charles Ormond.

Sir Charles—Come, all of you, to Lady Ormond's ball to-night.

All—We will. (They do.)

ACT II.—Drawing-room at Sir Charles Ormond's.

Enter Lady Ormond (née Marion Vernon.)

Lady Ormond—Sir Charles not yet returned? Then he must be with a rival!

Enter Mrs. Spriggins.

Mrs. Spriggins—Which my daughter has run away with a artist chap, as is no better than they ought to be, as the sayin' is, as is parties as I don't hold with, through bein' that free in their ways, as the sayin' is.

Lady Ormand—Good soul, two artist chaps are coming here to-night; I don't know anything of them, but one of them is doubtless the man you seek. There are only about three artists in the world.

Enter Mordaunt.

Mrs. Spriggins—Wherever have you put my daughter, young man?

Mordaunt—Oh! I suppose you are my mother-in-law. Well, she's at home.

Mrs. Spriggins—All right, as the sayin' is.

[You see, a piece must have an under-plot.]

Enter Arthur Evelyn.

Arthur Evelyn—I am told that my wife knows something of Paul Ryland. Then she must have been his mistress! Oh, agony!

ACT III.—Boudoir of the Artist's Wife.

Enter the Artist's Wife.

[You see, she is Edith Trevelyan, who is supposed to have committed suicide immediately after the murder in the first act.]

Arthur's Wife—Oh, how I adore my husband!

(Exit Artist's Wife.)

Enter Paul Ryland and Servant.

Ryland—Send the artist's wife here. I have a message for her husband.

Enter Artist's Wife.

Artist's Wife—Ha! you are Paul Ryland, the man who instigated my excellent father to murder Lady Belmour!

Ryland—And you are the Edith Trevelyan who is accused of the murder! (Exit Paul Ryland. Artist's Wife faints.)

Enter Evelyn.

Evelyn—Ha! Paul Ryland with my wife.

(Artist's wife revives.)

Artist's wife—Yes!

Evelyn—What was he doing here?

Artist's Wife—I shall not tell you. Do not ask me. You promised me you would never ask me to tell you anything about anybody.

Evelyn—True; but I should like to know something about my wife's previous history. The first time I saw you, you were wandering in a wood, contemplating suicide, and I thought that the best thing I could do was to marry you on the spot.

Artist's Wife—It was obviously the wisest course that you could have pursued.

Evelyn—But why were you contemplating suicide?

Artist's Wife—Because I was pure, virtuous, excellent—in every way too good for this life.

Evelyn—Oh! I see. That is quite satisfactory.

(They embrace.)

Enter Lady Flora Vernon, Sir Charles and Lady Ormond, and guests from the Ball.

All—Edith Trevelyan, you are the murderess of the Lady Belmour, whose name was taken, as we all know, from the Devotion's Ecstacy for 1836!

Artist's Wife—Wow!

Artist—I also remark, Wow!

ACT IV.—The Fence's Cellar.

[Lights down. Trevelyan discovered, measuring diamonds in a quart pot.)

Trevelyan—I am a Fence, and a Fence it is extremely difficult to get over. (Knock.)

Enter Winwood and Sir Charles Ormond.

Winwood—Give up the will, and Sir Charles will give you five thousand pounds.

Trevelyan—Never!

Enter Paul Ryland.

Ryland—Give it to me, and I will give you ten thousand.
Sir C.—So will I.
Ryland—Ha! Then we will all fight for it!
(Pulls out pistols.)
Somebody—Never!
Somebody Else—It shall be so!
Somebody—It shall not!

[They all take up weapons, and proceed to fight for the will. Somebody snaps a pistol which, of course, misses fire, and Somebody Else falls mortally wounded. At this moment, who should come into the cellar but All The Characters, with a candle.]

All The Characters—We see it all. The old Fence was Edith's Father, who murdered Lady Belmour, that the property might go to her nephew, who owed Trevelyan twenty thousand pounds! Edith is innocent, and circumstantial evidence is again at fault.

Trevelyan (dying)—More than this, Edith is Lady Belmour's child!

Sir Charles Ormond—(Only I don't see it myself.) Then she is my sister!

[General Rapture, Final Chorus, and Comic Dance, by All The Characters.]

CURTAIN. [London Fun.

THE ART OF HOSPITALITY.

OUR country boasts of her wide-spread system of education, and well she may. We are all proud of it, and other nations respect and honor us for it. But in that branch of education which it is impossible to acquire at schools and colleges, nay, which schools and colleges, by necessitating separation from home, cause to be neglected—in social refinement it is needless to deny Americans are too far behind the rest of the civilized world. It is remarkable, for example, how great an effect the manner in which a guest is welcomed has upon the pleasure of his visit; it is quite as true that the manner in which his host takes farewell of him at its termination has much to do with the pleasure of its recollections. Homer, long ago as he lived, and beggar as he was, finely expressed what was due to the guest from the host when he said:

"True friendship's laws are by this rule expressed:
Welcome the coming, speed the parting guest."

Welcome the coming guest; welcome him with a few, simple, pleasant, easy words; without ostentatious cordiality; without gushing declarations of friendship; without paralyzing his arm by an interminable shaking of hands; without hurry or flourish, or undue anxiety to have his trunk carried up to his room, or sandwiching between every sentence an anxious appeal to make himself entirely at home—an appeal which usually operates to make one feel as much away from home as possible. There are few prospects more dismal to a man who arrives by the stage at the country-house of his bosom friend than the spectacle of the bosom friend's door overflowing with the bosom friend's wife, maiden sisters, decrepit aunts, and children of all sizes—all waiting with palpitating hearts to receive the bosom friend's bosom friend—treading on one another's toes, and squeezing and struggling to have a sight of him and to lead on the attack upon his nerves. To have to run a gauntlet of welcomes from this affectionate but misguided family is quite enough to unstring him for the whole fortnight. See, in this dilemma, what the poor guest has to undergo. First, to the flowing over upon him of the bosom friend; then to the flowing over of the partner of the bosom friend's bosom; then to the screaming into the deaf ears of the antediluvian members of the household; then to kissing the smeared faces of the younger, and the boisterous greetings of the older children. When at last the victim has reached his room, he is totally unfit to play the agreeable, and, if he be aught of a cynic, he has a feeling of disgust and sensations anything but homelike. Throughout his visit he is so anxiously watched over lest he should not "feel at home," that he had far better be at once immured in one of our receptacles for convicts, where he can at least be surly without breach of etiquette. This constant taking it for granted on the part of the host and his family that one is not comfortable, and that they must hurry about and take all responsibility (and all self-helpfulness) from the guest, thus depriving him of the credit of common sense, is something worthy of indignation; all the more so because politeness forbids the least sign of impatience. It is ill-bred, it is not decent. It is insulting to the guest, and he would serve the author of such treatment right if he cut him thereafter without ceremony. And yet how many of our well-meaning, and in most things well-bred, people, fall into the error that unless they are constantly on the alert, unless they establish a kind of espionage over their guest, and watch his every movement, lest he should brush his own coat or take a seat for himself, they will be wanting in the courtesies of hospitality!

Perhaps the most trying ordeal of all is the parting scene. In the first place, the guest has to undergo a searching cross-examination as to why he is going and where he is going; then come repeated appeals to stay "just two days more," and the imaginations of the hosts are exhausted to present attractions that will induce a change of plan; this is followed (when the effort to persuade the guest to alter his decision has failed) by expressions of the ecstacy with which the visit has filled their breasts and the equally harassing grief with which they regard his departure. As he goes to the door he is followed by his well-meaning persecutors, who, as he departs, crowd over the threshold without regard to each other's feet or dresses; and the poor man, walking away, feels a morbid consciousness of being watched out of sight by his bosom friend's affectionate family.

The art of hospitality consists in putting the guest at his ease; and this does not mean telling him to be at his ease. It consists in making him forget that he is a guest, and not in constantly pushing the fact before his eyes. And it also consists in leaving to him the exercise of his senses and of responsibility, at least so far that, finding what he needs at his hand, he may help himself.—Round Table.

BEETHOVEN.

BORN in Bonn, in 1771, the life of Beethoven was contemporaneous with that great intellectual development in Germany which has made it such a power in the present century. While Herder and Lessing and Goethe breathed a new spirit into criticism and philosophy, Gluck and Bach and Mozart and Handel led the way to that eminence in music which Germany has ever since maintained; and Beethoven carried on the work they began. Like a being who has descended from an ideal world to redeem this, he was in perpetual struggle with the past; and his early days in Bonn, before he had attained a full consciousness of his task in life, were his only happy ones. They were to him, as has been so well said, what the sweetly fanciful larghetto of his second symphony has been to the world, an undisturbed, because unconscious, happiness. His father and grandfather were musicians before him, and he showed early great musical genius. At the age of fifteen he was made organist of the court chapel at Bonn, and at the age of twenty-two went to Vienna to study under Haydn. Mozart had died a year before, and it was only once, on a flying tour to Vienna, in the winter of 1786–7, that Beethoven met him; and how Mozart recognized his genius is illustrated by a curious anecdote. Beethoven had acquired much reputation for his improvisations upon the piano, an exercise in the genuiness of which Mozart had no real belief, fancying that the pieces to be played were secretly agreed upon beforehand. He resolved, therefore, to test Beethoven, and gave him as a subject a chromatic figure, the motive of which contained the opposite subject of a double figure. Beethoven instantly detected the deception, and, reversing the motive, improvised a regular double figure; and the lively Mozart slipped away into an adjoining room to say to those he found there that here was a youth the world would hear of.

The placid mind of Haydn, however, could less understand the soaring genius of Beethoven, and they soon separated The immediate cause of the rupture, indeed, is said to have been the fact, which Beethoven one day accidentally discovered, that Haydn neglected to correct his errors. That was, in Beethoven's eyes, a crimen læsæ artis, and he broke from him at once; and when, notwithstanding, it was suggested to him afterwards, at Haydn's instance, that in the compositions which he was publishing he should call himself Haydn's pupil, his proud, curt reply was that he had indeed taken lessons of Haydn, but had learned nothing from him. And that answer is the key to his subsequent career, with its ceaseless effort to ascend up out of the present and out of the past to dwell in newer regions and among sublimer thoughts.

In the midst of a corrupt city and a still more corrupt court, in an age of license, exposed to all the seductions which beset genius of an order like his, he preserved ever a lofty virtue and a hatred of whatever was impure or even equivocal. Thrown, as he was, into every-day contact with the proudest and richest nobility in Europe, rank and wealth remained to him ever matters of absolute indifference, mere accidents of this temporal material life. Hence, in his political sentiments he was practically a republican. A devout reader of Plato, he longed to see all institutions modelled upon the plan prescribed in the "Republic." "Plato's Republic," says Schindler, "was transfused into his flesh and blood." It was his firm belief that it was Napoleon's real intention to republicanize France upon similar principles; and it was not till the news came that Napoleon had caused himself to be proclaimed Emperor of the French that he was undeceived; when, tearing off the title-page of his Sinfonia Eroica, containing the dedication of that work to Napoleon, which he was just on the point of despatching to Paris, he flung it upon the floor with a torrent of execrations. The tragic end of the great conqueror, however, is said to have reconciled Beethoven to him, for, as he remarked, he had predicted it himself in the "Dead March" of this symphony.

At Toplitz, in 1812, he was walking one day with Goethe, when they saw at a distance the whole Imperial family approaching. With his usual stately deference, Goethe stepped aside and stood with his hat off, bending low, until they had passed him. Beethoven, on the contrary, pressed his hat yet more firmly on his head, and walked, with folded arms, through the thickest of the throng. Princes and pages made a path for him, the Arch-duke Rudolph took off his hat, and the Empress bowed. There may be a difference of opinion upon the question of manners, but there can be none as to the honesty of Beethoven's convictions.

Helpless and awkward in every movement, spilling inkstands over his piano, breaking furniture when it came in his way; so tempestuous in his anger that if a waiter brought him the wrong dish of meat he would throw it, gravy and all, in his face, or if his cook gave him musty eggs for his soup would spatter her with them from head to foot; dashing the water over himself in his rooms in such floods that scarcely any one would have him for a lodger; sending a lady who had asked for a lock of his hair a tuft of goat's hair, and then apologizing when she discovered the deception, and never afterward speaking to the person who had suggested it to him; suddenly quitting a summer retreat, where he was supremely happy, because his host persisted in making him profound bows whenever he met him in his walks; constantly changing his abode from the north side of the city in May to the south side in August, and often having three lodgings at a time; this small, thin man, with his head covered with bushy gray hair, and little brown eyes flashing bright or fixed and motionless as his thought possessed him, with long furrows in his chin, laughing like an ape in the midst of the wildest disorder, books and music and half-eaten luncheons and half-emptied bottles, sketches for quartettes and Stracchino cheese, all mixed up together, deaf, and cheated and slandered—this great man, who they said never loved, though he never lived an hour without loving; who they said was parsimonious, though, if he saved any money at all, it was for a dissolute nephew who would have left him to die alone—this abused Beethoven, who looked upon Handel as the greatest composer that ever lived, who silenced bores with a sarcasm and forgot his pupils for weeks together, and in his philosophical discussions would never permit the mention of thorough-bass or religion, which he declared were exhausted subjects—this man, so full of contradictions and absurdities and genius, was one of the kindest and purest of human beings. He who can comprehend his noble heart will not fail, as Schindler well says, to rank the man as high as the artist.

Sorrow illumined by the reconciling light from above, the martyrdom of earth glorified—that was Beethoven, says one of his critics. And the sorrow of earth, how it followed him to the end! In the summer of 1826, his nephew, driven desperate by his bad courses, attempted suicide, a crime which the law in Austria ascribes to a defect in religious education. The case was investigated, and the unfortunate youth committed to the charge of his uncle, with the injunction to leave Vienna in twenty-four hours. Returning home in the autumn, Beethoven caught cold, and his last sickness came upon him. He kept his bed, and his nephew went off to the billiard rooms and told the marker at one of them to send a physician to his uncle; but the marker was himself taken sick before he could do so, and, being carried to the hospital, remembered his commission, and the attending surgeon set off instantly to visit Beethoven. But it was too late; several days had elapsed, and the hand of death was heavy upon him. Yet his eccentricity never left him. When the landlady brought him an almanac to prove that the week was up and his rent was due, he sang the interrogatory motive of the quartette in F, op. 135, "Must it be?" and the woman, entering into his humor, stamped with her foot and said, "It must be!" and those words now stand in the superscription of the work.

The last thing he did was to make his nephew, who had so infamously abandoned him, his sole heir, and then musing said: "Do you hear the bell? The scene is shifting;" and it shifted, indeed, for the next act opened upon another world, whence we still seem to hear the echo of his words: "For my works I fear not. No evil can befall them. Whosoever shall understand them shall be freed from the misery that burdens mankind."—Nation.

WHITTIER'S CREED.—John G. Whittier, the Quaker poet, finding himself quoted as authority for certain theological opinions, writes to The Friend, the organ of his denomination: "Painfully sensible of my own moral infirmities and liabilities to error, I instinctively shrink from assuming the office of teacher and guide to others. I simply wish to say that my ground of hope for myself and for humanity is in that Divine fullness of love which was manifested in the life, teachings and self-sacrifice of Christ—the Way, the Truth and the Life. In the infinite mercy of God so revealed, and not in any work or merit of our nature, I reverently, humbly, yet very hopefully trust. I regard Christianity as a life rather than a creed; and in judging of my fellow-men I can use no other standard than that which our Lord and Master has given us. 'By their fruits ye shall know them.' The only orthodoxy that I am specially interested in is that of life and practice. On the awful and solemn theme of human destiny I dare not dogmatize; but wait the unfolding of the great mystery in the firm faith that, whatever may be our particular allotment, God will do the best that is possible for all."

NOTICE.

The publication of "The Californian" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

White & Bauer, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for The Californian in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch, at reasonable rates.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JULY 21, 1866.

Full volumes of The Californian, from the commencement, can be obtained at the office, 532 Merchant street. Price, in muslin, $4 per volume; two volumes (one year) bound together, $7. Unbound, per volume, $3.

AN "ALTA CALIFORNIA" CRITIC.

AMIABILITY and good humor have been the characteristic features of the Alta California newspaper. A bland acquiescence in the views of the majority, a benignant zeal in trivialities, and a general disposition to treat all mankind in the light of possible advertisers and contingent subscribers, have been its proud specialities. Whether we consider the incessant jocularity of the reportorial columns—whose levity can lighten even the austerity which is supposed to surround the Police Court docket—the mild innocuousness of its theatrical and musical criticisms, or the saccharine rhetoric and flattering personalities of its correspondence, we must feel with Sampson Brass that here at least "all is happiness and joy." The few low Bohemian scribblers who assert that this good-humored laxity extends also to the forms of composition, and that even the governing powers of the verb are invested in the Alta office with a singular mildness, do so from sheer envy of that equanimity which surrounds respectability.

But we have been amazed and shocked at a certain criticism of a book of poems by Sarah E. Carmichael, reviewed in that paper on Sunday last. We have long been familiar with the poetry of the Alta California—indeed in the instance of a sonnet by "Natoma," published the same day, the world has enjoyed a like familiarity for many years, erroneously ascribing the poem to one of the standard English poets—and we expected that the good humor which accepted "Amelie's" "Trip to Calistoga," would extend some appreciation to the talented young Mormon girl who sang of the Wasatch Mountain. But here we were mistaken. The Wasatch Range does not advertise in the Alta, and Miss Carmichael foolishly occupied herself with such subjects as hills, sunsets, clouds, Providence, God's goodness, and loyalty, which, with the exception of the latter, have but little pecuniary relations with that newspaper. For this she is austerely reprimanded. She is told that there is nothing in her volume "that can be considered as sufficiently meritorious to take a permanent place in our language—and poetry is of that nature that unless it deserves to be immortal it scarcely deserves publication." Admitting for the present the truth of this latter original and startling proposition, we sincerely congratulate "Amelie" on the immortality which her description of that "Paradise where there's Eves without number" entitle her to, and we trust that "Natoma" may share with her the like felicity for verses which are not only good enough to "deserve publication," but even republication.

But a more careful examination of the criticism shows us that we are perhaps hasty in attributing to the Alta California any change in its uniform mildness. We have here the attitude but not the execution of the critic. We are told that "it is true that great poets have written much trash, and Byron and Milton have published much that is no better than the average of Miss Carmichael's pieces, but their reputations were made by their best compositions." This last statement which looks like a truism, is actually untrue in both illustrations—notoriously so in the case of Byron, whose reputation was made by the "English Bards and Scotch Reviewers," a comparatively unpopular satire, wrung from him by a criticism, similar to the above, in the Edinburgh Review's notice of his "Hours of Idleness." "Perhaps," adds the critic, "they had produced nothing immortal when they were at her age; but if so, their friends should not have advised publication." How this test of immortality was to be applied at an early age, before publication and posterity had settled the question, we are not told. It is the "attempt and not the deed" that evidently "confounds" us, according to the Alta. But we are informed that Miss Carmichael's book "is better than most of the volumes issued from the press, but that fact is not sufficient." It is evident that nothing but immortal literature is tolerated for an instant in the Alta office. "She may hereafter," doubtfully but amiably continues our critic, "attain eminence, especially if she does not allow herself to be satisfied or convinced by the partial or insincere praise of her friends."

After this, it is evident that there is but one thing for Miss Carmichael to do, and that is, to go home, have a good cry, abstain from print, and set herself about something immortal. How this is to be achieved, or recognized when achieved, is perhaps not altogether clear. If we might venture to suggest anything, it would be length, which to many critics is the sine qua non of immortal composition. Perhaps in thirty or forty years Miss Carmichael might win commendation from the Alta, if Providence prolongs its already senile condition. But if, on the contrary, she foolishly persists in writing and publishing; if she hearken to insincere friends who believe that there is one glory of the sun and another of the moon, and that "one star differeth from another in glory;" if she listen to those vagrant Bohemians and dissolute men of letters who can recognize the beauty of the anemone and violet without disparagement of the rose; if she is satisfied to take place with those charming singers of all ages who have made the world musical with their simple numbers, and yet have died and been forgotten; if she choose to reflect that our best poets have been loved and honored, not for the most ambitious monuments they have left, but for their simpler songs; that all have commenced humbly, and that criticism like the above has obtained and will obtain as long as Providence permits this faculty to survive the wreck of the others, she may, if she does not achieve immortality, at least, through her simple freshness and melody, make us more tolerant of a mortality which we are obliged to share with the Alta California.

[For the Californian.]

TO AND FRO.

No. 2.

A RAILROAD trip is a matter of very ordinary occurrence to half San Francisco, but to a person of my sedentary habits, whose life hitherto spent between home and office has been as regular as the vibration of a pendulum, it is an event of some importance.

As we moved off, Betty pretended—I am sure it was all pretence—that she felt no undue excitement; but I knew from her change of expression that she was not as easy in feeling and as peaceful in anticipation as she is when seated in her cane-bottomed chair, rocking in cadence with the airs she usually sings when so seated. Such a woman as Betty is, domesticated as she is, and having almost a feline attachment to the spot she calls home, nevertheless carries into the world that sublime feeling of self-confidence, of aplomb, and I may add, moral muscle for all ordinary exigencies, that shows, at least I think so, a very rare mind. I am frequently, as I see the exercise of this self possession; see her standing up arithmetically, so to speak, in her altercations with the butcher, alleging unfair additions of dimes to the bill, and an undue proportion of bone in his partition of steaks; when I see her spirit on these occasions; see her expression of quiet energy, I must confess I feel a sort of awe of Betty. Let me add here, suggestively to such of my readers as have suspicions of their butchers, that Betty's plan of weighing her meat is a capital improvement in the family machine. One can easily see that Betty wears the trousers, and that I stand, so far as the home deportment goes, on precisely the same plane of discipline as the children. I submit, because in submission there is peace. If there were more men of my resignation to, and acceptance of circumstances, Commissioners Love, Rogers, and Taylor would find a very considerable reduction of their mensal incomings. A married man who sees his ménage conducted with order and economy; the household government administered with regularity and ease, and revenue and appropriations moving equally—the difference, if there is any, in favor of the credit side of the sheet; I say, under these circumstances, a man naturally yields his own position as the head of the household, and gives a cheerful and willing obedience to the wife; in a word becomes her subject.

Betty pretended she was as calm and as much at her ease as if she had been a conductor of the road since its construction, but I knew that, at heart, she was uneasy, and secretly wished herself back to her domain of pots, kettles, children, Joe, and myself. May she forgive me if I triumphed in my sleeve at the idea of having found one thing in the world that could frighten her. If I ever should owe her a spite, I'll certainly coax her on a railroad. When the steam-whistle made some convulsive shrieks, and Betty saw the brakesman turn a wheel with a corresponding screwing of his face—setting in motion a diabolical rattling of chains, I thought then her equanimity would be destroyed, and that fear would break down the sovereign and bring the woman uppermost. I attempted some words of comfort and assurance, to which she answered only by a half-derisive smile. I looked again and saw she had recovered her aplomb, and then she reigned again, supreme, fearless, and unquestioned. As a hen protects her brood, widening her feathers until every chick has found a cover from the swooping hawk, so did Betty morally reach out and gather us all in her protecting embrace. I saw her then, in the clear sky of her self-possession, towering above Telegraph Hill—or even Mount Diablo—sublimely great, a vast moral pyramid.

I do not want the reader to suppose that my life is limited, and always has been, to the narrow boundaries of the little office of B. C. & Co. It is true that during twelve long years I have sat on one single stool in the aforesaid office, between the hours of nine A. M. and five P. M., barring an interregnum of a half-hour each day for tiffin. And even during these years, in moments of leisure, I have had eyes through the window which looks over the street; and, if I lean back ever so little on my stool, I can see the stretch of water which lies beyond Angel Island, the shore of Contra Costa, and the yellow mountains more inland. These natural beauties have the effect of leading me away from my narrow surroundings—lifting me to a higher, clearer, and more golden clime. Besides all these, I have resources within myself, recollections of happier days and lands, and anticipations of a brighter life beyond the present, which make me cheerful, kind to human frailties, very human in all my thoughts and sympathies, and which reconcile me to the humble life I now lead. There are, too, a thousand little objects about me at the store which are, as enchanted horses, carrying me from the dust and the harsh, sad winds of this town to brighter lands. The little pyramids of oranges which John, one of the clerks, arranges so tastefully in the show-window, are as one of these aforesaid hippogriffs translating me to islands beyond the sea—lovely Edens peopled by types with long flowing hair, and skins burnished with cocoa oil. Then, again, I straddle a nutmeg, and am in a moment idling among the islands of the Indian Seas, cooled by "spicy breezes," and embowered by jessamine and japonica—the air filled with the songs of birds.

It is too often the case that men are measured according to their mode of life and business. It is supposed that a lawyer, for example, who is, like my lady in Gil Blas, "given to disputation;"—whose life is passed in contentions wrangling on construction, presumptions of law, and absurd limitations of the speech of witnesses—and who is seen usually with a law volume under his arm, is learned, not only in the wide range of knowledge peculiar to his profession, but in the sciences, arts, dialectics, geography, physiology, etc. I think I can point out in this town, among these attorneys, many examples of the absurdity of what I call—the theory of appearances. And, too, in the medical profession the same popular fallacy is seen. A bargain with a policeman to call him in all cases occurring in his department where a physician may be necessary or a puff possible; a showy horse; lips opulent in technology; the assumption of a strong and controlling religious sentiment, to secure admission to the Catholic hospitals—perhaps an attitude of devotion and moving of the lips at the bedside of the patient; an intimacy with a local reporter, and, as a sequitur, an item in the Midday Clamor, describing the success of a wonderful operation by Doctor Sawbones—no less than an incision of the sternum, taking out the right lung, clearing it of all tuberculization, hanging it up to dry, and then putting it back again. Now, from these data is frequently raised a reputation which builds substantial, paying brick houses. I am disposed to think the medical is the grossest of humbuggery. By this rule of judgment, because I announce myself a clerk, most people would suppose me, morally and intellectually, no larger than a salt bag—a person who has no capacity to enjoy—indeed, who has no business to enjoy any pleasure beyond Celeste's rope-walking, and whose tastes for recreation lift him no higher than the tan of a circus ring and the threadbare jests of its clown. Sympathy with all that is beautiful; genuine emotion; the humanity that reaches the farthest corner of the strange human heart; appreciation of the illuminated words God has written everywhere, whether in the physical or animal world, and of the harmony which pervades the universe; smiles in unison with joy and tears for human griefs, and the rainbow which lifts itself from out these same tears, arching away over to the unknown world beyond this one—these are felt, thought, and seen oftener over the pages of the clerk's ledger than perhaps people usually think. If Betty's Aunt Curtis, who is expected to make her sole legatee of a fortune of a few thousand dollars, should die, and her last will and testament does not belie our hopes, with the seat at the Opera, a pew at the Cathedral, and a town and country house—with these accomplishments, graces, and acquisitions—what dear, good, kind and fashionable folks Betty and I would be, and how sweet our boys! Let me say, by way of premonition, that Betty had a letter the other day, stating that her aforesaid aunt was ailing, and, "poor thing," the writer continued, "we fear she'll not last long." If death does happen to go Aunt Curtis' way, and her testament should show an unreserved and unconditional bequest of her personalty to Betty, I'll throw B. C. & Co. to the— No; they are kind to me, and I wish them well. I will only throw a somerset off the stool and reappear here in these columns as a dolce far niente fellow—wearing good and fashionably cut clothes, lounging among the brokers on Montgomery street, and perhaps quizzing pretty girls—and with the eye, but the eye only, measure and compare female ankles.

I have often wondered and as often wished it could be made an experiment, how Betty and I would meet the sunshine springing from a respectable heap of golden eagles. Would she cling still to the old rocker and sing "Indiana," while the meshes of her Nubie increased under steady manipulation? Would she go bareheaded to the street gate and brandish a moral and vocal sort of pugilism in the face of the butcher? would she follow the entire half-dollar into the vegetable man's hands and see the return of her change to a fractional nicety? would she still wear rep, and with her own hands replace buttons on the boys' jackets, patch their pants, and darn the rents in her gowns? These are the necessities of a domestic life narrowed by scarcely moderate means, and which, although tolerable from habit and a cheerful going out of the mind and heart to meet the duties of our condition, are gladly laid down if we can lay them down. There is a certain sort of harshness in labor—labor which commences with the sun, and which is scarce put aside until the long shadows of the day are lost in the twilight; and there are very few who would not gladly stop the Juggernaut we Americans set up in our stores or houses ere its wheels crush us. I am sure I would. I would gladly lift myself up, away above carking cares and the sharp disputes I am too frequently compelled to have with Fortune.

——"Oh, most sad,
That dry drudgery at the desk's dead wood."

The ride by the San José railroad, as the locomotive plunges through the suburbs, is not at all calculated to stir much emotion of a pleasant sort. I am always cheerful under the pressure of annoyances, and disposed to put the best expression and construction on everything; but I really cannot recommend to the genteel idler the journey through the shambles at the terminus of Brannan street. I doubt if a like condition of disgusting filth can be encountered anywhere in the world. Democracy is all well enough—that is, that freedom of action which leaves the human mind untrammelled to work out a high civilization; but the right to build pest-houses where you please, so long as you avoid the dry goods and jewelry stores, is open to challenge. Carnivorous people might, as a matter of theory, suffer the erection of slaughter-houses at a safe distance leeward of their homes and wonted walks; but let them practically, and with their own proper eyes, see the sights and smell the odors seen and smelt at the aforesaid locality, and, my word for it, they will petition the Board of Supervisors to send these shambles to the Faralloues, if not into the great deep. I am now a proselyte to Graham's theory, to the disgust of our butcher and the loss to him of some few dimes weekly.

Emerging from this Golgotha—not only a place of skulls but blood, albeit only of animals—you pass on, not to "where every prospect pleases," but to a series of landscapes where the controlling and central points are environed by accessories that would destroy any view. If you fix your eye on a stretch of water, bounded at its furthest limit by a delicious mountan outline, and then move forward through the middle distance to the foreground—your every step is by low mud-flats, bleak, stony hills, a dry and fissured earth where nothing grows at this season of the year but thistles; dust whirling over the fenceless roads; small and irregularly built houses; naked quarries looking with their red oxide like great bloody gashes in the hill sides, and too frequently chill mists—

"Phantom fleets they seem to me,
From a shoreless and unsounded sea."

swooping over the whole scene, looking like a great shroud to cover a dead earth. See these things and confess to not only a buttoning of the coat you wear, but a half, aye, an entire dropping of the lid, and then the opening of one's "mind's eye" to the delicious freshness and newness of a home summer scene; green lawns and hawthorn blossoms; broad rivers sweeping through fresh and sunny meadows, and the refreshing breath of summer showers—scenes amid which I passed the first segment of my life, and which are to me now "Meccas of the mind."

On the east side, rounding from the Mission, there is a stretch of water view terminating with the fringe of oaks on the Contra Costa shore and the bold hills rising sharply behind, which is noticeable. On the seaside, too, there are bits of landscapes without the offence of prominent drawbacks, over which the eye lingers with pleasure, especially that which looks down the ravine running to Lake Mercéd, away on to the farthest apparent limits of the sea; but even here a hill of sand, separating the waters of the lake from from the sea, chills the warmth of the picture and pains the æsthetic eye. There is one feature peculiar to a California landscape which runs a great way towards compensation for the loss of that delightful charm and passionate glow found in the verdure of the East—I mean purity of atmosphere. Nowhere do skies seem so distant and profound, and objects so boldly defined—standing out with such grand and inexpressible salience—as here, under a firmament of boundless amplitude and a depth of space, as if Eternity gleamed through and through, passionless, mysterious, infinite.

As we pass on to the San Mateo country, away from the masses of clouds which, at this season are so dense over San Francisco, the mountains are seen in all their power and detail—merely a part of the landscape—for they have a clear colorless sky in which to show themselves, almost cloudless, while in the temperate climes the skies fall, as it were, to within a short distance of earth—settling even on the apices of the hills—flat rather than concave. We can apply the illustration of domelike here to the heavens, but to no part of the orient north of Florida.

KUZZILBASH.

AMUSEMENTS.

AT Maguire's Opera House, Rosedale, or The Rifle Ball, was produced, certainly with the "full strength of the company," on Monday night—Miss Kate Denin, Mrs. Sophie Edwin, Mrs. Harry Jackson, Mrs. Franks, Mrs. Smitten, Mrs. Wood, and Messrs. Courtaine, Thompson, Thayer, Franks, Anderson, Ned Thayer, young Harry Jackson, and the "Rifle Ball," with the whole supernumerary force, appearing therein. The play is full of action and incident, without possessing any literary merit or originality of plot worthy of notice. It is a laborious piece of dramatic mosaic work, ingeniously dovetailed together, and galvanized with diluted sentiment. But its rapid action, and more particularly its strength of cast, made it very acceptable to the audience, and kept up the interest to the end.

Sheridan Knowle's fine play of The Hunchback, on Thursday evening, formed a strong contrast, with its splendid diction, pure poetic sentiment, and strongly drawn characters, to the tinsel of Rosedale. This play was admirably personated.

John Brougham's new comedy, of excellent repute, Playing with Fire, was produced last evening for the benefit of Miss Kate Denin. The early hour at which our paper retires to the press-room—which is one of THE CALIFORNIAN'S regular habits—prevents our speaking advisedly of the result of Miss Denin's appeal to the public; but, if the lady received her just reward, there was not a vacant seat in the Opera House last night.

Playing with Fire will be repeated this afternoon. This evening, Mr. Robert Bryant takes a benefit, and "Jack Sheppard" and his fellows will tread the stage in the drama of that name. During the coming week, a new play, entitled The Female Detective, in which Miss Denin will appear in six characters, will be brought out. Lees and Johnson will have to look to their laurels. Uncle Tom's Cabin, also, will be revived, with Miss Denin as "Topsy."

—

THE members of the Howson Opera Troupe, having mastered their colds, gave us Wallace's Maritana, at Maguire's Academy of Music, on Saturday, Monday and Tuesday evenings, very successfully; and appeared to much better advantage than on their initial performance. In Maritana they displayed ability of a higher order than that for which the public was inclined at first to give them credit. Space will not permit us to individualize their particular merits; we can only say that the principal artistes gave their audiences an agreeable surprise. The proof of this was in the abundance of applause and the frequent encores bestowed. Maritana, like Somnambula, was excellently produced. Both the orchestra and chorus were full and efficient. The stage effects and the scenery were very good. The brushes of the Tornings gave us some new and beautiful scenes; and the experience of Stage Manager Tibbetts was observable in the general perfectness of the stage arrangements.

Faust, in English, was sung on Wednesday and Thursday evenings, and, as was feared, the music of Gounod was too severe a test for this young troupe. Its rendition was not a fortunate one. The Howson Troupe should confine their efforts to the lighter operas to secure success. Young and inexperienced to the stage, they cannot be ranked with the "grand" troupes, though the principal artistes certainly possess sweet, flexible voices, and musical culture sufficient to render the English and the lighter class of operas effectively, and to the general satisfaction of their audiences. Maritana was repeated last night; and the ever popular Bohemian Girl will be produced to-night—with the addition of Mr. S. W. Leach to the company, who is the best "Devilshoof" that ever appeared in this city. We bespeak for this opera an able representation. The Howson Troupe sing every evening during the week; and will repeat the Bohemian Girl on Monday evening.

—

AT the Metropolitan, the Biancha Italian Opera season was inaugurated with brilliant success, by the representation of Ernani on Tuesday, and Il Trovatore on Thursday evening, to crowded and enthusiastic audiences. Both operas were put upon the stage in a style hitherto unequalled at this theatre. With new scenery and costumes, a chorus increased in number and admirably trained, and an orchestra under the very efficient leadership of Mr. Herold, a high standard of excellence is established at the outset in departments which, in former seasons, have often been weak. Our resident artists, Signorina Brambilla, Signora and Signor Bianchi, were also in fine voice, and have never, we think, appeared to such advantage. Of the two new singers, Signori Guiseppe Mancusi and Stanislaus Milleri, the public seem to have formed but one opinion, indicated by hearty and prolonged applause at every opportunity; they have leaped at once into high favor, and may hereafter sing with absolute certainty of a cordial welcome. We have not space this week for an extended and critical examination of their respective merits, nor would such a review be quite just until they have been heard in a greater variety of characters and styles than Verdi's two best known operas afford. For the present we will only say that, while both voices are of noble and manly quality, and true to the pitch, that of Milleri is naturally full, smooth, and rather ponderous, as if given forth without much effort from a powerful chest; but Mancusi, not only in voice, but in general style, makes up for the want of natural power and weight by keen dramatic force, articulation, and admirable management of the breath. Of the two, we should take him for the more experienced artist.

The regular subscription nights will hereafter be Monday, Wednesday and Friday. This evening, Norma will be given as an extra performance, with Signorina Brambilla, M'lle Louise Tourney, Signor Bianchi, and Signor Milleri, in the principal characters; and will undoubtedly be repeated in one of the regular nights next week.

—

That great collection of pathological wonders—Dr. Jordan's Anatomical Museum—is on exhibition every day and evening at Eureka Hall, Montgomery street. Open on Sunday from two to ten P. M. Dr. Jordan lectures on the organization of the human body every Sunday evening.

COUNTERFEIT CRITICISM.

A CONTRIBUTOR to the New York Citizen over the signature of "Whittlestick" writes:

I had a dream in which my wildest desires, my highest aspirations, were realized. I became an editor; and thought I was perusing a paper published in Dream Land called the Rowntaybul. In that paper, in my dream, I read this critique:

"We have received a poem professing to be 'after the Sanskrit,' entitled 'A Samurliphe.' Our acquaintance with that tongue being but slight, we are unable to give the English equivalent for the caption. The poet writes under the anonym of Longphello. We have not room for the entire poem, but will take three or four stanzas at random, as a basis for our criticism. Here is one:

'Tell me not in mournful numbers
Life is but an empty dream;
For the soul is dead that slumbers
And things are not what they seem.'

"The opening phrase of the foregoing is a very pretty platitude, born of the usual disinclination of the youthful poetic mind to hearken to unpleasant truths. But why the third line should begin with for is inexplicable, as what follows is not in the slightest degree dependent on what has preceded it. Why slumber should be fatal to the soul when it is the fountain of refreshing life to the body, is almost equally difficult of explanation. A similar objection may be taken to the employment of the word and in the last line. Its use would imply the addition of some cogent consideration to what had gone before; when, in truth, nothing is added, either cogent or consistent. The verse in fact ends as it begun, with a platitude pretty and petty.

'Trust no Future, howe'er pleasant;
Let the dead past bury its dead;
Act—act—in the living Present,
Heart within and God o'erhead.'

"Here the poet refuses to allow the reader any comfort either in Hope or Memory. The Future must be distrusted and the Past buried, i. e., forgotten. The picture of the dead burying the dead, however, relieves this melancholy condition by the introduction of a comic Celticism that is worthy of Sir Boyle Roche. The last line may have a meaning, but no reader will ever discover it unaided.

'Lives of great men all remind us,
We can make our lives sublime;
And, departing, leave behind us
Footprints on the sands of time.'

"If the lives of great men can remind us of nothing more encouraging than this, then is their lesson lost. For footprints on the sands of time, however large the foot that makes them, and however heavy its tread, hardly furnish a happy figure for the expression of a permanent impression.

'Footprints that perhaps another,
Sailing o'er life's solemn main,
A forlorn and shipwrecked brother
Seeing shall take life again.'

